But the possession and use of money may have an objective and noble aspect, and happily in our day there are many who, regarding money as a solemn trust from God, give liberally to religious and benevolent uses; but there are yet more who give sparingly or not at all.

The opportunities for wise and beneficent giving were never so numerous and clamant as in this age. This should constrain us to live economically, and also the temptation to hoard; and to ask ourselves as a principle and policy of life, "Ought I not to give as well as to get? Is it not my duty, and ought it not to be esteemed my privilege and joy to aid as many good causes as I can?" and for many who do give, to ask, "Shall I not increase my giving, and how can I do so?" It is well to be on our guard against the excuse of not giving, or giving inadequately, on the plea that so many others do not give, or that the best and wisest use of funds is not always made, or that we cannot afford to give.

TO CHECK EXTRAVAGANCE AND WASTE,

This may be the case, but in a world where heathenism, want, distress, and misery abound, is it not the duty of every one who claims to be a Christian, even in the lower middle rank of life, to be a stated, conscientious and willing giver to some one or more of these agencies? Does not much of the perplexity and difficulty of middle-class life, arise from beginning or drifting into too high a scale of expenditure? The desire to be respectable, and to rise in life, leads great numbers to begin domestic life where, after years of struggle and industry, their parents end. They seldom carefully estimate how much it will cost to live! They leave no margin for contingencies, nor do they usually resolve that God shall have his portion of whatever they possess. Thus it comes to pass that household expenses often come to more than was anticipated, leading to disappointment, anxiety, discontent, and a limited, if not entire, neglect of Christian giving. It is wise, therefore, to begin domestic life well within the limits of the income, and make God a sharer of it, whatever it is.

Not only is this not done, but when the income grows, personal and domestic expenditure is enlarged to the same extent, or the whole is invested and saved. To do either of these may be right in certain extreme cases, and up to a certain point, but would it not be wise in every case to consider ourselves as responsible to God for the use of our incomes, however large or small they may be, and make Him a sharer? This would surely sanctify, dignify, and bless common life, and secure it against the evils, worse even than poverty, into which prosperity is liable to fall. Would it not be wise for every person to give some share of their income to God, and increase it

IN PROPORTION AS THE INCOME GROWS?

And would it not in numbers of instances be right, meritorious, noble, and even saintly, not to save at all, or to cease saving, or to disburden themselves of some of their wealth whilst they live, or to continue in business, and give all that is gained to the cause of God?

Our Saviour commended this extreme and entire giving, in at least four instances, and is it not safe to say that such giving, inspired by love to Christ, and zeal for his cause, would bring an elation of being, and a joy millionaires seldom, or never, know?

There is in the too brief autobiography, "Early Days of My Life," by Mrs. Luke, a beautiful instance of this unselfishness. Mrs. Thompson, mother-in-law to Mrs. Luke, wrote to her mother, Lady Barham, with a request from her family that she would allow them to have her portrait painted, and that it would cost only £20. Here is her reply: "Since I returned home my time has been more than filled up with new-furnishing the chapel which, by contriving it myself, has saved many pounds for the Lord's cause, but it has very greatly fatigued me. Then my child, how can I think £20 a trifle to be spent in recording the features of such a poor worthless old tabernacle! Oh, do consider, my child, the number to whom £20 would be a treasure! I know many Independent ministers in Wales, excellent, godly, devoted men, that, with large families, have only £50 per annum, and two or three only £30, and shall £20 be spent on a portrait of me?"

Acts v. 32.

It is ours to tell the story of God's free, abounding grace,
Of his mercy and compassion, to our sorrowing, sinning race.
Ours to tell how He has sought us and redeemed us by his blood,
For we've tasted of his goodness, and we've known the things of God.

It is ours to tell the story. If we're silent, who will tell
How the Lord of life and glory died to rescue man from hell?
He has saved us; we can witness what his grace and power can do:
So in earnestness we ask you, oh! will you not trust Him, too?

It is ours to tell the story, for the many know it not,
And it may be those who've heard it have so easily forgot;
And the world so sorely needs Him—'twas for all mankind He died.
Quickly let us give the message of the Saviour crucified.

Give it to the hungry millions who in heathen lands to-day
Famish for the great salvation, while we fail his word to obey;
Give it to our friends and neighbours, give it daily as we go,
As the Spirit shall direct us; and the fruit sometime we'll know.

It is ours to tell the story. Some will mock, while some will hear.
Still, may we repeat it ever, that sweet story, old and dear;
For 'tis ours to bear the tidings, while 'tis God's to bless the seed.
And no word is void of power which He speaks through us indeed.

The Essence of Scripture.

ON Wednesday, March 6, Professor D. S. Margoliouth delivered at Exeter Hall the fifth lecture of the course on "The Essence of Scripture"—subject, "Biblical Philosophy and Other Philosophy." The beginnings of the various systems of philosophy are traceable to the natural desire to know something of the origin of things. That certain of these had their rise in India seems to be brought out by their terminology. The common illustrations are largely Indian and Greek, but the anticipations of later thought are more remarkable in the former than the latter.

That the purpose of Indian philosophy is highly practical, is the result of the deeply ingrained belief in transmigration. The soul, weary of the endless transmigration, seeks repose, and philosophy is resorted to in the attempt to procure this. Asceticism was often deemed necessary to the study. Whereas the Greek systems fitted men for public life, those of India produced anchorites. The theories are idealist; but the philosophy would seem to be the result of the meditation which at an early period seems to have become part of the ordinary life of the Brahmins. Their logic is less simple than the Greek, but is characterized by great acuteness.

Among the Hebrews the causes which produced philosophy in these other races were wanting. Genesis supplied an account of the origin of things sufficient for them, and this neither wrapped up in an unknown tongue nor expressed in infantile language, so they had no call to construct a cosmogony. The spirit of the Israelites seems to have been ordinarily averse to scientific inquiry. The studies to which the public assembly gave rise were also wanting, for the Israelites had no need of them. Where the practical application of science was required, the Israelites ordinarily sent for the Phœnicians, as the Greeks did for the Persians.

Speculation on the state of the departed was ALMOST UNKNOWN BEFORE THE EXILE.

The writer of Ecclesiastes simply asked, "Who knoweth the spirit of man that goeth upward?" An Indian writer would have been ready to describe every stage which the departed spirit passes through. In the New Testament the life to come throws the present life into the shade, whereas in the Old Testament we can with difficulty collect references to the former, and when we do find them they are ecstatic.

While philosophers of other nations had to prove the future life, in the Old Testament the argument that the present is all we have finds no place. In the apocryphal book called the Wisdom of Solomon, where the future life is insisted on, it is treated as the basis on which all else is to be explained, and the thought that it provides such a key produces enthusiasm in the writer. The belief corresponds to faith, hope, and love in the teaching of the Apostle Paul; and the word "wisdom" is identified with what we call science. The problem—also discussed by Plato—is put of the just man absolutely worsted, and with every inducement to abandon the just life. The difference in the two writers is to be found in the presence and absence of the idea of God. The answer by Plato will never convince any human being; the man who knew of faith and love could solve the problem practically.

Proverbs resembles other Eastern works more closely than Ecclesiastes. The study of the Bible is our nearest analogy to the way in which wisdom was understood by the ancients to be reached. The knowledge of God provided the spirituality which marked the early religion of the Jews. Jewish commentators argue the future life from the willingness of Daniel and his friends to face martyrdom.

The non-success of the pagan philosophies appears to be due to the absence of any personal relation to the Deity, which the Biblical writers possessed in so high a degree. The difficulty was to provide a motive strong enough to produce action; they lacked that which we call "the grace of God."

FOUNDATION TRUTHS OF THE GOSPEL.—X.

JUSTIFICATION.

By Rev. W. H. GRIFFITH THOMAS, M.A.

ONE question beyond all others has been exercising the mind and conscience of mankind in all ages: "How shall man be just with God?" It is found as far back as the time of Job, where we have it asked no fewer than four times (iv. 17; ix. 2; xv. 14; xxv. 4). It pressed upon earnest Israelites from time to time (Psa. cxliii. 2; Micah vi. 6), and is implied in the whole ritual of the Mosaic law. It is involved in heathen temples, altars, and sacrifices, and appears in one form or another in all the Oriental religions. There can be no doubt, too, that it is the question of questions for man, and must be settled definitely and permanently, if there is to be any peace, power, and progress.

It is in the Bible alone that we find any solution of the problem. The first hint comes in Gen. xv. 1-4; a little more light is granted in Psa. xxxii.; and Hab. ii. 4; but the full revelation is found in Acts xiii. 38 and 39; Gal. iii., and especially Rom. iii. and iv. From all this we see that God alone can give the answer to man's inquiry, and to the Word we must turn, and by it we must stand, if we would know and enjoy the glorious Gospel of man's full Justification by God.

I.—THE MEANING OF JUSTIFICATION.

The word and the thing may be viewed from God's standpoint, or from man's. In the former instance it means the Divine act and gift; in the latter, the human reception and result.

Let us be very clear that Justification is connected with our true relation to God. It is concerned with spiritual relation, not with spiritual condition; with our judicial position, not with our actual state. Confusion and difficulty will assuredly arise if we are not perfectly clear on this point.

This true relation was forfeited by sin. Sin is self-assertion, disobedience, rebellion; and in regard to Adam's true relation to God there were three results of his sin: (a) A sense of guilt; (b) A sentence of condemnation; (c) An act of separation. Thus the true relation of man to God was forfeited, and these results abide to-day, and apply to all mankind apart from God.

Now Justification is connected with the restoration of this true relation to God. It includes (a) The removal of Condemnation by the bestowal of Forgiveness; (b) The removal of Guilt by the reckoning (or imputation) of Righteousness; (c) The removal of Separation by the restoration of Fellowship.

Justification then means the re-instatement of man in his original relation to God. It means to treat as righteous in the sight of God, to account righteous, to regard as righteous, to declare righteous. It means being accepted as righteous in the eyes of the law, and restored to a true position before God.

It is, therefore, much more than pardon, and the two must never be confused, much less identified. Forgiveness is only a part of Justification, and to identify them is to cause spiritual trouble and loss. We can see the two distinguished in Acts xiii. 38 and 39, and in Psalm xxxii. 1 and 2. A criminal may be pardoned, but he cannot be regarded as though he had never broken the law. Forgiveness is only negative, the removal of the condemnation. Justification is also positive, the removal of guilt and the bestowal of a perfect standing before God. Forgiveness is an act, and a succession of isolated acts, as needed. Justification is an act which results in a permanent attitude or position in the sight of God. Forgiveness is repeated throughout our life. Justification is complete and never repeated. As it refers to our spiritual position before God, it covers the whole of our life, past, present, and future. We can see the distinction in St. John xiii. 10. "He that has been bathed (justification) needeth not save to wash his feet (forgiveness)." He that has once had the bath of a perfect Justification needs only the daily cleansing of the soul through forgiveness, not a fresh Justification.

Justification is also different from making righteous, which is Sanctification. The two are always inseparable in fact, but they are assuredly distinguishable in thought, and must ever be distinguished if we would have peace and blessing. Justification concerns our standing, Sanctification our state. The former affects our position, the latter our condition. The first deals with judicial relationship, the second with spiritual fellowship. We must ever remember that they are bestowed together, that is, a complete Justification and a commencing Sanctification; "where the righteousness of Christ adheres, the grace of Christ inheres;" where the one is imputed, the other is imparted; where the one is reckoned, the other is received. But they must never be confused. The first is the foundation of our peace—"Christ for us." The second is the basis of our purity—"Christ in us." Justification is concerned with acceptance; Sanctification with attainment. Sanctification admits of degrees; we may be more or less sanctified. Justification has no degrees, but is complete, perfect, final. "Justified from all things."

This is one of the points on which we differ from the Church of Rome. Rome says Forgiveness comes through Sanctification; the Bible says the very opposite is the truth. Rome confuses Justification and Sanctification, and makes the former include remission and renovation. This is to cause trouble, and to identify our acceptance with our attainments, and to rob the soul of the objective ground of righteousness, which is wholly independent of our spiritual state or condition. We must hold fast to the meaning of Justification, as accounting or reckoning righteous, and in this belief we have the almost universal testimony of the best scholarship of the day that δικαιόω in the New Testament has for its primary and fundamental meaning, the forensic one of regarding or treating as righteous.

II.—THE FOUNDATION OF JUSTIFICATION.

"We are accounted righteous before God only for the merit of our Lord Jesus Christ." So runs the Eleventh Article of the Church of England, and in harmony with it are the Westminster Confession and the other Confessions of the Reformed Churches. "In Him . . . justified" (Acts xiii. 39). The "merit" of Christ means the value of his whole Person and Work. His perfect obedience even unto death, his spotless righteousness, his payment of the penalty due to our transgression—all this forms the one sole ground of our Justification. This is reckoned to us, and God looks at us in Him. "He who knew no sin was made sin for us, that we might become the righteousness of God in Him." By Him we are pardoned, and in Him regarded as righteous.

For the merit of Christ, therefore, are we justified, "and not for our own works or deservings" (Article XI). Our works or merits could not work out our justification. Perfect obedience is required by God, and this man cannot render. "He that offends in one point is guilty of all." "Cursed is he that continueth not in all things that are written in the book of the law to do them." And yet, notwithstanding this, man has ever been attempting to work out and establish his own righteousness. We see this in human sacrifices, ceremonies, penances, offerings; and it is true even of the Jews, who, it might have been supposed, would have been instructed sufficiently to have avoided this rock of danger and trouble. But as with the heathen, so with the Jews, the attempt was made to establish their own righteousness (Rom. x.), and the explanation in the latter case is that they would not submit themselves to the righteousness of God. Man fell by a desire to be independent of God, and now man wishes to be equally independent of God in returning to Him. Universal failure has been the sad result, because of the two-fold inability to cancel the past and to guarantee the future. God has, therefore, concluded all under sin; "all have sinned and are coming short of the glory of God;" and man, if he is to be justified, must come as a sinner helpless and hopeless, willing to accept and not wishful to merit.

Nothing in my hand I bring,
Simply to Thy cross I cling.

III.—THE MEANS OF JUSTIFICATION.

The merit of our Lord becomes ours "by faith." All that believe "are justified." Trust implies dependence on another, and the consequent cessation of dependence on ourselves. Faith is, therefore, at once the acknowledgment of our own inability and the admission of our need of someone else's ability. Faith links us to Christ, and is the means of our appropriation of His merit.

The reason why Faith is emphasized in Justification is that it is the only possible answer to God's revelation. Faith in man answers to grace in God. Faith is the correlative of Promise. Trust responds to Truth. Faith renounces self and receives the Saviour. There is, consequently, no merit in faith; it is only the instrument, not the ground, of Justification. As Hooker says, "God doth justify the believing man, not for the worthiness of his belief, but for His worthiness who is believed;" or, as we may put it, we are not justified by faith, but by Christ through faith. Faith is nothing apart from its object, and is only of use as it leads us directly to Him who has wrought a perfect Righteousness, and as it enables us to appropriate Him as "the Lord our Righteousness."

IV.—THE VALUE OF JUSTIFICATION.

This doctrine of the sinner's Justification by Christ through faith is a necessity for spiritual health. It is the foundation of peace.

The soul looks backward, outward, inward, upward, onward, and says, "Justified from all things," and "being justified by faith we have peace," immediate, certain, complete, and everlasting.

This doctrine is also the foundation of liberty. With an unerring spiritual instinct, Luther spoke of this doctrine as "the article of a standing or falling Church," for it removes the bondage of sin, sets the prisoner free, introduces him directly to the presence of God, and gives him free, full, constant access to the Holiest. We can therefore readily understand the virulent hatred with which this doctrine is regarded by the Church of Rome, for it cuts at the root of all sacerdotal mediation and intervention, as absolutely

UNNECESSARY AND POSITIVELY DANGEROUS.

This doctrine is also a necessity for spiritual power. It is the foundation of holiness. The soul is introduced into the immediate presence of God; realizes the spiritual presence of Christ; receives the indwelling presence of the Holy Spirit; and in all this finds the secret and guarantee of purity of heart and life.

The great passage in Rom. v. 1-11 shows us Justification as the commencement of a long chain of graces and blessings which culminate in glory above.

This doctrine is also the spring and secret of all true Christian service. It releases the soul from anxiety about itself, and frees it for anxiety about others. The "heart at leisure from itself" can set forward the salvation of those around. Firm on the rock itself, it can stretch out a loving hand to wrestlers with the troubled sea. Well may Article XI. speak of this doctrine as "wholesome and very full of comfort;" that is, healthful and helpful, for so it assuredly is to all who receive and welcome it.

In these days of "doubtful disputations," vague doctrines, and "dangerous deceits," let us hold fast to this great foundation fact of Justification. Let us study our Bibles to gain and grasp a clear view of its meaning, and then, yielding ourselves to its blessed power and joy, let us make it prominent in our teaching and work, as the secret of peace and liberty to many a soul now darkened by fear, or held in bondage. Against Romanism, and Ritualism, and Rationalism, we shall find it one of our sturdiest weapons, because it is a weapon of light, of love, of liberty; a weapon with which there are few to compare in the armoury of God.

George Yard Mission.

THE many kind friends who have interested themselves in this Mission will be pleased to hear that Col. Robert Hayne has now accepted the invitation of the Committee, to take up the work which the late Mr. George Holland founded and carried on for so many years to the glory of God.

The Committee and the new superintendent are unanimous in commending the work, which will be carried on with the sole object of leading souls to Christ, and ask all interested in the poor of Whitechapel to join in prayer to God that He may be pleased to own and bless every branch of it—among men, women, and children—in the future, as in the past. They would be glad to hear from any ladies or gentlemen who are willing personally to assist in the work at George Yard.

Free Meals for School Children.—As in former years, forty Board Schools in poor neighbourhoods have been aided with free meals through the Board School Children's Free Dinner Fund. The generosity of subscribers has enabled the committee to meet all claims, but, owing to the severity of the winter and the high prices of fuel and provisions, the funds are now at a low ebb. The hon. secretary is Mrs. Anna Pennington, 16, Crossfield Road, N.W.

Believing Prayer Answered.

A STRIKING instance of long-delayed answer to prayer occurred not many years ago at Chicago. Two Christian ladies agreed to pray daily for the conversion of their unbelieving husbands. For three years they continued to pray earnestly, but with no apparent result.

At length one lady said to her friend: "It's useless praying any longer for John's conversion; he seems every day to grow more hardened to all religious impressions. I have resolved to stop, for I fear his conscience is quite seared."

"Well!" replied her friend, "I can't stop praying for my husband while I have breath. So, if he goes down to the pit, he'll go weighed down with his wife's believing prayers."

"Why! if you go on praying, I may continue too; you have inspired me with new faith and hope," cried the poor desponding lady.

The two continued in prayer for their respective husbands for four years longer, yet still without any apparent result. Time passed, and after seven years of crying and waiting, Mrs. B. awoke one night, and saw, to her surprise, her husband sitting at a little table, reading the Bible by the light of a candle. She called to him, and he told her he was in sore distress about his sins; he begged her

TO HELP HIM TO FIND PEACE.

She joyfully rose, and having joined him at the table, told how long and anxiously she had prayed and watched for his conversion. At last she saw that God was answering her prayers. They knelt down together, while she uttered a few broken words, imploring the Lord to save her dear husband, and make him decide at once for Christ. When she could not continue for tears, the husband began to pray earnestly for himself; and while he was thus praying, the mighty change was wrought in his soul by the Holy Spirit, so that his prayer ended in a burst of joy and thanksgiving.

Next morning the happy wife set out to convey the glad tidings to her friend, who lived at some distance. To her surprise she met the other, who was on her way to visit her, with a face radiant with joy. Before Mrs. B. had time to tell her tale, Mrs. A. began eagerly to relate the story of the sudden conversion of her own husband during the previous night.

"Why! that's just what brought me to see you," cried Mrs. B. "My husband also was converted last night, and I couldn't rest till I had told you the wonderful news."

On comparing notes, it was found that the prayers of both wives had been answered simultaneously, and in circumstances almost identical.

Christian mothers, wives, sisters, keep on praying for your dear ones. God is faithful, who hath said: "Ask, and it shall be given."

Protestantism in Birmingham.

AT the annual meeting of the Birmingham Christian Evidence and Protestant Laymen's Association, the report showed that the year's work had been of a fruitful and encouraging nature. In spite of countless obstacles, the warfare with error has not been allowed to flag; but the truths of the Gospel have been maintained and proclaimed with the assurance that in this way alone can Romeward tendencies be effectually counteracted and suppressed. Every effort has been made to disseminate information bearing upon questions relating to the restoration of priestly domination in this country. During the last forty years the secretary, Mr. J. H. Aston, has also continued an informing and discriminating correspondence through the Press for the enlightenment of the people, and leading them to the true source of light and peace. It is to be regretted that the year closed with a balance due to the treasurer of £163. The office of the Association is Cromwell Hall, Heath Green Road, Winson Green, Birmingham.

"FORWARD!"

Phil. iii. 13-14.

To-day's duty is no discharge for to-morrow. Every day has its own peremptory demand upon us, not only for repetition, but advancement. It is a saying of St. Basil that the soul would starve, as well as the body, without a continual renewal of its proper food; and St. Paul's motto, in the midst of such a course of labour and activity as would quite have sunk the spirits of another man, was "Forward."

FAITH AND UNBELIEF.

Faith knoweth God; incredulity (unbelief) knoweth Him not.

Faith loveth both God and his neighbour; incredulity loveth neither of them.

Faith only (alone) saveth us; incredulity condemneth us.

Faith extolleth God and his deeds; incredulity extolleth herself and her own deeds.

CHRISTIAN PRIVILEGES.

(1) Kept by the power of God (1 Peter i. 5).
(2) Strengthened with might by the Spirit of God (Eph. iii. 16).
(3) Sustained by the grace of God (2 Cor. xii. 9).
(4) Comforted with the comfort of God (2 Cor. i. 3,4).
(5) Cheered with the presence of God (Acts xxvii. 22, 23, 24).
(6) Satisfied with the goodness of God (Jer. xxxi. 14).
(7) Rejoicing in the truth of God (3 John 3,4).

EVILS OF THE SCHISMATIC SPIRIT.

I am deeplier afflicted for the disagreements of Christians than I was when I was a younger Christian. Except the case of the infidel world, nothing is so sad and grievous to my thoughts as the case of the divided churches; and therefore I am the more deeply sensible of the sinfulness of those prelates and pastors of the churches who are the principal causes of these divisions. Oh, how many millions of souls are kept by them in ignorance and ungodliness, and deluded by faction, as if it were true religion! How is the conversion of infidels hindered by them, and Christ and religion heinously dishonoured! Richard Baxter.

THE PARABLE OF THE UNJUST JUDGE.

(Luke xviii. 1-7).

The motives to persevering prayer are thus set out:—

I. THE GREATNESS OF THE NECESSITY is represented (a) In our own helplessness: "There was a widow"; (b) In the evil inflicted: "Avenge me of mine adversary"; (c) In the delay of help: "And he would not for a while."

II THE ULTIMATE SUCCESS which is to be expected (a) From the goodness of God: "And shall not God?" as contrasted with the unprincipled judge; (b) From the fact that God wills our salvation: "His elect"; (c) If we continue with confidence in prayer: "Who cry to him day and night"; (d) Notwithstanding long delay in the promised help: "Though He bear long with them"; (e) On account of the sure word of promise: "I say unto you," &c.

SUNDAY, March 17. Hosea xiii.

HOW much the first verse resembles the words, "He that humbleth himself shall be exalted." But Baal-worship is the opposite of all this. It stands for that confidence in the flesh, which the Apostle so absolutely denied. And when once we yield to the subtle temptation to do this, there is no limit to the molten images and idols, according to our own wilfulness, that result. But all such efforts lack in stability. Their votaries are as the morning cloud and the early dew; whilst those who trust in the Lord are as Mount Zion, which cannot be removed, but abideth for ever. Have you yielded to the fascination and self-confidence, wandering from God, the Fountain of living waters? Still God is the Lord thy God; He has not cast thee away; and He is willing to become thy Saviour (4).

What marvellous alternations are here in the Divine heart! At one moment it seems as though the people's sins must bring on them condign punishment: "I will be unto them as a lion . . . as a leopard." "I will meet them as a bear." Then He cries: "O Israel, thou hast destroyed thyself, but in Me is thine help."

Oh, put together these wonderful promises, as a child gathers flowers into a posy. Art thou grievously cast down? "I will be thy help." Dost thou need a supreme control for thy life? "I will be thy King." Dost thou dread the power of the grave, and the last enemy, death? Jesus is the death of death (14). Let us accept his proffered help and mercy, lest, like Samaria, we become desolate.

MONDAY, March 18. Hosea xiv.

This chapter is as remarkable for its beauty as for its consolation. The Prophet ransacks the world of nature for phrases that shall sufficiently express his transports of joy, and his estimate of what God will be to his repentant people. The gentle dew, the rich raiment of the lily, the far-reaching roots of the Lebanon range, the spreading branches and beauty of the olive tree as they rustle in the breeze, the scent of the wind which has been sweeping over mountain pastures and comes to the fevered valley, laden with the perfume of the thyme, the golden corn ripe for the sickle, the scent of the vines—these are among the images that teem from the inspired imagination of the prophet-seer.

But how deeply the whole chapter appeals to us. The call and invitation to return, the suggestion of the very words that should be employed by the returning prodigals, which elicit, in response, the avowal to trust no more in Asshur or in horses, and the renunciation of idols. Surely such invitations still float through the soul, eliciting similar replies. And as we return, we hear the Divine voice assuring us that our backslidings shall be healed, that anger is replaced by love, and that the forgiven soul shall realize all that this rapturous imagery portrays. Yes, soul, thou shalt grow, and spread; thy shadow shall be health-giving; thou shalt be fragrant of scent, and fruitful as a rich autumn. The love of God shall make thy idols impossible; and thou shalt so abide in Him, as to bring forth much fruit. These are God's ways with the souls that accept his gracious dealings (9).

TUESDAY, March 19. Joel i.

Israel was still a kingdom when Joel prophesied; and as with Hosea, so with him, there are abundant allusions to the natural scenery and agricultural processes of the Land of Promise. How much do the children of the city miss in their aloofness from the illuminated missal of nature! Their speech is poorer for lack of the simple but beautiful images which adorn the language of a student of God's oldest Bible.

Joel's words seem to have been primarily elicited by the near approach of a visitation of locusts. There was to be such a plague as had not been known within the memory of the oldest. In the fourth verse we have recited the various names by which the locust is known at the different stages of its existence, and what was left by one horde would be devastated by another. This is the nation that was to come up, and because of it, the cornfields and vineyards would alike wither. But underneath these references, there is another to the near approach of the Assyrian hosts, which should be even more terrible, and destructive. Are there no locusts in thy life, and mine, which devour its promise and prey on its beauty? It is only too likely. There are years which the cankerworm, the caterpillar, and the palmerworm have eaten—these standing for the self-indulgences, the impurities, the jealousies, into which we have been betrayed.

There is but one hope for us. We must gather before God in confession and prayer. We must cry to God for ourselves, and must plead with Him in intercession for others (14, 19). It will never do to continue as we are, in the hopelessness of despair, or in a fatuous surrender to our misfortunes.

WEDNESDAY, March 20. Joel ii.

This chapter contains an exceedingly graphic account of the approach of a swarm of locusts. Not only in the East, but in the far West they come to-day just as Joel describes them. Mr. Sheldon told me, as we travelled across the Atlantic together last summer, that on two occasions when he was a lad the whole of his father's crops were destroyed just in this way. Before them was, as it were, the Garden of Eden, and behind them a desolate wilderness (3). The very heavens darkened for days, and the air was filled with the noise of their wings.

The prophet summoned the nation to prayer, with the assurance that God would not fail to be entreated. "The Lord," he said, "would answer, and say, 'Behold I will send you corn and wine and oil.'" And with this strong faith, he turned to his people with reassurance.

"Fear not, be glad and rejoice, for the Lord will do great things." We may lose all faith in ourselves and our fellows, but God is always the Rock of Ages, unchanging, strong, and mighty. Loving and forgiving, He abideth faithful; He cannot deny Himself. Lift up thy heart with joy, O penitent soul! Be not afraid; already on the locust-smitten country new pastures are beginning to arise beneath the plentiful rain of heaven. God will cause to come down the rain; He will restore the locust-eaten years; He will deal wondrously with thee, in spite of all thy provocations, and thou shalt never be ashamed (27).

The Apostle Peter, on the day of Pentecost, gives the clue to the significance of that last paragraph. "This is that," he cries, "which was spoken of by the prophet Joel." It is remarkable that he does not say, "Thus was fulfilled," because the fulness of this glorious prediction has not been accomplished. The latter rain has yet to fall. Coming days shall yet see the stretching forth of the right hand of the Most High, in blood and fire and vapour of smoke. But have you had your share in Pentecost? It awaits you in the risen Lord. Appropriate it.

THURSDAY, March 21. Joel iii.

The prophet has been evidently borne far beyond the occurrences about which he was concerned at the beginning of his visions. We are here at the close of the Times of the Gentiles—the era which is now passing over us. The Church has been gathered to her Lord, and the chosen people are back in the land and city of their fathers (1). Against them are gathered all the nations, among which they have been scattered, and by which they have been shamefully ill-treated. How this will be brought about it is impossible for us to forecast. Often, of late years, the rumour has sped from lip to lip of the growing numbers of Jews which are returning to Palestine, but there is no sign of a national and wholesale return. The wealthier Jews seem content to contribute of their substance for the return of the poorer, but they cling to the comforts of the lands of their adoption. And it is impossible to forecast the combination of foreign nations, which will make Palestine again, what it has so often been in time past, the battle-ground of the nations. But there is nothing improbable in these anticipations, for the Eastern Question has always bristled with difficulties, and has baffled generations of statesmen.

Then in the throes of that terrible strife, when the chosen people seem on the point of being overwhelmed, the Lord shall be their hope and strength. Then Joseph's brethren shall recognise their long-lost brother, and days of unbroken blessedness shall become theirs (18, 20).

FRIDAY, March 22. Amos i.

Amos was a herdman; but what fervour, what spiritual insight, what power of righteous anger dwelt in his breast! God is no respecter of persons. If there be culture, as in the case of Saul of Tarsus, He will employ it; but if there be devotion, loyalty, and a willingness to take and convey his messages, the absence of rank and learning will be no impediment to his free use of the unlettered herdman.

It is noticeable, for the comfort of us all, that God never deals with us for one sin. It is always, as the repeated refrain of this and the following chapter puts it: "For three transgressions, and for four." The neighbouring nations are judged in respect of their treatment of Israel; and you will remember that the judgment of Matt. xxv. turns on the same point: "Inasmuch as ye have not done it to these, ye have not done it to Me; depart into the outer darkness." The presence of the Jew among us may be for the purpose of testing us, and seeing what manner of persons we are.

"I will send fire." The threat recurs again and again, and we are reminded of our Lord's words: "I am come to send fire on the earth, how I am straitened till it be accomplished." We must have the fire of Pentecost for cleansing, or that of the legions of Titus for destruction. Let us choose carefully; and ask to dwell in the devouring fire of the presence of God, whose lambent flames leave the tender foliage of the plant uninjured: "The bush burned with fire, but it was not consumed."

SATURDAY, March 23. Amos ii.

The prophet comes nearer home, and in his circling flight prepares to settle down on his own people with his severest denunciations. The enumeration of sins in vv. 6-8 is very sad. To what straits had the chosen people come, that they should permit such things to be done, which could not but provoke God's heavy anger!

The reference to the Amorite is very telling. Nothing is said of Joshua or his prowess; the overthrow of the nations of Canaan is directly attributed to the interposition of Jehovah. "I destroyed the Amorite before them." Great political changes are always afoot, which men attribute to this and the other secondary use; but these causes are caused; these agencies are the methods of operation which the Great Agent adopts; behind every ripple on the beach there is the drawing attraction of the moon and sun.

One of the most graphic images in the whole prophecy is that of v. 13. We can almost see the heavily-laden wain, as it is dragged from the harvest-field. The wheels creak and groan, the oxen draw it with difficulty, the timbers seem hardly able to bear up under the sheaves that press upon them. So God bears us with groanings that cannot be uttered. We weigh upon Him. Our sins and sorrows, our backslidings and constant necessities, are a sensible weight upon his heart. "Pressed under" us! So was Jesus pressed under the sins of Jerusalem on Olivet, and under the sins of the whole world, when in Gethsemane He was prostrate before the Father's will, and on the cross cried out as one forsaken.

British College Christian Union.—An attractive booklet has been issued under the title The Money Problem (22, Warwick Lane, E.C.), showing the difficulty in which the committee continually find themselves through lack of working capital in connection with the publishing of their books. They are frequently in debt to their printers, though the value of stock is more than sufficient to cover this liability. A detailed statement is also given of the requirements for current work, accompanied by an appeal to members and friends to enable the work to be maintained.

Victoria Hospital for Children.

SERVING, as it does, a population which is estimated to include 250,000 children, the Victoria Hospital, in Queen's Road, Chelsea, S.W., is one of the most needful, as well as one of the most efficient, of our English "Palaces of Pain." The tiny sufferers to whom it ministers are the children of the poor, smitten down in the battle with disease and hunger that is fought day by day in the slums. The medical staff exercises for them the perfection of scientific skill and training, while the

"FOUND STARVING."

of the nurses in their labours—which demand a heavy toll of heart and brain—speak volumes for their devotion and ability.

The scenes in the wards are replete with pathetic interest. In the boys' ward, among others, suffering from a wasting disease, is a grey-faced little mortal who, only a few days since, was to be removed to a Home for the Dying. Now, however, he has taken a turn for the better, and sits up bravely to a plateful of egg and bread and butter. In a corner bed is a lean, shrivelled lad who turns nervously from the meal that is so neatly set on the bed-tray, and asks to be taken into the garden, which he can see plainly from where he lies. What a sigh of satisfaction he gives on being assured that he is destined for a stay at the Convalescent Home at Broadstairs!

Another, a bright lad, is here for the third time suffering from St. Vitus' dance—an affliction which, it seems, is becoming increasingly common with the young. The Sister in charge attributes this to the high pressure of modern life, and the consequent development of nervous ills even among poor children. In the surgical ward are deformed little ones, having their legs and feet kept in position by weights and supports. Another has a fractured leg set in plaster. A poor fellow with an enormous swelling on his neck manages to talk cheerfully enough, although he is to undergo an operation next day. In the girls' ward among a number of very sad cases, a grave and chubby child, who first attracts one's attention from her comparatively healthy appearance, is making an excellent recovery from pneumonia. She gazes wistfully at the big rocking-horse in the centre of the room, and then, in a business-like way, shells an egg for her tea. Passing from bed to bed, one notes the look of delight with which each child welcomes a word of encouragement from the nurse. The soothing and unremitting attention which the little patients receive doubtless has its place in helping to secure the large percentage of recoveries. Each ward is bright and homely, and a model of cleanliness.

At present, owing to a lack of public support, there are but forty-two beds occupied, in spite of the fact that pressing and pitiful applications for admission are continually before the executive. The insufficiency of this accommodation becomes more strikingly apparent on visiting the out-patients' department, where about 1,000 cases are dealt with weekly. It will be readily understood that of this vast number some should be accepted as in-patients, and it is a painful task for the authorities to refuse them.

THE ASSEMBLED MULTITUDE

of mothers and children, weeping, consoling, fretting, caressing, presents, in spite of the wise arrangements made for their comfort, a spectacle that is both tragic and affecting. That beholder must indeed be impervious to emotion who is not touched by the sight of this mournful crowd, representing as it does so great a sum of human suffering.

The Hospital is conducted on undenominational lines, and has earned the enthusiastic enconiums of many who are interested in the welfare of the poor. Among others, H.R.H. Princess Louise, patron of the hospital, has on several occasions taken active steps to bring its claims before the public. Religious bodies, too, have undertaken from time to time, to support cots, understanding that the

into the institution are physical need, poverty, and the production of a subscriber's letter, which, by the way, is not difficult to secure. A spiritual influence is felt throughout the Hospital; lady visitors read the Bible and talk to such of the little patients as are well enough and old enough to understand, and Rev. J. Pullein-Thompson, the esteemed vicar of the parish, regularly conducts suitable services both for inmates and the nursing staff. Friends may be glad to know that the buildings are open for inspection every day except Sunday, between two and four p.m.

It is earnestly to be hoped that as a result of a wider knowledge among Christian people, of its scope and position, the institution may receive that increase of support for which the extent and value of its operations so emphatically call. The secretary, Mr. H. G. Evered, will be glad to supply further particulars.

Soldiers' Christian Association.—In sending a donation to the funds, an officer at the front in South Africa says:—I have seen something of the splendid work done at Ingagane and Newcastle by your workers, and I can assure you the soldiers of my regiment enjoyed the services in the big tent. I don't think I have ever before heard such hearty singing as used to take place there every night.

An Invaluable Society.

WE had the advantage of being present at a recent meeting of the Executive Committee of the National Vigilance Association (319, High Holborn, W.C.), and were deeply interested in the report of work accomplished during the preceding month. The Association embraces many sides of the social and moral question, but all tending to help forward the coming of the Kingdom of our Father. It was reported to the committee that nineteen inquiries had been made during the month on behalf of young women seeking situations either at home or abroad. Several cases were cited by the secretary showing how great is the need for vigilance, in order to prevent young women from being entrapped by those unscrupulous people who, either by means of the registry office or so-called situations, are ever on the watch to exploit English and foreign girls for purposes of shame. By means of its perfected organization, both at home and abroad, the Association is now in a position to ascertain the bona fides of any situation offered in any part of the world, and in every part of Europe it can give a young woman accepting a situation an introduction to a lady ready at all times to befriend her. Constant evidence is forthcoming at the office of the invaluable character of this branch of the work, and too much publicity cannot be given to it, in order that young women of all sections of society may place themselves in communication with the Association before accepting situations in this or other countries. All inquiries are made free of charge.

Then came a report as to efforts which had been made to check the circulation of the cheap and pernicious illustrated papers which do so much to corrupt the young of both sexes. The responsibility of these cheap and indecent illustrated papers in connection with the making of hooligans, would be a subject worthy of the consideration of the Twentieth Century League. It is encouraging to know that through the liberality of Mr. Samuel Smith, a very vigorous campaign is being inaugurated by the Association against indecent illustrated papers, mutoscopes, &c. We would advise those having information on this question to communicate with the secretary.

Space will not allow us to comment on the legal cases dealt with during the month. The many and various private warnings given to men who, while they are not indulging in criminal vice, are yet endangering the moral welfare of others, is a work fraught with difficulty and calling for great care, but in many instances, as reported, it has resulted in the saving of both men and women.

The work of the four provincial centres of the Association was also reported. Each, with a paid secretary, is carrying forward the work of social purity. From one centre, Manchester, the report was most encouraging. The Association being non-sectarian, the local secretary had been able to unite the workers of all sections of the Christian Church in organizing a midnight mission to men and women, simultaneously with the ten days' mission of the Free Churches. The fact that two hundred experienced workers took part in this effort to reach the fallen men as well as the fallen women, proves how hearty and sympathetic was the desire to sow the good seed.

Perhaps the most interesting part of the mosnth' report was that relating to the international work. On a future occasion we hope to refer more fully to this matter. As the secretary remarked, the success of the work in Europe indicates very clearly that God has inspired this remarkable movement in Europe. This was made more than evident in the interesting episodes narrated by the secretary, when reporting on the formation of national committees in the capitals of Europe. In each, have some of the noblest and best formed themselves into a national committee for moral purposes, and from the one country, which up to the present has not been organized, the Association has already received the welcome invitation from one of the highest in the land to come over and organize a National Committee there also. Such openings for the propagation of the moral question abroad constitute a loud call to all Christian men and women to share in the privilege and responsibility of seeing that such a unique opportunity is not lost, but taken advantage of to the full in his name and for his sake.

That a moral wave is passing over Europe there can be no doubt; and in calling attention to the National Vigilance Association we feel that the importance of the work needs only to be known to make a number of good people eager to share at least in the financial responsibility of this Christ-like enterprise.

Malaga.—Mr. William Greene writes from 3, Endsleigh Gardens, N.W.: I have received a letter from Malaga stating that there is a debt on the Matamoros Hall of £50, and that if it is not paid we may get into trouble. I feel sure that the friends of Spain will send the needed money.

DEATH OF

Rev. William Arthur, M.A.

MANY will hear with profound sorrow of the home-going of Rev. William Arthur, widely known and beloved for his devoted labours as a Wesleyan minister, and the author of "The Tongue of Fire." He passed away a few days ago at Cannes, in his eighty-third year.

A native of Kells, co. Antrim, he was intended for a commercial career, and with a view to this he was placed in a trading firm at Westport. But God had other work for Mr. Arthur to do, and the event that turned his life into another channel was the result of attending a Methodist service. The congregation consisted of three, but the preacher's message was the power of God unto salvation to one of the three—William Arthur. The resolve to associate himself with the Methodists gave serious offence to his parents, who were Presbyterians; but the young man's heart was fixed, and before he was sixteen years old he had made his first attempt to preach. During his training at Hoxton Theological Institution, he displayed great aptitude for learning, and gave indications of the mental characteristics by which he was afterwards distinguished in his ministerial and literary labours. The Governor of the Institution testified of him:—"We have a remarkable young Irishman here. God has given him great power to win souls, and he never preaches without seeing conversions."

In maturer years, the form of his usefulness changed, but he ever looked back with intense longing upon the days when he had so much success in persuading sinners to be reconciled to God. At the age of twenty he was transferred by the Irish Conference to foreign missionary work at Gubbi, in the Mysore district of India. Profoundly impressed with the needs of India, he was soon absorbed in his work, and gave promise of a brilliant career. But failing health laid its burden upon his eager striving, and he was called to enter into an experience only known to large-souled men who have set their hearts upon doing some glorious work—the experience that renunciation costs more than life-long service. With inexpressible regret, yet calm resignation, he left the shores of India for Great Britain.

His personal appearance in the homeland as an advocate of foreign missions evoked the deepest sympathy. His pale face and wasted form, his sight almost gone, and protected with a green shade, added to the power and pathos of his appeals on behalf of the millions of India. It was while advocating the claims of the heathen that he was called upon to experience another keen disappointment. When speaking at a meeting in Liverpool, carried away by the inspiration of his theme, he sustained an injury to the vocal organs from which he never wholly recovered, and in the very ripeness of his powers his stewardship in the holy trust of preaching was to a large extent revoked.

After a few years' residence on the Continent, Mr. Arthur was again able to preach, large and influential congregations gathering to hear him. After serving as one of the general secretaries of the Wesleyan Foreign Missionary Society, he was elected as president of the Wesleyan Conference. Seventeen years having been spent at the Mission House, Mr. Arthur was given back for a short time to Irish Methodism, in response to an urgent entreaty that he should take charge of the newly-formed college at Belfast. Returning to England after three years, he became honorary secretary of the Missionary Society, and in this capacity his sound judgment and mature experience rendered his counsel of the greatest value to the organization whose interests he so much delighted to promote.

Few ministers in Methodism were able to make so large an acquaintance with public men and public affairs as Mr. Arthur. Having travelled extensively in three continents, he acquired a familiarity with the actual conditions of political, ecclesiastical, and social life over a wide area. In all proposals to adapt the polity of Methodism to the changing conditions of society he manifested more than passing interest, and showed characteristic breadth and largeness of sentiment. His enterprise was without rashness, and his liberalism without extravagance. But wide as was his personal influence, and varied as were his gifts, it is the work of his prolific pen that will hand on his name to future generations. His first book, "The Mission to the Mysore," contained his personal experience as a missionary. Biographical works followed, as well as several dealing with the subject of Papal activity and aggression.

Among other productions was a masterly refutation of the modern atheistic hypothesis, entitled, "The Difference between Physical and Moral Law," also a book in three parts—"Religion without God, and God without Religion," a work which lays the whole Church of Christ under obligation to its departed author. But it is "The Tongue of Fire; or, the True Power of Christianity" that will perpetuate the memory of William Arthur. In the truest and highest sense, the book is an English classic. To its immense circulation in England must be added the fact that it has been translated into numbers of languages, and has exercised a large ministry in all quarters of the earth. The influence of the book is by no means spent. It has many lessons for professing Christians in all walks of life. Mr. Arthur's work on Lord's Day observance* made a great impression; it has been re-issued in quite recent years, and has had a wide circulation.

The After-Care Association.—Of the number of men and women in the lunatic asylums of England and Wales, many are restored in the course of the year, mostly poor, often friendless, but anxious to earn their own living. It is to these discharged persons that the After-Care Association ministers, seeking their readmission into social life, boarding out convalescents in the country or at the seaside, distributing grants of money and clothing, and assisting them to obtain suitable employment. From all parts of the country cases are assisted by this charity, which is the only one of its class in the kingdom. Communications may be sent to the secretary, Mr. H. Thornhill Roxby, Church House, Dean's Yard, Westminster, S.W.

Liverpool Wesleyan Mission.

THE twenty-fifth anniversary of the Liverpool Wesleyan Mission was held on Tuesday and Wednesday, March 5 and 6.

A sorrowful interest attached to the anniversary, since it was the first held since the death of the venerated founder of the Mission, Rev. Charles Garrett. Many of the speakers made touching reference to the beloved temperance and religious leader who had been so closely associated with all that was best in the public life of Liverpool. At the last Conference, Rev. Joseph Jackson, who has had experience of mission work in the East End of London, was chosen to take up the heavy burden of Mr. Garrett's work, and earnestly has he addressed himself to the task. In this he has been aided by a young colleague of great evangelistic gifts, Rev. H. Howard May, as well as by the faithful band of lay workers that had been enlisted in the service of the Mission by Mr. Garrett.

All the ordinary agencies have been vigorously sustained, and a new departure has been made by the use of Hengler's Circus for Sunday evening services during the winter months. These services, chiefly conducted by Mr. Howard May, have attracted large audiences of from 2,000 to 3,000 people, souls have been saved in connection therewith, and inquirers gathered into Church membership. The report, presented by Rev. Joseph Jackson, mentioned these and other points of interest. There are eight chapels and halls used by the Mission for the preaching of the Gospel, four boys' homes, and three girls' homes. Some 3,000 boys have passed through the homes, and 170 are at present in residence. Mr. J. A. Lee, after sixteen years' faithful service as superintendent of the Boys' Homes department, is retiring from this branch. Temperance work is kept in the forefront, and the Mission agents have already secured 600 new pledges towards the Million Pledges movement. The one disappointing feature of the report was in regard to the finances. The expenditure had been £7,175, and the income £6,324, leaving a deficit of £850.

The meeting on Tuesday afternoon was held in the Town Hall, and was presided over by the Lord Mayor of Liverpool. Archdeacon Madden expressed the heartiest sympathy with the operations of the Mission. He recalled the last occasion on which he had stood on the platform at the Mission anniversary. Then the two venerated and venerable saints of God, Bishop Ryle and Charles Garrett, sat there side by side. The best way to honour the departed was to sustain the work they had begun. The Archdeacon referred to the Chief Constable's report as giving evidence of social improvement in Liverpool. He pointed out that in the last five years the number of policemen had been reduced by 100, and £8,000 annually saved to the rates. Rev. John Thomas, of the Myrtle Street Baptist Church, also gave an eloquent address, emphasizing the spiritual aims of the Mission.

On Wednesday evening a large meeting was held in the Philharmonic Hall. Mr. Charles Heaton, of Southport, presided, and addresses were given by Revs. Dr. H. J. Pope, F. L. Wiseman, B.A. (of Birmingham) and S. F. Collier (of Manchester).

The "Record of Christian Work" is a monthly which serves as an organ of the Northfield institutions, and is specially valuable as a magazine of Scripture teaching. There are excellent notes on the Sunday School Lessons, Christian Endeavour Topics, readings for the quiet hour, and articles on Christian doctrine and practice. Every page is rich in suggestive thought. The March issue gives an illustrated account of the Bible Teachers College, Monclair, New Jersey, from the pen of its principal, Dr. Wilbert W. White. Free Churchmen in Council.

THIS week the Sixth National Council of the Evangelical Free Churches is being held at Cardiff. Delegates from all parts of the United Kingdom, with representatives of similar organizations in other lands, have responded in large numbers to the invitation issued. The meetings are being held in Park Hall, the largest building of the kind in South Wales.

On Tuesday, Rev. C. H. Kelly vacated the chair, which was taken by the new president, Rev. J. G. Greenhough. The annual report was presented by Rev. Thomas Law, general organizing secretary. It was an imposing pamphlet of considerably more than a hundred pages of deeply interesting matter. The record represented bold endeavours, and its general contents amply justified the introductory summary, which expressed devout praise to the great Head of the Church for during the year. Though the Simultaneous Mission was the chief topic of the report, it was by no means the only one.

Much other work was got through in the course of the year. We make some extracts from the very readable pages:—

During the year eighty-seven new Councils have been formed. The number throughout the country is now about 700. The increase, taking place all over the country, represents a general movement. Very soon we shall have to report that no more Councils are being formed, for the simple reason that in a comparatively short space of time the whole of England and Wales will be covered with Councils. Last year we reported that there were thirty-three district federations; now there are thirty-six. It is hoped shortly to form another, which will complete the network of federations for the important county of Lancashire.

In the United States the movement is spreading most rapidly. In Australia and throughout New Zealand it is also gaining ground. During the last year the correspondence of the Central Office with the distant parts of the world has been enormous.

There is a probability that at an early date the movement will make itself felt north of the Tweed. The proposal for federation of the Scottish Presbyterian Churches is likely to come before the next General Assembly of the Established Church, in May. A further remarkable evidence of the growth of the spirit of unity was the publication of a call to prayer for visible unity amongst Christian people, signed by leading representatives of the Scottish Episcopal Church, the Established Church of Scotland, and the United Free Church of Scotland. To Bishop Wilkinson of St. Andrews (formerly Bishop of Truro), the chief credit of the new movement belonged.

Passing on to deal with the work in general, the report described

PROGRESS IN VARIOUS DIRECTIONS:

There is every year more and more to record, and greater variety of service to be taken account of. It is, perhaps, needless now to assert that the movement has been from the beginning first of all and pre-eminently spiritual. No one who has even the slightest acquaintance with the work of local Councils is able to entertain any other idea. But if any doubt existed at all, the Simultaneous Mission has effectively and for ever dispelled it. This was a movement into which, of course, not the slightest shadow of a shade of party politics could enter, and in which men of a variety of political opinions took an active and enthusiastic part. Owing to the fact that the Simultaneous Mission in provincial towns has only just closed, and that the Village Mission, at the time of going to press, has not begun, it has been impossible to make the report of this national and unique effort so complete as it ought to have been.

of the movement were then asserted and explained.

During the past year the missioners of the National Council, Gipsy Smith and Mr. W. R. Lane, have laboured with even greater success than has been bestowed upon them, by the blessing of God, during any former year. The congregations have been larger, the number of inquirers has been greater, and the effect upon the churches, in the quickening and deepening of their spiritual life, has never been more marked. The demand for the services of Gipsy Smith and Mr. Lane has been much greater than the National Council has been at all able to meet. In the summer Rev. J. Tolefree Parr will become one of the Council's missioners, and it is believed confidently that the future will inevitably bring a large development in this branch of our work. The evangelistic activity of our Councils, of course, means a great deal more than the missions of Gipsy Smith and Mr Lane.

Practically all the Councils are engaged in evangelistic work of some sort. The harmony of the churches has been refreshing to witness, and great ingatherings of souls have been the result. In all parts of the country, and particularly in the rural districts, local preachers, members of the Christian Endeavour Societies, and similar organizations, have rendered great help in evangelistic work, especially that conducted in the open-air. The Councils throughout the country have never forgotten for a moment that their great work is the evangelizing of England.

THE FREE CHURCH PAROCHIAL SYSTEM.

The preparations for the Simultaneous Mission included, in practically every case, house-to-house visitation, made sometimes three, sometimes even four times. Many Councils besides have included this work in their ordinary programme for the year. The information gained is of the greatest importance to the churches in the prosecution of their work for the souls of men.

The Free Church Parochial System is simply house-to-house visitation made constant and permanent. The Free Church to which a certain district is assigned, becomes responsible for that district for the social, moral, and spiritual condition of the inhabitants. All sorts of "parish" work should be undertaken, including the nursing of the sick by Free Church Sisters. The whole of England, divided into Free Church parishes, just as it is at present divided into legal and Anglican parishes—that is the ideal of the leaders of the Federation movement, and they will not rest content until it has been realized. Nor until this has been done will the Free Churches have properly appreciated the work that they are called upon to in this realm.

came next. On this important subject the report said:—

The ideal is that there should be a Free Church minister or evangelist in every village in the country, or at least within three miles of every village. Practically all town Free Church Councils have extended their boundaries in order to include the neighbouring villages. The idea is that the strength of the town churches should come to the aid of the village causes, many of which are weak and struggling, and the members of which are frequently subject to landlordism and priestly tyranny.

Among the many other operations named were—The formation of a Free Church Girls' Guild, Temperance work, lectures to local preachers, and services in theatres, vans and tents. A detailed account was also given of the Simultaneous Mission, both in London and the provinces.

OPENING MEETINGS.

The Federation proceedings opened on Monday evening with a reception, which was attended by a large and enthusiastic gathering. The local president, Mr. R. Bird, being unable through indisposition to be present, his son, Mr. Councillor Bird, extended a cordial greeting to the delegates. The retiring and designate Presidents of the General Council expressed the cordial thanks of all for the friendly and hearty manner in which they had been received.

At the early meeting on Tuesday, Rev. C. H. Kelly delivered his valedictory sermon on "The Testimony of the Man Born Blind" (John ix. 25). From the opening of the service it was manifest that it had received its key-note from the general sense of the goodness of the Lord in the Simultaneous Mission. A vivid picture was drawn of the circumstances—of opposition and enmity on every side; but the gracious Son of God in the forefront. Born blind, the man had never seen the beauties of the natural world, not even the faces of those he loved. The miracles of the Lord are parables, teaching great and precious truths. The prominent one here is the reality and value of

PERSONAL EXPERIENCE IN THE CHRISTIAN LIFE.

Can men know to-day, as truly as this man, that whereas they were born blind, they can have their spiritual eyes opened? Yes, they can. So it was most fitting that the Free Churches should open the New Century with an effort for the reaching of the outside multitude. The Churches realize that they do not exist to propagate any set of principles, but to seek the redemption of the lost. It was well that those who had been long separated should come together; above all, that they should do so in this cause.

Let every preacher secure his own personal experience of the saving power of the Lord Jesus Christ—the prime qualification. Let us preach for conversions. Our successes are close at hand if we stick to the old Gospel. If the world cannot disprove our teaching, it will blacken our characters; but as in this case there are too many witnesses for God. One changed life is worth more than a whole library of apologetics; men still read living epistles.

THE NEW PRESIDENT.

Rev. J. G. Greenhough was then inducted as president, and delivered an address on "The Unifying Forces of the Times." In the Old Book we read of some men with clear heads and brave hearts, who knew what was needed, and had daring enough to do it. These are qualities always in demand, and when met with in one person make a great man and a God-sent leader. The great unifying influence was pointed out in the drawing of the Church towards the world, thus learning the deeper meaning of the teaching of Christ. The whole Church has had its heart enlarged in the spirit of Calvary, asking what it can do to save the world. The dangers of unrighteous unity were pointed out, with special emphasis on present encroachments. A reference to the need for the maintenance of the Protestant Succession evoked an exhibition of strong approval.

Caledonian Home, Paris. — Miss Ally Remsbury, 152, Rue de la Pompe, Paris, writes: have succeeded in getting a good consulting committee, and hope, with the advice and help these gentlemen, to reorganize the Home on a fir and more business-like basis." The Home is a tective institution for teachers and artists, who only a very small sum. Miss Remsbury is now in ch of the work, which, it will be remembered, was foun by the late Miss Margaret Pryde.

The Simultaneous Mission.

LATER reports of the provincial gatherings in connection with the Simultaneous Mission tell of some remarkable stirrings among the regular attendants at places of worship. Although the outside element has, on the whole, remained unresponsive, yet, in places, the efforts put forth to influence non-churchgoers have likewise been crowned with blessing.

MR. W. D. DUNN AT WEST HARTLEPOOL.

Open-air work in all the chief centres was efficiently done during the mission conducted by Mr. W. D. Dunn at West Hartlepool, and a large choir led the singing at the services. The Town Hall, in which the evening services were held, was well filled. The addresses of the missioner were a clear, forceful putting of the claims of Christ, and many responded in full surrender. The afternoon Bible readings held at Wesley Church were times of deep blessing; they were very largely attended. At the closing meeting, all the ministers present spoke to the new converts, as did also the missioner. This meeting was held in Wesley Church, which was crowded.

BLESSING AT NEWPORT, MON.

At Newport, Mon., the mission resulted in a gracious awakening. The missioners, Mr. and Mrs. George Evens, of Liverpool, were cordially welcomed. On the first Sunday they held meetings in the Duckpool Road, and Commercial Road, Baptist Churches, and addressed the Y.M.C.A. Bible Class. The week-night meetings were held in the Temperance Hall, a building which seats 1,200, and from the first the services were crowded. Indeed, the hall was packed long before the time for commencing. Mr. Evens told the story of redeeming love in simple language, while Mrs. (Gipsy Tillie) Evens sang the Gospel. Some 200 passed through the inquiry rooms. The closing meeting was a memorable one, when Mrs. Evens told her life-story. The many touching incidents which she related were used in pressing home the claims of Christ upon her hearers.

MR. VAN DE VENTER AT SKIPTON.

At Skipton, night after night, the Temperance Hall proved far too small to hold the people desirous of hearing the missioner, Mr. Van de Venter. It is computed that, irrespective of Sunday services and the outdoor meetings that were held in mill-yards, between 14,000 and 15,000 people were addressed. A feature of the mission was a series of "chalk talks" which Mr. Van de Venter had with the children after school hours. At these meetings the missioner, who is a clever draughtsman, illustrated his addresses by effective sketches on the blackboard. The mothers' meetings were well attended, but chiefly by churchgoers. At the concluding gathering of the mission the hall was crowded, and at the close many who had passed through the inquiry room gave brief testimonies. The committee have not attempted to estimate the direct or indirect effects; but it is felt that the mission will lead to an awakening of the churches, binding them together in goodwill and fellowship, and equipping them for more united and effective service. In all 260 have passed through the inquiry rooms from the adult meetings, and 200 from the children's.

MR. MONRO COLLINGS AT REIGATE.

The mission at Reigate under Mr. W. Monro Collings continued very helpful until its close. On the last Sunday people were thrice turned away from the services, as the places of worship were filled to overflowing—in the afternoon at the young people's service, in the Congregational Church; at 6.30 p.m., when Mr. Collings preached in the Temperance Hall; and at the subsequent mission meeting, in the Wesleyan Church. On this last-named occasion a large overflow meeting was held in the Congregational Church, addressed by local ministers and Mr. Collings. For the praise meeting on the Wednesday evening the Wesleyan Church was crowded, and many were compelled to stand throughout the service. Over 100 seats were reserved for those who had decided during the mission, and a suitable address was given by the missioner. The chairman of committee, Rev. G. Currie Martin, M.A., B.D., presided at the close of the meeting, and spoke warmly of Mr. Collings' services throughout the ten days. He had not sought to spare himself in the least, and had greatly strengthened the hands of the ministers.

STIRRING MEETINGS AT KIRKBY STEPHEN.

The mission proved fruitful at Kirkby Stephen, where the meetings were conducted by Mr. Thomas Goudie, of the Evangelization Society. The churches took the matter up heartily. United prayer meetings and house-to-house visitation prepared the way for the evangelist, who quickly gained the ear of the people. At almost every service there were anxious inquirers, and altogether about 110 adults and fifty children passed through the inquiry room. Of these a good proportion are young men, many of whom had become victims to drink and gambling. On the last night of the mission over 650 persons attended the service and overflow meetings, representing nearly one-third of the entire population, whilst the inquirers represented about 8 per cent. For over thirty years there has not been such a move in the place. One of the chief results is the increased spiritual life which has come to many who have made a full surrender to God.

James Graham, Secretary.

AN AWAKENING AT NELSON.

At Nelson, Lancs., Rev. G. Hooper, of Canning Town, was the missioner. The Independent Methodist Church, in the centre of the town, was filled to overflowing at almost every meeting. Several extra meetings were held, addressed by the local ministers. Besides the usual evening services a very successful experiment was tried on the first Sunday afternoon, when all the Sunday school scholars were gathered into six centres; about 200 scholars went into the inquiry rooms. Mill services were held each day, at which several hundred working people were present. The Tuesday afternoons were given to women's meetings; at the second some 1,250 women were present, several gentleman lending their carriages to bring aged and infirm ladies to the service. Perhaps the feature of the mission was a great meeting on the second Sunday afternoon for men only. Quite 1,500 were present, and hundreds had to go away, unable to get inside the church. Mr. Hooper showed the relation of social problems to Christianity. At the services (except the scholars' meetings) 400 inquirers were helped in the inquiry rooms. This, with the 200 scholars, brings the total to 600. Mr. Hooper relied on the forcible declaration of the solid truth, its simplicity and grandeur. The Gospel message was put with great variety and beauty. The absent of sensationalism from the services, and the clear, sober decisions of the penitents promise well for the permanent character of the work. The whole town has been stirred to its depths, and the work is expected to grow after the Mission.

E. E. D. Davies, President
Free Church Council.

GIPSY SMITH AT CHELTENHAM.

The mission was held in Salem Baptist Church, the largest Nonconformist building in the town, which has proved all too small for the crowds that have thronged to hear the popular missioner. Gipsy Smith has suffered all the week from a severe cold, but has fought bravely against his affliction, and, supported by the prayers and sympathy of the people, has held steadily on. Night after night his earnest appeals have been responded to, and people have flocked to the inquiry rooms. During the seven days of the mission 732 names of seekers have been taken, and to these inquirers a circular letter has been addressed, calling them to a meeting with reference to joining a church. We are thankful for the stimulating influence of the mission, which has had a marked effect upon the church life of the town. Day by day the missioner gathered force, and if he could have continued longer with us we should have had yet larger results.

Samuel Dalzell, President.

AT OTHER CENTRES.

Mr. John Weedon writes:—"At Watford and Chipping Norton we had glorious times. Nearly 200 professed decision."

Remarkable blessing attended the Mission at Swansea. In the North centre alone over 500 persons entered the inquiry rooms. A large number of these were young men and women, The missioner was Mr. J. Brown, of the Evangelization Society, who gave powerful addresses.

The mission at Torrington, North Devon, was conducted by Miss Haddon. It extended over thirteen days, and was full of blessing. About seventy passed through the inquiry rooms. All the ministers took an earnest part in the meetings—Revs. E. E. Wilkins (Congregational), J. C. Page (Bible Christian), W. H. Milward (Wesleyan), G. Frankling Owen (Hon. Sec.)

Mr. J. H. Haise, general secretary of the Coventry Y.M.C.A., conducted the Mission at Brownhills, near Walsall. The services have been signally blessed. Definite cases of decision, and backsliders restored, are among the most marked results. The Lord's people have been aroused to a new sense of their responsibility and privileges.

Mr. Thomas Payne, of Manchester, was at Soham, Cambs. The spirit of conviction was upon the people. Chapels were well filled during the week and on Sunday. There has been a quickening of spiritual life among the churches of the town. The addresses of Mr. Payne were of an impressive character, and it is believed that great good will come of his visit. Several decided for Christ.

The missioner at Marlow was Rev. E. H. Titchmarsh, of Newbury. Most of the services were held in the Primitive Methodist Chapel, but all the chapels were made use of. There was a Gospel service each evening; Bible readings and children's services were also held. The average week-night attendance was over 200, and on the Sundays double that number. The sermons were marked by lucidity, freshness of presentation, and sound teaching. Altogether about fifty persons have been brought to decision for Christ.

In the course of an interesting letter, Mr. Ernest E. Moodey describes the work at Broadstairs: "Rev. J. Bennett Anderson was the missioner. The first Sabbath of the Mission was a day of power, starting with an early prayer meeting at 7.30 a.m., at which the missioner dwelt upon the distinction between false and true confidence (Jer. xvii. 5-10). Mr. Anderson preached both morning and evening, and also conducted a children's service in the afternoon. The evening after-meeting was a time of blessing, and many appeared to be under deep conviction; there were several who trusted Christ. Next night, six more entered the inquiry rooms. The churches have received an immense blessing."

THE CARE OF CONVERTS.

Mr. R. Fletcher Moorshead, B.M., writes: "The Mission is now over, and the accession of new life into the churches entails a considerable responsibility. These young disciples, beset with temptations and untaught in the Word of God, yet full of ardent love for the Saviour, will call for tender counsel, lest they fall into the error of regarding conversion as the goal instead of the starting point. May I suggest the formation of Bible-study classes adapted to the needs of those young in the faith? Again, Christians should weigh well the question of their influence and daily walk, seeing that it is of frequent occurrence that to those who have been longer in the way, the beginners look for an example of Christian practice. Further, the new disciples should be encouraged to enter into those paths of service to which God calls them. In this connection may I suggest, to Missionary secretaries in particular, that this harvest of souls may be turned to good account for the millions of the non-Christian world?"

Obituary.

REV. W. MILES MYRES.

THE late Rev. W. Miles Myres, vicar of Swanbourne, who passed away on February 21, was a man of sterling character and remarkable capacity for ministerial work. At St. Paul's, Preston, where he laboured assiduously for eleven years, the work was greatly expanded under his direction. Among other agencies a chapel-of-ease was opened, and an old shed in a poor locality was purchased and converted into a mission room. In 1879 he became vicar of Swanbourne. Here, again, he introduced important improvements in parochial organization, and exercised a widely felt influence for good.

REV. ALEX. ROBERTS, D.D.

The death occurred on Friday at Mitcham Park, Surrey, of Rev. Alexander Roberts, D.D., a well-known Scottish minister. Born in Kincardineshire on May 12, 1826, he was educated at the Grammar School, Aberdeen, and at the university of that city, where he had a distinguished career. He served as a Presbyterian minister in his native country, and in London from 1852 until 1871, when he was appointed to the Professorship of Humanity in the University of St. Andrews, a position which he held for twenty-eight years, retiring in 1889 through failing health. From 1870 to 1884 he was a member of the New Testament Revision Company. His publications included an "Inquiry into the Original Language of St. Matthew's Gospel," "Discussions on the Gospels," and "Greek the Language of Christ and His Apostles."

DR. E. P. GOODWIN, CHICAGO.

The death of Dr. E. P. Goodwin, which occurred suddenly on February 13, removes a minister who was held in esteem on both sides of the Atlantic for his character and work. In 1860 he became pastor of the First Congregational Church, Columbus, O., whence, in 1868, he accepted the pastorate of the First Church in Chicago, where he continued until July, 1900. The church grew rapidly under his ministry; its membership has been near 2,000. Dr. Goodwin has since been preaching in the churches which came into existence through his influence and the generosity of his people, and in going here and there in the city as invitations came to him. The departed minister was a tower of strength in Chicago. To him the Scriptures were the Word of God, and his highest ambition, both for himself and for those dear to him, to grow in the grace and knowledge of our Lord.

REV. URIJAH R. THOMAS, BRISTOL.

The honoured minister of Redland Park Congregational Church, Bristol, Rev. Urijah R. Thomas, passed away on Friday last, at the age of sixty-two. He was the son of the late Rev. Dr. David Thomas, the well-known minister for many years of Stockwell Chapel, and originator and editor of The Homilist.

Mr. Thomas received his college training at Cheshunt. His ministry began in 1862 at Redland Park Church, Bristol, where it has been continued with much acceptance, in unbroken peace, happiness, and prosperity, up to the time of his death. During his ministry Redland Park Church has been twice enlarged at a cost of £3,000, and it now seats 900 people.

Early in his career Mr. Thomas became prominent amongst his Congregational brethren; his strong personality soon brought him to the front, and he held various offices, filling in 1896 the position of Chairman of the Congregational Union. Mr. Thomas evinced much practical interest in the welfare of the poorest children, the waifs and strays of large cities.

Mr. Thomas was active on behalf of the London Missionary Society, the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, and many other important organizations. He was president, too, of the Western Temperance League, and of the Bristol Sunday School Union, and served on the Bristol School Board for many years. Mr. Thomas was the founder of the Ministers' Seaside Home at Morthoe, North Devon.

The Declaration by the King.

SIR,—As some fresh step is made almost daily, in the attempt to secure an alteration of the King's Declaration, would you allow me to make a few remarks?

Cardinal Vaughan denounces as "barbaric" the mere personal repudiation of certain beliefs, which, if true, must be, as he holds, sacrosanct; but which, if false, must with equal certainty be dishonouring to God and debasing to man. But, then, what about the "barbarism" of those Papal Bulls, which to Cardinal Vaughan himself are of as binding "authority" as is the New Testament? Take, for instance, the Bull In Cœna Domini, referred to in the sixth volume of Dens' Theology, and referred to throughout that work as an end of controversy. It says:

"We, therefore, excommunicate and curse on the part of Almighty God, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost by the authority also of the blessed apostles Peter and Paul, and by Our Own, all Hussites, Wickliffites, Lutherans, Zuinglians, Calvinists, Huguenots, Anabaptists, Trinitarians [sic] and Apostates from the Christian faith, and all and singular other heretics, also schismatics and those who pertinaciously withdraw themselves [like Lord Halifax] or secede from obedience to Us."

The third canon of the fourth Council of Lateran also is referred to as authoritative both in Cabassutius and in Dens, both being officially authorised and sanctioned by the authorities of Maynooth, and which runs in these terms: "If any temporal Lord, being required and admonished by the Church, shall neglect to cleanse his country of this heretical filth, let him be bound with the chain of excommunication; and if he shall scorn to make satisfaction within a year, let this be signified to the Supreme Pontiff; that thenceforth he may declare his vassals to be absolved from fidelity to him, and may expose his land to be occupied by [Roman] Catholics, who, the heretics being exterminated, may without contradiction possess it, and preserve it in the purity of the faith; saving the right of the chief lord, so long as he himself presents no obstacle, and offers no resistance in this matter."

Pope Pius IX., in his celebrated Syllabus, Art. 42, taught that in any conflict of the two laws, the ecclesiastical must prevail. That explains the meaning of the word "unlawful" in the dispensing a prince or statesman from his oath. It is just because the casuistry invented and methodized by the Church of Rome, has completely evacuated of all binding force any form of words whatever, which the Hierarchy may deem adverse to their interests, that the Declaration taken by our Sovereigns has been framed in its present terms, to exclude, as far as possible, any secret adherent of the Romish faith from following the immoral and disloyal teachings of the Canon Law. By that "law" "heresy," and the maintenance of the law of the land against the Hierarchy of Rome, constitute "reserved cases" of "mortal sin," which no parish priest may absolve from, unless in the very article of death! The terror inspired by this doctrine in the breasts of sincere Roman Catholics is such as no Protestant can realize. When the consciences of the people have been sophisticated by the teachings of Maynooth and its rival seminaries, it is utterly impossible to conceive an organization more powerful for wielding religious despotism for political ends.

The chronic disloyalty of the Irish peasantry, and the chronic misconduct of Irish M.P.'s, are both alike accounted for by these considerations. And we dare not, as Protestant Englishmen, forego the safeguards which our forefathers provided at so great a cost, in order to exclude the "dispensing" power of the Pope and his Cardinals; safeguards to which also King Edward VII., to the grateful contentment of his people, constitutionally bound himself "on the first day of his First Parliament."—I am, yours faithfully,

HENRY MILLER, Secretary.

About Books.

A series of articles on various fields of thought, that recently appeared in the Daily Chronicle, have been published in book form with the title, The Mind of the Century (2s. T. Fisher Unwin). The pages are very readable.

The Story of Some of Our Favourite Hymns, by W. C. Procter, is a choice booklet. The subject has an interest all its own, and Mr. Procter has dealt with it thoughtfully, and in a sympathetic manner. (Liverpool: J. A. Thompson & Co., 24, Elliot Street.)

Peggy, a Schoolgirl (5s. Stock) is an excellent story for children. The central figure is at first a wilful and hot-tempered, but clever and lovable girl, whose steps are traced as she is won for the Saviour after joining the Scripture Union, and ultimately led to serve Him in India in connection with the Church Missionary Society.

The author of "Memorials of Captain Hedley Vicars" has issued an attractive booklet—Peace (2d. Nisbet)—in which the need for "war before peace" is vividly illustrated from the present Boer War. The instances given show that these months of strife will yet furnish many a narrative of devotion to the Lord Jesus Christ in the British camps.

Part I. of the Marquis of Lorne's Life of Queen Victoria, Y.R.I.: Her Life and Empire, is issued. It consists of thirty-two pages, printed on fine paper, and is a thoroughly artistic production, containing reproductions of many fresh pictures concerning the home life of Queen Victoria. (Fortnightly numbers, 6d. each. Harmsworth Bros.)

The dark side of Roman Catholic teaching and influence in Ireland is presented in Tales of a Colporteur (2s. 6d. A. H. Stockwell), by J. Macalister, and vividly contrasted with evangelical faith and effort. The work of the Salvation Army is introduced as meeting the need, and the picture of the reception of Gospel truth by the simple-minded peasantry reminds the reader anew that the fields around are "white already to harvest."

The fourth volume in the series of Bible Characters, by Dr. Alexander Whyte, is devoted to men and women whose names occur in the New Testament. The chapters number twenty-seven, the first dealing with Joseph and Mary, and the last with James the Lord's Brother. In between, we have delineations of many of the less known worthies of Gospel and Apostolic story. The preceding volumes have given us nothing better than we have here; and that is saying much. Preachers and teachers will find the chapters of great service for their fruitful suggestiveness. (3s. 6d. Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier.)

A catechism is a testimony as well as a manual of instruction. Among interesting and useful publications in this line a worthy place may be claimed for A Baptist Catechism, compiled under the direction of the West London Group of the London Baptist Association; and also for A New Baptist Catechism, by Rev. Charles Williams, of Accrington. Though calculated to prove of special service in Baptist communities, these booklets will assuredly exert a wider influence among Christians in general. (1d. each. Baptist Tract and Book Society.)

The Treasury of American Sacred Song, selected and edited, with notes explanatory and biographical, by W. Garrett Horder, is a volume which needs no commendation. When originally published, in 1896, it was declared on all hands, and on both sides of the Atlantic, to be the best book in its line; and it cannot now be less in the revised and enlarged edition just issued. The best of the poetry of America is "sampled" here; and while the sentiment shows variety, there is a vein of spiritual feeling such as cannot but help the devout reader. The notes are to the point; and good taste in print, paper, and binding combine to enhance the beauty and value of the book as a sacred anthology. (3s. 6d. Henry Frowde.)

Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress" Retold for the Young, by Rev. David Davies, is a volume which should be equally interesting to older readers who appreciate the ever-timely teaching of the marvellous dream of the Bedford tinker. Though of such general value, the volume is true to its claim—"retold for the young"—and we could not conceive a better execution of such an important work. Though the pilgrim story of Christian is extremely easy of comprehension, many of its points are not obvious in their religious bearing and application. Here Mr. Davies comes in as a welcome "guide, philosopher, and friend" to our boys and girls; and his deeply instructive pages are made singularly attractive by admirable illustrations, expressly made for this work, by D. R. Warry. We sincerely trust that this book will help many to an understanding of the inwardness of Bunyan's great allegory. (4s. 6d. Simpkin, Marshall, & Co.)

Other Lands.

Pandita Ramabai's Work.

IT will rejoice the hearts of many of the Lord's people in this country to hear how signally God has answered prayer on behalf of the famine rescue work undertaken by Pandita Ramabai in India. Miss M. F. Abrams, who for the past three years has shared in the spiritual teaching and training of the pupils at Mukti, furnished the following particulars recently, when on her way to America in the interests of the work.

Previous to last year Ramabai had in training 300 girls and women from the famine of 1896-7, and about fifty others. During last year she gathered destitute widows, deserted wives, and orphan children from the famine districts in Gujerat and Rajputana, raising the number to more than 1,750. She expects to continue receiving such needy ones till she has 2,000 under her care. Most of these would have become the prey of evil men had they not been rescued; and among those brought in are thirty-three dear children under fifteen, besides many older ones who have been cruelly sinned against. Buildings, erected by famine labour, are being erected to accommodate this great increase, and when completed they will cover a large extent of ground.

Beside the wise forethought and careful planning needful properly to care for so many extra inmates, it became a problem how to meet the flood of heathen thoughts and ways brought in by this enormous increase, and prevent it from swamping the Christian life of the former pupils, themselves so recently out of heathenism. In June last, a protracted meeting of ten days was held for the Christians, and though at the time apparently unproductive of definite results, it was the starting-point of

in many hearts. All the capable, trustworthy women and girls from among the previous Christian inmates have been pressed into the service of caring for the famishing. Eight were employed in bringing in the starving from the famine fields; fifteen nursed the 300, who for a time were sick—this under an efficient Indian Christian woman, a trained hospital assistant. Forty-five are now employed as matrons, and thirty-five as pupil teachers, teaching two hours a day, and receiving five hours' normal training per week from Ramabai herself.

All these, with the resident married teachers, clerks, overseers of building work, &c., meet every morning at the early hour of five for a season of united prayer, in which the daily needs of the work and the sick are specially brought before the Lord. In addition to this, a special course of Bible study has been arranged for the teachers and pupil teachers. Each reads in private seven selected chapters daily, and an hour is given by one of the experienced workers to explain and elucidate the subjects. In July cholera broke out in the villages around Ramabai's settlement, a day of fasting and prayer was held at Mukti; the dreaded danger was averted, not a single case occurring on the premises. Shortly afterwards in the villages, although it continued to rage in Poona with unabated virulence.

A building is going up for a church, designed in due course to accommodate the whole family. This will also be used for school purposes. At present it is necessary to hold two congregations and three Sunday schools. On one occasion, when Miss Abrams was speaking on sin and salvation, from the subject of leprosy, in one of the Sunday morning meetings, several of the newly rescued girls showed signs of penitence, and after the meeting many inquired the way of salvation. From that date meetings of inquirers have been regularly held, and at the time Miss Abrams left Mukti nine had been baptized, and over 400 were inquiring after the way of salvation. This number afterwards increased to 1,000; and all the new girls have since sent in their names as desirous of becoming Christians.

It was a trial to Miss Abrams to leave the work at such an interesting crisis, but as, in obedience to the heavenly vision, she made her preparations, the Lord set his seal to the step by graciously providing volunteer labourers to fill the vacancy, mostly from among the Indian Christians on the place. The revival meetings were continued for four days weekly, and culminated in a large camp-meeting at Christmas of several days duration. This was attended by over 2,000 rescued widows and orphans, and 500 boys (mostly relatives of Ramabai's girls), were present from Mr. Norton's Orphanage at Dhond, and Mr. Fox's Orphanage at Poona. The hearts of the Christians were manifestly prepared to help in reaping a harvest of souls from among the women and girls saved from the year's famine. The industries are being added to and developed as the famine girls become able to work and learn. Some of these prove to be proficient in cap-making and embroidering, industries peculiar to Gujerat. These are being utilized as new branches of work at Mukti. Some 450 of the newly rescued are of kindergarten age, and Ramabai largely expects to develop that department.

HELEN S. DYER.

The Indian Famine.

WRITING with reference to the suggestion of Principal Douglas, of Glasgow, made in our issue of February 28, that the proposed Indian Memorial to Queen Victoria should take the form of a plan of irrigation, an esteemed correspondent says: "Having spent nearly all my working life in India, and having had occasion to travel over the length and breadth of it, I can conceive no better way of perpetuating the memory of the great Queen than that famine, in due course, should be made to cease from the land."

From Yellandu, Rev. C. B. WARD writes: "Your kindly help from your famine fund has, in the last year, enabled us to do much for some of the poor aborigines of Bastar, India. It is perhaps the first time in history that famine has ever approached them so as to make them feel it much. The jungles are wondrous kind to them, and from the wild fruit and roots and bulbs they live, when the Hindu throws up both hands and cries for help. Good crops have come to bless, but these people are not yet saved. We have our mission stations at Yellandu and Jagdalpur, two strategic points for the evangelizing of half a million of them, well fitted up with buildings for missionaries, orphans, schools, workers, and of them we have workers and orphans, but we need more missionary helpers and friends to support them."

Describing the work at Poona associated with the name of Mrs. Bruere, Rev. D. O. Fox says: "Mrs. Bruere is in America at present, and Mrs. Fox and myself have the work under our care. We desire to thank the generous friends who have helped to care for the orphans. These boys have steadily improved in conduct; all of them have professed faith in Jesus Christ, and have been baptized. They give good evidence that their faith is genuine. All attend school daily. We have placed some of the larger boys in an industrial school to learn a trade. We hope to send out men of God."

A Chinaman on Opium.—A touching letter from a native official in the Hong Kong Post Office has come into our hands. His answer to the question why China, with about 400,000,000 of people, is in "so weak a condition," is in the words, "because it is an opium smoking kingdom." After explaining the enervating and deadly effect of the drug, he goes on to express the hope that the time is not far distant when the Chinese Government will be in a position to grapple with the evil in such fashion as will lead to its suppression.

In Japanese Waters.

THE work of the American Baptist Missionary Union in Japan includes a deeply interesting mission to the inhabitants of the innumerable islands in the Inland Sea. This work is in the hands of Captain Luke M. Bickel, who is well known in Baptist circles in London. For three years or more Captain and Mrs. Bickel have been moving about among the less accessible populations of Japan. In a recent letter to a London friend, the captain says:—

In the course of half a year I have visited forty-three islands, large and small, with an aggregate population of about 180,000 souls, and held 200 meetings, at which 20,000 different people from some 220 villages attended. Add to this that I have had to shift my anchorage, setting and taking in sail, about sixty times, and that every foot of the way to the houses in these 220 villages had to be tramped, as the hills are steep and there are no roads for vehicles, and you will form some idea of the work I have had to do. I am deeply grateful to God for the evident guidance that has directed my every step.

The difficulties are very great; but the opportunity is equally great, and the isolation is sometimes very depressing. At times months have intervened between my visits to open ports, and weeks have passed without a white face being seen. My work takes me into a Japan quite distinct from that generally known, and it is rare to meet with a foreigner. I get my letters often after intervals of several weeks. When I have met missionaries, I have been greatly touched by their kindness.

Young Women in Alexandria.

"AS God sends us workers and funds I see endless possibilities of extending the work," writes Miss Johnson from Alexandria. "The demands are greater than ever; more girls coming out, more to be reached; girls actually waiting to be taken in; owing to failures in trade fewer employers to be found, and supplies of every kind very dear, some things 50 per cent. dearer than last winter. This winter the feature of the work that interests me most is the way Roman Catholic girls (English and Maltese) are coming to me. Once, through sheer want of room and funds, I had to let a girl go to the nuns for assistance and lodging; of course I shall never see her again and she might have been won for Christ! If I had had ten shillings in hand I could have taken a room near by for her, and kept hold of her—it nearly breaks my heart sometimes. 'For whom Christ died,' and we cannot even help them."

"More girls coming out." There is a pressing danger contained in these words which the World's Y.W.C.A. have realized and are seeking to remedy. To meet all English girls on their arrival and help them should they be alone and friendless is their aim. That the need for this is great may be gathered from the following extract:—"On Sunday," says Miss Johnson, "I was talking to a teacher here. She told me when their boat, a cargo steamer, reached the docks, a grandly-dressed Arab went on board, and said he had been sent to fetch her, and he knew her name. She had the good sense to speak to the captain, and he said wait, and it was proved to be a hoax! And I know this has happened more than once. Mr. Gould, our Consul, is trying to arrange that all English girls passing through here shall be sent from the passport office to me." The loneliness, not to say the danger, of arriving in a foreign land, helpless and alone, would thus be averted, and vast possibilities for good and scope for work opened up.

What the World's Y.W.C.A. want in Alexandria is a building of their own, a good-sized, airy, well-drained house (which could be made self-supporting), and which would be a home to girls and women of all nationalities who are often lost in the sin-whirl of this large city through want of such a place. It is hard to have to refuse help from want of sufficient and suitable room. Furniture is also greatly to be desired; what is already there is second hand, often in very bad condition, and always deficient in quantity. At least two more workers are urgently needed, who would be willing to devote their lives to helping the sad and lonely for Christ's sake; who are self-supporting or could be in measure supported by friends; who have had a thorough all-round education and have the power of learning languages, and who would be ready to go into training for a few months. The World's Y.W.C.A. Office is at 26, George Street, Hanover Square, W.

American Notes.

A VERY remarkable movement has started in the Presbyterian denomination, indicating a revival of religion. Hundreds of deacons and other lay members are now attending the "ministers' meeting" in this city at Monday noon, chiefly to wait upon God for the enduement of power. A recent meeting was in part given to plans and suggestions for work, and a very interesting case was cited from Rochester, N.Y. It seems that on the first Sunday of October, in an address which preceded the Lord's Supper, Dr. Henry H. Stebbins, pastor of the Central Presbyterian Church, suggested to his people as a fitting close to the nineteenth century that at least 100 people be brought into the fold of Christ. One of the elders said to himself, Why cannot a committee of 100 be secured to carry this into effect? Without delay cards were distributed among workers who undertook to do their best to further the object desired. The result was that on the Sunday designated 119 new members were received into the Church.

The members of the Fire Department of this city, who are agitating for the passage of a Bill in the Legislature for a shorter work day, have issued an appeal to the public to support the agitation. The appeal, after giving the reasons for the bill, concludes as follows:—

We pray—For our spiritual welfare, that each and every member may have a chance of attending Divine service, according to his belief, Sunday or other holidays; for our loved ones, that we may have an opportunity and a portion of each twenty-four hours to devote to their comfort and protection and the education of the future citizens of our State; for our home, with its elevating influences, the regulation of the family means, and other home comforts that make home the grandest place in the whole world.

At Jacksonville, Indiana, the women recently organized a Carrie Nation Club, and adopted a resolution advocating Mrs. Nation's methods of dealing with saloons in Kansas. Recently they translated their resolution into action against the three saloons in their town by an attack on the finest of these with hatches, clubs, and bricks. The saloon keeper seized Mrs. Snyder, the president of the club, and choked her almost into insensibility. The police were half an hour in quelling the fight which ensued. Warrants have been sworn out against all the principals concerned, the assailants being among the "best" people in town. The citizens declare that any attempt to re-open the saloons will result in their being destroyed by dynamite.

The Winfield liquor men retaliated on the ministers and others who had started to destroy their places, by poisoning the wells of several prominent people, and wrecking the United Brethren Church. About 1,000 citizens have signed an agreement to run the liquor men out of town, and the Chairman of the Law and Order Society has sent an ultimatum to them giving them a day to depart from the place bag and baggage, adding that if they do not comply with this demand, their liquor and fixtures will be destroyed in the streets.

Mrs. Nation has been put in jail in default of 2,000dols. bond, under a peace warrant obtained by a cold storage firm, into whose place she had broken in order to destroy some liquor, and there she is at present writing, prepared to stay there indefinitely.

Welsh Notes.

AT the annual meeting of the Cardiff branch of the National Vigilance Society, Rev. Canon Thompson, who presided, commented on the apathy which prevails with regard to important matters such as the work of this Society. The same unconcern is too often manifested with regard to temperance. Canon Thompson said that, while not a pessimist, he feels every day that Christianity is becoming more and more worldly, and that a spiritual awakening is needed.

The current number of the Welsh Geninen contains an article advocating the union of the Welsh Calvinistic Methodists and the Welsh Independents. The writer maintains that these two—the leading denominations of the Principality—are approximating more closely to one another in matters of doctrine and church polity. It is undoubtedly the fact that Welsh Congregationalism is tending towards some organized form of church government, and that Welsh Calvinistic Methodism is more Congregational than almost any branch of Presbyterianism.

The South Wales Calvinistic Methodist Association held its quarterly meetings at Cilfynydd, near Pontypridd, on March 5, 6, 7. Delegates were present from the southern counties of the Principality, and also from Monmouthshire. Some of the gatherings were devoted to the discussion of Connexional affairs, while others were set apart for the preaching of the Gospel. The latter meetings were attended by thousands of people; the preaching was of a high order throughout, and in some instances was very powerful. The Association discussed the advisability of publishing in its entirety the diary of the great Welsh revivalist, Howell Harries, one of the founders of Welsh Calvinistic Methodism. His diary extended to 17,000 pages of closely-written matter. The offer made by a leading Welsh daily to publish the diary was referred to a committee, who will also consider the desirability of recommending the Book Committee of the General Assembly to undertake the task.

Scottish Notes.

THE Scripture Gift Mission is arranging for a combined effort, in conjunction with friends in Glasgow, for a liberal distribution of Scripture portions at the Glasgow Exhibition, which opens on May 1. Open-air meetings will be held in connection with the work, a public hall being secured for Gospel services on Sunday afternoons and evenings.

Rev. W. H. Murray reports the resumption of his Bible work in Peking, the first day's sales amounting to a value of 7,000 cash. Almost all his blind pupils were murdered by the Boxers, who destroyed all his possessions save his Family Bible, which a Chinaman had brought in, while his old and favourite mule had been used for food in the British Legation during the siege.

The Increase, No. 16 shows that the Stirling Tract Enterprise is as active as ever in spreading the Gospel by means of the printed page. The number of periodicals, tracts, volumes, and booklets issued during the last completed year was 18,112,984, bringing the grand total up to 509,966,967, of which 187,691,817 have been sent out entirely free of charge. The trustees find, with regret, that donations to their funds are decreasing, while openings are available for the wise expenditure of an additional £1,000 each on home and foreign work.

An exhaustive report dealing with the prevalent Sabbath desecration was given in last week by Rev. James Snadden (Newcastleton) at Hawick Free Presbytery. Reviewing the district, he pointed out a tendency among farm servants to make the day a holiday pure and simple. In certain parishes, too much work was done, and farmers, in making arrangements, were not considerate of the spiritual interests of those under their charge. In the towns, card-playing in the open air and pleasure driving were on the increase. Cycling and railway travelling were indulged in on a large scale, while the scandals of the drinking clubs have themselves done much to obliterate the distinctive character of the day.

At the annual meeting last Thursday of the Scottish Labour Colony, Sir John Neilson Cuthbertson said the men sent to the farm were generally found to be in a broken-down state, in poor health, and poorly clad; but a residence of two or three weeks usually put that to rights. The average stay was about three months. It had been said that the colony had a pauperising influence, but there was nothing more clear than that it had not this tendency. It rather encouraged self-respect, for the men got nothing for nothing. Their feeding, housing, and clothing had to be worked for, and he believed that was a healthy feature of the colony. Besides the debt, an annual maintenance fund of between £500 and £600 is required to carry on the work on the present scale.

Rev. John Urquhart delivered in Glasgow, last week, the first of a series of five lectures under the auspices of the Bible Defence Union of Scotland—subject: "The Claims made by Scripture." He said the struggle for full belief in the Word of God is the greatest question of our day. They had been asked whether they would not be better employed in preaching the Gospel than in furthering the objects of the Bible Defence Union; but he would inquire, What was the use of preaching if people lost faith in the Word of God. Missions and evangelistic meetings would go; and those who doubted that statement would find proof of it in the Unitarian Church. He urged that Christian people made no claim for the Bible which the Bible did not make for itself.

The opening of the Edinburgh Museum on the Lord's Day has aroused strong opposition. The proposal originated in the name of the Scottish Education Department, but, as was pointed out at the Free Presbytery, it is a new thing in the history of the country to occupy two hours of the Sabbath afternoon for secular instruction. It was held to be a very reasonable and worthy attitude to protest against this new form of interference with the Sabbath rest of public servants. It was agreed to memorialize the Department on the subject, and to point out, among other things, "that no reference has been made to the Scottish people, so as to bring out their views and feelings on this question, and no public and authoritative expression of opinion by anybody entitled to represent the sentiments of the community in favour of the new arrangement."

Last Friday, Lord Balfour of Burleigh, as Secretary for Scotland, received a deputation from the recent conference of municipalities on the better regulation of clubs. His lordship admitted that from reports received at the Scottish Office he was convinced of the inadequacy of the present law. It was, however, new and surprising to him to learn that a member of a club could take whisky out of his club and practically sell it on the street without being guilty of a breach of the law. He agreed with the petitioners that no law will be efficient which does not place on one footing clubs for the well-to-do as well as others. He could hold out little hope of legislation during the present session, but gave a firm assurance "that the communications which have been made to me have strengthened my knowledge of the existence of a real evil which requires to be dealt with, which, in my opinion, ought to be dealt with, and which, however conflicting views may be on general questions nearly allied to this, it may be possible under certain circumstances to deal with."

[BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS.]

CAMBRIDGE.

"A BUSINESS Man's Mistake" was the subject of Rev. C. T. Procter's sermon at the monthly service for men last Sunday. Mr. Procter based his sermon on the parable of the Rich Fool (Luke xii.)

On the same evening Rev. C. H. H. Wright, D.D., of the Protestant Reformation Society, gave a lecture on "The Church of England and the Confessional." Rev. T. W. Thomas, vicar of St. Barnabas, presided.

The Vicar of Barnwell, Cambridge, is appealing for funds for a parish room, and for this purpose the old British School has been purchased. Earnest Evangelical work is being done in this large poor parish of 10,000 souls. £700 has been raised, and a further £700 is wanted immediately.

On Monday of last week the annual meeting in connection with the Cambridge Auxiliary of the Church Pastoral Aid Society was held. Mr. J. H. Buxton, president of the parent society, was in the chair, and in opening the proceedings he emphasized the fact that the Society's work is pastoral and evangelical, on distinctly Protestant principles. Rev. E. Grose Hodge, rector of Holy Trinity, Marylebone, also spoke. He alluded to the Society as the great anti-Ritualistic Society of the Church of England, and impressed upon his hearers that the work of the Society was, first and foremost, definitely spiritual.

OXFORD.

The inaugural meeting of the Y.W.C.A. was held in the St. George's Hall on Thursday afternoon. The Rector of Exeter presided, and Mrs. E. W. Moore, of Wimbledon, gave the address. All augurs well for a useful work. The meeting in the evening was crowded.

Oxford has lost its Regius Professor of Ecclesiastical History by the death of Canon Bright, who has held the appointment since 1868. No one has done more to spread a knowledge of the early history of the English Church than Dr. Bright. One of the lessons of his life and work is thoroughness. It is said of him that "he always gave of his best, even in a small parochial meeting."

Dr. Wright, of the Protestant Reformation Society, lectured on Monday evening week in St. Aldate's Rectory Room, on "Scriptural Repentance and Roman Catholic Penance." Rev. Canon Christopher presided. The lecturer traced the Roman doctrine of Penance to a wrong view of sin, the Council of Trent having laid it down that original sin was removed in baptism. Again, the distinctions made by Rome between mortal and venial sin tended to reduce the guilt of sin, and this has led her to destroy the Scriptural doctrine of Repentance by her doctrine of Penance.

The United Simultaneous Mission in Oxford has just come to an end. The services were conducted by Rev. W. Bradfield, of Wesley Memorial Church in the City. They have been very well attended, but the results, so far as can be judged, have been small. Mr. Bradfield worked hard, and the effort has been much appreciated. Rev. R. J. Campbell, of Brighton, was to have been the missioner, but was prevented from coming. The services in the Town Hall on Sunday evening are to be continued for a few weeks, several Church of England clergy uniting with the Nonconformist friends in conducting them.

Deep Sea Fishermen.—Miss Z. Jameson, of Eastella, Hull, has again arranged a knitting competition in behalf of the Royal National Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen. Miss Jameson writes: "In past years many of your readers have become competitors. The rules are now ready, and I shall be glad to send them to any applicant on receipt of 2d. in stamps and an addressed envelope. The prizes, which number twenty-five, are all given in money."

Evangelistic.

Mr. Henry Varley in Glasgow.

THE many friends who have been praying for Mr. VARLEY'S mission at St. George's Cross Tabernacle will rejoice to know that the first week has been crowned with rich blessing. Great congregations have been brought together, in spite of stormy weather; large numbers of Christians have been helped and blessed, and there have been some clear and happy cases of conversion. The mission will probably continue two or three weeks longer. Will the Lord's remembrancers keep pleading that very much greater things than have yet been seen may be accomplished?

D. J. FINDLAY.

From another source we learn that Sunday was a memorable day. The Tabernacle was packed to the doors at 11.30 a.m., and at 7 p.m. every available standing space was occupied, as also was the large lecture hall, whilst some hundreds could not obtain admission. In the afternoon, at three, St. Andrew's Hall was packed with 4,000 men. It was a wonderful sight and meeting. Mr. Varley was listened to with the deepest interest, and impressions and convictions were made and fastened that the day of the Lord alone will declare. Large numbers are seeking Christ, and the second week of this remarkable mission opens with great expectancy and widening circles of interest.

Mr. Reginald Studd in India.

Mr. REGINALD STUDD is meeting with much blessing in India. At each place in which he has held a mission God has graciously, in answer to prevailing prayer and faith, granted a revival. At Hyderabad, the Y.M.C.A. was filled with people, night after night, many were saved, and all were blessed. At Poona he held sixteen meetings in three days, including two half-nights of prayer, which were remarkably blessed. He writes: "I feel I cannot rest, unless I see revivals in every place I visit, and I believe God will grant this heart-desire." He is visiting Allahabad, Cawnpore, Agra, and Lahore.

Mrs. Baeyertz in Leith.

Under the auspices of the Leith Christian Fellowship Union, this esteemed Jewish Christian lady evangelist has held a fortnight's special evangelistic services in Leith. Most of the meetings were held in the North Leith U.F. Church, Ferry Road, and the closing ones in Junction Road and Ebenezer U.F. Churches. There were two meetings each day, an afternoon Bible Reading, and a Gospel service in the evening. All the meetings have been largely attended, and an earnest spirit was manifested throughout, some of the subjects, such as "the Lord's Second Coming," bringing many from long distances.

A week of waiting upon God in prayer preceded the services, and an expectant spirit prevailed among the Lord's people, that He would send much blessing in our midst at this time, and refreshing from his presence. It has indeed been so. Mrs. Baeyertz has been wonderfully strengthened, and all her addresses have been characterized by clear exposition of the Gospel, by great spiritual power, and by pointed appeal to the hearts and minds of the unsaved. Christians have received quickening, backsliders have been restored, and sinners have been brought to a saving knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus, 250 or more having been dealt with in the inquiry meetings, which were held each evening, when Mrs. Baeyertz showed the seekers after truth the way of salvation in a simple manner from the Word of God; some of the more difficult cases being dealt with individually by willing workers.

The afternoon Bible readings have been much appreciated, and deep blessing was experienced by those who were privileged to attend.

On the last Sabbath evening an immense assembly gathered in Junction Road Church, when the closing Gospel address was given by Mrs. Baeyertz, from the words, "The Master is come, and calleth for thee." It is computed that about 1,400 persons were present, and a remarkably solemn service this was, a profound impression being produced upon all present by the heart-searching words spoken by the evangelist. So much interest has been aroused by these services that some of the local papers have written very favourable articles upon Mrs. Baeyertz's work. We feel confident that the good effected through her instrumentality will be permanent. Our hearts are full of praise to God for his abundant answer to prayer, and we will remember Mrs. Baeyertz at the throne of grace that fruit may more and more follow her labours for her Lord and Master in years to come, to the glory of his name.

FRANCIS CLARK, President,
Leith Christian Fellowship Union.

In the mission conducted at Dunnington by Mr. and Miss CATER, of Bristol, believers were blessed, and a number of persons made the great decision.

Mr. R. S. BRADBROOK has conducted a mission at Sundorne Hall, Charlton, S.E. Many have sought the Saviour, including not a few for whom prayer had long been made.

Mr. GEORGE J. COMBER has just concluded a fruitful mission at Mannings Heath, near Horsham. Christians were greatly blessed, and several of the unconverted yielded to the Saviour. T. W. T.

Stirring times are reported from Ashford, Mid., where Rev. D. M. CAMERON is holding evangelistic meetings. Police-Sergeant J. Gurr sends us an interesting report, from which it appears that many have been impressed. Parents and children, husbands and wives, young and old, have been seeking the Lord together.

We regret to announce that Mr. GEORGE CLARKE the evangelist, has again completely broken down, his throat being the cause. He cannot speak longer than a minute or two. The consequence is, he has been obliged to cancel his missions, at any rate for some time. He asks the prayers of fellow Christians for his recovery.

Mission services, attended by good results, have been conducted at the Congregational Church, Ripley, Hants, by Mr. F. H. TAYLOR, of the Hampshire Village Mission depot, Fareham. The meetings were well attended. Many received blessing, and the spiritual life of the Church has been stimulated. The friends praise God for his gracious answer to many prayers.

Mr. WILLIAM FORBES has just concluded a twelve days' mission in Trinity Presbyterian Church, Manchester, and much good has been done. He also conducted two tea meetings for the women employed in the Manchester theatres. About eighty attended. A local committee, with Rev. W. J. Jack as convener, was appointed to continue the work among the theatrical people.

A fruitful mission has been conducted in the Congregational Church at Wiveliscombe by Mr. T. HOGBEN, founder of the "Welcome Mission" at Portsmouth, and of the "One-by-One" Band. The Church had been united in prayer for Divine blessing for some time before the Mission began, and the power of the Spirit was manifested, particularly among members of the senior Bible classes, many of whom yielded themselves to Christ. It is believed the good work will spread and deepen. Mr. Hogben conducted several afternoon Bible readings. In addition to their effect upon the unconverted, the services have resulted in a quickening of spiritual life among church members.

Blessing has been given in connection with mission services at Shoreham, near Sevenoaks, conducted by Mr. and Mrs. GEORGE H. DYMOCK, of Eastbourne, in which the Wesleyan and Baptist Churches united. The preaching of the Gospel was earnest, clear, and convincing; while a gracious spirit of hearing was poured out upon the people. The Wesleyan Chapel was filled night after night, and in the inquiry rooms over eighty gave in their names as ready to trust and follow Christ. Quite a number were young men, some of whom had hitherto manifested little regard for religion. One outcome of the mission has been the establishment of a men's meeting, to be held every Sunday afternoon. It is gratifying to note that most of the new converts at once signed the temperance pledge. Steps will be taken to deepen and extend the work.

Requests for Prayer.

On behalf of the Monthly Meetings for the Deepening of Spiritual Life, March 21. Speaker, Rev. Jas. Lyall.

For a Mission to Children at the West Green Baptist Church, March 17-24, to be conducted by Mr. C. Dudley Smith.

Prayer for Ireland.

THE Irish Branch of the Evangelical Alliance have issued an invitation to Christians, both in Ireland and other countries, to set apart Sunday, March 17, as a day for prayer on behalf of Ireland.

The Council, while gratefully recognizing "the manifold religious and philanthropic activities at work on behalf of the poor and the needy at home, and the generous sympathy manifested towards those in other countries who are suffering from persecution, pestilence, and famine," feel, at the same time, "the deepest humiliation at the terrible prevalence of intemperance among our countrymen, the wretchedness of the dwellings in which many of our poor are compelled to live, and the growth of the spirit of gambling." The Council earnestly solicit prayer that it may please God to grant a great revival of true religion in Ireland, that the Word of the Lord may have free course and be glorified, that strifes and divisions may speedily come to an end, and that righteousness and peace may be established throughout the length and breadth of the land.

Irish Notes.

THE Irish Bill for the Prevention of the Sale of Drink to Children has been dropped, and the whole strength of the Irish representation is to be employed in trying to get a similar measure for Scotland, which is down for the 20th inst., passed.

Miss Carr's Homes for Destitute Children, Dublin, have now 250 inmates who are trained in such a way as to fit them for useful positions in life, and are doing an excellent work.

By the will of the late Rev. Jonathan Simpson, J.P., of Portrush, £1,000 has been left to the Sustentation Fund of the Presbyterian Church, £500 to the Presbyterian Orphan Society, and £500 to Magee College, Londonderry.

Soldiers' Home at Woking.

A SMALL Soldiers' Home has been opened at Woking, where the large male prison has been converted into barracks for an infantry regiment; and the large female prison is being pulled down, so that accommodation may be provided for three batteries Royal Field Artillery.

The Lady Superintendent, Miss Starkey, has the entrée to the barracks, through the kindness of the commanding officer, and would be very grateful for a supply of suitable tracts, penny gospels, Testaments, and Bibles. These may be sent to Miss Starkey, at the Soldiers' Home, Barrack Path, Woking.—Yours very truly,

R. PHAYRE, Lieut.-Colonel, Hon. Treasurer.
Belgaum, Woking.

Army Scripture Readers.—Probably never in the history of the Army Scripture Readers' Society have the opportunities for service among our troops been more amply demonstrated than during the past year. The Society aims at providing every regiment and battalion with its own Scripture reader, and in order to further extend the usefulness of its operations it is proposed to inaugurate a "Readers' Victoria Memorial Fund" of one million half-crowns. The Secretary, Colonel Philips, 112, St. Martin's Lane, Trafalgar Square, will be glad to furnish friends with particulars of the project and information of the Society's work generally.

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

Communications for The Christian should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C. All Advertisements should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for The Christian by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "The Christian" Postal Department, Bouverie House, Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address. (For Subscription rates, see Page 1 of Cover.) Postcard or stamped envelope should be enclosed if receipt is desired.

Notes & Comments

IT is clear that the protest raised by Anglicans and Romanists regarding the form of the Coronation Oath will have to be carefully watched, otherwise a march will be stolen in the dark by the Sacerdotalists. Is not the word Protestant itself the real rock of offence? If that be so, there must be no compromise with the Sacerdotalists. The nation took its stand three centuries ago, when it finally protested against and repudiated the superstitions and the authority of Rome. Any modification of the "form" of the oath, which would weaken its unmistakably Protestant character, must be stoutly resisted.

Among the points upon which all shades of temperance reformers are unanimous, the abolition of child-messengership is decidedly one of the most urgent. In view of this fact, a wide circulation may be assured for the substantial pamphlet just published, The Children and the Drink. (1s. Brimley Johnson, 8, York Buildings, Adelphi, W.C.) Its pages embody the results of an inquiry, conducted by a committee under the chairmanship of the Bishop of Hereford, into the injury inflicted by the drink traffic upon the child-life of the nation. Facts bearing upon the subject are submitted, proving that intemperance is largely responsible for the widespread evil of cruelty to children. Other forms of child-suffering are shown to be traceable to drink, and weighty reasons are given why Mr. Crombie's Bill for the prohibition of the sale or delivery of drink to children should become law.

Yesterday (Wednesday), the House of Commons was to discuss this important Bill. Many petitions have been forwarded in favour of the measure. It makes us burn with shame to think that any petition should be necessary in favour of a Bill of this kind; and yet, perhaps, the indifference shown towards it may have arisen from ignorance of the great evil which it seeks to combat.

The Daily News has rendered admirable service by the publication of a series of articles dealing with the question. That of last Friday contained certain figures which are highly significant. Thus, on one Sunday in London 2,712 children were counted entering nine public-houses. Into fifteen houses, during Sunday hours, no fewer than 547 babies in arms were carried. Into another house, during one single week, 1,129 children entered for drink. In Manchester "1,112 houses give sweets or some small inducements to the children." The writer may well say—"the question is whether, as a people, we really love our little ones." The wretches who, by means of bribes, seduce little children into the love for drink, are the real child-killing ogres, whose enormity is but faintly set forth in the fabled monsters of antiquity.

The Schoolmaster recently published the report of a Special Committee upon the causes of rowdyism and violence amongst youths in great cities. The religious question does not enter into the report. Amongst the several reasons advanced we select the following as worthy of special attention:—

1. Overcrowding, with its necessary obliteration of the idea of "home."
2. The absence of opportunities for healthy exercise and amusements—the streets or filthy alleys being alone available for most of the children.
3. The early age at which children are compelled to face the world.
4. The atmosphere of vice which enwraps slum children from their earliest years.

These are points, it will be observed, upon which we have again and again in this paper laid emphasis. It is very gratifying to find that there is a widespread awakening to the reality of the peril which for so long has been in our midst. The next thing is prompt action. The effects are under our eyes—we now know the causes: it is imperative that the latter shall be thoroughly dealt with. These ruffians, however, need something more than civilization—they need conversion. We must not leave the work of cleansing to the County Council; the Church has also her work to do in the matter.

Two of the most notable utterances at the Cardiff meetings last week were those of Mr. Jowett and Dr. Parker. Both dealt with the secret of effective preaching. The latter speaker put the question into a nutshell by emphasizing St. Paul's word, "If any come in that is unlearned." Often we forget the person who is unlearned—that is, unlearned in the Christian sense. We take too much for granted, and sometimes speak in terms of which many people do not really comprehend the significance. It is really surprising how much ignorance is abroad concerning even the commonplaces of the Faith. Faith, Regeneration, Conversion, are words destitute of meaning for very many people who are far enough removed from the hooligans. Dr. Parker very pertinently asked his brethren how they provided for these "unlearned" persons. It is a question for us all to consider seriously. The Gospel cannot be too simply proclaimed.

It is curious, if not amusing, to find the Catholic Times and the Church Times at one in describing the inquiry room meetings, held in connection with the recent Simultaneous Mission, as only another form of the Confessional:

> At the "Simultaneous Mission," held by the Dissenters throughout England, unconscious testimony has come from nearly every quarter of the deep-seated need in human nature to unburden itself to a human being in order to obtain assurance of God's pardon. Multitudes have had recourse to the confessional. The penitents are termed "inquirers," and the confessional-boxes in some cases "inquiry rooms," and others "compartments." But the principle is there all the same.

Why will men discourse upon subjects of which they are ignorant? The confessional and the inquiry room are as far apart as the poles. Unfortunately, the readers of the two journals referred to, will accept the misstatement as a true narration of facts.

During the Simultaneous Mission recently held in a northern city, a Unitarian approached one of the missioners at the close of a crowded meeting, and asked how it was that he (the preacher) and his fellow-workers could command such large audiences day by day, while the Unitarians, with all their advertising and culture, could get only a meagre hearing. The missioner's reply was brief, but to the point. "The reason is simple enough. You only present to the people a man, Jesus, who lived nineteen centuries ago. We preach a Divine Saviour who lives now and saves people now. Your failure is explained by the fact that you are hopelessly out of date—nineteen centuries behind the times!"

In the Monthly Review Mrs. Phillimore, who was at one time one of the Sisters of the West London Mission, suggests five remedies for the overcrowding which is one of the most pressing social problems of the present time. First, better and swifter means of transit; secondly, municipal buildings where they can be erected at a reasonable profit; thirdly, a stricter administration of the law, which, as it stands, is in many districts a dead letter; fourthly, a more careful registration of the number of people inhabiting each house; and lastly, better wages to those who are obliged to live in Central London, and the elimination so far as possible of all casual labour. These suggestions cover a wide ground, and they are all more or less practicable. The question surely has now been discussed sufficiently, and Londoners look hopefully to the new County Council, which has grasped its work in an admirable spirit, to do something substantial towards meeting a pressing and perilous situation.

Rev. J. J. Lias makes a very frank statement in the current Contemporary of the disadvantages to the Church of England arising out of the anomalous position of the laity in that communion. The increasing domination of the clergy, and their sacerdotal pretensions, are making intelligent and devout members of the Church increasingly restive and dissatisfied. He says:—

> If the Church is ever disestablished, the severance will be due, not to attacks from without, but to causes which operate from within—to the deep and growing dissatisfaction of the laity with the position assigned to them by those who ought to be guardians of their rights. . . . The laity feel that the clergy have become too professional, that their minds are too much taken up with things in which the laity have no interest, that they are wrapped up in ceremonial and abstract doctrine, questions about which the English layman has never been inclined particularly to concern himself.

The same writer deals with equal frankness with the painful manner in which the relations of the Church to Nonconformity are affected by these sacerdotal assumptions of the clergy. There has never been a better opportunity of promoting a kindly understanding between Church and Dissent than to-day. A generation of Nonconformists has arisen, unembittered by the disabilities which pressed so heavily on their forefathers. Reunion is in the air; the Free Church Federation movement, the passion for unity of spirit and aim which is growing yearly in intensity, the spiritual results inside the Churches of the great United Mission, predispose Evangelical Christians in the direction of brotherhood and goodwill. One thing alone stands an insurmountable barrier to a better understanding between Episcopalians and their brethren of other folds, viz., the attitude of the dominant party in the Church of England at the present time. This summary of a courageous and manly protest from within the Church brings home the heavy responsibility incurred by the sacerdotal party in a vivid and very solemn fashion.

A recently published booklet, "Reading in a Clergyman's Life," is intended not only as a help to ministers in isolated spheres of work, who run the risk of becoming what Rev. Sydney Smith once designated "a holy vegetable," but to others who waste their time. The writer, the Dean of Lincoln, condemns unsparingly the habit of desultory light reading, and gives to the Bible its rightful place as the book of all others to be constantly studied.

To have time, however, for other very necessary reading, Dr. Wickham urges that condition of all greatness—the ability to find twenty-five hours in a day. He suggests two ways to do this. One is that of rising early; the other, Mr. Gladstone's method, that of using religiously half hours. A methodical and well-disciplined habit of redeeming the time should be one of the distinguishing marks of the Christian life.

Mr. Justice Wills, following up the communication he recently made to the country through The Times, and to which we called attention a short time since, has expressed himself with great plainness upon some of the vices which prevail among us. Speaking at Bradford, on behalf of the Discharged Prisoners Society:—

He agreed that gambling had become one of the chief factors in crime. When he first sat on the Bench he thought that drinking was at the bottom of it all. Drink was still at the bottom of a great deal, but he thought that gambling ran it a neck-and-neck race.

When our Judges continually speak in this manner, surely it is time for Parliament to rise to the occasion, and, at least, to destroy the present facilities for practising this vice. If little Belgium can move in the matter, surely England can.

The learned judge also referred to another matter which causes many people much anxiety:—

Alluding to punishments for the use of bad language in the streets, he said that not long ago he met at dinner one of the eminent surgeons who had been out in South Africa, and asked him if all that had been said by Lord Roberts about the good conduct of the soldiers was true, or if it had been exaggerated. The reply was that the conduct of the men, both in the field and in the hospital, was all that could be wished, but that their language was astounding, to say nothing more. It appeared to him (the learned judge) that in many instances there was no intentional offence in the use of bad language, but that it was merely a matter of habit.

This, however, does not make it any the less offensive. For what, after all, is "habit" but the visible clothing which a man assumes in presence of his fellows? The "habit" is woven from the heart; hence a bad habit must be traced back to a bad heart.

Retribution falls on crowned heads with the same inevitable force with which it dogs the footsteps of the outcast. How true this is may be seen in the condition of mind into which the Sultan of Turkey has fallen. He who has inspired the slaughter of thousands of his innocent subjects, whose only crime was their Christian faith, lives in daily terror of assassination. His food has to be brought to him straight from the royal kitchen in sealed dishes. He dare not appear in public without an escort so large that he seems more like a prisoner of war than a monarch among his own people. His dependencies and provinces are in a perpetual state of semi-revolt against the unjust taxations and exactions that are being levied upon them, and yet the treasury is empty. Perhaps the most miserable man in Europe is this man, who is the ecclesiastical head of Islam, as well as the ruler of one of the most ancient monarchies of the world. He is the victim of his own crimes, the prisoner of his own guilty conscience.

Various reasons have been given for the Sultan's action in once more arresting the flow of Jews towards the Holy Land, but the Constantinople correspondent of the Vienna Politische Correspondenz is in possession of the truth when he declares that the limitation upon Jewish immigration is purely political. The Turkish Government is afraid that the Jews in Palestine wish to establish a government of their own, hence it is trying to strangle the growth of Zionism. The other reasons given may therefore be dismissed as beside the question. For the moment the Sultan has triumphed, but only for the moment. His hour is fixed by God, and when it sounds, the immigration will re-commence, and so the ancient prophecies will be fulfilled.

Though there is a divided opinion in regard to the desirability of the Eight Hours Bill for Miners, there ought, surely, to be perfect agreement in regard to the need which exists for an extension of the Factory Acts, so as to include the young boys engaged in the mining industries of the Northern Counties. If the political economist finds that questions of capital and labour are involved in the Christian treatment of mere children, there are certainly other and higher interests which should be considered as of paramount importance in dealing with such a question. Whatever may be the ultimate fate of the Miners Bill, we hope that something will be done for the lads. It is startling to find, after all that has been done for women and children, that there are still, according to the statement of Mr. Atherley-Jones, "thousands of children working in mines who, for ten days in every fortnight, for the greater part of the year, never see the light of the sun."

According to the Paris Figaro, a new attempt is being made by shop-assistants and others employed in the French capital to obtain the full Sabbath rest. Certain masters have made a concession in force of which their places of business close on Sunday midday, but others still insist on a full day's work. The assistants will have the sympathy of all friends of freedom, for this seven-days-a-week labour is simply slavery. No wonder that life is so intolerable to many of the Parisian working classes. Apropos of the same subject, Dr. Horton, at Cardiff last week, pleaded for a more rigid enforcement of the Sabbath rest amongst ourselves. Much of the Sunday travelling at present carried on is really unnecessary, whilst it is entirely unnecessary that letters should be delivered on Sundays. If London can dispense with Sunday postal deliveries, surely the provinces can.

When the Congress of Hygiene met in Paris last year, several reports were given as to the unfitness of nuns for the work of sick nursing in hospitals and sick chambers. For one thing, it was pointed out that the woollen garments worn by the sisters constitute a serious danger to health, inasmuch as they became a medium for transmitting disease germs. Convent rules make the wearing of this garb imperative, whilst sanitary authorities forbid this stuff entirely, and permit only cotton garments, which must be frequently washed. In France there is at present a decided movement amongst medical men in favour of excluding nuns as such from the work of sick nursing, largely on the grounds of health. Added to this, it is pointed out that proselytism is carried on very freely, and that converts are likely to fare better than ordinary patients. These are further indications of the way in which the State is rebelling against the Roman Church in France.

A writer who was formerly in the Roman priesthood draws from personal experience a somewhat unpleasant picture of the insidious practice on the part of the confessor to induce young women to enter convents. Dealing with the question of the recent Spanish case, he remarks that although some time ago there was an agitation in favour of the public inspection and control of convents, the feeling has greatly declined; and he adds, in reference to the alleged fact that young monks frequently, and young nuns never, ask for a dispensation from their vows:

I have been informed that they are deliberately encouraged in the erroneous idea that their (first) vows are final. . . No bolts or padlocks confine her [?], save in rare and exceptional cases (of which I know one or two); but there is a moral coercion of the gravest character in the dread of friends and the Catholic body generally. . . . I never, even in my sacerdotal days, witnessed this unholy sacrifice of an immature life without a shudder.

As in Spain and Portugal, so in England.

In common with all who ardently desire to see the lives of the poor lit up with brightness, we are very glad that the Whitechapel Art Gallery has been opened to the public of the East End. There is, as Lord Rosebery said at the opening of the Exhibition, a beneficent influence attached to a collection of good pictures, although "we must not expect a rough to become civilized by the mere contemplation of a Fra Angelico." If only the picture gallery acts as an antidote to the public house, and also offers asylum for a few hours to men whose homes are none too comfortable, some good will be accomplished. In our judgment, however, the greatest boon that could be offered to the East End, next to the glorious Gospel, would be the establishment of centres where poor women could be trained to cook food decently, and to make the most of their small earnings. This is more important than the creation of picture galleries.

Attempts are being made to increase the fertility of Egypt by storing up the waters of the Nile, which have for untold ages been running to waste; and a suggestion is being made to do the same with the immense wastage of water in the Rockies of America. Is there not a principle of economy analogous to this in the spiritual life? Vast stores of motive power are lost to the higher life, because our affections and sentiments are thrown away on lower things. As Wordsworth says—

"Getting and spending, we lay waste our powers," and the result is that we have no energy left for the pursuit of ideal ends, and the fulfilling of the perfect law of Christ. There are few things more tragic than the utter misdirection of the best elements in human nature on things that satisfy not, and which turn to dust and ashes in the mouth. And all the time, the wilderness may become a garden, and the desert place blossom as a rose, if only heaven-descended powers and influences are directed to its fructification and culture.

The Preacher and His Message.*

By Rev. J. H. JOWETT, M.A., Birmingham.

1. THE preacher, what is he? Behind the New Testament word there are half a dozen in the original. The preacher is a herald, a public crier, a man with an imperial proclamation which he has to announce from the housetop with all the urgency of a sovereign command, an evangelist with a message almost like a song laden with tenderness, a logician, and a conversationalist engaged in fire-side speech with his fellowmen. We have to gather these together to describe "a preacher of the Gospel."

2. What is his function? "Whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved. How then shall they call on Him in whom they have not believed? and how shall they believe in Him whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher?" (Rom. x. 13, 14). Reverse the order—preaching, hearing, believing, calling, saving. What are the two extremes of the series?—preaching, saving. The object of all preaching is the salvation of men from sin, from hell, from infirmity, from moral stuntedness, and from spiritual immaturity.

3. Do we keenly realize the horrors of the bondage from which we seek to deliver men? Does sin any longer fill us with poignant pain? Has it shed any of its loathsomeness? We do not like some of the bald, bare, sharp, rugged, jagged words in which our forefathers described sin. We are busy filing and smoothing them down, and I am afraid of the change. "A Fountain filled with Blood." I myself do not like the elaboration of the figure, and there are many to whom the words are almost offensive; but I want my dislike to be safe. If I drop the particular phraseology, I want to retain the tremendous sense of sin behind it.

4. Does that sense of sin pervade our preaching? Do my people have the idea that I am dealing with trifles or with appalling enormities? (Referring to the instructions given to the man clothed in linen with the inkhorn by his side—Ezekiel ix.) How many of our

FOREHEADS WOULD BE MARKED?

"That sigh and that cry" for the sin of the people—is it that with you? Is it that with me? If we do not feel the heat of the consuming presence of sin, there will be no vehemence in seeking to pull men as brands from the burning. The first step to an awakened ministry is a deeper consciousness of sin.

5. Are we possessed of a spirit of sensitive sympathy? When the Apostle Paul enumerates the graces of the Christian life, he puts first that of compassion. A heart full of pity is part of the essential equipment of the true preacher of the Gospel of Christ. One of the perils of the Christian ministry is that we have to be in such continuous and eminent peril of losing our compassion. If we lose it, our power is gone. Sympathy is the parent of discernment; if we have no sympathy we can have no vision. I want to know when the Divine life is just beginning to stir in my brother.

6. Is the wooing note present in our ministry? Is not our preaching too uniformly severe? Is there not too much that savours of the judgment seat, and too little that is fragrant with the winsomeness of the fireside? We want less scolding and more tenderness, to drive less, and to have more constraint. "Constrain them" (R.V.), woo them, "to come in." Every good preacher is a wooer. When I turn to the Old Testament, even there the wooing note is not absent. Stern Amos sometimes lays aside his thunder and becomes a wooer. Hosea is a wooer from the beginning to the end. Isaiah can lay all else aside, and say, "Comfort ye, comfort ye, my people." He was a great wooer. "Jesus, Lover, Lover of my soul." Preacher, lover of men's souls, woo them. It may be that where the thunder failed

THE LOVER WILL SUCCEED.

7. Has our preaching the New Testament emphasis? I did not put this first, because I did not want even to seem to suspect my brethren. I do not think my ministerial brethren are far away from the great and cardinal verities of the Christian faith. Wherever the Apostle has to proclaim a great and imperative duty, it always finds its roots very near to Calvary. He drives all his duties home with the power of the Crucified Christ. Have we that emphasis in our preaching? Is the dynamic just as clear when we present an ideal? Do we link all our imperatives to the power of the Gospel of Christ?

8. Do we appreciate our own message? Do we look as if we revelled in it? Nothing will so tempt our people into tasting and seeing how gracious the Lord is, as to let them see we revel in the diet. Delight is contagious, enthusiasm is catching. "Thy Word is sweet." When we say that, do we look as if we knew it? Do we say that with a sour face? "My meditation of Him shall be sweet." When our people see that we revel in our diet, they will try our food.

* Notes of an Address at the National Council of Free Churches at Cardiff.

Negligent, but not Culpable.

The verdict of the coroner's jury upon the Liverpool beer-poisoning cases is distinctly a curious one. At almost every link in the chain they found negligence, but never once culpability. It is not an unusual kind of decision in this country. Perhaps if culpability and responsibility were more often found, there would be fewer scandals for anybody to be responsible for.

THE above paragraph from one of our leading dailies is specially significant, pointing as it does to a growing tendency in regard to many of the worst evils in modern society. There is no principle of social order more important than that there should be a clearly marked relation between guilt and punishment. When the innocent suffer from the wrong-doing of the guilty, and the latter are able to creep away under cover of some immunity, the foundations of the State are in peril. And yet, whether we are dealing with military disasters involving the loss of thousands of precious lives, or a railway accident, or the failure of a limited liability company, or the adulteration of food or drink, it is becoming growingly difficult to get the responsibility fixed on the real individual at fault. Frequently, it is almost impossible to ascertain exactly where the fault lies; and even when the culprit has been discovered it is difficult to get a British jury to define and bring home the responsibility.

This is partly due to the ever-increasing complexity of our social system. Take, for instance, the change that has come over our industrial and commercial world through the joint-ownership involved in share-holding. Where formerly the businesses belonged to single individuals, or at most to one or two families, they now belong to hundreds or thousands of people, who have no real knowledge of the way in which their money is earned, how their employés are treated, or whether the principles on which the business is being carried on are such as they can approve of. Now on every ethical law, the owners of the business are morally responsible for all these things. If anything dishonourable is done, it is in their name, by means of their money, with their supposed, and, practically, their actual consent. But who can bring home to these vague scattered multitudes the sense of their responsibility? A few individuals here and there may be keenly conscious of it; but the responsibilities of wealth, which were in simpler times more or less easily brought home to its owners, are now less realized than ever; and therein lies a

GRAVE SOCIAL PERIL OF THE FUTURE.

But there is another reason for this disinclination to saddle social wrong-doers with the rightful consequences of their evil doing. There has been of late a serious blunting of the sense of sin; a tendency to attribute to "heredity," or "environment," the faults of the individual; to find in "circumstances" the explanation of his mistakes; and to excuse as trivial misdemeanours serious breaches of the moral law. This is partly the result of the new "humanitarian" theology, which is strong in pity and love, but weak in recognising the eternal distinctions that divide right and wrong, holiness and sin, by an impassable chasm. It is imagined that this attitude is true to the teaching and bearing of Jesus in the Gospels towards social outcasts; but in so thinking we are guilty of a great wrong to Him. He extended his friendship to the lost, not that He might excuse, but that He might redeem them. On the subject of respectable sin, human language can provide us with nothing more scathing than his denunciations and threatenings. In the very dew of his pity for sinners there slept sharp lightnings of wrath against their sinfulness. He was ever for bringing home to every conscience its full just in order that forgiveness and renewal in holy living might be possible. How are we to remedy this modern vagueness as to the social responsibility of men and women?

(1) To stand on the principle which rings like a clarion through the Word of God, that "though hand join in hand, yet shall not the wicked go unpunished." The universe is built on foundations of righteousness, and though men may agree to ignore their common liabilities, they cannot escape in the end. To each will at last be brought home his full share in the good and evil of the world: "We must all be made manifest before the judgment seat of Christ; that each one may receive . . . according to what he hath done, whether it be good or bad."

(2) To realize and honour our own responsibilities as regards the performance of our personal duty, the use of wealth, and the effects on others of our deeds and characters. Above all, by precept as well as example, we should teach that while responsibility may be shared, it cannot be divided, and that though we may be involved in corporate actions, we are fully liable ourselves for what, through and with others, we do.

"Getting, Saving, Giving."

To men in business, and men out of business.

Let God the pages of your ledger scan.
Act rightly, justly, as 'twixt man and man.
For what is lawful is not always right,
Or pleasing in his ever righteous sight.
Act hour by hour as if He were to say,
"Thou art my steward, give account to-day."
Do not forget, whatever men may do,
God's weights and measures will be always true

He takes account of every little thing,
The secret motives from which actions spring.
Salvation is thro' Jesus Christ our Lord,
But that which pleases God shall have reward.
To please Him, do his Holy Will is best,
And doing this is ever perfect rest.

FOUNDATION TRUTHS OF THE GOSPEL.—XI.

SIN AND FORGIVENESS—An Old Testament View.—1.

By Rev. DAVID BARON.

"Blessed is he whose transgression is borne away, whose sin is covered. Blessed is the man unto whom Jehovah imputeth not iniquity, and in whose spirit there is no guile."

THE Psalm (xxxii.) from which these words are taken is the second of the so-called Penitential Psalms*, and is didactic, or teaching in its character; but the precious "instruction" concerning the blessedness of the forgiveness of our sins, "according to the riches of His grace," has David's own experience for its foreground. Indeed, this Psalm is a notable example of doctrine merging itself into experience, even as the experiences of inspired Psalmists, Prophets, and Apostles, are sometimes recorded for doctrine.

We all know the black chapter in David's history, that terrible fall which "gave occasion to the enemies of the Lord to blaspheme" (2 Sam. xii. 14), and which not only landed him in many sorrows, but kept his soul for a whole year in the blackness of spiritual darkness. To this day men who are not sufficiently awake to the plague of sin in their own hearts find fault and cavil at David, forgetting that if David's sin was great, his repentance was indeed most deep and sincere, the proof of which is that he not only publicly confessed his sin, but, in a sense, goes on through the ages confessing it with tears and anguish of spirit, by the record which he himself has left us of it.

But out of the abyss of spiritual darkness into which David had fallen by his sin, he emerged again with some precious treasures, for which the whole Church from generation to generation has had occasion to bless God. One of these treasures is Psalm li., which was written in the very midst of his penitential struggle, and expresses his anguish of soul, and his longing that the face of God, which was averted on account of his sin, may again be lifted upon him, and that the joy of God's salvation may be restored unto him.

Next in order comes Psalm xxxii., which, indeed, goes back upon that terrible experience when the great transgression was and life itself became unbearable, because day and night God's hand was heavy upon him; but the chief purpose of which was to celebrate the blessed deliverance when, having confessed his sin to the prophet, God commissioned Nathan to say, "The Lord hath put away thy sin; thou shalt not die" (2 Sam. xii. 13).

This Psalm [xxxii.] begins with a beatitude —Ashrey—literally, "Oh, the happinesses!" (or "the blessednesses"), for the word is in the plural. Even so did Psalm i. begin; but there the blessedness of the man is celebrated who has never strayed from the fountain of life, but has ever found his delight in Jehovah and in his holy law. Alas! whatever David might have thought before, he knows now that the blessedness of the ideally perfect man cannot be realized by a child of Adam, who is born in sin, and "shapen in iniquity." That path of absolute innocence was only trodden by the Messiah, who is the ideally righteous man of the Psalms, and has therefore the pre-eminence of blessedness by being "anointed with the oil of joy above his fellows."

But by God's mercy there is still a way to blessedness open even to fallen and sinful men like David, namely, a new and a living way, sprinkled by the blood of a Redeemer, and leading to spiritual blessings in heavenly places, which even unfallen Adamic perfection could never have secured.

SIN AND ATONEMENT.

The first two verses of the Psalm set forth the great facts of sin and atonement from an objective point of view. First let us look at the three words used to describe the terrible malady of sin. They are—(1) Pesha'—"transgression," rendered in the Septuagint by anomia—"lawlessness," and meaning literally rebellion—the breaking away from God expressed by a defiance of his will and authority, as revealed in his holy law.

(2) Chătāāh—"sin," which describes an erring from the mark—"a violation of the eternal rule of right;" a deviation from the path of well-pleasingness to God.

(3) Avōn—"iniquity," describing the inward perversion of our nature; the depravity of our being manifesting itself in misdeed.

These three words are found in all the great Old Testament scriptures dealing with the foundation doctrines of sin and atonement, and they are the three attributes of that deadly moral plague, the roots of which are in the heart of every human being; and the spiritual doctrine of the universality of sin is amply confirmed by experience.

"Whether we look north or south, east or west, without or within," says a rather broad Anglican theologian, "we see evil. If we say, as some have foolishly said, that it is the growth of civilization, that it arises from the perverse institutions of society, and that it would not be found in man if he were but in a state of nature; if we resolve to fly from civilised society, and take the wings of the morning, and abide in the uttermost parts of the savage wilderness, even there, whatever and whomever we may see will bear the scar and mark of evil, like the mark which was set upon Cain. If, on the other hand, we fancy, as others have no less foolishly fancied, that evil springs wholly from ignorance, and that the laws of man and the arts of man and the craft of man will be able to overcome and get the better of it, then we need only turn our eyes towards those nations which have made the greatest advance in knowledge, and we shall find that so far as that advance has been made by man and by human means only, while men have advanced in knowledge, they have also advanced in wickedness, and gone on devising new vices and abominations before unheard of. How evil came into the world we know not; but that it is there we all of us know far too well."

At first our conscience becomes awakened, perhaps, to the guilt of some act of transgression; but as the terrible question presses itself more and more upon our attention we are finally landed in the painful conviction that behind the isolated acts of transgression and the manifestations of sin there is iniquity, the natural depravity of our being—"the taint of sin in our hearts, which runs through all our thoughts and feelings, through all our words and deeds." O wretched man that I am! Who shall deliver me from the body of this death?"

And yet the Psalm begins with "Oh, the blessedness!" for already David had experienced the grand doctrine propounded by the Apostle, that "where sin abounded, grace did superabound."

As there are three words used in the first two verses of our Psalm to give us a complete view of sin, so there are also three terms used to describe God's method in forgiving sin "according to the riches of his grace."

(a) Nāsā'—This is the first of the three words used, and is translated in the Authorised Version "forgiven;" literally it means "borne away."

(b) Kāsāh—"To cover," "to hide," as with a covering, "so that it becomes invisible to God, the Holy One, and is as though it had never taken place."

(c) Lo-chāshāv—"Not reckoned," "not imputed;" cancelling the account because it has already been paid.

These three terms are full of significance, but they can only be properly understood in the light of the solemn transactions on the Day of Atonement, as described in Lev. xvi., to which all the three terms refer. Without entering on a description of the elaborate ceremonial of that great day in the Jewish year, we may glance at that part of the ritual which was connected with the sin-offering.

There were two sin-offerings on that day. First, after careful preparation by repeated bathing and washings, the high priest, having exchanged the garments of glory and beauty, in which he had offered the usual morning sacrifice of a lamb, for the simple linen robes prescribed for the occasion (Lev. xvi. 4), came down into the inner court where his own sin-offering—a young bullock—stood facing south, but with its head turned westward toward the Holy of Holies. Leaning both his hands upon it, he made

THE FOLLOWING CONFESSION:

"O Jehovah! I have committed iniquity; I have transgressed, I have sinned—I and my house. Oh then, Jehovah, I entreat Thee, let there be atonement for the iniquities, the transgressions, and the sins which I have committed, transgressed, and sinned before Thee—I and my house, even as it is written in the law of Moses thy servant: for on this day shall atonement be made for you to cleanse you; from all your sins shall ye be clean before the Lord."

Then the high priest turned to the people's sin-offering (Lev. xvi. 5-10). This consisted of two kids of the goats. Placing himself by the north side of the altar, and in full view of the throng of worshippers who attended in the outer court, one of the goats was placed at his right hand, and the other at his left. Two small tablets of gold were cast into an urn, on one of which was engraven the word, "la-Jehovah" (for Jehovah), and on the other the mysterious word, "la-Azazel" (for Azazel). The urn was shaken, and the high priest thrust both his hands in at the same time, taking up one lot in each, and placing the one in the right hand on the head of the goat at his right, and the one in his left hand on the head of the goat at his left.

In order to prevent the two goats from being exchanged, a crimson band was tied round the head of the one on which the lot fell for Azazel, and it was placed facing the eastern gate, through which it was afterwards to be led forth in full view of the people.*

* The other six are Psalms v., xxxviii., li., cii., cxxx., and cxliii.

* The ritual here described was that in practice in the second Temple; but in all its essential features, particularly so far as the sin-offering was concerned, as described in Lev., xvi. the same order was doubtless observed in the ritual of the Tabernacle.

The Late Rev. William Arthur.

An Appreciation.

By Rev. E. E. JENKINS, LL.D.

I KNEW William Arthur by repute some years before I met him. He was my brother's colleague in the Mysore Province. His appointment to India dates from 1838. He was at that time in his nineteenth year. His health failed early; he was threatened with blindness, and returned to England in 1841. As he stepped into the boat to reach the vessel that was lying in the Madras Roads to convey him home, he wept a bitter farewell to the land he had chosen for his life's work. India had been the dream of his consecration; its vastness, its antiquity, its learning, the speculations of its thinkers, and its religious systems had fascinated his imagination; and with the ardour and capacity of an uncommon genius, he entered upon the preliminary studies of an Indian missionary. His diligence soon conquered the initial difficulties of the Canarese language, and his curiosity then led him into Brahminical circles, where he rapidly acquired the ability to take his part, and to hold his own, in the public discussions that await the Bazaar missionary.

The following extract from a letter which William Arthur wrote when he had been a year in the country, will show how accurately he had measured, even at that early period, the difficulties that confront missionary work in India:—

Our access to the people is perfectly free; they are willing to hear without offering any opposition. The great work to be accomplished is to rouse their minds from an inveterate apathy, to deprive caste and custom of the veneration they have hitherto commanded, to displace their corrupted notions of the Divine nature by the revelations of the Lord Himself, and their trust in idols and rites by the great truth that God was in Christ reconciling the world unto Himself, and then to lead them to the blood of sprinkling.

Referring to his preparation for the work, he says in another letter:—

Since my arrival here the language has been my only study. Not, I hope, because I undervalued or was not inclined to pursue others, but because the ability to preach the Gospel to those around me seemed an object of such importance as to demand that every other should be placed in abeyance till it was attained.

How far his resolution was carried out, and his great hope realized, may be seen from the fact that although extended only to eighteen months, he became an eloquent Canarese preacher, and made considerable progress in the studies of Oriental learning. His knowledge of the people was minute and comprehensive, and there was every promise that he would take high rank among the great missionaries of India. His "Mission to the Mysore," a collection of articles which he contributed to the Wesleyan Methodist Magazine, was the first literary fruit of his brief Indian career. Its sketches of popular Hinduism, its descriptions of local scenery, its vivid pictures of Hindu village life, and its expositions of native customs and native traditions, made the volume an important contribution to Indian literature at a time when India was comparatively unknown to the English reader.

Mr. Arthur's arrival in England commences the second chapter of his public life. The impression he made upon his own Church was immediate, and in a few years no name was more widely known and honoured in Christian circles than that of William Arthur. He was a man of genius. Among his many gifts were faculties not often prominent in the same mind. He was a thinker of original force; his philosophy was not the product of scholastic training, he was not ignorant of current systems of thought, but the standpoint from which he considered a subject was his own, and unborrowed also was his method of reasoning upon it and discussing it. If his intellect was not subtle, it was acute, and in a train of argument or reflection few things pertinent to the subject escaped him. In illustration he was fertile, happy, and sometimes splendid. In framing his diction he was not studious of embellishment, but in writing or speaking on any topic, the adornment of imagery was the inseparable feature of his style.

In the days of his strength he was great in the pulpit and on the platform. He had every gift which makes the orator—a clear mind, a poetic imagination, a passionate conviction, a condensed purpose, a present command of language, and an electric sympathy. His early missionary addresses still live in the traditions of platform eloquence. Of his preaching we may gather an impression from "The Tongue of Fire." Several of the chapters of this volume were originally sermons; they belong to the oratory of the pulpit. The manner in which the truth is set forth was evidently inspired by the presence of an audience, and by that sense of responsibility which accompanies the message of an ambassador of Christ. The scenes of the Pentecost are depicted not only with the truth of a careful study and the vividness of a highly excited imagination, but with an insight into their spiritual nature and significance which one would think could only be inspired by the self-same Spirit whose miraculous descent those scenes unfold.

Books in homiletic literature have a brief life. They are born of some leading event in the history of the Church, supply a current want, and disappear. But still lives. It is not affected by those inevitable changes in method and style consequent upon the advancement of science, criticism, and the rush of competing attractions. The Church is ever craving for life, ever praying for tongues of fire, ever seeking a power which human gifts cannot supply, which human combinations cannot command; and Mr. Arthur's book leads us away from an unhappily prevailing faith in organizations, in numbers, in wealth, and in position, to the fountain itself of energy and life. Perhaps no work in the last century has carried a greater blessing to ministers and people in this country and in America than "The Tongue of Fire."

In this brief account of his work his other books need not detain us. We must not, however, omit to notice his articles and lectures on India. They appeared during an eventful crisis in the history of our Eastern Empire. Everything would depend on the legislation which followed the Mutiny. The horrors which darkened that event, and the fact that the very existence of the great Dependency was gravely threatened, aroused the patriotism of the country to a pitch of consternation to which it would not be easy to find a parallel. To most people even of intelligence and education India had been little more than a name. The richest appanage of the Crown occupied no consideration beyond the circles and the government of the East India Company. Mr. Arthur's Essays and Speeches furnished an important contribution to those political discussions which resulted in placing India under the direct administration of Parliament.

In 1851, Mr. Arthur's abilities and experience found a congenial sphere of work in the Wesleyan Mission House. He was elected one of the general secretaries of the Missionary Society. His qualifications for the duties of this office were eminent. He had been for many years our chief speaker on the platforms of the Connexion; he had selected missionary topics for lectures on behalf of other institutions; he had mastered not merely the particular field of his own Church, but, to the extent of his opportunities, the entire missionary movement of all the Churches; he was familiar by personal intimacy with the Continental Missions of France and Italy, he had made a separate study of Romanist missions. On all questions relating to the foreign aggressions of Popery he was, perhaps, the leading Protestant authority in Europe.

During my missionary life he was for many years my Indian correspondent. As the General Secretary in charge of the administration of the Indian districts, his letters were not cold, official documents, but the affectionate counsels of a brother. He was an ideal secretary. His fellowship with the missionaries was so close and watchful that he might have been living with them; for the ruling forces of his mind were imagination and sympathy. I noticed also that he was ready to listen to any well-considered proposal to adopt new plans or to found new missions. He was ever going outside the present lines of work, studying the possibilities beyond: yet his policy was essentially practical. Mr. Arthur was a missionary statesman. To him Christianity was the regenerator of governments and the builder of nations.

During the time of his secretaryship, a period of seventeen years, his Connexional influence attained a commanding position. In 1856 he was elected into the Legal Hundred, and in 1866 he was placed in the chair of the Conference. For new stations of responsibility and trust, he seemed to have new gifts. He was not less wise and weighty in counsel than eloquent in speech. In a sense more eminent than I have known in any other Methodist preacher, he was the accepted pattern of his brethren. He was loved by the older men for his loyalty to the brotherhood; he was honoured by the younger for his accessibility and unfailing kindness; he was revered by all for the sanctity of his character.

For many years Mr. Arthur filled a large space in the public life of the country. He was not a politician in the party sense, but he held his opinions with intense tenacity. There was hardly a question of importance affecting the rights of the people or the morality of the nation to which he did not lend the service of his voice or his pen. He was one of the pillars of the Evangelical Alliance, and in its early years he rendered its Council most efficient help when any invasion of Christian freedom called for its interference. Some of his happiest platform efforts were devoted to the advocacy of the Bible Society, and the committee elected him a vice-president in 1871. But the limit assigned to me in this paper is already overpassed; and many things are left unsaid which I should have liked to add in this account of my oldest friend, whose hand had more to do with the shaping of my own life than any man now living.

"The New Reformation in France."

DEAR SIR,—The articles you have lately inserted on the above topic have been full of interest. The whole religious world is at last waking up to acknowledge what a mighty work has been begun by the Spirit of the Lord in various parts of France. The movement among the priests is so great that no less than 348 have broken loose from the shackles of Rome in France alone during the last three years.

Many of these rally round M. Bourrier, who has intense sympathy with their mental conflicts, and whose organ, Le Chrétien Français, has been very helpful in guiding the perplexed. Others have been received into the Home at Courbevoie, superintended by MM. Bertrand and Corneloup. Several of these, after adequate training, have entered the Protestant ministry.

Wherever the Gospel has reached the provinces there is a wonderful appetite for the Word of God, and a great delight in meetings for the reading of the Gospel; such meetings often last for three hours. Many of the rooms are too small to hold those who wish to attend. It is an encouraging circumstance that nearly all the funds for carrying on this work of evangelization are provided by the French Protestants themselves, although they only number about 600,000 in a population of 38,000,000, and are many of them poor. There is every reason why English Christians should assist their near neighbours in holding out the banner of Gospel truth to those of their countrymen who are "asking their way to Zion, with their faces thitherwards."

An opportunity of doing so is afforded by the Foreign Aid Society, which gives small grants to the institutions actually engaged in carrying the Truth to the people of France and Belgium. These are the Société Evangélique de France, the Société Centrale Protestante d'Evangélisation, and a few others, the agents of which are thoroughly familiar with the thoughts and temperament of their fellow-countrymen, and are filled with zeal for their salvation. I am sure you will gladly take charge of donations and subscriptions sent to you for this purpose.

SUNDAY, March 24. Amos iii.

BECAUSE Israel stood in such a unique position to God it was subject to much graver responsibility, and therefore to much severer penalty, in case of disobedience and backsliding. "You only have I known of all the families of the earth, therefore I will punish you for all your iniquities." These words apply to us. God cannot permit sin to go undealt with in the case of those who are specially identified with Himself or whom He has raised up to serve Him in some special form. Beware, then, all who have known times of special intimacy, or who have wrought great deeds for God in the past. To step back now, will expose you to much severer discipline than others need expect.

God wants to walk with us through the world; but He will not go our way. We must go his. We must be agreed with Him. We must agree with Him on the sinfulness of sin, on the need of the cleansing blood, on the absolute corruption and evil of all that is of our old nature, on the necessity that is laid on all who love God to live as He does for the salvation and blessing of others. Are you agreed with Him in these matters? Then, like Enoch, walk with God, and win this testimony—that you please Him.

Nothing that befalls us is without a reason, whether it be comfortable or trying, whether helpful or hurtful. And when trouble or misfortune befalls us, it becomes us to search into the reason. But where you do not know—be patient, trust, and wait.

MONDAY, March 25. Amos iv.

The kine of Bashan are evidently the nobles and rulers of the people, who used their high office for their own enrichment and emolument. Against all such God arises in judgment. He will always stand beside the poor and oppressed to defend them, and plead their cause (1-3).

The people are bidden to transgress, because they meant to transgress. This is an example of how God gives men up to the lusts of their own hearts. They like to do evil, and they are actually challenged to do as they choose (5). It is an awful experience, when God gives us up to our own evil ways, as when Jesus said to Judas, "That thou doest, do quickly."

In graphic phrase, the prophet describes the disasters which had befallen the people, and would befall them. They were all such as would be specially bitter to an agricultural people. We do not live so near the soil as Israel did; but we, too, as a nation must suffer for our sins, and our suffering comes through slack trade, hard times, the successful competition of other peoples.

Always God's voice is ringing out, "Prepare, prepare to meet Me." The bells rang thus, in the cool of the day to Adam, that he should meet his Maker; and always in our life God is bidding us come near for fellowship and communion. Ah, laggard soul, why dost thou not hasten to obey? Surely He that hath formed the mountains and created the wind, who knows what is in man, who treads on the high places of the earth, must be such good company as to make it worth thy while to tear thyself from all else. No royalties of earth's best is so well worth thy seeking as He who waits in thy closet, whenever thy door is shut.

TUESDAY, March 26. Amos v.

A chapter of great sublimity. Its key-word is seek. "Seek ye Me, and ye shall live." "Seek the Lord, and ye shall live." "Seek Him that maketh the seven stars and Orion." "Seek good and not evil." Yes, God is near, He waits to bless; but He must be sought. We are not diligent enough in seeking Him, therefore we do not find. Nature only reveals herself to those who love her, and wait for her revelations on the summits of the high Alps, or in rarely trodden solitudes. And will it not repay us to wait similarly for her Maker and God?

What magnificent imagery is that of the eighth verse! Amos speaks as a child of nature, with a delicate poetry and freshness of insight, which are not given to mere intellect or culture. Often as he watched his herds he had beheld the Pleiades with their gentle beams, and Orion the herald of the storm; had seen the day darkening into night, and the shadow of death turned into the morning; had heard God calling for the waters of the sea; had seen the spoiled and defeated suddenly succoured and enabled to resist the onset of the foe. And with him it was congenial and natural to attribute to God all the occurrences of the world without, and the monitions of the spirit within. O happy man, to whom God was so real and near!

Worse becomes worst when we are alienated from God. We flee from the lion, but we meet the bear. We lean on a wall, and behold a serpent. There is no security save in seeking the Lord; and what a comfort it is to know that seeking has with it the promise of life (14)!

WEDNESDAY, March 27. Amos vi.

Many are at ease in Zion still. These are the professing members of the Church who do not help in her enterprises, minister to her needs, or specially concern themselves in her afflictions (6). The nobles were chief that they might bear the burdens, and minister to the needs of the people; they were strongest and best, to stand as a bulwark to their community; but in the degenerate condition of the chosen people, the nobles were principally famous for their wanton self-indulgence, drunkenness, gluttony, and indolence. It is a bad thing for a church or community when those who are most capable of leading are insensate and sensual. The doom of such a body is at hand. The prophet quotes the history of the great nations of the time that had fallen to ruins on account of the very sins that were eating out the heart of Israel.

The greatness of the national apostasy from Jehovah is illustrated by a simple incident, which may have been borrowed from real life (9, 10). A house containing eleven men is smitten by plague; ten die, one only survives, and he has no nearer relative (so great has been the mortality) than an uncle, who comes to help him by carrying out the dead. When the survivor is on the point of ascribing his own deliverance to the interposition of Jehovah, his uncle suddenly silences him, saying, "Do not mention the name of the Lord; that is a practice which has passed out of vogue."

All God's dealings with his people had been in vain. It was like horses running, and oxen ploughing on rocks. Their hoofs are cut and spoilt, for the rock is impenetrable. By their perversity they took all the love and grace of the heavenly Father, and turned it into gall, as some weeds transmute the sunshine, which ripens in the ruddy grape, into deadly poison.

THURSDAY, March 28. Amos vii.

The king's mowings (1) were the first yield of the grass, tyrannically exacted by the king; then came a later growth. Our King also has his mowings, when He takes to Himself our best and dearest, and the home is desolate. But He is within his rights.

Three several plagues menaced the guilty land—grasshoppers (or locusts), fire, and the desolation of plague—but from these the prophet's prayers and intercessions saved it. The Bible is full of the results of a good man's prayers! When we read that the Lord repented, we must not attribute to Him any changeableness of purpose, for He is of one mind, and who shall turn Him? But He changes his procedure as soon as there is the last symptom of repentance in those who were the objects of his chastisements.

Often in the story of Israel, prophet and priest were in collision, because the prophet rebuked the priest for his heartless ritual and shameless life. So it was here, and, as so often, the false priest accused the prophet to the king (10). Amaziah felt that so long as Amos persisted in making Bethel the scene of his ministry, there would be no foothold there for himself; so by approaching the king on the one hand, and by suggesting to Amos to remove to Judah, where he would be sure at least of his bread, he hoped to secure relief (12, 13). In answer, Amos could only fall back on his original commission, which had come to him unsought. But, instead of Amaziah speaking against him, it would have been wiser far to have joined forces in a common effort to bring Israel back to God, because the sins which were rife could only bring the punishment of those ruthless Assyrian soldiers, who would show no mercy to man or woman (17).

FRIDAY, March 29. Amos viii.

A basket of summer fruit! How grateful such a sight! So beautiful, so luscious, so appetizing, so various, but so readily corrupted and diseased! What is there more fragile than this? "An emblem," Amos said, "of the rapidity with which the house of Israel would corrupt to dissolution."

The swallowing up of the needy, and making the poor of the land to fail, selling the refuse of the wheat, and taking advantage of the poverty of the poor, are the temptations of every commercial age. Let us see to it that it be not the ruin of our own. In our time, this spirit asserts itself in the self-aggrandisement of the great monopolists, and the tyranny of the great rings, which undersell and crowd out the smaller dealers, and make individualist effort almost impossible. Every such transaction is watched by the Lord, who says, "I will never forget any of their works."

The eleventh verse describes a state of things it is difficult to realize. For centuries there has been an abundance of preaching, and at no time more than now. But a famine of hearing is predicted, when men will long to listen to the invitations of mercy, but in vain; and to drink of life's river, but shall not be able. Something like this is already manifest in the High Roman and Anglican Church, and in certain Free Churches also, where the Word of God is proclaimed without unction or power. Let us make the most of our opportunities of hearing and receiving the engrafted Word, lest that famine overtake us.

SATURDAY, March 30. Amos ix.

Again a marvellous chapter. It begins with an announcement of the certainty of the punishment of the guilty. Let them climb never so high, or burrow never so deep; let them scale the loftiest hills, or plumb the deepest seas, yet would vengeance follow and overtake them. What hope is there for the sinner to contend successfully against Him, who builds his chambers in the heavens, and founds his vaults upon the earth, and at whose bidding the waves roll in upon the land? The great desolations which have befallen the mighty nations and cities of former days, prove how strict God is to mark iniquity.

This prophecy about the sifting of Israel among the nations is the story of eighteen centuries of the Christian era. God seems to have cast away his people whom He foreknew. As the farmer throws up the grain against the wind, so has God sifted them, yet the nation has remained intact. Not the least grain has been unnoticed or forgotten. Surely God will yet sow the unmowed grain in the soil of all the earth, and harvests of souls shall result.

All the prophets end with an Apocalypse of hope. The veil is rent, and they see golden days of prosperity and blessedness in store for their people, and the world. Let us ponder well this glorious vision of hope and joy, with which the prophesy closes—a vision which James quoted with such emphasis in Acts xv. at the solemn convocation of the early Church. "Known unto God are all his works." There is a Divine plan, on which God is at work, and which cannot miscarry, nor can God's dealings be inconsistent with his early promise to Abraham. He is engaged on a pattern foreknown from eternity.

Work at Sordavala.—Rev. J. D. Kilburn writes that he has just completed a week's meetings at Sordavala, where he found ten sick people in the cottage hospital and thirteen nurses in the training home. A sum of 5,000 marks is still required by Miss Ingman to pay for the buildings, which are now complete. The workers feel that it has been in answer to much prayer that the progress of the past seven years has been attained.

After the Storm in China.

By Rev. GRIFFITH JOHN, D.D.

In the course of an address at the annual meeting of the Central China Religious Tract Society, held at Hankow in January last, Dr. Griffith John said:—

IN all ages, and in all lands, there have been men who, following in the footsteps of Christ, have given up their lives to the sword, and we call them blessed. Our murdered brothers and sisters in China have joined the noble army of martyrs, and have taken a place side by side with Stephen, Paul, Peter, Ignatius, Justin Martyr, Polycarp, Tyndal, Ridley, Latimer, and thousands more who have died for the truth and the world. Shall we not call them blessed?

"Their blood is shed
In confirmation of the noblest claim,—
Our claim to feed upon immortal truth,
To walk with God, to be divinely free,
To soar, and to anticipate the skies."

To have had a share in a work that can produce such moral and spiritual heroes as the Church in China can boast these days, should not be a cause of self-conscious remorse, but of unfeigned gratitude and deep joy.

In looking back on the past year, I see much to inspire thankfulness and hope. Think of God's goodness to us in Central China. Though all the ladies and children, and some of the gentlemen, had to leave for Shanghai, or Japan, or home, a goodly number of us were able to stick to our posts at both Hankow and Wuchang right through. With the exception of a month's suspension of the daily preaching at the street chapels, the work was carried on at these two cities in all its branches. The scares among the people were many, and evil rumours filled the air for many weeks, but our converts and ourselves were wonderfully preserved in the midst of all the excitement. The presence of the missionaries here was a great blessing to the converts. It was the means of keeping them together, of comforting and strengthening them, and preserving them from dire persecution.

And now all the missionaries, or nearly all, are back at their respective stations, all difficulties arising from the destruction of property in Hupeh have been arranged with the officials, and everything is PUTTING ON ITS WONTED ASPECT.

The storm has passed off in a way that has surprised most of us, and a great calm has followed. The people were never quieter or more respectful than they are now, both here and in the surrounding country. In Hunan we have fared worse than in Hupeh. At Heng-chou, and in the whole of the Heng-chou prefecture, the persecution has been terrible. The storm began by destroying the Roman Catholic and London Mission premises at the city of Heng-chou, and murdering the Roman Catholic bishop and two foreign priests, but it did not stop till all the churches and chapels in the prefecture, whether Protestant or Roman Catholic, were utterly demolished, and all the Christians scattered.

Still we have much to be thankful for with regard to Hunan. The stations at Yo-chou, Siang-tan, and Chang-teh have not been molested; persecution in the whole province has ceased; Yo-chou has been re-occupied by Mr. Greig and Dr. Peake for several weeks; Chang-teh is about to be re-occupied by the missionaries; Siang-tan has been re-occupied by the native evangelists, and every day the doors of the chapel are thrown open for public preaching; Mr. P'eng Lan-seng is about to proceed to Heng-chou, to re-establish the mission there; the question of indemnity has been settled, and the money will be paid in before the end of next month. The London Mission has in the Heng-chou prefecture about thirty places of worship, nearly all of which have been gifted to the Society by the converts. All, without a single exception, were destroyed last year. They will, I trust, be all rebuilt before the close of this. Thus we have all much to be thankful for, so far as these two provinces are concerned.

Let me call your attention for a moment to the splendid proofs of their sincerity which the converts have given in the midst of the recent persecutions and trials. Thousands upon thousands of converts, in different parts of the Empire, have rather than deny the faith, and thousands have faced death in its most cruel forms rather than deny the Lord that bought them. We are often told that all the Chinese converts are rice Christians, and that there is not a truly converted man among them. I don't see how that can be said again by any intelligent, honest-minded man. The converts in China have been getting their baptism of fire, and they have stood the test. From all the out-stations in Hupeh we are receiving but one report, namely, that the converts have remained steadfast and unmovable in spite of every effort to entice them or terrify them. And such is the report from Heng-chou and other parts of Hunan. Some, I am afraid, have recanted; but a great many have, I am told, chosen to suffer the loss of all things rather than forsake Christ. And this in Hunan! And what is true of Hupeh and Hunan in this respect seems to be true of all the other provinces.

As the result of this fiery trial, we have in China to-day a purer, stronger, nobler Church than we had before; we have a Church of which we may well be proud, and of which we are proud. I don't know how you feel, but I can say in all sincerity that to my eyes the Church in China has come out of this burning fiery furnace, not only not consumed, but transfigured and glorified. My faith in it is stronger than it ever was before, and my love for it is deeper. With such a Church behind us, I feel that I can face the heathenism of China with a stouter heart and a more hopeful spirit than ever before.

"Be of good comfort, Master Ridley, and play the man," said Hugh Latimer, when a lighted faggot was brought and laid at Ridley's feet, "we shall this day light such a candle, by God's grace, in England, as I trust shall never be put out." That is what the native Christians did in China last year by their patience, fidelity, and fortitude in the hour of trial. They lit such a candle, by God's grace, in China, as shall never be put out. Think of the wonderful way God has raised up men to guard the interests of the Christian missionaries and the Christian converts during this terrible crisis. The command had gone forth to massacre all foreigners and to annihilate the Church, and but for such men as Liu Kun-yi, Chang Chih-tung, and Tuan Fang, it is almost certain that all the missionaries in the interior and all the converts throughout the empire would have perished. Just as Cyrus was an instrument employed by God in the execution of his gracious purposes towards Israel, so these friendly officials have been instruments employed by Him in the execution of his gracious purposes towards his Church in China. This has been a cause of deep gratitude to me as I have been reflecting on the past, and a source of great joy to me as I have been trying to peer into the future. God has not forgotten his Church in the days gone by, and He will not be unmindful of it in the days to come.

A safe stronghold our God is still,
A trusty shield and weapon;
He'll help us clear from all the ill
That hath us now o'ertaken.

I do not take a discouraging view of the present, neither do I take a gloomy view of the future; but the very reverse. In the years to come we shall look back upon the year 1900 as the most terrible in the annals of the Christian Church in this land; and we shall look back upon it, too, as the most pregnant with blessing. I believe that all that has transpired will be made conducive to the best interests of China and the Church in China. We are on the eve of a new day, and a brighter day than the people of China have ever seen, or the Church in China has ever known; but it is my conviction that the cataclysm of last year was absolutely needed in order to clear the way for the new day. There was a needs-be for it, and the day will come when we shall thank God for it. The New China will be a very different one from the old. It will be all athirst for Western lore and Western methods; the Chinese will turn to the West for instruction and guidance as they have never done before; there will be a full and complete opening of the Empire to foreign intercourse; mines will be opened, and, to use the language of H.E. Chang Chih-tung, railways will interlace the Empire like spider-webs; and, above all, the hitherto closed doors will be thrown open to the Gospel, the hearts of the people will be better prepared than ever for the reception of the truth as it is in Jesus, and the demand for Christian literature will continue to grow as the years roll on.

The Indian Famine.

IN a recent letter, Rev. Dennis Osborne, of Poona, gives details of the distribution of cloth stuffs, needles, and thread, purchased and despatched through the generosity of our readers. "One of the missionaries," says Mr. Osborne, "in acknowledging the gift, affirmed that not only the famine orphans, but the poor men and women in that region were literally without a stitch of clothing in the severe cold."

Our readers will be interested to know of the appreciation with which their gifts have been received. We therefore append a few extracts from some of the many letters sent by workers:—

Pandita Ramabai: "Accept most grateful thanks for the gift, which is so very helpful."

Mrs. M. C. Winser, Sirur, speaks of "the joy of the people, the mothers with their children, as they receive the cloth. It is such a blessing."

Rev. R. Henderson, I.P. Mission, Gujarat: "The cloth stuffs were chiefly used in supplying our 350 orphans with warm clothing, but in addition a number of old and infirm people were given warm jackets."

Miss Frances M. Beatty, Borsad: "For the orphans and children of poor parents the warm clothing was invaluable. In Sojitra the need was terrible. In some villages the men and women had scarcely a stitch to put on."

Rev. G. K. Gilder, Raipur: "The cloth stuffs proved a real boon. We were sorely in want of some warm stuffs for our children. To The Christian we missionaries tender our cordial thanks."

Miss Edmund, Hindagi: "Our girls did need just such cloth, for this is a cold place, with very heavy rains. They have been, under God, a real blessing."

Rev. Dr. H. Lee, Calcutta: "The cloth is just the practical thing. I know of no way by which help can be more efficiently rendered from home."

Persecution in Portugal.

IN recent issues we have given particulars furnished by the Evangelical Alliance respecting the persecution in Portugal. Latest information seems to indicate that the anti-Jesuit disturbances are assuming an acute form. On the 5th inst., a mob assembled before the residence of the Brazilian Consul, and, after a demonstration, marched to the house of his arch enemy, a rich commercial man, prominent among the supporters of the Jesuits. On arriving at the house, they greatly alarmed the residents, who showed resentment. The mob became excited, and attempted to break open the doors. The police fired their revolvers upon them, and in return the mob stoned the windows of plate-glass, and those of the chapel adjoining the house, causing damage to the extent of £150. They then decamped on the approach of cavalry. The following day a convent was attacked, the utmost excitement prevailing among the students, who are altogether on the side of the populace. The mob has force, the law being on its side as regards religious corporations, such as monasteries and convents, which are illegal and were abolished seventy years ago. By the intrigue and supineness of the civil authority these have gradually reasserted themselves and spread over the kingdom. The present unrest is the result.

Zenana Bible and Medical Mission.

On Tuesday of last week a meeting was held in the Egyptian Hall of the Mansion House to celebrate the jubilee of the work of the Zenana Bible and Medical Mission. In opening the proceedings the Lord Mayor expressed his gratification that the Society had so worthy a record of fifty years' noble and glorious service. He recalled the time when the Mission was inaugurated, when there were no lady medical missionaries, and very few native Biblewomen. The obstacles in the way of Christian missionaries who wished to reach women and children in their homes seemed insuperable. At last the Zenana Bible and Medical Mission was formed, and now maintains efficient high schools for girls at Bombay, Lahore, and Panchgani, and assisted similar schools at Poona and Benares with qualified teachers and funds. It also maintains numerous elementary schools at its mission stations. The attendance at these schools exceeds 3,000 girls, of whom 140 are being trained as teachers. At the three hospitals maintained by the Society, containing 125 beds, about 24,000 patients were treated annually, while the total number of attendances at the dispensaries alone amounted to 65,000.

A FRUITFUL WORK

has been carried on in the outlying districts; the agents of the Society visit a thousand Indian villages annually. The Chairman also referred to the desirability of raising a jubilee fund of £20,000, to be expended in the consolidation and further development of the work; and to efforts being made to provide a new hospital and dispensaries.

Speaking more particularly of the education given at the girls' school, Bombay, Lord Reay, a former Governor, emphasised the necessity of educating Indian women. If this were not done a disparity was established in the homes detrimental to the relations which ought to subsist between members of the same household. As to the reception of Christianity in India, the speaker asserted that there is no racial or caste difficulty operating against it. Care must be taken that the Christianity was the religion of Christ, and that it appeared in the life of the teacher, and not only in a form of doctrine. While missionary effort in India is made simple, and as pure as the Gospel demands, there will never be a lack of serious converts.

Sir Charles Elliott, as a former Governor of the North-West Provinces, spoke from wide experience of the needs of India. It might be information to many to learn that in India domestic affections are peculiarly strong—probably unequalled in the world. How easily through such affections to impress the life principle of Christ's religion—love. No agents were so successful in the evangelizing of India as women.

A statement as to the financial position of the Society was made by Mr. Arthur Habershon, who announced that one gentleman in the hall had promised £1,000, contingent on nine others giving a similar amount. Miss Cornall made a touching appeal to young women in England to go to minister to their sisters in India. Lord Kinnaird addressed a few earnest words to the meeting, urging that more liberal support should be accorded the Society.

Jews in Ratcliff Highway.—At the Strangers' Rest, Ratcliff Highway, Mr. Joseph S. Davidson continues his weekly meetings for Jews, with many evidences of Divine blessing. At the gathering last week a number of new arrivals were present, who listened with the keenest interest to the unfolding of the Gospel story. As a result of the visitation, which is carried on among the Jews in the district, many have been led to accept Christ as their Saviour. Mr. Davidson is the missionary of the "Christian Chief Corner Stone" Mission to Jews. His address is 5, Aden Terrace, Green Lanes, London, N.

Thirty Years on the Gold Coast.

In striving faithfully to fulfil their Lord's commission in the extension of the Kingdom of God in West Africa, Rev. Fritz and Mrs. Ramseyer have a record of unique and adventurous experience. As members of the Basel Mission, they have been working on the Gold Coast since 1864. Mr. Ramseyer's first station was at Anum, where he laboured for four years. But in 1869 the station was entirely destroyed, and he and his wife were carried into rigorous captivity by the cruel king, Kofi Kari-kari. That captivity lasted for four years and seven months, when they were mercifully delivered by General Sir Garnet (now Lord) Wolseley, and arrived safely in London.

No sooner had the missionary and his devoted wife recovered strength, than they longed to return to their labour among the Ashantis, and in 1876 the station of Abétifi was founded. Here God granted success, and with joy and much encouragement they laboured until June, 1896. At that time it seemed desirable that a mission should be established at Coomassie, the capital. Hitherto permission had been withheld by the native king, but our friend now had the joy of visiting the city where, years before, he had been held prisoner, and of preaching without hindrance the Gospel of the grace of God. Not only in Coomassie itself, but in the surrounding districts the missionaries were well received. Schools were established, and no fewer than fifteen out-stations were confided to the care of native evangelists.

Everything seemed full of promise and advancing usefulness, when suddenly all was overclouded, and the work was stopped. The English, who for some years past had not interfered with the native government at Coomassie, and had not claimed the payment of certain charges and indemnities to which the Ashanti monarch had agreed at the conclusion of the last war, changed their policy. A Governor (Sir F. Hodgson) was sent with a force of English officers and Hausa soldiers to assert the Queen's authority, and to demand the payment of promised contributions long overdue.

Neither the king nor the chiefs of the various tribes of which the nation consists were prepared for the demand. They had not the necessary money in hand, and a determination to resist broke out. Within twenty-four hours it was apparent that king and people were determined to rise in fierce hostility, and destroy, if possible, the whole English force. The king and chiefs (being for the most part heathen) had no regard for the missionaries. Their houses, church, and schools were soon attacked. The missionaries, of whom at that time there were five, had to fly for protection to a small fort where the Governor and his soldiers were. But the rising proved far more serious and much more extensive than was at first anticipated.

The natives gathered in thousands, quite prepared for war. No provision for such a contingency had been made, and the Governor soon discovered that he and his soldiers, with the missionary party he had allowed to take refuge with him, were helplessly surrounded by a savage host.

Famine set in, with the result that many starved to death. To prevent the starvation of the whole party, the Governor resolved on a sortie and withdrawal to the coast, allowing the missionaries to accompany him. The difficulties and dangers which attended them during the days it took to reach their destination have scarcely ever been surpassed. But at length, in July last, they reached the coast, and soon after returned to Europe.

But what of the mission at Coomassie? At present it seems as though it is blotted out. Many Christians were killed by the heathen chiefs. The whole of the mission property—house, schools, and church—was destroyed. No missionary was left at the station; yet appealing letters have been received from native converts who managed to escape the persecution, entreating the missionaries to return.

The affection of Mr. and Mrs. Ramseyer for the Ashanti people is unchanged. They are at present in this country, but are longing to resume their work, and are anxious and prepared to return as soon as means are provided for rebuilding a house and place for meetings. While looking back with sorrowful hearts upon the sad interruption of the work which gave so much promise, they are confident that the door will yet be opened, and the Ashanti Mission will rise again and become the means, under Divine guidance and blessing, of gathering in a rich harvest of souls. Now that Ashanti has become a British colony, its claims upon friends in England cannot be overlooked. The call from surviving converts indicates how deeply the seed already sown has taken root, and how hopeful is the outlook for the work when again it is revived. Mr. I. W. Werner, 27, Finsbury Square, E.C., will be glad to furnish information concerning the Basel Missionary Society.

Through the Shadows.

He has taught me through the shadows
What I never could have learned
Had my pathway been all sunshine
And the joy-light ever burned.

He has taught me through the shadows
Of the days of weary pain
That partakers of his suffering
Share with Him his blessed reign.

He has taught me through the shadows
That the discipline and trial
Were to "stablish, strengthen, settle,"
And were only for a while.

He has taught me that the shadows
Of the partings often known
Are the links to bind me closer
To the Lord I love and own.

He has taught me that the shadow
Of the dark and silent tomb
Is, "in Christ," the gate of glory
And the end of toil and gloom.

He has taught me through the shadows
That when darkness reigns above
'Tis the outcome of his mercy
The expression of his love.

The Late Rev. Urijah Thomas.

REDLAND PARK, BRISTOL.

THE late Rev. Urijah Rees Thomas, since 1862 the esteemed minister of Redland Park Congregational Church, Bristol, had come to exercise a widespread influence for good upon the religious and social life of the country, particularly in the West of England. A devoted pastor and a preacher of power and distinction, his large-heartedness and indomitable energy found many additional opportunities of furthering the Gospel cause.

Mr. Thomas was born at Tenby. His father, who passed away at a ripe age on the eve of his son's assumption of his duties as was Dr. David Thomas, of Stockwell, the editor of The Homilist, and a foremost preacher of the last generation. His grandfather, as a memorial tablet in the church at Sardis, South Wales, informs us, was highly esteemed in that locality. "Great in natural ability, an eloquent man and mighty in Scripture, he toiled on his farm for his livelihood, he preached through the neighbourhood to save souls." With the advantage thus of a strong Nonconformist heredity, Mr. Thomas entered Cheshunt College to receive his theological training, and from there went direct to Redland Park. It speaks well for pastor and people that through the years which have since elapsed there was unbroken harmony, unfailing activity, and a strengthening of ties as time rolled on.

From the first, Mr. Thomas made his mark upon Bristol. Generous, brotherly, transparently sincere, with a fund of sturdy common sense and a gift of forcible expression, he became a leader of men. Rev. Septimus March, who was a fellow student with him at Cheshunt, thus describes him:—

> At Cheshunt, Urijah Thomas possessed more of "the greatest thing in the world" than any of us—even the love that "suffereth long and is kind, envieth not, vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up, doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not its own, is not easily provoked; thinketh no evil, rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth, and never faileth." And this wealth accumulated as the years went on, for he did not hide it in the earth, but scattered it widely and gladly so that it increased.

On two occasions during Mr. Thomas's ministry it was found necessary to enlarge the Redland Park building. A spacious hall, with church-parlour and class-rooms, has also been provided, serving the purpose of a Sunday school and for holding all kinds of church and public gatherings, evangelistic services, &c. The membership of the church is very strong; it is a veritable whose activities are as varied as they are numerous. One of Mr. Thomas's greatest joys was that his church was so thoroughly representative of all classes—magisterial, manufacturing, professional, and artisan—the young as well as the old all mingling together in Christian fellowship.

Mr. Thomas was a conspicuous and active champion of the children of the poor. As chairman of the Bristol School Board, and president of the Children's Help Society—an organization formed at his own suggestion—he did splendid work. The bitter wintry weather found him active in the poorer districts attending to the physical as well as the spiritual needs of the little ones, and when the warm summer weather came round he rarely missed a chance of attending the country camps to which the waifs of the city are annually, sent through the instrumentality of the society which supplies free breakfasts and halfpenny dinners to needy children, provides playrooms in the winter evenings, and for nine or ten weeks each summer organizes campings out on the Mendip Hills, giving about 100 children a week a holiday.

Mr. Thomas did much to bring about that fellowship and co-operation of members of different Christian Churches which resulted in a fuller knowledge and a larger appreciation of one another's character and work. A striking instance of this occurred when the Congregational Union held its autumnal session in Bristol in 1882. It was at his suggestion, and mainly through his instrumentality, that sixty clergymen of the Church of England, headed by the Dean, appeared on the platform of the Union in Broadmead Chapel and presented a cordial and liberal address.

Even the bare enumeration of the societies with which Mr. Thomas was associated would occupy a considerable space. He founded the at Morthoe—a commodious house, purchased, furnished, and in every way fitted for the object, where ministers (with their wives) find a home which is a resting-place after exhausting work and a sanatorium in illness. It has proved of inestimable service to ministers of various denominations who have been its guests. Mr. Thomas also served the Gloucestershire Congregational Union, the Bristol Band of Hope Union, the Bristol Auxiliary of the London Missionary Society, of which he was secretary, and the Dwellings of the Poor Improvement Committee.

For several years Mr. Thomas edited The Homilist, first in conjunction with his father, and later alone. He also published a volume of sermons.

Doubtless as the result of overwork, there came a breakdown in health, and in November last Mr. Thomas spent a holiday in Italy, making good progress, and returning to his work with renewed vigour. He lately received a call from Ilfracombe, where, it was thought, his throat would be benefited by the air, and the exacting character of his labours would be somewhat lessened. The call came at a time when grief was heavy upon him—Mr. and Mrs. Wilberforce Tribe, with whom, being a bachelor, he had made his home, passing away at that period. In making known his decision to continue at Redland Park, Mr. Thomas read a letter which he had received from Mr. Joseph Storrs Fry, as follows:—

> If God calls you to Ilfracombe or anywhere else man must be silent. But unless this is distinctly the case, I hope that you will stay with us; and it may be that, notwithstanding the bereavements which have thrown a shadow on your Bristol life, your last days may be your best and brightest, the
> NEAREST TO GOD AND HEAVEN,
> and the most full of love and service to man in this still sinful world.

On February 15, Mr. Thomas left Bristol to conduct services at Truro in connection with the Simultaneous Mission, and there is every reason for believing that in this work he overstrained himself. He took part in twenty-eight services—a heavy demand on his emotional powers. He returned home on February 26, and on the following day conducted the funeral of a deacon of his church, and suffered a chill at the graveside. Despite some discomfort, he took the usual week-night service in the evening, and this proved to be the last office in his long ministerial career at Redland Park.

The end came on March 8, of pleuro-pneumonia. Mr. Thomas was sixty-three years of age.

The funeral on Wednesday, March 13, brought together a vast concourse of people. The first part of the service was held, of course, at Redland Park, Rev. Arnold Thomas, of Highbury Congregational Church, Bristol, officiating. Many hundreds were unable to gain admission, and there were in all seventy societies and associations, with which Mr. Thomas had been more or less connected, represented by deputations sent to pay a tribute of respect to the memory of one who was universally esteemed. At the grave-side spoke to a vast assemblage of people. In the course of a touching address he said:—

> Philanthropist, temperance reformer, advocate of peace, minister of the Gospel—in all directions, his large and many-sided soul went out in activities of mercy. We bless God for him. To-day, amidst all our tears, there is a sense of triumph in all our hearts. We rejoice in the work that he has accomplished, in the influence that will grow and will not vanish away. Crop after crop will grow from the seeds that he has sown and the truth which he has uttered. Example will find new force from the canonising touch of death. That is a solace that we have to remember—that an immense work, testified by the multitude that have joined us in the expression of our grief to-day, an immense work of an enduring kind has been wrought.

Mr. Thomas's name will be long remembered as that of a typical Nonconformist minister who put a fervent Evangelical faith into all he did and said, and adorned the Gospel which he loved to preach, with a life of patient and ceaseless well-doing.

Army and Navy Stores Bible Class.—The second annual report of the Army and Navy Auxiliary Stores Staff Bible Class shows that, although in its infancy, the class is fulfilling a useful and worthy mission. The weekly gatherings have been conducted with much profit to those who have attended to receive instruction from the Word of God. The daily Bible reading branch of the International Association has been a means of encouragement and help to students of Scripture. The sympathies of the members of the class have been extended to various missionary and other societies.

National Free Church Council.

MEETINGS AT CARDIFF.

[BY OUR SPECIAL COMMISSIONER.]

THE meetings of the National Free Church Council, at Cardiff, maintained to the end the high spiritual tone and enthusiasm which marked their opening. The delegates came together to tell of times of blessing, and a new blessing came even in the doing of this.

An invitation was accepted to hold next year's meetings at Bradford, and Rev. Dr. W. J. Townsend was elected to preside.

After the presidential address to which we referred in our last issue, the Council proceeded to the adoption of four special resolutions.

The first expressed in touching terms the feelings of the nation on the death of Queen Victoria, and the accession of King Edward VII.; the second sounded a note of praise in connection with the recent union of churches in Scotland; the third, while recognising differences of opinion as to the origin and conduct of the South African War, expressed a great desire that Christian nations might find another way of settling their differences, closing with a passionate cry for peace; while the fourth affirmed the conviction that licensing legislation on the lines of Lord Peel's (Minority) Report is urgently called for.

In moving the adoption of the report, Rev. A. ROWLAND (ex-president of the Congregational Union) named among the causes which had prepared the way for the formation of the Council (1) the gradual approach nearer to each other during recent years of the members of the different denominations; (2) the spread of literature enabling ministers to possess more generally the works of writers of different opinions; and (3) the use of the same hymns. Looking to the future, and to the multiplication of small village chapels, he declared his opinion that the point had now been reached at which it might be said to "a sturdy Independent who goes to a village, 'You have no right to erect, nominally to the glory of God, a place where you and a few more may worship. You ought to go the Wesleyan or any other chapel which is already there.'"

ATTITUDE TO FOREIGN MISSIONS.

The only reference on the programme to Foreign Missions was the allocation of the subject, "Federation on the Mission Field," to Rev. W. H. FINDLAY. It was shown that while the use of the word "federation" is as yet premature in any heathen country, the motives inspiring the movement find the fullest expression among missionaries. Mr. Findlay pictured the impossibility of those who, like himself, stand in the forefront of the battle, holding aloof from any through whose co-operation they might hope to accomplish part of their work. Among missionaries, indeed, there is an alliance wider than at home, for in many cases not only the representatives of "Free" churches are working hand in hand, but those of "State" churches are bound up in the same fellowship. Describing the various steps through which native churches seem to rise to the point at which "federation" may be hoped for, a deep impression was made by the argument that the home churches are now simply "marking time" until the brethren in other lands come up with them, that all may then march side by side forward into the world-wide kingdom of Jesus Christ.

The general feeling was voiced in a motion by Dr. MACKENNAL that the question of the attitude of the Council to foreign missions be referred to the new committee to consider, and to bring up a report next year.

In the evening the crowds were so great that an hour before the advertised time to begin they broke through all restraint, and the hall was packed in every part. During the time of waiting, by request, Rev. G. CAMPBELL MORGAN expressed his feelings on the eve of departure for America. Then turning to the practical he said: "There are scores of you who could do the work of an evangelist if you would only begin." His only regret at leaving England arose from a conviction that we are on the eve of the mightiest work for God which has ever been seen in this country.

Great sympathy was felt for Dr. PARKER, who was evidently suffering from bodily weakness and pain. Preaching on the recurring words,

"IF THERE COME IN ——"

(2 Cor. xiv.; James iv.), he addressed himself to preachers of the Gospel. The "ignorant man" and the "unbeliever" were traced to their modern representatives, the former being shown to be merely the layman, or non-professional person, and the question was driven home, "What would you do" if these persons did come in?

"Have we to consider unbelievers? Certainly. Preachers always consider their congregations. We have failed because we have been preaching to parts of congregations. How difficult it is to realize that we have not to preach to classes! We want the human, the universal sentiment, the one touch of nature that makes the whole world kin.

"The Apostle is saying to us, 'Remember that a congregation is not made up of insiders.' We are to preach to the man, the sinner, the despairing of the world. If we so take matters one hearer will be congregation enough. Henry Rogers always objected to the phrase 'learned ministry;' he said 'instructed ministry.' When we have learned that the ministry is not one of the learned professions, we will have made a great stride in progress.

"Do not misunderstand me so as to give no attention to anybody but the unbeliever. Do not treat your congregations as if they were gangs of infidels.

NEVER ADDRESS ABSENTEES.

If you address human experience, if you address the natural unbeliever of the heart, if you study in the school of Christ, you will be a good preacher."

Dr. Parker drew several vivid pictures of what an unbeliever might say after having been at typical churches. Each time there was shown the danger of his being able to say, "I pass no judgment, but the man did not preach to me." The Apostle says such hearers will come to one of two conclusions—"(1) If you have 'tongues,' and there is no one present to interpret, they will say you are mad; (2) if they understand, if they get into the mystery of this grace, they will say, 'God is with you of a truth.'

"Do not imagine all the people in your front galleries are distracted because they cannot make out whether Isaiah was written by one or two men. People want the bread of life, something to live on. The soul cannot live on verbal criticism: 'Lord, evermore give us this bread.'

"If there come in the broken-hearted, is there anything in your sermon for them? There are broken hearts in every congregation, sometimes palpitating under smiling faces. If you have ever spoken to them, you are the preacher I want to hear; my heart is broken. If there come in an inquirer, have you any sermons addressed to him or to the unconverted—short, telling, simple, experiential sermons?"

OVERFLOW MEETINGS.

The neighbouring Andrew's Hall was also filled, the preacher being Rev. J. H. JOWETT (Carrs Lane, Birmingham). An eloquent and earnest sermon was preached from Luke xiv. 31. As some hundreds of people still remained gathered in the street, Sergeant Barker (one of the evangelists of the Welsh Forward Movement) took his stand on the ledge of a window of the Park Hall, and made good use of the opportunity afforded for the presentation of the Gospel.

The preacher on Wednesday morning—Rev. J. MORGAN GIBBON—spoke on "The Individuality of Union" (Rom. xv. 5, 6). The sermon opened with a plea for such simplicity as shall secure a working unity among Christian churches. The dangers were pointed out on the one hand of making an idol of unity, and on the other of canonising disorder. Asking how the advantages of unity may be secured, and at the same time individual liberty be safeguarded, Mr. Gibbon pointed out (1) the rights of a man in Christ Jesus; (2) the matter from the view-point of God; (3) the position in the light of the Atonement; and (4) the work of God going on in the hearts of those whom Christ is seeking, for whom He died. The end of Christian unity is Christian brotherhood, and the great need of the world is to see this on a large scale.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL TEACHING.

The remainder of the morning session was given up to the interest of Sunday Schools. Rev. Dr. MONRO GIBSON opened the subject with a paper on "The Old Testament in the Sunday-School." Referring to the difficulties which have arisen on account of the change of view brought about in the minds of many by the results, or supposed results, of recent investigations, he showed that while some have used the new material to sow the seeds of unbelief, the true attitude of Christians will be found in following sympathetically the work of those reverent and believing scholars who are tracing out the same lines of inquiry in sympathy with, not in antipathy to, the spiritual and Divine. The unspiritual man is thoroughly incompetent to "judge" spiritual things. If there be in all our teachers the true spirit of their work, an abiding desire for the highest welfare of those entrusted to their charge, there need be no difficulty. It will kill our Sunday-schools if we take up the time of our scholars by airing our views on the letter of Scripture, instead of bending our energies humbly and reverently to discover what Divine message comes through us, the vehicle, however imperfect, of the letter.

While it is not the business of the Sunday-school teacher to settle the minds of young people on all possible subjects, it is still less his business to unsettle them. It is one thing to deal fairly and honestly with difficulties when they are forced upon us; it is quite a different thing to raise the difficulties ourselves and force them upon others. I may have a clear conviction that the foundations on which my faith rests are very much stronger and more abiding than those of my traditionalist friend; but if I undermine his, am I quite sure that he is ready for mine? Our work should be done in the spirit of our Master, who "came not to destroy but to fulfil." The work of the teacher, as of the minister, is edification—temple-building. It may be necessary, in the course of our constructive work, to point out the inadequacy of some of the old positions, and the great strength of the new; but it should be quite clear that it is edification we are after—construction, not destruction. In guiding the steps of our youthful charge especially, we should see to it first that we are leading them up and not down, and next that the steps up are made easy to them, so that they may not stumble in ascending. Above all we should be careful in the instruction of the children and youth, remembering the solemn warning of the Lord, "Whosoever shall cause one of these little ones that believe on Me to stumble, it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and he were cast into the sea."

DECLINE IN SUNDAY-SCHOOLS.

The practical problems connected with the present conditions of work among the young were presented by Mr. HOWARD EVANS in a paper, entitled "Are Our Sunday-Schools Declining?" After showing how his suspicions had been aroused that the results of Christian work in this department are not what they ought to be, he proceeded to show that State and Free churches are suffering in equal degree, and reviewed the figures over the whole home field. On the usual calculations the annual increase of Sunday scholars in England ought to be 37,000; yet, without reckoning the Congregational and Baptist schools, there is a decrease reported of 16,003, making 53,000 on the wrong side. Irish, Scottish, and American figures were quoted to show that this fairly represents the general proportion; and the gloom of the picture was deepened by an assurance that the figures of next year promise to be still less favourable. The main causes at work are the indifference of parents, and the loss of parental control at an earlier age than formerly; while the falling-off in teachers is traceable to an increased appetite for such amusements as cycling and week-end excursions, as well as the deplorably low ideas of Christian service which prevail among the younger and more prosperous church members.

PROSPECTS OF THE WORK.

In an address on "The Sunday-School in the New Century," Mr. Robert Whyte pointed out the lines on which teachers may expect their work to develop in the future; for "we teachers are not prepared to admit that Sunday schools are a failure." The question of rooms, he said, governs the situation, and determines the measure of success which can be looked for. The great change which may, however, be anticipated is the abandonment in great measure of the small class, in favour of an average of thirty or forty. This should be under the care of a trained teacher, with from four to six assistants, who will thus be themselves in training.

The use of the Revised Version by all scholars was pressed for by Rev. F. Ballard (Hull); Mr. Albert Spicer emphasized the lack of the leadership of the ministers and eminent laymen; Mr. T. Gardner (Buxton) pleaded for the general establishment of training classes for teachers; Mr. George White, M.P. (Norwich), thought the failure of many to take part resolved itself into a need for more complete personal consecration; and Miss Street described the results attained as magnificent, when allowance is made for the conditions under which they are won.

EFFECTIVENESS OF PREACHING.

A discussion on "Is our preaching as effective as it ought to be?" was introduced by a paper from Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, read in his absence by Rev. Thomas Law. The different gifts of the theologian, the commentator or expositor, and the prophet or preacher, were pointed out. A deep note was struck when it was shown that "the main difficulty is not to convince people of the truth of the Christian religion, but of the necessity of submitting to the personal authority of Christ here and now." The tone was hopeful throughout; and the opinion expressed that in the preaching of the future there would be less of abstract doctrine and more of personal devotion to Christ.

Rev. J. H. Jowett (Birmingham) followed with a striking and heart-searching address, in the course of which his ministerial brethren were deeply moved by a series of questions. Notes of this address will be found on page 11.

So deep was the impression left on the audience by this message that when Mr. Campbell Morgan rose to take up the discussion he was unwilling to proceed with an address. The remainder of the time was then spent in prayer, Mr. Morgan only adding this additional question: "How can I so live and serve that I may answer these questions in the affirmative in the coming days?" A yearning cry seemed to go up for a new baptism of power to serve.

The remaining name on the programme was that of Rev. John McNeill, who caught up the spirit of the gathering, and sought to interpret it in view of the duty of the following Sunday. He expressed his belief that one great help in preserving these elements in Christian preaching would be secured "if, through God's grace, there could be kept fresh in the mind of every preacher a glad surprise that he himself is saved from the terrible curse, that he himself is the sinner whom Jesus came to save, as if there were no other."

YOUNG PEOPLE'S DEMONSTRATION.

Wednesday evening was mainly devoted to a gathering of young people, under the presidency of Mr. R. W. Perks, M.P. The chairman expressed the right of the Churches to be heard on such great public questions as intemperance, gambling, overcrowding, the wrongs of labour, with the opinion that when they are sufficiently united they will be able to make their power felt, as they cannot at present. Rev. J. D. Jones (Bournemouth) called on the rising generation to show a healthy pride in their nonconformity, without sectarianism or bigotry. In the following address, Rev. Dinsdale T. Young showed the importance of ever keeping in view loyalty to the Protestant faith and evangelical Christianity. The closing words came from Rev. G. Campbell Morgan, who named some of the perils in front—(1) a new form of atheism, (2) a new materialism and animalism, (3) an abjectness and apathy, and to face these there is required an abiding sense of the spiritual, with a ready obedience to the spiritual law.

THE LORD'S DAY.

The first topic of conference on Thursday was "The Lord's Day." Dr. Horton addressed himself to showing (1) the importance of distinguishing between the civic sanction and the religious sanction for the observance of a Day of Rest; and (2) the religious use to be made of the Day of Rest, especially in reference to what we call public worship. It was proved to be of the utmost importance that we should endeavour to secure the seventh day of rest simply and solely upon economic and social grounds; and that what we need above all is a Sabbath in the religious sense, which will secure not only rest from work, but from ourselves, from doing our own pleasure, and from carrying out our own ideas. "The sanctuary is a little place fenced in, where a man can recover himself from the strain, rush, and disturbance of ordinary human life—a place of open communion and of the restoration of the spirit." A vigorous protest was lodged against any idea of making the church a place of pleasant entertainment in the hope of attracting people who would otherwise go to Sunday concerts. "We are on the wrong tack when we try to find attractions to bring people to the House of God. If by preaching, or ritual, or music you give the people the idea that you are trying to please them, you have already sanctioned the principle that when they cease to be pleased they are at liberty to stay away. While human nature is what it is, and while God is what He is, there will be an attraction in the truth as it is revealed to us which reaches men more readily than the most delicious music and the most ravishing oratory. Men do not object to being dull, if dulness means that they are introduced into the eternal presence and searched by the eternal truth."

CONVERTED FRENCH PRIESTS.

An interesting episode was the reception accorded to a deputation of converted French priests (five in number). Mr. Percy Bunting explained the present position of the movement in France thus represented; and the visitors told in touchingly child-like terms of the steps by which they had been led to the knowledge of a personal Saviour, and to the light and liberty of the Gospel, as well as their determination to remain true under all circumstances to the evangelical faith.

THE SIMULTANEOUS MISSION.

Thursday afternoon had been set aside for reports and experiences of the Simultaneous Mission. The gathering resolved into a praise meeting. Dr. J. Rendel Harris said that such a time of visitation had never been known before in Cambridgeshire, and read extracts from several letters to show that "the interest is increasing and taking hold of all classes." Above all, he said they had reason to praise God for the extraordinary fellowship of the churches.

Rev. John McNeill gave thanks for blessing among two special classes—the young men resident in London warehouses, and the business men in Cardiff Exchange. Rejoicing in the Federation, he pointed out how truly Mr. Moody's meetings all over the country were the same in embryo. Among other causes of gratitude in his heart he named the growing recognition of the position of the evangelist. Looking to the future, he said many able brethren had been called to the front, and he hoped they would not be deterred by the fact that they did not feel qualified to conduct after-meetings. Then close attention must be given to the education and training of experts in dealing with souls.

"The mission is not over yet," said Gipsy Smith. "I am glad the churches are waking up to the importance of 'first things first.' Our business is to make disciples. May the day be far distant when we can even hope to live without seeing that accomplished. The churches have been aroused; please do not go to sleep again."

At least a thousand people took part in the communion service, when the address was given by Rev. R. J. Campbell (Brighton). The great need, he said, is a deepening of the consciousness of God. How is this to be attained? (1) By doing nothing at all; (2) By rendering ourselves spiritually susceptible; (3) By learning to discover God in our own loneliness. So shall we attain that consciousness of God for which the whole world is craving, and in which there is peace for evermore.

CLOSING MEETINGS.

The evening gathering, which brought the proceedings to a close, was presided over by Alderman W. Howell Davies (Bristol), who bore testimony that he had never known the same spiritual force in the meetings of any previous year.

Rev. C. Silvester Horne gave a powerful address on the inalienable right of the Church of Christ to spiritual freedom. This, however, imposes grave responsibilities, and he called attention to (1) that for our own doctrine and discipline, and (2) that for the cause of freedom everywhere. "We shall win this battle, but we shall do it best by serving the land we love."

A timely note was struck by Rev. John McNeill when he reminded all that on the first Sabbath evening after the Simultaneous Mission, when the churches were assembled, the streets of every town and city in England were full of young life, still utterly outside the churches. "Thank God for what we have done, but there is a great deal still to do."

The last words fell from the lips of Gipsy Smith, and were full of cheer for every minister present; "for," he said, "the work is yours. We are only your helpers. When the Lord distributes the laurels, he knows your name, and where you live."

Sunday Railway Labour.

A HUGE memorial against the Sunday carriage of goods, signed by 2,300 stockholders, many of them persons of note, was presented at the Midland shareholders' meeting very recently at Derby, at the hands of Rev. Dr. Porter, of Southport, and the Hon. and Rev. R. Grimston, of St. Albans. This memorial represented £5,400,000 of the Company's stock. Dr. Porter argued that the cessation of the Sunday traffic was right; that it would be profitable, instancing Switzerland, Belgium, and Bavaria, where both traffic and dividends have enlarged since restriction was adopted; and, lastly, that it was practicable. With more powerful engines, larger waggons and better brakes, the work of the seven days could be compressed into six, the Sunday expenditure would be saved, and the dividends would increase. So principle and pocket were both on the side of the memorialists.

The Chairman, Sir E. Paget, was obdurate. He told Dr. Porter that it was of little use for him and his friends to come there year after year and receive the same reply. They should go elsewhere. No argument was used in opposition to Dr. Porter's facts, but the attempt was made to dismiss the whole matter with a jest. The memorialists are not disposed, however, to be thus summarily dismissed. They are part owners of the line, and have a right to be heard. They mean to persevere, and already several hundred circulars have been prepared with the idea of soliciting further signatures. Mr. James Fox Wilson, 7, King's Road, St. Leonard's, who conducts the correspondence for the associated shareholders, now numbering nearly 8,000, will be pleased to hear from any Midland stockholder.

"Seeds."

THE promise God gave to Noah (Gen. viii. 22) has come true again, and the "seed-time" is here. How well I remember when I was young, the delight we had in sowing seeds. We lived in London and had no garden, only a leadflat; but there we each had a large box of soil, and we sowed our seeds, tended the young plants, and in due time gathered our flowers. I suppose most of the young people who read this have gardens, and are now busy sowing "seeds."

Have you ever thought what wonderful little things "seeds" are? Some of them look just like beads, they are so shiny and pretty. What makes the difference between a seed and a bead? Need I answer the question? There is something in the seed which no man can put there. What is that? Life. God alone can give life to anything. A dead seed will not grow. If you look at a grain of wheat, you will find a tiny thing on one side of it called a germ. That contains the life; and if you pick out the germ, and then sow the grain, it will not grow. If you freeze your seeds or expose them to great heat you will kill them. Life is a very precious thing, and needs to be taken care of. This is true of the life of seeds or animals, and of your own life.

Then another thing I want you to remember about "seeds" is that as the germ grows the seed decays. In fact, it gives itself to produce the new living plant. Every thing in nature teaches us lessons about God, and Jesus told us what seed teaches us. Read John xii. 24-26, and you see it is only by self-sacrifice that we can make our life like Christ's—full of "good fruit." Self-sacrifice is no good if our hearts have not first received eternal life, the gift of God.

Well, you must plant your seeds in order to get them to grow. They may keep alive for a time, but they will not grow; and even when placed in nice moist soil they need sunshine and gentle rain. So you see God not only puts the life into the seed, but gives the sunshine and showers to make it grow. We are utterly dependent on Him, quite helpless by ourselves. This also is true about the life of our souls. Jesus said, "Apart from me ye can do nothing."

There is a great deal in the Bible about seed-sowing. God commanded the Jews that they were never to sow their fields with mixed seed of two or more kinds, in order to teach them that they were to be a "holy people," and not mix up with the world. If you, dear young friends, belong to Jesus, you must not mix worldly things with your religion, or they will soon come in between you and your Saviour. The Lord Jesus told many stories about "seeds." You can find three in Matt. xiii. He has explained them, too, so that you will find it easy to understand the meaning.

Each one of us is sowing seeds in our daily life, from which we shall reap the consequences afterwards. It is most important to have good seed sown in our hearts, and to sow good seed ourselves in our lives, and that while we are young. The Bible says, "Be not deceived; God is not mocked; for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap" (Gal. vi. 7). Look also at 2 Cor. ix. 6.

Dr. Gibson, a clergyman, visited a Sunday school in America, early one spring-time, and gave to each child (250 in number) six grains of corn. "Plant them," said he, "and see how many grains you can bring me in the autumn when the harvest is over." So they all went home and tried their best; the elder children took care to get rich, good soil, and they all watched and watered and tended the grain with every possible care. In the autumn there was a missionary meeting in the church, at which the scholars brought all their wheat. When it was all put together it made a total of five barrels full, and this was sold for about £5, and given to the Missionary Fund.

Now, as you plant your seeds, will you think of all I have been telling you, and ask yourselves the questions, "Am I among the 'good seed' or the 'tares?'" "What seed am I sowing in my life for 'the reaping by-and-bye?'"

What Makes the Seeds Grow?

Dear mother, tell me, if you know,
What makes the lovely flowers to grow?
If I should sow some garden seeds,
Why do they not come up as weeds?

My child, that is a secret known
To God, and to Himself alone;
The seeds He made with power to grow,
And this is all we need to know.

But, mother, do explain to me,
How can a seed become a tree?
When buried deep beneath the sod,
It cannot hear the voice of God.

No, darling, but his sun and showers
Cause buds to shoot, then leaves and flowers;
And so at length, as all may see,
The tiny seed becomes a tree!

Then do the seasons fast roll on,
Till Spring and Summer both are gone;
And as from stormy winds we hide,
Fresh seeds are scattered far and wide!

Where'er we look, fresh proofs arise
That God is great, and good, and wise;
His hidden ways we may not tell,
But, in his favour, all is well!

SUNDAY, MARCH 24.

"What I Owe to Christ" (2 Cor. viii. 9; 1 Peter ii. 21-25).

We shall never be able to count up all we owe to our Saviour. If the heavens were paper for our figures, and all the trees of the woods our pencils, we should exhaust our space before we had told one-half of what Jesus has done for us. Eternity will ever be unfolding some new height or depth, some breadth or length, of the love of Christ, which still passes knowledge.

How rich He was! "All riches were his native right." Rich specially in the enjoyment and use of all the prerogatives of Deity. He was in the form of God, and thought not that equality with God was as a prize to be grasped at. When a woman is not sure of her husband's love, she grasps at every sign of it, quotes it to herself, and tells it to others; but when she is absolutely sure that she is his unchallenged queen, she ceases to make use of such artifices. The Lord Jesus was so absolutely sure of his Divine nature, that He was never tempted to vindicate it. It was absolutely unchallenged in Eternity, and before the bar of the Universe. But He laid aside the exercise of his Divine attributes, and lived as a man with men.

The Apostle, in another epistle, says, "He emptied Himself" (Phil. ii. 7). The poet Herbert sings that on his way down to our earth He stripped Himself, so that his spear became the lightning-flash, his girdle the rainbow, his crown the stars, his robes the clouds in the amber lines of sunset. This is poetry, but He did lay aside the use of all that glory which He had with the Father before the worlds were made.

Through his poverty He has enriched us for ever. Because He did not save Himself He saved others. Because He hungered He has fed thousands with the everlasting Gospel. Because He wept He can wipe away tears. Because He sat wearied on the well He can create wells and springs in human hearts. Because He surrendered Himself to die, He is able to say, "Let these go their way." Because He was a worm and no man, despised and rejected of men, He is able to raise us to the dignity of becoming kings and priests unto God, even the Father. The Christian cannot live beyond his spiritual income, because he is at liberty to draw upon the unsearchable riches of Christ.

The mysterious fascination of our Saviour's suffering to death does not consist in the items which the Apostle Peter enumerates, and of which he was an eye-witness (1 Pet. v. 1); but in his mysterious relationship to sin, of which it is said that He bare our sins in his own body on the tree. This was the furthest descent to which He stooped. Had He chosen, He might have passed from this world by some comparatively painless death. Instead of this, however, He elected to die the most painful and ignominious of deaths known to man, in which the person of the sufferer is ruthlessly exposed. To die in Martha's house, with Mary at hand to wipe the death sweat from his brow, might have been a beautiful subject for the artist and poet, but it would never have given the gold of patience, of resignation, of gratitude, of love, to ten thousand souls.

Let us use our riches for Him, whether of life, or talent, or gold. All we have is his by an inalienable and irrevocable gift. It is not for us to live or die lazily, when He died so hard. Let us remember that our place in the fold is due to our Shepherd's bitter and cold night-search, and let us value it accordingly (1 Peter ii. 25).

C.E. NOTES.

The first C.E. Society in the South Pacific, that at the Training College at Malua, Samoa, was established July 10, 1890. Since then there have joined it 380 members, of whom fifty-five have been or are still missionaries in New Guinea, and thirty others are missionaries in the Tokelaw, Ellice, and Gilbert Islands. There are at present seventy-nine active members in the Society at Malua. One of the tutors is president, and two assistant tutors are secretaries of the Society.

An interesting story comes from a little town in the western part of Nebraska, U.S.A., where Indian huts and wigwams dot the plains, or are gathered into little settlements. One day an Indian lad lay on the prairies bruised and unconscious, having been trampled by a passing herd of excited cattle. He was found by two strong young Endeavourers, who carried him back to the town. The Society pledged itself to pay for medical aid. He gradually recovered, but is now a helpless cripple for life. The members of the Society have constituted themselves his teachers in reading, writing, and other branches of learning. It is slow work, but the heavy mind is daily awakening, and through this lad they hope to reach the Indians in the surrounding country.

Sheffield Convention, Whitsuntide, 1901! The largest hall in the city is engaged for the men's meeting on the Sunday afternoon, when Dr. Clifford and Rev. James Mursell will speak. The Temperance Demonstration on Monday afternoon will be presided over by Mr. W. E. Clegg, whose name is a household word in football circles all over Great Britain. He and his brother, who is president of the English Football Association, have done more than any other two men to prevent the ruin by gambling of a healthy, manly game. They have set young men a striking example of the possibility of combining keen business instincts and genuine love of sport, and a lofty adherence to Christian principles.

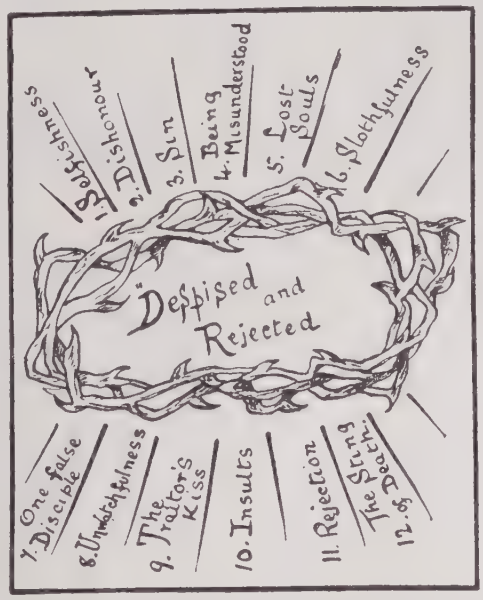
REVIEW.

GOLDEN TEXT: "He is despised and rejected of men." (Is. liii. 3).

INTRODUCTION.

OUR Golden Text is a very sad one, but we must carry it out, and learn what it means by seeing in each lesson how He was "despised and rejected," and we shall see it was by things that would also hurt and wound his tender loving heart.



Plan to Blackboard.—Matt. xxvii. 29: "When they had platted a crown of thorns, they put it upon his head." Thorns are very sharp, and they hurt and wound; pictures to us of the things which hurt and wounded our Saviour even amongst his own friends (Zech. xiii. 6).

LESSON 1. MATT. XXVI. 6-16.

The selfishness and greed of Judas (15). What a large part do these two things often play in many of our lives! Our Great Example was just the opposite; He was so unselfish He never thought of his own troubles, of his hunger and weariness. How much "selfishness" hurts Him!

LESSON 2. MATT. XXI. 1-17.

Dishonour done to God's house, which should be "a house of prayer" to worship and praise our Heavenly Father in, but was made into a place of buying and selling—a market.

LESSON 3. JOHN XII. 20-33.

Sin it was caused Him many a pang, for He was holy, and although He died for sin, He never sinned (27).

LESSON 4. MATT. XXII. 34-46.

Christ was so misunderstood, and the people try to make Him say something wrong, but they cannot do it; they never did understand Him (35).

LESSON 5. MATT. XXV. 1-13.

"Lost souls!" nothing grieves Him more. He died to save them, but they will not be saved; they go their own way and do not take heed to prepare for the afterwards (12). This is pain and grief to his loving heart.

LESSON 6. MATT. XXV. 14-30.

Slothfulness. Why does this hurt the Christ? Because He would have us "up and doing" in his service. He was ever busy, "doing good" (26).

LESSON 7. MATT. XXVI. 17-30.

The false disciple. One who had been with Him, followed Him, heard Him speak, saw all his kind acts, now turns round as a traitor and betrays his Master (25).

LESSON 8. MATT. XXVI. 36-46.

Unwatchfulness. If there was one truth more than another Christ had tried to teach his disciples, it was to "watch." Over and over again He gave them this word, but here is utter failure. How this must have grieved Him (40)!

LESSON 9. JOHN XVIII. 1-14.

The traitor's kiss (Luke xxii. 47, 48). Ah! how it hurt that tender love, betrayed by a sign of affection. Do we ever betray our Master? (5).

LESSON 10. MATT. XXVI. 57-68.

Insult. More and more degrading, more and more humiliating are the insults given to our Lord. His refined sensitive nature must have shrunk from it all, and yet He went through it "for our sakes" (67).

LESSON 11. LUKE XXIII. 13-26.

Rejected. So is fulfilled our golden text, and all the fifty-third chap. of Isaiah. Shall we not choose to-day whom we will serve, and not reject the King of kings?

LESSON 12. LUKE XXIII. 44-53.

The sting of death (1 Cor. xv. 56, 57). We need not ask, "Did this hurt?" We know it did, more than words can tell (44).

Oh, dearly, dearly has He loved,
And we must love Him too;
And trust in his redeeming Blood,
And try his works to do.

American Notes.

A MOVEMENT which may prove to be the most important ever started among the Negroes of the United States has just been inaugurated at the Asbury Methodist Episcopal Church, in Washington, where twenty official representatives of religious denominations and agencies engaged in religious work among the coloured people met to consider the spiritual, moral, intellectual, and social progress of the race, and to make arrangements for a great gathering of enlightened young Negro men and women in the summer of next year—to be called the Negro Young People's Christian Congress. Bishop Gaines, of Atlanta, Georgia, was elected president of the movement, Dr. W. D. Isaacs, of Nashville, Tennessee, vice-president, and the Rev. W. M. Alexander, of Baltimore, treasurer. On the executive committee are Bishops Williams, of Augusta, Georgia, Clinton of Charlotte, North Carolina, and Shaeffer, of Topeka, Kansas.

At the preliminary meeting, a greeting to the Negro was prepared, which said, in part:—"The Negro has no idea of leaving America—that may be understood once for all. If he is to stay here, and some or many commit crimes, the result of vicious appetites and idleness which forces itself to the front, it should be understood that lynching and mobs will not stop it any more than courts of justice can fully prevent crime or entirely put down the mob. To save the unreached Negro and stop criminality so deplorable, the remedy to be applied is Christian education, character training and practice, and to this end every enlightened Negro man and woman should speedily address himself. Hence this general call for the Negro Young People's Christian Congress for the summer of 1902." The general theme of the programme will be "Reaching the Unreached Negro—the Race for Christ."

The following paragraph from the Church Economist may be of interest to some British congregations, as well as American: "There are something like 165,000 church edifices in this country, many of them large and costly modern structures, on expensive sites. Yet so far as we can learn not a church in America avails herself of the elevator. The business advantage of the elevator is obvious. Where land is expensive it pays for itself many times by making practical a repetition of floors otherwise out of the question."

The Essence of Scripture.—The closing lecture of the course of Bible study on "The Essence of Scripture," under the auspices of the Central Y.M.C.A. at Exeter Hall, was delivered on Wednesday of last week. Professor Margoliouth dealt with "Biblical History and other History," and dwelt upon the numerous sources of history, and the various channels through which the labours of the earliest chroniclers have passed. It was found that many records must be received and considered with caution since the combination of fact and conjecture in their compilation had been proved. In reading books of remote periods we too often forget the cost of production. Referring to Biblical history, the lecturer spoke of the unmistakable evidences of the faithfulness and authenticity of the writers, many of the narratives at the same time bearing signs of having been collected from various sources.

Rev. S. A. Northrop, D.D., pastor of the First Baptist Church, Kansas City, Mo., U.S.A., would be glad to receive reports of annual meetings of the various Christian and philanthropic organizations in Great Britain that are under the leadership of ladies.

Bridge of Hope Mission

As the leading spirit of the Bridge of Hope Mission since its inception, Miss Steer has enjoyed the cordial sympathy and help of a wide circle of friends. A large number of these assembled in the Egyptian Hall of the Mansion House on Friday afternoon to assure Miss Steer of their continued interest in her devoted labours, and to learn more of the efforts which are being made to shelter the destitute and uplift the fallen.

The Lord Mayor presided, and spoke in warm terms of the aim with which the Bridge of Hope was founded, and the useful branch of Christian philanthropic endeavour for which it has stood for twenty-two years.

Mr. Walter Hazell, as one of the trustees, outlined the scope and operations of Miss Steer and her co-workers. The largest part of the Mission is caring for the girls in cottage homes. Sad to say, many of these little ones would be better off if their parents were dead—such was the environment of the homes from which they had been rescued. Their were often appalling. As time goes on and the girls are ready for service, there is no difficulty in obtaining employment, for more applications are received than can be supplied. The institution is maintained on economic lines, while love and sympathy are manifest on every hand.

The steady development of the institution was traced by the Bishop of Islington, whose fifteen years' experience in the East End had enabled him to realize the need and scope of the work. Not less significant and practical were the remarks of Mr. Percy W. Bunting, who, while admitting that the roll of the betrayed is swelling, found no ground for taking a pessimistic view of the situation, while such faithful service as that being rendered by Miss Steer and her co-workers was being blessed with so encouraging results. He spoke of the difficulties of private individuals who endeavoured to rescue those who have fallen, were it not for the open door of the Bridge of Hope to receive such cases. He expressed the conviction that the tone of society is improving, a sentiment that must be shared by all who compare London of to-day with that of thirty years ago. This was not the result of any inevitable progress of mankind, but was due to the devotion of those who were prepared to sacrifice themselves for the good of others.

Mrs. Stanley Boyd, M.D., spoke of her ten years' acquaintance with the Mission in all its branches, and referred to the readiness with which

IMMEDIATE ASSISTANCE IS GIVEN.

Speaking of the shattered lives in the Home, she said the first ambition was to reconstruct those lives by infusing a belief in the love of God, and the implanting of a new motive. The training of their characters often requires months of patient toil before the influence of the past can be counteracted. She was convinced that the sin of many who took to the streets could be laid to the charge of those employers who paid such low wages.

A few words were spoken by Sir Charles Elliott, descriptive of the Homes at Chingford which the majority of whom are taken from the most perilous conditions of social life. Not a child of all the number but has had its babyhood shadowed by some sad record, but each has now the beautiful possibilities of development into goodness and purity. Fathers, too, who have become widowers, or whose wives are confirmed inebriates, bring their children in order that they may be saved from the evils with which their lives are enveloped. The appeals of the fathers are of course supplemented by a promise to assist in the maintenance of their little ones.

Some frank, weighty words were uttered by Mr. J. Compton Rickett, M.P., who referred to the duties of mistresses in regard to their servants. We have missions to all sorts of people, and he would like to see a mission to mistresses. In rescue work it is often a difficult task to convince a young woman that she has done wrong. It requires tenderness, common sense, and sympathy to deal with such cases. To hurl denunciation would often mean closing the door of hope of ever entering into a happier and purer life.

Mr. H. W. Maynard and Mr. Walter Weeden added a few words of testimony to the work of the Mission, in combating the temptation with which so much young life is surrounded, as well as reclaiming those who, through wandering into sordid and desperate sin, seemed almost hopeless.

Young Men of West London.

The members of the Bayswater branch of the Y.M.C.A. must have received encouragement from the large audience of friends who attended the celebration of their anniversary on Tuesday evening of last week. The gathering was held in the large hall of Paddington Baths, scarcely capacious enough to accommodate those interested in the welfare of the young men of the West End.

The report submitted by the secretary, Mr. Walter Wild, was one which could not fail to give pleasure and call for deep gratitude to God, in whose name so much has been wrought. The year's record is one of fruitful service. From the early Sunday morning prayer meetings to the distribution of tracts in the precincts of theatres late on Saturday evenings, classes, and various meetings is marked by earnest purpose and consistent endeavour to reach young men in every walk and condition of life. Besides the definitely spiritual phase of the work, help is given in various ways, forty situations having been procured for those out of employment, and assistance afforded others in need of brotherly fellowship and counsel.

Mr. F. A. Bevan, who presided, heartily commended the work of the Association in West London. During the fifteen years a branch had existed at Bayswater no period had been more successful, from every point of view, than the year 1900. The Association had not only gathered in, but had sent out workers into the harvest-field, both at home and abroad.

A powerful address was then given by Rev. Canon Hay Aitken, on "City Life: Its Sins, Snares, and Temptations." The speaker urged young men to look facts in the face. To know there is a snare in the path is a sure way to escape temptation. If they could only see sin in its hideousness, that would be a large step towards its mastery. The force of sin lies in the fact that we know so little about it. "Ignorance is vice, and vice is ignorance." It is deplorable to think that after 1,800 years of Christian teaching, after all that has been done for the higher civilization of mankind, a young man leaving a country home should, on coming to London, find himself surrounded by all the villainies of hell. The cry arises daily from the city, "Great is mammon of London." All around it is witnessed to by the greed of the speculator, by the cruelty of the commercial oppressor, by the extortions which rob labour of its due reward, and by the unsatisfactory character of much of the labour that is done. Men are too much inclined to regard money-making as the principal end of life. Happily there are a few commercial men who regard what God has given them as a sacred trust, but they are the exceptions.

In showing the means of escape from such snares as he had enumerated, the speaker emphasized the necessity of having feeling that there is something that we cannot buy. When a man comes to know his relation to God, money sinks to its proper value, and becomes his servant instead of his master. When a man lives for God, business life, with all its drudgery and commonplaces, becomes noble, and a golden thread of purpose runs through it all; the "daily round and common task" bring opportunities of glorifying God and benefiting humanity.

Canon Aitken went on to recall numerous instances of young men who had found it impossible to reconcile a profession of Christianity with the practices of the business in which they were engaged. To any in similar circumstances he spoke words of encouragement and earnest counsel. To meet the difficulty something more than ethics is needed—a personal knowledge and experience of the power of God. No young man can afford to do without God.

In the absence through indisposition of Rev. D. Campbell Macgregor, a stirring address was delivered by Rev. Fleming Shearer (Ladbroke Grove Baptist Church). While affirming that a young man who desired to go wrong in life found it easier in London than anywhere, it could be said with equal truth that no city offered greater facilities to the one who was determined to do right. He advised no young man to live a life of loneliness, but be careful to seek Christian fellowship. The surest safeguards against the power of temptation would be found in faith in the Word of God, the building up of a solid character, and spiritual culture. Young men owe it to the world, to themselves, and to God to make the best of their privileges in life, and cultivate their manhood.

Missionary Conference at Bristol.

A conference of missionaries was held at the Bethesda Chapel, Great George Street, Bristol, on Tuesday and Wednesday of last week. The proceedings were marked by much enthusiasm, and were taken part in with spirit and zest.

On Wednesday the opening address, given by Mr. W. H. Bennet, was a fervent exhortation for a hearty response to the Divine command to go into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature. Mr. H. Price spoke with much earnestness of the opportunities such a conference offered. But was there not often a danger at such gatherings of dividing themselves up into speakers and hearers, workers and spectators? Having heard what God was doing they became interested, but were they not in danger of lulling themselves to sleep in the belief that the work was being efficiently carried on? He trusted this would not be so; but that what they heard at such gatherings would increase their sense of responsibility. They should look at China, Africa, India, look at the terrible indictment concerning missionary work at the opening of the twentieth century, and ask themselves who was to blame for the present state of affairs. Did the Lord command an impossibility? No. Then He was not to blame. He thanked God for the proof they had had during the persecution of native Christians in China of the reality of conversion among the heathen, and instanced cases of natives who had preferred death to recantation.

Mr. H. Hill (India) appealed for more sympathy and encouragement for missionaries in their labours. Friends at home liked to hear the missionaries relate their experiences in heathen cities, but God alone knew how much they needed their prayers to be kept through those experiences. Mr. F. T. Lane, who came from Central Africa, spoke of the progress which is being made in that country in missionary enterprise.

In the afternoon there was a meeting for sisters only at Bethesda Chapel, and the brethren met at Alma Road Chapel, while in the evening the final gathering of the Conference took place, and further reports were submitted by missionaries.

London City Mission.—A meeting in support of the objects of this organization was held recently at the Mansion House, E.C., the Lord Mayor presiding. Mr. F. A. Bevan, treasurer, remarked on such features as the effort to reach and bless the thousands of men employed at the City's great markets. Rev. Preb. Barlow, D.D., spoke of the variety of the operations, and Rev. Dr. Thornton bore testimony to the usefulness of the City missionary, instancing the case of his own church, in which one member per week, for 150 consecutive weeks, had been added by the brother who laboured in the neighbourhood

Young Emigrants for Canada.

THE presence at the Aldersgate Street noon meeting, on Monday last, of a large contingent of lads from Dr. Barnardo's Homes, who are shortly to sail for Canada, was a reminder that this department of the veteran philanthropist's work receives much encouragement, for there were some 300 lads present, and their appearance and bearing reflected high credit upon those who have had the responsibility of training them.

A large number of friends came together to wish the young voyagers God-speed, the meeting-room being crowded. The story of spiritual blessing and material prosperity in connection with these emigration parties was a familiar one to most who were privileged to be present, but to Christian sympathizers the oft-told tale is ever fresh. It was rehearsed with clearness and pathos by Rev. W. H. Finney, chaplain of the Homes, in the absence through indisposition of Dr. Barnardo. A feature of the meeting was a Gospel address given by Mr. Newton Jones, the Sunday School Union evangelist. Mr. Jones illustrated his points by means of blackboard sketches, and aroused deep interest among his young hearers. At the conclusion of the address, Mr. J. E. Taylor and Mr. William Gro e engaged in prayer, asking that Divine guidance might be vouchsafed to the lads at the outset of their new experiences across the Atlantic.

Scottish Notes.

THE report submitted at the annual meeting of Lord Overtoun's Bible Class in Dumbarton shows the membership to be now about 450.

A Scottish National Conference on Lord Peel's report is to be held in Edinburgh on Tuesday, March 26. Among others who are expected to take part are Sir John Neilson Cuthbertson, LL.D., the Earl of Aberdeen, Principal Rainy, Principal Lang, Mr. Alexander Ure, M.P., Mr. John Colville, M.P., and Miss Flora C. Stevenson.

The Liquor Traffic Local Veto (Scotland) Bill, which has been introduced into the House of Commons by Mr. Hunter Craig, provides that "if on a poll taken in any area (a) a majority of the votes recorded are in favour of a prohibitory resolution as defined by this Act; or (b) a majority of the votes recorded are in favour of a limiting resolution as defined by this Act; the resolution shall be carried and shall come into force in the area on the expiry of the licences then current."

The authorities of the Boys' Brigade in Dundee are making a determined effort to grapple with the evil of cigarette smoking among boys. So far has the matter gone that the attention of the Council has been drawn to a "Boys' Brigade Brand of Cigarettes," recently placed on the market. The question of physical injury has been investigated in consultation with leading physicians, and shown to be most serious. On the other hand, it is admitted that certain cases of petty dishonesty are traceable to the same cause. The matter is being brought under the notice of the Church courts, and the union of forces will, it is hoped, be able to rouse parents to a sense of the danger.

At a conference held last week under the auspices of the Glasgow Home Mission Union, the Chairman (Rev. Dr. Drummond) frankly admitted that the number of the non-churchgoing was on the increase. The council felt that their work was flagging, and they wanted to get more people to devote themselves to the work of house-to-house visitation. This need was emphasized by Dr. Ross Taylor, who believed that it could only be met by such methods as that proposed. The report showed that the additions to congregations through this channel were under the average of the past eighteen years, but only fifty-five congregations had reported instead of eighty.

In a notable address given at Edinburgh last week, Rev. Professor George Adam Smith said the increase of church membership had nearly kept pace with the population; church membership and church attendance were, he believed, less conventional and more sincere than they were thirty years ago; but the numbers outside the church were greater, the respect for its ordinances was less felt, and in particular the classes who were disabled by their poverty and social conditions from taking any organized part in religious life were far more numerous than they used to be. These conditions were the reproaches, the defects, the failures of civilization, for which they as Christians were mostly responsible, and by which the credit of their religion and their claim to represent the Son of God upon earth would be judged in the long run by the world outside.

Obituary.

MR. JOHN DEACON.

THE death is announced of Mr. John Deacon, formerly a partner in the banking firm of Williams, Deacon, and Co. He died at his country residence, Mabledon Park, Tonbridge, at the advanced age of seventy-six. Mr. Deacon was a Christian man and an open-hearted philanthropist. He was a patient listener to appeals for mission enterprise at home and abroad, and his gifts were munificent and heartily given. Workers among the poor will greatly miss the encouragement of his benevolence.

CANON SCOTT-MONCRIEFF.

On Wednesday, March 13, Canon William Scott-Moncrieff, the esteemed rector of Easington, in the diocese of Durham, passed away under pathetic circumstances. He had gone to a private hospital in Newcastle to undergo an operation, from the effects of which he was unable to rally. Within a few minutes of his death his wife, who was a great invalid, died in the rectory at Easington. Canon Scott-Moncrieff was a strong Evangelical, and a vigorous supporter of the Church Missionary Society, which he served as an honorary association secretary. He was buried with his wife on Saturday in Easington Churchyard, his old friend, Bishop Westcott, officiating, and among the mourners was his son, Major Scott-Moncrieff, who was wounded at Spion Kop.

EX-PRESIDENT HARRISON.

The death of Mr. Benjamin Harrison, ex-President of the United States, which occurred at Indianapolis on March 13, removes from the arena of political affairs a man who was held in general esteem for the consistency with which he maintained high ideals. Mr. Harrison came of a family distinguished in American annals from the beginning. One ancestor of his was among those who signed the Declaration of Independence. His grandfather was elected President in 1840. Mr. Harrison's main pursuit was law, in which he attained great distinction. He served in the Civil War, and reached the rank of General. In 1888 he was elected to the Presidency. It was, however, in the general activities of a good citizen that he did most to add to the esteem in which he was held by his fellow-countrymen. His services were freely put at the command of worthy causes, and he was rightly regarded as a high-minded, patriotic American. Mr. Harrison's name will be familiar to Christian people in this country chiefly in connection with the Ecumenical Missionary Conference held last year at New York. The ex-President was called to the chair, and his opening address, marked by lucidity and fervour, was a noble justification of missionary work.

The Y.M.C.A.

THE new Association at East London (South Africa), which has enrolled 150 members, has secured well-equipped premises in a central situation, and gives promise of vigorous work.

The Spring Conference of the North Metropolitan District took place at Camden Town on March 14. Mr. W. H. Mills (representing the National Council) and other well-known friends took part. The report showed revived interest and progress at the different centres.

The visit of Mr. W. M. Oatts to New Zealand, as part of the special missionary tour undertaken for the English National Council, has been fraught with most encouraging results. The work at several centres has been revived, and in a few important towns a start has been made which it is hoped will lead to well-organized effort.

A fruitful series of meetings, conducted by Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh, was conducted at the Bolton Association March 2—10. The room was well filled each evening, several meetings being for men only, when important subjects were dealt with in an interesting and instructive manner. A larger hall was engaged for the Wednesday evening, when Mr. Bradlaugh told the story of his conversion to God. Many testimonies to blessing received have been given, and it is believed the Association will greatly benefit by the visit.

China Viewed from Within.

THE book by Chang Chih-tung, Viceroy of the provinces of Hupeh and Hunan, to which we referred in a recent issue, and of which an English translation, by Rev. Samuel J. Woodbridge, has been published under the title of China's Only Hope (3s. 6d. Oliphant), is undoubtedly one of the most remarkable of modern times. It is the independent work of a true oriental, whose keen penetration and rare mental powers have enabled him to write about Western countries in a fashion almost incredible in one who has never seen them, and to separate good traits from bad with almost unerring judgment, so far as worldly wisdom could do so.

In thinking of the terrible massacres of last year it is well to remember that "in spite of the commands of the Empress Dowager to massacre all foreigners, and in spite of the determination of the reactionists in highest places to have these commands carried out, more than half of the mandarins of the Empire refused to obey the order."* So far as Central China was concerned, this was, humanly speaking, due to the personal influence of Chang Chih-tung; and great as was the number of missionary lives lost, it is well known that the wavering of the great Viceroy would have led to its increase in a degree at which we dare not even hint.

Although taking no part in the present international negotiations, Chang Chih-tung seems destined to have a larger share in shaping the course of the New China than any other single man, and this because he is a true patriot and an able statesman. In his introduction, Dr. Griffith John italicises the words, "The love of money does not seem to be in him," and they are all-important, for the characteristic is exceedingly rare in China, even among the highest officials. As an instance of the width and practical nature of the author's interest in international affairs, it may be mentioned that for a long period he was at the expense of having the South African war news telegraphed to his yâmen at Wu-chang daily.

The book bears on the face of it that the author is a heathen; and the slightest European revision would have spared him from putting into words several misapprehensions which are almost ludicrous. He finds his ideal of human life in Confucianism, and has little fault to find with the theories on which the Chinese state is built up, though unsparing in his criticisms of the spirit in which these are carried out. He finds the principles of everything he admires in Western life and conduct in the classics of his own people, and in relation to family and public life calls for a return to the sincerity of earlier days. The advantages of wider education and reading, newspapers, railways, travel, and armaments are urged as by a European. But though he is thoroughly acquainted with the work and aims of the missionaries, we cannot find a single word of appreciation of Christianity.

The Viceroy brands as "stupid beliefs" the ridiculous stories that were often circulated about the conduct of missionaries, yet all his toleration is avowedly proposed because he believes that through it Confucianism would flourish best.

We long and pray for a New China, but not the China which Chang Chih-Tung plans. He undoubtedly is one of the ablest Chinese statesmen living, but God's purposes are not always wrought out by using the "wise and prudent" of this world.

Army Scripture Readers.—The Army Scripture Readers' Society aims at providing every regiment and battalion with their own Scripture readers, and in order to supply some of these it contemplates the formation of a fund, to be called the "Readers' Victoria Memorial Fund," of one million half-crowns, to which the hope is expressed one member or more of many households throughout the country will contribute. Those desiring to subscribe may send their contributions to Colonel G. Phillips, General Secretary, 112, St. Martin's Lane, who will be glad to give full information as to the work of the organization.

Simultaneous Mission Meetings.

MR. W. R LANE AT ALTRINCHAM.

MR. LANE'S work here has been very fruitful. The missioner's manliness, direct appeals, transparent sincerity, and unsparing pains attracted all and gave great weight to his appeals. Every service, whether Bible reading, Gospel address, or lecture, has been crowded; and the power of the Spirit has been manifested. The most memorable meeting of the series was perhaps that held for men on the second Sunday afternoon, when Mr. Lane spoke upon "Purity." Dinner hour talks to workmen were a feature of the mission, and Mr. Lane willingly undertook these in addition to the afternoon Bible readings and evening services. There was no trace of sensationalism or mere excitement, but an atmosphere of spiritual power which deepened day by day. Some 250 passed through the inquiry rooms, but it is significant to find that only two returned themselves as having "no church connection." We have had a glorious ingathering, but it has been an ingathering of those who were already members of our congregations. How are we to reach the non-church-going masses? Dr. MacKennal, who is the president of our local council, has thrown himself most heartily into the work. All the Free Churches have been strengthened and drawn closer together. "The Lord hath done great things for us; whereof we are glad." H. L.

In connection with the Simultaneous Mission, three weeks' services have been held at Bedale, Yorks. The services were conducted by Mr. CHARLES NOAKES, of the Evangelization Society. The meetings have been attended by large congregations, and well supported by the ministers and members of the different churches. Mr. Noakes is an earnest evangelist, and has the power of presenting the truth in a simple form. The churches have been greatly benefited by this mission, and a considerable number of new converts have been made. F. A.

The power of God was with us in Fordingbridge. I should like to acknowledge the services of Rev. A. F. SCUDAMORE, of Newquay. We have reason for gratitude to God that under our brother's earnest appeals so many sought salvation. Here, too, as in so many places, our spiritual life has been quickened by the mission. A Y.P.S.C.E. has been started in connection with my chapel, and all our four village stations are in a state of revival. In the town and district nearly fifty cases of decision are recorded.

(Rev.) E. J. HUNT.

The meetings at Bacup were conducted by Mr. G. FEAR. Three places within an area of two miles were chosen by the Council for the mission—Bacup, Shawforth, and Stacksteads. The chapels were filled to overflowing. The last Sunday evening service at Stacksteads will long be remembered. Ministers say they never witnessed such scenes. When the missioner, after a powerful appeal, gave the invitation to seekers to come forward about 150 responded. The missioner had to close the service in order to deal with the inquirers in the chapel, the vestries being crowded. To the number of inquirers must be added those on the Monday night, making a grand total of about 400. FREDK. HALL.

Concerning the recent meetings at Hayle, Cornwall, a local paper says: "The work of Mr. P. RUSSELL HURDITCH will long be remembered as the turning point in many lives in this town. The mission has been a great blessing; not only have a large number decided for Christ, but the Nonconformist churches have been brought together in loving work and brotherly co-operation for the extension of God's kingdom in this place, in a manner and to an extent never known before, and the several churches have been greatly blessed. Nearly fifty have come forward to the communion rail or inquiry-room, but there has been much good done which cannot be tabulated."

A fruitful mission in connection with the Free Church Council has been held at Abercarn, all the Free Churches uniting. The missioner was Rev. A. J. UNDERWOOD, Congregational minister, of Waunllwyd. Very large audiences attended nightly, the whole neighbourhood being moved. More than 100 passed through the inquiry rooms. On Sunday evening the large public hall was crowded to its utmost capacity, scores were unable to gain admission, which rendered it necessary to hold an overflow meeting. Every church in the locality will benefit by the mission.

A large number of meetings in connection with the Simultaneous Mission were conducted by the Evangelization Society in London, the provincial towns, and rural districts. In many cases great interest and much blessing has been reported. Very large numbers of inquirers have been dealt with. Many letters speak of 100, 150, and, in some cases, even 500. It has been much joy to the Society to know that in not a few cases Church people have joined most heartily, so that it has been really a united effort of the widest character. Arrangements are now being made for forty or fifty tents to be sent forth as soon as the season is sufficiently advanced.

Mr. Henry Varley in Glasgow.

The second week of Mr. VARLEY'S mission at St. George's Cross Tabernacle has been even more fruitful than the first. The congregations at the afternoon Bible studies have far exceeded our most sanguine hopes, and the attendance at the evening meetings has taxed the seating capacity to the utmost. On the third Lord's Day two immense meetings were held in St. Andrew's Hall—the largest in the city—and even this could not contain the thousands of young men who flocked to the afternoon meeting. Probably over 9,000 persons were present at the three services on Sunday, and there are many testimonies to blessing and help received through the Word preached. Will our friends continue in prayer that many more unsaved ones may be reached through this mission? D. J. FINDLAY.

Special Mission to Jews.

At a recent meeting of the Hebrew-Christian Prayer Union Committee, it was decided to make a special effort during the coming festivals of the Passover and Pentecost to reach the thousands of Jews in the East and West of London with the Gospel message. Mr. Bergmann has again been requested to prepare Scripture portions and Yiddish Gospel tracts for wide distribution. If possible, special services will also be held for Jews, as on previous occasions, in the various churches in the Jewish quarters.

Christ Church, Endell Street, W.C.

Rev. J. P. CUSHING, of the Church Parochial Mission Society, has just concluded a ten days' mission at the above church. In addition to the usual Sunday services, meetings for children and men were arranged, and a special service each week-day evening; also, by the courtesy of the Guardians, two services were held in the dining-hall of St. Giles' Workhouse. As the mission progressed the numbers increased, and an earnest, prayerful spirit was manifest. Mr. Cushing's way of putting the truth was forcible, and well calculated to lay hold of the minds and hearts of his hearers. Much good was done. Many requests for prayer came in, and the general testimony was most explicit of the spiritual benefit received by the majority of those present. We are all thankful for this "season of refreshing," and are confident in the Lord that souls have been won for Christ, and his own people edified and strengthened for Christian service.

S. A. GRIFFITHS.

Mr. Reginald Studd in India.

An esteemed correspondent forwards some further particulars regarding Mr. REGINALD STUDD'S tour:—"Hyderabad has been favoured with a visit from Mr. Reginald Studd who has come out from England to hold meetings in connection with the Anglo-Indian Evangelization Society, during the cold season. The mission was held in the Y.M.C.A. Hall, which was quite filled every night, and it was a time of much blessing to Christian people as well as to the unsaved, some of whom were led to decision. The presence of the Holy Spirit was manifestly felt in the earnestness and stillness which was very remarkable during each meeting. The morning prayer meetings also were well attended, and were found to be precious times of waiting upon God by all who came to them. Mr. Studd afterwards went to Secunderabad and Trimelgherry (five miles from Hyderabad) where the English soldiers are stationed. There he had meetings of various kinds for four days, and there also God did send down showers of blessing in answer to prayer."

Mr. WILLIAM FORBES held a tea meeting for theatrical women in Liverpool last week. On Friday he gave an address to the city missionaries in that city.

Mr. BOB JOHNSON addressed a crowded meeting in connection with the Broomfield Temperance Society, Chelmsford, on March 14. His earnest words were much appreciated. It was resolved to memorialize the Government in support of "the Children's Bill."

The evangelistic meetings recently held at the South London Cabdrivers' Gospel Mission, by Mr. Wm. COLLARD, proved a great blessing to God's people. Of the unsaved, many found their way into the inquiry room. We have been greatly encouraged in the work.

FRED KING, Hon. Sec.

Rev. GEO. HUGH JONES, of Margate, who has just been appointed to the incumbency of Christ Church Crowboro', has been conducting mission meetings at Mayfield, Sussex. In a series of addresses of remarkable fulness, clearness, and force, he presented the Gospel of Christ. It was a great joy to me recalling to mind our happy fellowship in Christian work at Stafford Rooms nearly forty years ago. CHARLES SNELL.

The special mission conducted by Mr. HUGH PATON in the Baptist Church, Wick, was brought to a close on Thursday last. The mission extended over five weeks. There has been a marvellous work of grace, nearly 200 having professed decision for Christ. We are grateful to God for the blessing received through the work of his servant.

JOHN ELDER.

Mr. JAMES WHARTON is experiencing times of great blessing in the course of his evangelistic tour through the Southern States. In a recent issue, The Lake Charles Daily American, referring to Mr. Wharton's services in the Woodbury Congregational Church (coloured), says:—"The pastor, deacon, and members are rejoicing at the good which has been accomplished. The evangelist relies upon much prayer and the power of the Spirit, linked with the co-operation of Christians, whom he encourages to help in the work." On the Sunday Mr. Wharton spent at Woodbury, there were a number of decisions for Christ.

A fruitful ten days' mission has just closed at Wilsden and Harecroft, near Bradford. It was held under the auspices of the Bingley Free Church Council, and the arrangements were made by a committee from the Congregational, Wesleyan, and Primitive Methodist Churches. The missioner, Mr. JAMES EYRES, proved himself an adept at dealing with his congregations, and especially with the young people, so that, though his methods were somewhat different to those of many missioners, the results justified the methods. With only a very limited population, no fewer than 184 converts came forward without any pressure.

The Christian, referring recently to some of the following works, said:—"These books will prove of unspeakable help to workers themselves, as well as to the persons with whom they may have personal dealing, and will suggest methods by which they may be enabled to carry to full fruition the breaking up of the fallow ground and the sowing of the seed."

About Books.

Lady Wilmerding of Maison Rouge (6s. Stock), by Rev. J. Duncan Craig, D.D., is a romantic tale of the experience of English visitors on the Riviera in the days of the Sardinian monarchy. There is a strong element of sound Scriptural teaching.

Short Stories for Bands of Hope (1s. nett) is a little book which workers among the young in the cause of temperance will find of great service. The London Temperance Entertainer is a publication containing dialogues and recitations. Two parts (one penny each) have already been issued. (National Temperance Publication Depôt.)

Another handbook by J. Ellis is The Evangelist's Wallet; and Christian Worker's Note Book. It contains outlines of sermons, sermonettes, children's addresses, Bible talks, and Temperance Chats. It is another example of much in little, the gatherings being brought from many sources. (1s. Simpkin, Marshall, & Co.)

Beautiful Characters; or, Types of Victory. By James Paton, D.D. (1s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.) Eight word pictures, graphic and pathetic, strong and tender, always wise and sometimes humorous. The writer is the brother (and the editor of the autobiography) of the patriarchal John G. Paton. They who read one of these life-stories will surely read them all.

A singularly useful book for district visitors and similar Christian workers is Rev. J. Mitchell's Goads and Nails. It is a series of homely and pointed conversations with unbelievers, in which the way of salvation is set forth in clear and simple terms. The author has shown how the religion of Christ permeates and sanctifies daily life and conduct, and meets the common need of men. (9d. Partridge.)

The Boys' Club in Theory and Practice: A Manual of Suggestions for Workers. By B. Paul Neuman (2s. 6d. David Nutt). The author was determined that his book should be thoroughly practical, so he secured the co-operation of well-known workers. Those who are interested in our lads will find these pages suggestive of many forms of entertainment and instruction, and useful in dealing with disciplinary questions.

The Boy Lieutenant, and other stories, is after the mind of such as would read of life and adventure on battlefields, on the high seas, in desert lands, or among the tribes of the Wild West. The writers include Free S. Bowley, Mary Tappan Wright, and Rev. C. M. Sheldon, the author of "In His Steps." There is much animation in some of these "true stories." (3s. 6d. Bousfield & Co., 10, Norfolk Street, W.C.)

Mr. C. J. Thynne issues a handy volume, entitled Readings for Visitors to Workhouses and Hospitals (1s. 6d.), selected from various sources, and intended chiefly for the sick and aged, by Louisa Twining. To workers among the weary and suffering the pages will be of real service. A companion volume is Morning and Evening Prayers for Workhouses and other Institutions (1s.), for two weeks and the principal festivals, selected by the same editor.

A welcome addition is made to the "Minerva Library" by the issue, in handy form, of George Borrow's lively volume, The Romany Rye: A Sequel to "Lavengro." Mr. Theodore Watts-Dunton writes an introduction, in which the author is admirably defended from the insinuations and misrepresentations of recent writers, some of whom seem disposed to chose sinister methods of showing dislike for the man who was so outspoken in his references to Romanism. (2s. Ward, Lock & Co.)

The Temperance Situation at the Close of the Nineteenth Century (6d. Elliott, Edinburgh) is a clear and lucid statement of the present position, showing (1) Difficulties, (2) Complications, (3) Encouragements. A valuable feature of the book lies in its narrowing down of the issues presented by the Majority and Minority Reports of Lord Peel's Commission, so that it is well suited for distribution among those who have not inquired into the subject. The greatness of the evil is frankly stated, but the summing up is hopeful in tone.

Children in Blue and What They Do, by Florence Codrington, C.E.Z.M.S. missionary in Fuh-Kien Province, China, is a book written for children, and calculated to interest many grown-up folks. In chatty form we have here a description of the customs and beliefs of Chinese children in the district of Ku-cheng, where the author has laboured in the Gospel. There are many striking illustrations from drawings by Nancy Ruxton. Rev. E. A. Stuart writes a preface to this bright and very instructive little work. (2s. nett. Church of England Zenana Mission, 27, Chancery Lane, W.C.)

In Every Living Creature Ralph Waldo Trine writes on questions affecting human well-being and the rights of the lower animals. When dealing with various forms of cruelty, he carries us with him in a degree that cannot be affirmed as regards some of his more speculative views. Yet the booklet deserves many readers. (1s. nett. George Bell & Sons.)

In Edward Blake, Rev. C. M. Sheldon gives a realistic portrayal of American student life, depicting the struggles, moral and social, of a poor but capable collegian. A somewhat abrupt conclusion robs the book of its human interest, and its chief attractions are found in the author's characteristic comment on men and things. (3s. 6d. Ward, Lock & Co.)

In view of the extent to which questions affecting Christian union and differences are in the air, Types of Christian Life (1s. 6d. James Clarke & Co.), by Rev. E. Griffith Jones, B.A., is a most timely volume. The lines are pointed out of the cleavage which early checked the development of ideal Christian manhood. Intellectual, devotional, and practical types are shown to have each a part to do in producing completeness in Christ. The book will be useful in indicating to members of the body of Christ, that no one can say to another, "I have no need of thee." We commend it to all who are interested in fostering a brotherly spirit among the churches.

It is a peculiar pleasure to call attention to another book on the poet Cowper—and a book which aims to illustrate his experimental piety. It is a volume of Centenary Memories, edited by Rev. Charles Bullock, and entitled The Poet of Home Life. (3s. 6d. "Home Words" Office). The principal sketch is by Andrew James Symington; the other papers being by Dean Farrar, Canon Wilton, and Rev. John Callis. Every page deepens one's interest in the author of "God moves in a mysterious way," and supports the conviction that Cowper will be more highly appreciated as the years go by. Doubtless there is lack of uniformity in his work. But yet his writings are a mine in which many a gem of beauty and much of the gold of truth will be found. On the subject of the poet's mental trials, testimony is borne, by the way, to the fact that Cowper's religion was the sunshine of his life, and really rescued him in seasons of extreme physical depression. This is a choice book for a quiet hour, and there are well-finished portraits and other illustrations.

Professor Laidlaw, of Edinburgh, has rendered good service to the cause of theology in Scotland by editing Robert Bruce's Sermons on the Sacrament. (6s. Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier.) This is a monumental volume, presenting in a powerful manner, and from a sixteenth century standpoint, the doctrine of the Reformed Church on the Lord's Supper. There is a capital biographical sketch of Bruce, showing him the good and brave Christian that he was—one of the heroes of the Scottish Reformation, and one whose wise sayings soon passed into household words. The story is told of Bruce's relations with King James the Sixth of Scotland (First of England)—faithful as a courtier, and at length exiled for being faithful against the will of the King. The illustrations include two striking portraits; and particulars are given of the various issues of the Sermons since 1590, when they appeared in the Scottish tongue of their original delivery. In 1617 they were put into "English," and that a dress which is to-day a virtual disguise. Dr. Laidlaw now gives us them in modern English; and, what with their intrinsic value and their historical interest, they should have many readers.

Clouds and Light, by Caroline W. Ashby, is a little budget of spiritual thoughts in verse. (6d. Partridge)

The Early Days of Queen Victoria, with royal anecdotes of her "doubly royal" reign, is an excellent booklet by Rev. Charles Bullock. The illustrations are numerous. (1d. "Home Words" Office.)

Consumption (Tuberculosis): its cause, prevention, treatment, and natural cure without medicine, is offered free on application to the author, Mr. Thomas Bennett, Priory Park, St. Albans.

Jesus Christ a Total Abstainer (1d. Ideal Publishing Union), which has reached its thirtieth thousand, deals in a frank and simple way with questions regarding references to wine in the Gospels.

Victoria the Good (2d. Burnett & Smith, 151, Strand), by P. Calder, is a poem pointing out that the best memorial of the late Queen will be for her people to follow her example as she followed Christ.

Mr. E. Kaufmann, 5 & 6, Paternoster Square, E.C., has issued a series of embossed folded cards, The Lord's Mercies, bearing choice verses from the pens of Charlotte Murray and Mercédes Rivolta. (Six in packet. 6d.)

A striking broadsheet, printed in red and black, and with four illustrations, comes to us from the Irish Temperance League. (1d. Belfast.) The facts of the drink question in Ireland are set forth so that he who runs may read, accompanied by telling extracts from Scripture and elsewhere.

Those who are seeking a succinct statement of Christian teaching on the great fundamentals, may turn with advantage to What Christ Taught, by H. D. Brown. (1d. Holness.) A surprising amount of teaching is compressed into the sixty-two pages, and its form makes it suitable for distribution among young converts.

British Guiana and its Affairs is a pamphlet giving a newspaper interview with Hon. R. G. Duncan, with comments by Rev. H. J. Shirley, minister of Mission Chapel, New Amsterdam, and report of an interview with Mr. Wm. Smart, of Alness. The pages discuss the very important question of the relations subsisting between the planters and the labouring community. (1d. F. S. Turney, 74, Farm Lane, Fulham, S.W.)

Among the Churches.

Rev. James Peddie, of St. Andrew's, Birkenhead, has accepted the call to the Finchley Presbyterian Church.

Canon Childe, who succeeds the late Rev. H. R. Haweis, is an evangelical and an able preacher who has done good work at Christ Church, Cheltenham.

A new Baptist chapel is to be erected in Brighton. The old building in Queen's Square has been sold for £4,000, and the chapel in Sussex Street is joining forces with the new movement.

Subject to the Archbishop of Canterbury's consent, which it is confidently expected will be given, immediate action is to be taken to introduce into Parliament a Bill for the creation of the new diocese of Southwark.

In the Baptist churches Bev. Walter Holyoak has become minister of the church at Tenterden; Rev. E. M. Thomas, of Bethlehem Church, Llanelly; and Rev. Arnold Streuli has been elected minister of Glossop Road Church, Sheffield.

At the annual meeting in connection with the Baptist Church, Grosvenor Street, Manchester, steady progress was reported in every department of the church's work since the settlement of Rev. R. Tallontire in November of last year.

At Fishponds, Bristol, the anniversary services of the new Wesleyan Methodist church were conducted on the 3rd inst., for the seventh time by Rev. T. B. Jefferies, former pastor, of Canterbury. There were large congregations, and the services were much appreciated.

In connection with the present vacancy at St. Olave's, Hart Street, E.C., The Times suggests that some of the riches of the benefice might advantageously be applied to fitting up the tower of All Hallows Staining as a reading room for the many workers in the neighbourhood.

In the Congregational churches Rev. W. Ridley has accepted the pastorate at Guisborough, Yorks; Rev. John S. Hainstock, of Marshall Street Church, Leeds; Rev. E. Stanley Tape, of the church at Fonder's End; Rev. P. H. Lewis, of Bryntep Church, Cardigan.

Sister Hilda, of the Baptist Deaconesses' Home and Mission, 59, Doughty Street, W.C., has accepted an invitation to work amongst the poor in connection with the church at Woodberry Down, N. Sister Margery has also accepted an invitation for similar work in the church at Brondesbury (pastor Rev. C. W. Vick). The committee are now open to receive applications from young ladies anxious to enter the Home for training. Applications can be made to the secretary, Rev. A. B. Middlediteh, Finchley, N.

It is stated, on the authority of Canon Burnside, whose annual summary has just been issued, that, notwithstanding the diversion of much public charity to the various funds in connection with the war, the contributions to the Church of England societies for the year ended last Easter were £306,000 in excess of those for the previous year. The total reached was £7,770,992. Unfortunately there was a falling off of £21,000 in the subscriptions "for the relief of the poorer clergy."

Victoria Hall, which was erected at Bolton at a cost of £32,000 as a centre for the Wesleyan Methodist Forward Movement, having proved very effective, it is now proposed that Wesley Chapel should be transformed into a mission hall. The chapel is situate in what is known as the town's "promenade," where thousands of young people make a practice of parading on Saturday and Sunday evenings, and it is believed that if it were conducted on popular mission lines a large number would be reached by the agency of the hall.

Fallen Asleep.

Mr. Nehemiah Turner, of Kenninghall, the oldest Wesleyan local preacher of Norwich Circuit. His name had appeared on the plan for sixty years, and he often walked twenty-four miles a day to keep an appointment.—Aged eighty-two, Rev. James Saunders, Baptist, who completed a fifty years' ministry at Dinton, Wilts, in 1897 last.—At Colwyn Bay, Canon Henry Linton. He worked in the parish of Holy Trinity, Birkenhead, from 1847 to 1859, being also for a great part of that time Divinity lecturer at St. Aidan's College, Birkenhead. He was made, in 1882, vicar of Birkenhead Parish Church, which is the gift of the Simeon's Trustees. He retired in 1896.—An old street preacher and total abstainer, Mr. M. Wynne, of Ardwick, Manchester. He will be much missed at missions and total abstinence society meetings, in connection with which he laboured for many years. He was in his seventy-third year.—At Kelvinside, Rev. David Pirret, minister-emeritus of Burnbank Church.—Rev. James Crabtree, Governor of Didsbury College, Manchester. — Mrs. Thomas Limbrick, of Uckington, near Cheltenham, on Tuesday, 12th inst., aged eighty-seven, in whose cottage the Gospel has been preached for fifty-seven years. Rev. W. Cuff, President of the Baptist Union, preached his first sermon in it.

Requests for Prayer.

The wife of a professional man asks prayer that a system of fraud, by which they are annoyed, may be stayed.

For special services at Dartmouth in connection with the Free Church Council, March 18—25, to be conducted by the Rev. A. T. Jones, Newport.

For the annual teas of Metropolitan railway men, taking place March 28 and April 3, that men may be brought to a saving knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus.

That God may so overrule matters in connection with the present attack on the Protestant succession and the coronation oath, as to "turn to foolishness the counsel of Ahitophel," and render still more secure the Protestant safeguards of the throne.

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

Communications for The Christian should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C. All advertisements should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for The Christian by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "The Christian" Postal Department, Bouverie House, Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address. (For Subscription rates, see Page 1 of Cover.) Postcard or stamped envelope should be enclosed if receipt is desired.

Notes & Comments

WHEN Mr. Moody was once asked in public conference what was the best way of reaching the non-church-goers, he answered in his blunt, direct way, "Go to them." The air is filled with complaints that the outsiders do not come to us; the Saviour's word was "Go and compel them." Now there is an unique opportunity during the coming fine weather of really reaching the people who need evangelizing. The Free Churches have recently united for *in*door work; why should they not unite for open-air work? In a few weeks millions of people will be in the streets night after night, and it is just a question of seizing the occasion.

Generally, open-air work is left to a few stray bands of earnest workers; what is needed is the entire strength of all the Evangelical Churches concentrated upon this Christ-like work of open-air evangelism. Not once a week, but every night; not indifferent speakers, but the very best we can command. A good choir, a large band of workers, and a good speaker, can always command a crowd. We are convinced thar this kind of work must be employed more generally if the masses are to be evangelized. Now that the churches are so united, surely this coming springtime and summer should witness a determined effort on a great scale to carry the Gospel to the people in their own haunts.

The news of the week in the Temperance world is unusually cheering. The Government have yielded to pressure in regard to the "Children's Bill," which passed its second reading by a majority of 316—an almost unprecedented figure in temperance records. On the School Board an animated and high-minded discussion took place on the relation of temperance to the question of education, and a strong petition was sent up to the House of Commons in favour of this Bill, on the ground that the practice of children frequenting public-houses tends seriously to injure the work of the moral training of children, which the Board "is most anxiously carrying on." Many converging lines of evidence and argument have combined to the pushing of this Bill to a favourable issue. It is now practically safe, and one step has been gained in the interests of the children and their parents alike. Other Temperance Bills are being pushed in the Lords under the guardianship of the Bishop of Winchester.

As an illustration of the immense difficulties which lie in the way of true patriots who seek to purify the springs of our national life, we may refer to the curious and illogical comments which certain of the daily papers choose to make with reference to the second reading of the Children's Bill. We should not be surprised to find the "trade" organs full of anger and contempt because their vile craft is in danger, but we are astonished that a respectable London daily, having an immense circulation, can sneer at the Bill in an article suggestively headed "Absurdities of Temperance." Take this sample of its argument:

> It will operate, if it pass into law, to the discomfort of the respectable working classes, without doing practical good to anyone. The child who fetches the dinner beer for its parents does not drink; its message is fulfilled with as little reference to the commodity purchased as if the jug of beer were a newspaper or an ounce of tobacco.

The man who wrote those words is either ignorant of facts or blindly prejudiced. In such a matter as that with which the Bill deals the daily Press ought to give a definite lead. It is a serious thing when a public journal takes the wrong side in a matter which affects the sobriety of a nation.

We are glad to see that at last a Bill is to be introduced having for its object the protection of our women who marry foreigners. So far, the state of both English and French law upon the subject has been inadequate if not iniquitous. A Frenchman may marry an English girl in this country, take her across the Channel and then abandon her, since in French law he is not married, unless he undertakes certain other formalities. The new Bill is so stringent that this iniquity will be impossible.

A correspondent expresses what is in the minds of many, by suggesting that the taking of the census next Lord's Day might most fittingly be the occasion of a special offering to the Lord by each of his redeemed ones—in the spirit of the half-shekel payable by each man of the children of Israel on the occasion of such numberings (Exodus xxx. 12-14).

In one of the Lent lectures upon the Apocalypse, delivered at Westminster Abbey, Canon Gore, the other day, struck a right note in insisting strongly upon "the duty of right intolerance," and in decrying that invertebrate charity which is so strongly characteristic of much of our modern life. The letters which St. John was directed by the living Lord to address to the seven churches of Asia certainly are full of warnings for the present day when, as the preacher pointed out, there is "the same tendency to break down moral distinctions, and to reduce life to a sort of moral indifference as existed when the letters were written."

Thus in regard to the growing disregard of the Lord's Day: "People are so afraid of drawing distinctions, so afraid of being accused of being Pharisees, of making themselves distinct from other people, and saying clearly this is right, and this is not right." And so in reference to improper literature, the impure stage, and a score of other matters, there is the same reticence and tacit approval:

> And what we have got to re-learn is that there is a completely false tolerance. The life of nations is based on the sanctity of Divine laws observed, on the recognition of Divine judgments which inevitably await the breach of those commandments. It is the falsest kindness to let people imagine that they can live rightly in the world unless they are prepared to keep themselves separate from the evil. . . . It is only plain common-sense to be intolerant of that which destroys the human soul and destroys the human society, and we have got plainly to learn over again the duty of adopting a quite decided attitude towards vice and viciousness. We cannot live as other people live. We must have our clear principles of living, as tolerant and wide as Christ is wide and tolerant, but no more wide and tolerant than He is.

The account furnished by the Daily News of the remarkable experiment undertaken by Mr. George Cadbury opens up a vista of splendid possibilities for town and city bound toilers. The well-known firm of Cadbury has removed its industry from Birmingham to a village four miles away, where ideal conditions of labour and of residence have been created. We read of a > wide winding road, planted with trees, and large red brick houses standing in ample gardens. A beautiful copse with winding paths and sheltered seats, with rooks cawing melodiously in the lofty elms, with primroses in bloom upon the mossy grass.

Lawns, factory girls' gardens, men's recreation grounds, kitchen gardens, lads' institutes, almshouses, and chapel. And all this for workpeople employed in the neighbouring factories. It is a social innovation originating with a Christian merchant, who is in this way giving back to the people part of the money he has made out of them. The Cadburys have led the way in many a noble undertaking; what a boon it would be to imprisoned town workers if other wealthy masters, following such a splendid lead, would expend part of their profits upon the weal of the people rather than upon self-gratification! The back of the social problem would then soon be broken.

According to the Liverpool Post, the experiment made in that city ten years ago by the Unitarians in asking various ministers to exchange pulpits for the purpose of expounding their various beliefs, is about to be repeated. So far as we see, however, no leading persons are accepting the invitation. A Jew, a Swedenborgian, and a Positivist figure in the list. Our readers will probably remember the controversy which was evoked upon the last occasion: happily it is not likely to be repeated. The promoter of this new "unity" thinks that "we are making for the Kingdom of God if we get to understand each other's thoughts on the highest themes better than we can while we hold utterly aloof from each other."

Later, he expresses his desire for a Cathedral, "which shall embrace all the varied religious life of Liverpool, and be at the occasional service . . . of every religious group in our midst, and symbolize the blessed unity of the Spirit under many divergent creeds." This sort of special pleading is becoming a little threadbare. The public mind is not altogether given over to folly, and ordinary people do not believe that there is any "blessed unity of the Spirit" between a faith that adores Jesus Christ as God, and opinions that regard Him only as a man; or even less than that.

"How far is a preacher to aim at being interesting?" is a question that is being well discussed since Dr. Horton's "plea for dulness" at the Free Church Congress. His protest was a healthy one as against the extravagance and sensationalism of some popular preachers, who seem far more pleased if they can start a laugh than a tear, and encourage their audiences to respond audibly and to cheer at their telling "points." But "interest" and "dulness" are relative terms, and what interests one man intensely may be deadly dull to another. The one aim of the preacher should be to deal with the real things of the spirit in a real manner, to handle living subjects, to appeal to the higher elements of the human heart, and so to awaken the minds and the souls of the hearers that they shall find nothing so interesting as the Gospel that thus appeals to them. "Paul and Barnabas so spake that multitudes believed." Here is a brief statement which puts the subject-matter, the aim, and the end of preaching into a nutshell.

The epitaph "killed by overwork," which it has been suggested might justly be placed over the early grave of numbers of ministers of the Gospel who have been worn out by a round of incessant duties might, it appears from the recently published biography of Phillips Brooks, properly be placed on the headstone over the great American preacher and bishop. The valuable life was lost, a critic says, owing to "that thoughtlessness which leads people to overdrive the willing horse, and kill their chief favourites." Mr. Brooks "was ready to do the preaching and make the visitations, but the social calls, and the pressure of unnecessary duties and unreasonable people wore him out," and he wrote sadly in his diary "it is this sort of thing that is killing me." Surely there is a lesson in these things for many congregations on this side of the Atlantic.

Speaking at a "Housing Conference" convened by the Whitechapel Board of Guardians recently, the Rector of Spitalfields stated that near one of his parochial buildings four men and six women—respectable, hard-working people—were forced to live in a single room, and sleep on the floor, the rent of the one room being eight shillings per week. He added:

During a Christmas treat to a couple of hundred children, I took the opportunity of asking how many of them lived in homes of one room, and every hand but seven went up. I asked how many lived in two rooms, and the remaining seven hands went up. There is an alley in my parish containing ten houses, comprising in all fifty-one rooms, averaging about 8ft. by 9ft. These small rooms house 254 people. In six instances only do two people occupy one room. In all the other rooms the number of occupants varies from three to nine. In another court, containing six houses and twenty-two rooms, there are eighty-four people. In several cases there are as many as six, seven, eight, and nine people in a room. Elsewhere I found one house with eight rooms inhabited by forty-five people, one room containing nine persons, another eight, and two of the rooms seven people each.

In the face of strong pressure, the Government has promised to endeavour to bring forward a Bill in regard to the housing question "next year." Meanwhile, the administration, as in the case of the Indian Famine, trusts to "private enterprise," and thus tries to shelve its responsibility for the high death rate, the low morality, and the condition of the streets by night, traceable to the evil of overcrowding.

A special committee of the Glasgow Corporation has reported in favour of a scheme for the municipalization of public-houses in that city, and an application will, therefore, be made to Parliament for the necessary powers to carry out the plan, the profits to be expended to the public advantage. Possibly a more satisfactory regulation of the drink-shops would result from an arrangement of the kind, but it would be difficult to eliminate from the unholy traffic the spirit of profit-seeking which characterizes it. The smaller the revenue from drink, however, the smaller would be the necessary expenditure upon the repression and punishment of crime. To tax the ratepayer, in order to buy up the so-called "vested interests" of the drink-seller and distiller, would be unjust to the industrious and steady members of the community who already have heavy burdens to bear. It is to be hoped, therefore, that the scheme will be based only upon the suppression and refusal of private licences.

The need for licensing reform is even greater than that urged by the Bishop of Winchester in pressing for the second reading in the Lords of the "Licensing Sessions Bill," but much will have been gained in securing the exclusion from Watch Committees and from employment as magistrates' clerks of persons in anyway concerned in the drink traffic. The greater scandal, that the manufacturers and sellers of drink should be magistrates, still remains, however, and there is no ground for hope that the present Government will venture to remedy it. In some of the American States the legislation affecting the sale of intoxicants is revised triennially with excellent results, but unfortunately in Britain the brewer and the publican are in a position to pull the political strings, and the people who have to bear the cost of the crime, insanity, and poverty resulting from the wretched traffic have no voice in the election of the magistrates who, in only too many instances, are interested in the maintenance, or extension of, the swollen number of the publicans.

In taking steps with the view of securing a certain amount of kindly attention to the "physically defective children" who are compelled to attend their schools, the London School Board have acted wisely and well. It is to be regretted, however, that they did not go further than to provide ambulances and attendants, and the requisite cooking utensils, and add to their vote an item for the cost of a mid-day meal for each of the little sufferers. However divided public and official opinion may be in regard to the State provision of food for the literally starving scholars in the Board schools, we do not think any dissentient voice would be raised if a start were made in the case of the crippled. Meanwhile, there is an opening for the further exercise of that private benevolence which relieves the State of so many burdens.

A contemporary, which claims to "out-Christian the Christians in exalting the character of Christ," nevertheless refers to the Saviour as "the Galilean peasant," and takes strong exception to the Christian view of the Divine birth and the sacrificial nature of the death of Christ. If, however, it shares, as the ethical people profess to do, John Stuart Mill's appreciation, not merely of the character but also of the sayings of Christ, what does it make of those unmistakable and undeniable claims to be Divine which Jesus made from time to time in his utterances to the disciples? If these are to be rejected as baseless, what becomes of that high moral character which these ethical writers hold up for admiration?

Those familiar with the devout life of the late John Ruskin will have noted his constant recognition of religion as the basis of all sound life and sound art, and with his frequent references all through his intellectual work to the Bible as a code of morals. A recent writer, Mr. J. A. Hobson, sneeringly remarks: "What all this meant to Ruskin it is difficult to say." Yet the answer is not far to seek. "All this" meant to the great intellect of Ruskin what it means to the simple mind of the peasant—comfort in sorrow, strength in trial, peace in the hour of sickness and death. The simple lessons learned at the pious mother's knee were never forgotten. "God was ever on his lips."

Pulpit Freshness.

ASKED if he was never afraid of running short of sermons some day, Robert Murray McCheyne replied, "No; I am just an interpreter of Scripture in my sermons, and when the Bible runs dry, then I shall." Variety marks the Word as it does the works of God. "There is no searching of his understanding." The Bible is an inexhaustible storehouse of "the things of the human heart, and the things of the Divine mind." The histories of the Old Testament and the New, the types of Leviticus, the poetry and experience and predictions of the Psalms and Prophets, the wisdom of the Proverbs, and all the full brightness of the New Testament—with all this magazine to draw upon, the preacher need never lack varied and enriching materials to furnish him for his work. We must utilize and bring into our sermons the Scriptures in their warp and woof, and plentifully supply their sanctifying substance; as we read of some of the Reformers, that their minds were so steeped in Scripture that natural quotation continually occurred. Now we miss when, passing it by, we take a detached phrase of the Word of God, and hang on to it a general disquisition. Professor James Buchanan, of Edinburgh—himself well known as a preacher—said in effect to his students: "The best preaching is to lodge a portion of Scripture in its living substance and entireness in the minds and hearts of your hearers." Another minister has said: "I like to take a paragraph of the Word of God, that I may be sure that I am giving to the people God's thoughts, and not my own."

THIS GOD-PROVIDED FULNESS

To preach consecutively through a book of Scripture is a good plan; only it should be a book suited to both preacher and hearers. The historical books of the Old Testament and the Gospels afford narrative so desirable for plain minds, whilst the latter lead constantly up to Christ Himself. The book of the Acts is full of interest.

To expound the Epistle to the Romans were a great undertaking: but, whether consecutively or not, we all, preachers and hearers alike, need to which it brings against us as transgressors of God's condemning law, and to its proclamation of the "magnificent righteousness" of our glorious Substitute "made a curse for us." "If you aim at conversions," said Angell James, "you must preach the truths which you can expect the Holy Spirit to use in effecting conversion; you must preach the Law and the Gospel." In a conversation with some of his brethren on the rareness of conversions, they came to the conclusion that these were so few because the alarming truths of Scripture were so seldom preached.

"God is a Father," said the late Dr. Archer, of London, "but He is a King-Father." His holy law must be "magnified and made honourable" in the "everlasting destruction" of the despiser of his goodness.

There is a remedy, but only one. Said Mr. Moody in Bingley Hall, Birmingham: "If you wish to know the secret of my success and Mr. Sankey's, it is this, that we have always stood fair and square on the Scripture doctrine of the Atonement—Substitution."

FOUNDATION TRUTHS OF THE GOSPEL.—XI.

SIN AND FORGIVENESS—An Old Testament View.—2.

By Rev. DAVID BARON.

AFTER the lot of the two goats had been thus fixed, the high priest once more returned to his own sin-offering, and, laying his hands a second time on the bullock, repeated the confession already recorded, only including in it this time, "the sons of Aaron, the people of thy holy things." He then killed the bullock, and caught up its blood in a basin, which he gave to one of the attending priests to keep stirring, while he ascended the altar of burnt offering, and took a censer full of glowing coals (Lev. xvi. 11-14).

Taking the censer in his right hand, and sweet incense in his left, he reverently entered the Holy Place. "Every eye was strained towards the sanctuary, as, slowly bearing the censer and the incense, the figure of the white-robed high priest was seen to disappear. After entering the Holy Place, nothing further could be seen of his movements. The curtain of the Most Holy Place was folded back, and the high priest stood alone and separated from all the people in the awful gloom of the Holiest of All, only lit up by the red glow of the coals in the priest's censer. . . . He now most carefully emptied the incense into his hand, and threw it on the coals of the censer, as far from himself as possible, and so waited till the smoke had filled the Most Holy Place."*

Then, retreating backwards, he uttered a short prayer outside the veil, the form of which, as used in the second Temple, is preserved in the Talmud. But he was not to prolong the prayer, lest his protracted absence should alarm the people, and cause them to fear that he had been

SMITTEN BEFORE THE LORD.

At length they saw him reappear from the Holy Place, and they knew that his service had been accepted. Advancing rapidly, he took from the attendant the vessel with the blood of the bullock, and once more entered into the Most Holy Place, where he sprinked it once upward, and seven times downward, so that it fell upon and before the mercy seat.

Leaving this basin with the blood before the veil in the Holy Place, he emerged again and killed the goat of the people's sin-offering upon which the lot fell "la-Jehovah," and did with its blood exactly as he did with the blood of the bullock. Retreating from the Most Holy Place, for the last time on this most solemn day, he deposited the basin with the blood of the goat, and took up that with the blood of the bullock, and sprinkled again, once upwards and seven times downwards toward the veil outside the Most Holy Place, in the same manner as he had done inside. Then putting down this vessel he took up the one with the blood of the goat, and did the same. He then mixed the blood of the two sacrifices, pouring it repeatedly from one basin into the other, and with it he sprinkled each of the horns of the altar of incense, and seven times on the top of that altar. The rest of the blood was poured out at the foot of the altar of burnt-offering. Thus was "atonement" made.

But let it be borne in mind that the Hebrew word Kāphăr, which is rendered "to atone" in English, means properly "to cover;" and the essential idea connected with "atonement," so far as this word is concerned, is the covering or hiding of sin from the eyes of the Holy One, who is otherwise "of purer eyes than to behold evil" without visiting it with death and judgment. To the question as to how alone sin can be effectually covered from the sight of the offended majesty of the holy God, the book of Leviticus supplies the answer. There we read, "The life of the flesh is in the blood, and I have given it to you upon the altar to make a covering for your souls, for it is the blood which with the life (that is in it) covereth" (Lev. xvii. 11, Heb.)—that is, life covereth life: the life of the innocent offering, in the blood poured out upon the altar, covereth the offerer. It is only in view of the altar, and what it signifies, that man can know the blessedness of the one "whose sin is covered."

But, secondly, to return to Lev. xvi., after "atonement" had been thus made with the blood of the goat on which the lot fell, "la-Jehovah," the high priest came to the goat on which the lot fell, "la-Azazel;" and we read: "Aaron shall lay both his hands upon the head of the live goat, and confess over him all the iniquities of the children of Israel, and all their transgressions, in all their sins, putting them upon the head of the goat, and shall send him away by a man that is in readiness into the wilderness. And the goat shall bear upon him all their iniquities unto a solitary land. And he shall let go the goat into the wilderness" (Lev. xvi. 21-22).

The exact form of the confession, as used by the high priest in the time of the second Temple, was as follows:—"O Jehovah! they have committed iniquity; they have transgressed: they have sinned—Thy people, the House of Israel. O Jehovah, atone for the iniquities, transgressions, and sins which thy people, the House of Israel, have wickedly committed, transgressed, and sinned before Thee. As it is written in the law of Moses thy servant: 'For on this day shall atonement be made for you, to make you clean from all your sins; before Jehovah ye shall be cleansed."

Each time the name of Jehovah was mentioned by the high priest in the course of his own confessions over the bullock, and in the confession for the people over the goat, the worshippers near him fell on their faces, while those farther off cried, "Blessed be the Name of the glory of his kingdom for ever and ever!" This last time, while worshipped at the mention of the Name, the high priest turned his face toward them as he uttered the last words, "Ye shall be clean"—"as if to declare to them the absolution and remission of their sins."

It was most probably on an occasion like this, in full view of the solemn transaction he had just witnessed, that the sweet Psalmist of Israel, overwhelmed with awe and gratitude in thus realistically seeing, as it were, his own burden lifted from off him, was inspired to give utterance to the feeling of the worshipping multitude in the exclamation, "Oh how blessed is the man whose transgression is borne away [as if he actually saw the sin-laden goat being led past him], *whose sin is covered [referring to the 'covering' made by the shedding of the blood of the other goat]. Oh how blessed is the man unto whom Jehovah imputeth not iniquity [because it has been 'put upon the head' of the sin-bearer] (Lev. xvi. 21); and in whose spirit there is no guile"—[who no longer "attempts to cloak his sin or stifle conscience by sophistications," but has honestly faced iniquity, transgression, and sin in all their heinousness in the sight of the Holy God, and has found full forgiveness in his own appointed way].

Need I remind any one of my readers that the antitype of all the sacrifices is Christ, and that the true Day of Atonement was the day of Calvary? It is in Him that "we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of our sins, according to the riches of his grace."

It is interesting to observe that the Messiah is regarded, not only by the Apostles, but already by the Prophets in the Old Testament, as the One to whom the Levitical sacrifices and the Mosaic ordinances pointed. The Prophetical scripture parallel to Lev. xvi. is Isa. liii. This, too, is a great Atonement chapter, where "iniquity," "transgression," and "sin" stand out in all their horrid moral ugliness, and are being dealt with, only here Jehovah Himself takes, as it were, the place of the high priest, and his righteous servant the Messiah (whose moral spotlessness is attested by the fact that "He had done no violence, neither was deceit found in his mouth") takes the place of

THE PEOPLE'S "SIN-OFFERING."

There are several allusions to the solemn transactions on the Atonement Day in Isa. liii., but in verse 12 there is a direct reference to the two-fold aspect of Atonement as set forth in the two goats: "He poured out his soul unto death, and was numbered (or 'reckoned') with transgressors, and He bare the sin of many."

"He poured out his soul unto death"—for like the goat on which the lot fell "la-Jehovah," He was "led to the slaughter," and "cut off" by a violent death from the land of the living, in order, by his precious blood, to provide "a covering" for the sins of his people: but He also "bare the sin of many"—like the live goat in Lev. xvi. 22, where the same word is used, because just as the high priest put upon the head of that goat "the iniquities of the children of Israel, and all their transgressions in all their sin," so "Jehovah laid upon Him the iniquity of us all," making Him, the Holy One who knew no sin, to be sin for us, and counting Him a transgressor, in order that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him.

And the very figure is carried over from the pages of the "Old" Testament into the New. "Behold the Lamb of God which beareth the sin of the world." "Who his own self bare our sins in his body upon the tree, that we, having died unto sins, might live unto righteousness; by whose stripes we are healed (John i.; 1 Peter ii., R.V.).

* Edersheim.

* The words Kāphăr and Kāsāh are cognate.

Young Women in Alexandria.—"Thanks to 'the good hand of our God upon us,' we have been enabled to take a house I have long wanted for the work." Such is the cheering news that Miss Johnson sends from Alexandria (through the World's Y.W.C.A. Office, 26, George Street, Hanover Square, W.) "We hope to move in about a fortnight's time, when I shall have both institute and boarding house under one roof, and this will enable us to do much more efficient work. Our work is deepening and extending in every direction and I have never had so many to care for before. The boarding house is packed; in fact, I sleep in my office."

Census Musings.

By Rev. ALFRED TUCKER.

SUNDAY, March 31, is the day appointed for taking "The Census"—the record of the name, age, occupation, &c., of every living person in the United Kingdom, which is taken every ten years. About 40,000 registrars and enumerators will perform their important task, and many interesting particulars will be made known, in due course, respecting the population of this ever-increasing country of ours. The event should suggest profitable lessons and helpful thoughts as to life and its work.

Earthly things should remind us of heavenly.—How quickly the ten years have rolled round! It seems but a little while since the last census was taken. "Tide and time for no man stay." With the conscious lapse of years a hush comes upon our spirits, and we seem to hear mystic voices saying, "Pause, ponder, be in earnest, redeem the precious time, make the best possible use of life while it lasts."

Our highest wisdom is so to participate in the enjoyments of life as to be better fitted for its employments, and to learn the expediency and necessity of being prompt and diligent in the discharge of all our duties. Life is not given for careless and neglectful indifference. Every life is lifted into awful significance, and if we bring it into line with the Divine plan, each life may become sublime; but if not, it will be unlovely and degraded. If the work of your salvation is not done when your time is done, you will be undone for ever. You are working for eternity, and all the momentous results of your work can only be realized in that eternity; therefore be desperately in earnest.

The filling up of the census paper is, in itself, a mere secular business. But that person is not to be envied who can do it without reflections suited to the Census day. The certain setting down of the names of one's household should suggest to every member of it the urgent question:

IS MY NAME WRITTEN IN HEAVEN?

The Lord keeps an exact register of his people. There is a "Book of Life" in which are inscribed the names of all the innumerable family of the redeemed and regenerated (Ex. xxxii. 32; Mal. iii. 16; Luke x. 20; Phil. iv. 3; Heb. xii. 23; Rev. xiii. 8; xxi. 27). We generally think of this as a book which is shut and sealed. None can take it into his hand, or read out the names inscribed in it. The Lord only knoweth them that are his. We may not sit in judgment on one another's state before God. Yet the truth has another side. If the "Seventy" are to rejoice because their names are written in heaven, it must be possible for them to ascertain the fact. If the Apostle was confident that the names of certain early Christians were in the Book of Life, we also may, without prying into God's secrets, attain to a similar persuasion respecting those who bear Christ's image and abound in his work.

True, we cannot open and inspect the heavenly record, but there are reliable and Scriptural means by which we may know whether our names are written in heaven—whether this high honour has been conferred upon us. The census-table compiled by Moses contained only the names of such as were by birth and adoption the sons of Jacob. The "Book of Life" contains only the names of those who, being saved by faith in Christ, are adopted into the family of God. The only way of making sure that your name has a place in that book, is to make sure that you are a child of God by the adoption of grace—that God has brought you home to Himself by his Word and Spirit, that He has "sent forth the Spirit of his Son into your heart, crying, Abba, Father"—my own dear Father (Rom. viii. 16, 17; John i. 12, 13; Gal. iv. 4, 7; 1 John iii. 1, 2). If you have the evidence of your celestial citizenship, that is the greatest cause of joy you can possibly have—a joy that transcends every other: health or wealth, fame or power, friends or gifts, or any earthly good (Luke x. 20).

"Rejoice that your names are written in heaven," was the answer of the dying Haller—a distinguished Swiss poet—when his friends congratulated him on the honour of having received a visit in his last hours from the Emperor Joseph II. Yes, indeed, does not every true child of God feel it to be a higher honour to have his name enrolled in that book than in the books of heraldry—in the most splendid catalogue of sovereigns, princes, poets, orators, warriors, nobles, or statesmen that the world has produced? When these great names have faded out, the names of the children of God shall shine with undiminished lustre; they shall be owned and honoured of God before assembled worlds, and be favoured to dwell with Him in his kingdom for ever.

How old are you? The census inquiries include "age last birthday." There are two ways of calculating your age—from the date of your natural or of your spiritual birth. A converted Chinaman was walking in a great town with an English sailor, who asked him how old he was? "Nine years, sir." "Nine years! What do you mean?" "Why, it is nine years since I found Jesus, and my life before that was not worth calling life. I am only nine years old; how old are you? How long is it since you found the Saviour, sir?" Kind reader, permit me to ask,

HOW OLD ARE YOU?

How long is it since you found the Saviour? Have you been born from above, by a new and heavenly birth? "He that has been born but once will die twice; but he that has been born twice will die but once." There is a death of the body and a death of the soul.

Christ told Nicodemus, "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." This question, then, involves your eternal all; be sure you are not deceived. Take the Word of God and look carefully—not into your own heart or experience, but into God's Word, and see if you are born of the Spirit. Whatever your age may be, you are old enough to be converted, and to become a happy and useful Christian; you are old enough to have committed much sin, which must be either pardoned or punished; you are old enough to have endured many trials, which ought to have directed your attention to the "one thing needful"; you are old enough to know that a very considerable part of your short life has passed away since the last census; you are old enough to die, and to give an account of yourself to God.

There is a great and final census which the Lord Himself will take: "The Lord shall count, when He writeth up the people, that this man was born there" (Psalm lxxxvii. 6). Will you be numbered with his people, or will you stand dismayed because your name is left out at the reading of the roll of the citizens of the heavenly kingdom? My friend, make sure work for eternity. Among other things, a woman said to a minister, "I don't want to make a mistake for eternity!" "The Divine registration is infallible, there are no mistakes in it. None but the true citizens of Zion will be found 'written in the Lamb's book of life,' and the name of no true citizen will be omitted." But unless your name is written there, it will avail you nothing that your name is registered in the records of the Church on earth. Only by penitent, self-renouncing faith can you realize that regeneration and adoption which will secure you a place among the heaven-born.

Return, return! From all thy wanderings home!
From vanity and toil,
To rest and substance, come!
Come to truth from error's night;
Come from darkness unto light;
Come from death to life undying,
From a fallen earth to heaven.
Now the accepted time is flying,
Haste to take what God has given.

Schools for Bible Study.—Rev. George Soltau (85, Lordship Park, Stoke Newington, N.) hopes to resume at Easter his schools for Bible study, on the lines on which they have been carried on for the last two years. Five, six, or seven towns are selected as centres for a course lasting twelve weeks, during which one or two studies are given in each place once a week. No guarantee is asked, freewill offerings being taken at each meeting to meet expenses,

A Personal Dedication.

THOSE who have read widely in Christian biography will recall a number of cases in which saints of God have, during long years of devotion and service, justified an act of dedication solemnly made in early life. Remarkable instances of this are furnished in the life and experience, among others, of Philip Doddridge and John Frederic Oberlin. A case recently brought under our notice was that of a lady in the West of England, who departed to be with the Lord about a year ago, at the ripe age of eighty-three. Among her papers was found "An Act of Self-Dedication to God," to which she set her seal over sixty years previously. The consistency of her life ever afterwards, afforded testimony alike to the reality of her consecration and the Divine recognition of her sacred vow. We make brief extracts from the deeply interesting document:—

Eternal and infinitely holy God! I earnestly desire to present myself before Thee with the deepest humility and contrition. I well know how unworthy such a sinful worm is to appear before thy Divine Majesty, before the King of kings and Lord of lords; but it is in the name of Jesus Christ that I approach Thee, and oh, for his sake give me now faith and confidence to pour out my soul before Thee. O Lord, Thou knowest that through thy great mercy I have been enabled for some time (nearly three years) to know Thee as my covenant God, my reconciled Father in Christ Jesus. I earnestly desire this day to acknowledge, in writing, the riches of thy grace, and solemnly to dedicate myself to thy service. May the Holy Spirit influence the thoughts of my heart, so that this act may be well pleasing to Thee and profitable to my own soul! . . .

I this day solemnly surrender myself to Thee. I this day acknowledge Thee to be my Lord and Master, and declare that I anxiously desire to serve Thee faithfully unto my life's end. Hear me, O my God! I call Thee my Father in Christ Jesus. I desire to glorify Thee in my body and spirit, which are thine. In the name of the Lord of Hosts I this day renounce all former lords that have had dominion over me, all worldly carnal affections. I consecrate to Thee all that I am, and all that I have, the faculties of my mind, the members of my body, my time and every earthly possession. Grant me grace, O my Father! to employ all to thy glory, and to run with patience the race that is set before me, steadfastly looking unto Jesus, the Author and Finisher of my faith. Let me never begin any undertaking which I cannot ask Thee to bless; and in everything let me prosper only so far as what I do shall promote thy glory, desiring rather to cut off a right hand or pluck out a right eye than disobey the least of thy commandments.

O precious Lord Jesus! be it my blessed portion to abide in communion with Thee and in dependence on Thee. Give me to know my own entire sinfulness that I may the better comprehend the depth of thy redemption. Be Thou my rock, my only confidence, my soul's unbounded trust. . . . Grant that my daily walk and converse may be consistent and faithful, and that all may see that I have been with Thee, and, beholding the Spirit's seal upon my brow, may be compelled to exclaim, "This hath God done." Oh! may I thus be the honoured, though most unworthy, instrument of bringing many souls to the knowledge of the Truth. Especially grant that I may never be a stumbling-block in the way of others, nor ever hide the light thy love has kindled, but may it shine brighter and brighter to the glory of my Heavenly Father until, escaped from its tenement of clay, it shall dwell for ever in that glorious region, where the sun himself shall fade away—for the Lamb is the light thereof.

Eternal Spirit, the Comforter! I bless Thee for quickening me with new life—for teaching me to know Jesus, and the Father's love in Him. Oh! show unto me more and more fully the riches of grace and glory in Christ; give me clear views of his complete work; and lead me into fellowship with Him in his death and resurrection. Keep me ever looking unto Thee for thy sanctifying influences, and abide in me for ever. Enlighten my understanding that I may understand the Scriptures, and love them more and more. Help me to believe, without the least wavering, my union with Christ, and enable me to put off the old man and his deeds that I may always walk as a child of God, and go on with renewed strength. . . .

Oh, my Father! when I am gone to the grave, if this paper should be read by any of my surviving friends, grant that they may be deeply affected by it. May they praise Thee for the great things Thou hast done for my soul, and if they have not sought pardon and peace, oh let them instantly fly, humbled and penitent, to the atoning blood of that merciful Saviour who welcomes every returning sinner! . . .

SUNDAY, March 31. Obadiah.

THIS is the shortest book of the Old Testament. The name of the prophet signifies "Servant of Jehovah." It is evident from vv. 11-16, 20, that Jerusalem had been overthrown by the Chaldeans, because the cruelty of the Edomites to the Jews on that occasion is the main theme of this brief but striking prophecy.

God's ambassador is sent forth to arouse the nations to take the field against Edom, and immediately their cry is heard, "Arise ye, and let us rise up against her in battle." And when God leads an assault against a kingdom, or an individual soul, of what use is it to exalt itself as an eagle, or set its nest among the stars? For thence will God bring down. God is against pride in every form, but especially when our haughty heart rejoices in the fall of some rival, or in the undoing of a great reputation which overshadowed our own. We are all conscious that the seeds of this poisonous fruit are in our hearts, only awaiting a summer tide of heat to force them into noxious growth. Nothing is so hateful to God as when our proud and evil heart takes satisfaction in a brother's fall, because it makes our integrity more conspicuous. This was Edom's sin, and in us, as in Edom, it will be terribly punished.

But the children of God possess their possessions (17). A pertinent inquiry is suggested here to each reader of these words. Are you possessing your possessions? Are not too many Christians like young heirs, who have sent all their valuables to the strong safe of their bank, where they remain for long years, conferring no kind of pleasure or adornment, or useful service on their owners? God has given us all things in Christ, but we must avail ourselves of them by a living faith.

We have a reference to Jonah in 2 Kings xiv. 25-27. He wrote at a time when Israel was at the lowest point of depression, an indication that carries us back to the reign of Joash, Jeroboam's father, who found Israel in subjection to the Syrians. It is interesting that this prophecy concerns Nineveh alone, a heathen city, and that no mention is made of Israel, which is referred to by every other prophet. The reason seems to be that a tacit reproof was intended for the chosen people. A heathen people were ready to repent at the first preaching of a stranger, while Israel, though boasting of being God's elect, repented not, though warned by their own prophets again and again.

How beautiful this streak of light heralding the dawn of Christ's love to the world! It is clear that throughout the long centuries, God was ever remonstrating with the great heathen peoples about their sins, and inviting them to Himself. But how sad the prophet's disobedience! Was it that he had no wish to secure the city's repentance? His motive, as given by himself (iv. 2), seems to have been a fear that if God receded from executing his threat of vengeance, he would be derided as a false prophet. He thought that, as Jehovah's presence was specially associated with the land of Canaan and the Temple, he would find it easier to cast aside the prophetic impulse in any land but his own, and so he arose to flee. He went down to Joppa, for all sin is going down. A ship was just starting, but opportunity does not necessarily prove rectitude. He paid the fare, because the way of transgressors is hard. God can make winds his angels to fetch back the truant. Sleep is not always the mark of innocence, but sometimes of carnal security; and the summons which the sailors addressed to the scared prophet may surely be applied still to sinful men, wrapt in false hopes: "O sleeper, arise, and call upon thy God."

TUESDAY, April 2. Jonah ii.

The fish, through a mistranslation of Matt. xii. 40, was formerly supposed to be a whale, but the whale's neck is too narrow to receive a man. The original means simply a great fish. One commentator thinks it was the dogfish, the stomach of which is so large that the body of a man in armour was once found in it. Others think it was a shark. Our Lord expressly quotes the incident as a miracle, and as a type of his own resurrection. During his imprisonment in the belly of this great fish, the prophet was, so to speak, dead to all the world, and his resurrection was a conspicuous proof of Divine power, such as could not fail to arrest the attention of the Ninevites, when they become aware of it.

Jonah's prayer is very pathetic. He cried; Yes, often enough we do not cry till the oppression of our affliction lies heavily upon us. But God can hear a cry though it comes from the depths of the sea. What a blessed resolution is that of the fourth verse! O soul of man, thou seemest to be cast out of God's sight by thy own folly, by thy own act and deed. Nevertheless, look again towards his holy temple. Look again! Look again to the wounds of thy Saviour. Look again for pardon and acceptance! Look in true repentance and faith, and thou canst not look in vain!

When our soul faints within us, let us remember the Lord (7). Remember what a gracious God He is. Remember how merciful and long-suffering. Remember his gracious promises. Let the spirit triumph over the fainting soul. Let faith win the battle against sight. And as memory causes the character of of God to pass under review, faith will grow strong, and hold God by a grasp, which He shall not wish to elude. There is nothing that will bring God so quickly nigh as penitence and faith.

WEDNESDAY, April 3. Jonah iii.

God gives Jonah a second opportunity to fulfil his commission; his word comes to him a second time. He might have stood for the son in the parable, who first refused, but afterwards repented and went; while Israel might have stood for the other son, who said, "I go," but went not. Our Lord said he was a sign to the Ninevites, a sign of God's judgment against disobedience, and of his mercy to all who truly repent.

Nineveh was sixty miles in circumference, allowing twenty miles for a day's journey; but it must be borne in mind that these Eastern cities included vast parks and royal hunting-grounds within their walls. Jonah travelled slowly through the heart of the city, stopping at intervals to announce his terrible message, which sped from lip to lip till it reached the king on his throne. The whole city then draped itself in mourning, and began to seek a reversal of the Divine sentence with strong cryings and tears. The very animals participated, as do the black horses in our hearses, which are draped with sable vestments and their heads surmounted with nodding plumes.

It is said that God repented of the evil which He thought to do. God's method of dealing with men is always appropriate to their attitude towards Himself, and as soon as they repent He withdraws the menace of impending judgment. What was really a change in them and in God's corresponding dealings, is therefore, in condescension to human conceptions, represented as a change in God, though in his essential righteousness and mercy He changeth not.

THURSDAY, April 4. Jonah iv.

We must not suppose for a moment that Jonah's chagrin arose from the apparent falsification of his own words. It would make him a demon, not a man, if he wished 600,000 persons to be destroyed merely to show that he was a true prophet. No! Israel was ever in his eye. He had been nerved to his strange task at Nineveh by the thought that its destruction would at last startle his own people to repentance and faith. But when this method of awakening Israel was set aside by God's mercy on Nineveh's repentance, he was bitterly disappointed, not from pride or mercilessness, but from fear that the incident would only encourage Israel in her pride and high-handed rebellion. Jonah did not know the important lessons of hope to the penitent, and of condemnation to those that sin against their light, which this story would have for all after ages.

The gourd, with its broad leaves, which are sometimes a foot in length, shaded the prophet, and was of great comfort to him; so that he repined sadly when it withered. But if Jonah so pitied a plant which had cost him no pains to rear, which was so short-lived and valueless, how much more must Jehovah pity those hundreds of thousands of men and women in the great city, especially when more than 120,000 unoffending children, besides much cattle, would have been involved in a common destruction! What a glimpse this gives of God's labour for great cities. He makes them to grow. They are precious in his sight. He is not willing that they should perish, but come to repentance. He desires to gather them as a hen gathers her chickens beneath her wing.

FRIDAY, April 5. Micah i.

Micah was a contemporary of Isaiah and Hosea. Jeremiah quotes iii. 12 (Jer. xxvi. 18); and there are several correspondences between his words and Isaiah. He denounces the idolatries perpetrated in Samaria, so soon to fall, and Jerusalem.

God's coming to judge his guilty people is attended by earthquake and storm. Samaria would be made desolate, and all the wealth which Israel boasted of having received from her idols, as her reward or hire for worshipping them, would return to them again when she was carried into captivity. The prophet describes his own anguish, as he sees the approaching calamity, which should involve, not Samaria only, but Jerusalem. He wished that the story might not be told in Gath, lest the Philistines should exult; though in Aphrah, in Benjamin, his own people might well give themselves up to the bitterest grief. Even Shaphir, whose name meant beauty, a village among the hills of Judah, would be hurried into captivity. So universal would be the calamity that the inhabitants of Zaanan would not come forth to bewail with those of Beth-ezel. The village of Maroth would not fare better than her sisters, because evil had already overwhelmed the gate of Jerusalem, and could they hope to escape? The city of Lachish had been the first to introduce idolatry to Judah; on her punishment would certainly fall, and she would be disappointed of the help she hoped to obtain from Gath. Other heirs were to be brought to supplant the chosen people, even in Adullam, the glory of Israel. Well might the prophet call on the land, in the last verse of the chapter, to mourn for her darling children. Such are the judgments which apostasy brings on a kingdom and a soul!

SATURDAY, April 6. Micah ii.

If the former chapter deals with sins against the first table of the law, this deals with those against the second. Men are depicted devising evil to their neighbours, coveting their goods, and oppressing their persons. Therefore God would devise evil against them. And as they would not have his yoke of mercy, they should bear that of heavy judgment. So absolute was to be the devastation of the land, that the inheritance should no longer descend from father to son, or be measured out by lot (5); and so inveterate would be the people's revolt from God, that they would no longer bear to hear the words of the true prophet (6).

Jehovah protests that it is not his desire that such things should obtain. They were not his doings. He wanted to do only good to them that walked uprightly. But the people had so absolutely forfeited all claim upon Him. They had deprived the helpless of the robes that they wore next their skin (8); they had taken advantage of widows and orphans in their distress (9); and therefore the sentence had gone forth for them to arise and depart, to go into captivity, since Canaan could no longer be their resting-place. Drunken men were offered the sinful people as their prophets, since they rejected the true (11).

Yet God would restore his people. He would break a way for them through the gates of the walled cities in which they were imprisoned, and lead them back to their own land. Our Breaker is the Lord Jesus, who broke a way for us from the prison-house of death, and we have but to follow Him who passes on before us—the Lord at our head.

Home Missions.

Redhill Police Orphanage.

NOT only during epidemics of what is called hooliganism, but as a matter of common experience in the preservation of order, those deserving public servants, the police, are the subjects of ruffianly attack, and that, too, to an extent that is but imperfectly realized. Instances of serious injury and permanent disablement are unhappily only too common, and in some cases death ensues, directly or indirectly. Under any circumstances to the severity of the weather and the entailed liability to forms of lung and throat disease.

There is, therefore, a great need that provision should be made not only for the sick and injured men themselves, but, in the case of death or prolonged illness, for their children. It is satisfactory to find these needs largely and admirably met by the Christian Police Association — the well-known organization which, in addition to its many-sided operations for the benefit of the force, its convalescent homes, reading rooms, and so on, maintains two Police Orphanages.

The larger of these, which serves the South of England and South Wales, is situate on rising ground between Redhill and Merstham, in the midst of a delightful country, picturesque and wooded. Here, at the comfortable house called "Gatton Point," one finds some sixty children, blithe and happy, who are receiving a sound, practical education, under refined influences, and with all the care that Christian devotion can give.

The establishment is a model of cleanliness; living rooms, bedrooms, school-rooms, are spick and span, and it is evidently the aim of Miss Bertha Johnson, the esteemed superintendent, that the institution shall be as

as possible. Some of the boys are trained in gardening, and the greenhouse and grounds bear witness to their success in plant culture and their taste in arrangement. This branch of the work contributes considerably to the delightful appearance of "Gatton Point."

The spiritual welfare of the children receives assiduous consideration. Morning and evening prayers are in the nature of family gatherings, while Sunday-school is conducted on the premises, and a mission church, where the teaching is evangelical, is attended. Most important of all is the personal care devoted to each child.

The tragic circumstances under which some of the young people have been received add to the pathos of the situation. One child is the daughter of a constable who, only a little more than ten minutes after being spoken to, in perfect health, by his inspector, was found drowned, having, it is supposed, plunged into the water to rescue a dog. The head of another family represented here was hurt in controlling an enormous crowd attracted by a circus procession; there was a disturbance, and the officer subsequently which he received. In another case, the constable was called to quell a quarrel in a public-house. A drunken woman who was removed lay down and screamed "Murder," whereupon the rest of the debauchees set upon the policeman and kicked him so severely that he died within a few hours. The knowledge that the orphanage authorities do all that is possible to receive children has brought comfort to many a sick bed. "Can you find out if they'll take my little ones?" asked a dying sergeant of a chief constable. The latter telegraphed for information, and was enabled to assure the anxious father that all would be well in the matter. "Now I can die happy," was the reply. In one instance a constable and his wife both died within a few weeks. Of their six children, three were received into the Orphanage, and two more otherwise provided for. It must be remembered that, while financial responsibility for the girls ceases when they come to be placed in situations as domestics, for which they are carefully trained, the lads have to be provided for, at any rate to some extent, until they have served their apprenticeship at the trade for which they have shown suitability.

Out of their scanty incomes the

to the maintenance of the work, but their efforts require to be supplemented, and Miss Gurney and her co-workers hope for a much-needed increase in general support. While there has been some ground for anxiety in this direction, it has been found absolutely necessary to extend. At present, not only is "Gatton Point" much too small, but two other houses also are fully occupied, and Miss Gurney has secured, by contract, "The Woodlands," a property which includes a suitable house, gardens, shrubbery, laundry, farm buildings, and playing field, within the compass of ten acres. To complete the purchase and provide for alterations, additions, and furnishing, about £10,000 will be required, of which sum about £8,000 has still to be raised. One friend has kindly offered £100 if four others will do the same. A donation of £250 has been promised if the first £3,000 is completed within a few weeks. About £600 is still needed to complete this sum. It is to be hoped that Miss Gurney will be enabled to carry her beneficent plan through to completion, in the best interests of the orphaned children of some English heroes of humble life who gave their lives at the call of duty.

"These Forty Years."

A TRIBUTE TO MR. W. J. ORSMAN, J.P.

THE veteran superintendent of the comprehensive and far-reaching work which has been carried on since 1881, at Costers' Hall, Hoxton, is on the eve of completing forty years of active service; and on such an occasion he will surely have the good wishes and the congratulations of Christian friends in many parts of the country. It was on Whit Sunday, 1861, that Mr. Orsman first invaded the precincts of Golden Lane, to distribute tracts and evangelical papers, and during the succeeding twenty years the work was continued there with continuous success.

When Mr. Orsman thus founded the Mission of which he has ever since been the hon. superintendent, the religious outlook in London, though more promising than it had been, was not altogether reassuring. Ten years previously, what was thought to be the new era of peace had been inaugurated by the Great Exhibition; but the Crimean War and the Indian Mutiny had too soon followed, and while the terrible strife between North and South in the United States was on the eve of beginning, the Franco-German crisis was soon to put an end to the monarchy in France. As regarded religious work in London, it was still the day of small things. The London City Mission had held on its way for over a quarter of a century, and the Ragged School Union for seventeen years; but as compared with the vast needs of the metropolis, little was being done. Still, the wonderful evangelistic services at the Royal Surrey Gardens, which were then being continued by C. H. Spurgeon at the Metropolitan Tabernacle, were fruitful in results. Mr. Orsman himself was a convert at the Surrey Gardens Services, and as he was expected to prove himself valiant for the faith, he took to open-air preaching, and then found a more permanent sphere at Golden Lane.

At that time this locality was a very genuine piece of Old London, which had not been ravaged by the Great Fire, and it was a favourite retreat of costers and street-traders on account of its secluded recesses affording facilities for the storage of barrows and stock-in-trade. Lord Shaftesbury suggested that "Golden Lane" was a name which had been given by way of prophecy in regard to what was to be, and that that might also have been the case with many other bestial sites in the metropolis. When, in 1876, the Earl took account of what had been done, he thought that all was one of the finest of evidences as to the reality of religion which could be given.

The congregation, the working mission church, and the large day-school, which were soon gathered in one of the roomy old houses, had the effect of bringing about a reformation. Then, in course of time, Golden Lane underwent a transformation; fine business houses were put upon the sites of old-time squalid slums, and the people had to migrate elsewhere. This necessitated the costly enterprise of erecting the present Costers' Hall at Hoxton. There the work has expanded. A congregation of 700 can assemble in the large room, Mr. Orsman being assisted in the Gospel services by members of the Evangelization Society. The building is open on every week night, and besides being used for classes or other religious purposes, its rooms are available for the street-traders' business meetings. We have been sorry to find that although quite an extensive work is carried on with a very small income — 140 voluntary helpers being employed — the funds showed a deficiency of £100 at the close of the year. Mr. Orsman will take his annual holiday in Algiers; and on his return at Whitsuntide the best testimonial he could desire, by way of recognition of his forty years of honorary service, would be the establishment of an emergency fund to meet such future contingencies.

Liverpool Sheltering Home.

A BAND of sixty-two boys sailed on Thursday last from the Sheltering Home, Liverpool, forming the fifty-eighth party sent to Canada from that institution. Situations will be awaiting the older ones, while for those under eight years of age it is hoped to find good homes of adoption. Canada is prospering, and there are many openings there for young people.

The plan of placing the boys at first on farms enables them to learn the ways of the Dominion, and to grow up into strong men in the pure country air, with open-air work and plenty of good food. They can then take to a trade, go into business, or at eighteen claim the Government grant of land, and settle down as farmers, having learnt what to do with the land. The following letter is from a minister who adopted a little boy seven years old:—

Cecil is still with us, no longer a boy but a big man now, eighteen or nineteen years of age. He is tall and stout, has a good disposition, and has caused us no trouble. He has a fair education. By his request I bought him a farm, and he is happy and getting along nicely. He is very kind to horses and cattle, and is interested in everything about the farm. My desire was to have him enter the ministry, but it did not seem to be his choice.

Mrs. Birt is making ready another party of girls and boys to go out in the summer. Help is greatly needed to defray the emigration and outfit expenses of these two parties. The Sheltering Home is in Myrtle Street, Liverpool.

Littlehampton Home of Rest.

THE Home of Rest at "The Hillyers," Littlehampton, conducted by Rev. Darlow Sarjeant and his devoted wife, is open to Christians of every name. Two sisters reside in the Home, and are ever at hand to render any service—Sister Emma to counsel and teach, Sister Mary to minister to physical needs. These ministrations, combined with the meetings held in the Home by Mr. and Mrs. Sarjeant as often as possible, are a source of blessing to hundreds of souls.

Those who know the Home praise God alike for the workers and the work, and those who have not until now heard of it would do well to visit it if possible, and if not, to hold up the hands of those who labour in this part of the vineyard by prayer and faith. Particulars of the work may be had from Rev. Darlow Sarjeant, 59, Oxford Gardens, North Kensington.

Deep Sea Fishermen.

AMONG the most prosperous institutions of the Royal National Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen are the port Homes which have been opened in several important fishing centres on the British and Dutch coasts.

The crew of a steam trawler are usually engaged for a ten weeks' cruise, but at the end of half the term the vessel returns to port for a few days in order to coal. During this time, when the hands are on shore, and, as a rule, far from home and friends, these institutions, managed by devoted Christian people, afford not only a much needed social alternative to public-houses and low lodging-houses, but a centre of

SPIRITUAL INSTRUCTION AND HELP.

The Home at Milford Haven is an excellent example of such work. It has a coffee bar, and sleeping accommodation and recreation rooms are provided, while in the Bible classes and evangelistic work rich blessing has been given. Many lives have been revolutionised; some of the men have joined the Fishermen's branch of the Scripture Union, and fervent testimonies are given in the meetings as to consolation received from Bible study, amid the hard and rough surroundings of sea life.

At Ymuiden in Holland, where many English trawlers put in to sell their catch of fish, a representative works in and from the local coffee house, but this is inconveniently situated, and a splendid site, close to the docks, has been secured, where a suitable building is to be erected. The usefulness of the Ymuiden work has been repeatedly proved. The temptations of this, as of many other Continental ports, are strong, and many a man has been encouraged to resist, and to forward to his wife at home in England the money that he was about to waste in self-indulgence. Extensive provision is made, too, at Grimsby and Aberdeen, the two chief fishing ports of the United Kingdom. The former has a large institute, and at the latter religious and temperance work is carried on from a hulk in the docks. North Shields also possesses a Home, while at Yarmouth, where the mission stores are situated, there is an and boys, with coffee bars, and a gymnasium. Bible classes are maintained, and instruction is given in such useful subjects as basket making and carving. The mission hall is a useful centre for spiritual work.

These operations on shore were no part of the original scheme of the Mission, but experience has shown that they are absolutely necessary. It is, however, in the North Sea, among the trawlers, that the main operations are maintained. The hospital steam vessel, which was first despatched to the fisheries last year, has done excellent service. She was specially built for her work, and is replete with every convenience for fishing—for the Mission vessels catch and send fish to the London market, thereby earning part of the cost of maintenance—as well as for medical and religious purposes. Sailing vessels are also employed, but in view of the general application of steam to fishing vessels, it is felt that more steamers must be added to the small fleet of the Mission, in order to cope with the need, especially as, with the depletion of the North Sea, the trawlers now go much further away from port. The temperance and evangelistic work of the Mission ships is, of course, a familiar story. By an agreement between Great Britain, Germany, Holland and Norway, prohibition obtains in the fishing waters. The effect is entirely satisfactory, but it must be remembered that it is the influence of the Mission ships which has been the means of keeping out the illegal "copers," or drink-selling boats.

It is now some years since the Mission began to devote attention further afield, to the cod fishers of Labrador. In addition to shore hospitals, it now has two small steamers at work on this difficult, storm-beaten coast, as dispensing vessels, and for bringing patients ashore for treatment. Both in winter, when the sea is entirely frozen over, and during the summer days, when the dried codfish industry attracts many people to the coast, the hospital work is a great blessing to the community. It is, indeed, a very fruitful medical mission.

A brief statistical summary of the work shows that last year 9,571 patients were treated medically and surgically on the North Sea mission ships and 1,454 in Labrador.

LARGE QUANTITIES OF LITERATURE

were given away, and some thousands of services conducted while at sea. Still, figures fail to convey an adequate impression of the spiritual and philanthropic operations of this admirable Mission. It is to be hoped that the committee will be enabled to secure the steam vessels which are so urgently wanted in order to cope with the present opportunities for consolidating and extending the work.

Mrs. Eardley's Homes.

COMMENCED some years ago in a cottage, the New Barnet branch of Mrs. Eardley's work for orphan and distressed girls makes excellent progress in its present location at "Brandon," in Station Road, under the superintendence of Miss Okell.

A brighter or more home-like institution would be difficult to find, and the interesting group of young people who are sheltered there just now are a happy family indeed, from the little prattler of five or six years who has to the tall young woman who is about to leave for service.

The situation of the Home gives it many advantages. Proximity to picturesque Hadley Wood, with its beautiful forest scenery and its old-world association with the names of stout Hugh Latimer and Warwick the King-maker, is in itself an invitation to rambles that is taken advantage of during summer half-holidays. All the year round the invigorating air tells its tale, both in the bakers' bills and in the improved health of the girls. As at the sister Home at Brentwood and the East London centre at Globe Road, the young people not only receive a thorough training in household duties, and a sound secular education, but they are carefully grounded in Scripture knowledge.

The Sunday Bible-class, which is conducted for the girls who are in service in the vicinity, as well as for those still in the Home, fulfils a useful purpose in continuing this course of instruction, and at the same time affords renewed opportunities for encouragement and help; a favourite study of the girls is the "Hundred Texts," issued by the Irish Church Missions Society, and which, it will be remembered, are arranged in groups of ten, under the heads of foundation truths.

Many of the children have sad life histories. "I just ache for mother," said one little girl in an agony of longing, but in not a few instances, it is best for them to know as little as possible of one parent, if not of both. The various stories differ in detail, but most of them have a melancholy connection with

DRUNKENNESS, NEGLECT, OR DESERTION.

It almost goes without saying, that Miss Okell's girls earn admirable characters, and that there is a keen demand for domestics from "Brandon." In addition to its regular work, the Home is well known as a centre of Christian activities, and, among other duties, Miss Okell is the local secretary of the B.W.T.A.

It should be mentioned that the country Homes are on a different financial basis from the town Home in Globe Road, E., as they have no endowment fund. Except in cases where relatives of the children make some small payment, Mrs. Eardley relies on the gifts of the Lord's people for supplying the needs of the Homes.

Derbyshire Villages.—Pastor Richard Howton, of Glossop, in the annual reports of his work among the villages of Derbyshire, gives some pithy accounts of the various evangelistic undertakings maintained in connection with the Beacon Light Village Mission. Mr. Howton tells of the conversion of some desperate characters, whose testimony has been a means of blessing to many.

The Irish Church Missions.

A SECTION of the Roman Catholic population of Limerick has recently been stirred up by incitements, from the press and pulpit, to assault Dr. Long, the medical missionary of the Irish Church Missions in the city, and as a consequence he has been frequently mobbed by the rough element. It is still more to be regretted that the Roman Catholic Lord Chief Justice of Ireland (Lord O'Brien), in charging the Grand Jury at Limerick the other day, should have referred in misleading and unjust terms to the Society for Irish Church Missions, saying: "The Irish Church Missions are supported in England by people who are very well-meaning, who are very religious, but who have no conception of the worthlessness of the Missions in this country."

The Society was promptly and ably defended from this attack, by the Dublin Daily Express, which in a leading article on March 7 declared Lord O'Brien's remarks to be "uncalled for, inaccurate, and unfair;" and after dwelling at length upon the matter, concluded by saying, "We repeat that we are in no way concerned to champion the Irish Church Missions, but an organization which bears that name, and which has never, in our knowledge, been denounced or disowned by the governing body of the Church of Ireland, must have the sympathy of most Churchmen in the distinct injustice which Lord O'Brien's pronouncement has inflicted on it."

A remarkable letter appeared in the Express of March 8, in which a Roman Catholic protests against Lord O'Brien's attack, assures the readers "that there are thousands of Catholics who feel with me a debt of gratitude to the Irish Church Missions," and describes Lord O'Brien's words as "the reverse of true."

Poor Irish Boys.

IN relating a recent visit to the "Nest by the Sea," Spiddal, County Galway, Miss Ellen Smyly writes:—

"I took with me a little boy who was to fill the only vacancy. His mother had lately died, leaving him and an elder brother with their father and grandfather. The elder brother went to the Boys' Home, and the younger was accepted for Spiddal. When we arrived in the evening we had a great welcome, and very soon the little fellow made friends, and looked as happy as any of them. When coming home three days later, I asked him if he would come with me. He replied, 'No, thank you; I'd liefer stay here.'

"The Spiddal Orphanage is situated almost on the shore. Children feel very sorry when the time comes to leave, and if we were to quote from letters received from girls gone out to service, we should be able to fill pages with loving thoughts of the old Home and the longing to see it again. It would be impossible to over-estimate the blessing the Home is in the midst of these wild surroundings. I asked the driver of the car one day whether the people round, the Roman Catholics, would be glad or sorry if the Home were removed. He seemed quite indignant at being asked such a question. 'Glad! sure what would they do without her?' We might say the same of each of the children in the Home. It is sad to think what some would have been without the love and kindness they have received."

A sum of £300 is immediately required for the Orphanage, in order to avoid a debt on the current year's work. The secretary is Miss Ellen S. Smyly, 35, Fitzwilliam Street, Dublin.

Visitation of Prisons.—For the encouragement of Christians who undertake work among criminals, Mr. Arthur E. L. Pain, of the Inter-Denominational Mission, Trinidad, sends cheering news of a recent visit to a Cuba prison. The inmates at the time were taking exercise, but paused to hear the preacher's message. A few words of simple exhortation were spoken, an earnest prayer was offered, and many of the men were deeply impressed. On repeating his visit Mr. Pain discovered to his joy that nine of the convicts had yielded themselves to Christ.

THE LATE

Rev. Robert Govett, M.A.

A LIFE of no ordinary sanctity and spiritual power was brought to a close at Norwich, on Wednesday, February 20, last, through the passing away, in his eighty-ninth year, of Rev. Robert Govett. Mr. Govett came of a Devonshire family, and was a grandson of Rev. Robert Romaine. Born at Staines, he was educated to be a clergyman of the Church of England, being ordained a deacon in May, 1836, and priest about twelve months later. On his graduation at Oxford, he became a fellow of Worcester College. Five years were spent in his first curacy at Bexley, in Kent, ere he removed to that of St. Stephen's, at Norwich, the city which was destined to be identified with the chief labours of his life. In these early years he published his "Isaiah Unfulfilled," a book giving evidence of the able and fearless exposition which marked his work throughout.

A close study of the Scriptural teaching on the subject of baptism led Mr. Govett, after he had been about four years at Norwich, to adopt views inconsistent with his position. Feeling that he could no longer baptize infants, and being a strong man, with whom compromise of any kind was impossible, he at once resigned his position in the Church, and submitted to the rite of believers' baptism, which was performed by Rev. William Brock. He then established an independent place of worship, and his influence grew till he was for some years recognized as one of the greatest religious forces in the East of England.

Services were at first held at Victoria Hall, but the year 1854 saw the opening of the great Surrey Road Chapel, the cost of which was mainly contributed out of Mr. Govett's own means. He had come to be widely known as an exponent of pronounced pre-millennarian views, and his audiences were largely composed of eager students of Scripture. The motive impulse in Mr. Govett's ecclesiastical work was a passionate loyalty to Apostolic doctrine and precedent. Church membership and the Lord's Table were open to all who gave credible testimony of Christian belief. While in deep sympathy with all evangelical Christians, the chapel was a Christian church unlimited by denominational definition. It was a bold and at that time probably a unique attitude.

Mr. Govett's ministry was marked by two deeply significant characteristics. His life and work were saturated with prayer. The chance visitor in his study was at once introduced into a higher Presence. Two weekly prayer meetings, besides a half-hour spent in earnest prayer before the Sunday morning worship, made the way of access to the Father familiar, and deepened the fervour of church life. But even more remarkable was the purely expository nature of Mr. Govett's preaching. Though matured in profound reflection, and committed in outline to paper, all manuscript was left in the study, and the Word presented in its bare majesty. The effect was far-reaching and lasting. The unbeliever forgot the preacher in the wonderful revelation of the mind of God. The church was instructed in unforgetable truth.

The effects in Norwich of this simple but faithful ministry were considerable. Hundreds were brought to Christ. Several dependent chapels were established in country districts, and served by members of the Church. A strong, sweet type of Christian life, unworldly and enthusiastic, was developed.

But Mr. Govett's most permanent contribution to Christian life and thought is deposited in his printed works. The bare list of these is of portentous length. They deal with all sides of Christian doctrine and practice. Mr. Spurgeon, in a review of one of his latest books, expressed the opinion that Mr. Govett, as a writer, was before his time, and predicted the day when his writings would be held as treasured gold. It is certain that they display learning, judgment, fearlessness, and extraordinary insight into Scripture. Controversies, even still acute, with which they dealt, forbid a unanimous judgment among readers; but their singular acumen and independence render them of great exegetical value. Mr. Govett himself considered, probably with justice, that his work on the Apocalypse was his maturest production. His commentaries on the Gospel of John and the Epistles to the Hebrews and Romans are treasuries of thought and suggestion.

In all his controversial work, Mr Govett

was a stout defender of evangelical truth, as revealed in Scripture, and preserved in the reformed faith; but nowhere more signally than in his expositions appeared the curious blend of sensitive conservatism with a daring re-discovery of Scriptural life, thought, and teaching. His subtly suggestive interpretations of passages relating to the millennial Kingdom; to the gifts of inspiration and miracle; to reward according to works; to the literal and obligatory nature of commands enshrined in the Sermon on the Mount, are worthy of attention, though differing conviction is inevitable on these peculiarities of his exposition; but his sincerity and ability, together with the patient grace with which he permeated his controversies, are an abiding monument to a laborious worker.

Since Mr. Govett's death a friend has written:—

> Over his grave might well be inscribed the words "Mighty in the Scriptures." Few men of his generation had so intimate and exact an acquaintance with the text of the Bible, both in the Hebrew and Greek originals, as Govett. Possibly one might go further, and state that, within his own province, he had no rivals. His exegetical discernment was phenomenally acute; and his labours in the field of Biblical interpretation—specially in expounding Apocalyptic questions—were unremitting.

The closing years of Mr. Govett's life were spent in increasing retirement from public sight. A constitution of remarkable robustness maintained him in his wonted work until within a few weeks of the end, and his last sermon was marked by virile powers. With little suffering he fell asleep, and laid down a life-work of astonishing devotion and abounding vigour. All the compeers in the founding of his ministry had already gone. His life's work seemed, even to himself, completed. In an unfading hope of the Lord's return—a hope which he had himself by grace kindled in their hearts—the brethren of Surrey Road Chapel laid their beloved pastor to rest. It was the closing of a life that was garnered as a shock of ripened grain, and that had diffused much light and grace to the glory of God.

Points and Outlines.

FEELINGS v. EXPERIENCES.

CONQUEST of temptation, deliverance from the power of evil habits, and a ready compliance with the will of God in answer to prayer, is a much better proof of his favourable presence than joyous feelings. The latter may be mistaken; but the former are as sure a mark of the Divine operation and blessing as that a plentiful crop of corn has had the benefit of rain and sunshine. Thomas Adams (1701-84).

THE PARABLE OF THE GROWING SEED.

(Mark iv. 26-29.)

The self-advancing progress of the Divine Kingdom shows itself—

I. At the very commencement. (a) The word must indeed be sown and received (26). But (b) it carries within itself a living Divine power (26). It is good seed.

II. Also in its progress. (a) It must indeed have time for development (27); the seed springs and grows up. But (b) it develops itself without human aid, and that gradually (27, 28).

III. And in its termination. (a) In the ripe and abundant fruit which it yields (29), "when the fruit is brought forth;" (b) which man, however, must gather and appropriate to himself (29). "He putteth in the sickle, because the harvest is come."

POPULAR PREACHERS—BEWARE!

If you are a platform, or a pulpit, or any other kind of mountebank, seek obscurity, for your soul's salvation lies there. If you are a popular preacher, flee from crowded churches, and hold services in bothies, and in poorhouses, and in barns, and in kitchens. Never search the papers to see what they are saying about you. Starve the self-seeking quack that is still within you. Beat him black and blue, as Paul tells us he did, and as Thomas Shepard tells us he did, every time he shows his self-admiring face.

Dr. Alex. Whyte.

A MODEL CHURCH.

Acts ix. 31.

1. It was Peaceful. "Then had the churches peace" (R.V.). Peace with God, peace with one another.

2. It was Edified. "And were edified." Built up in the faith, strengthened through the Word, rooted in love.

3. It was Active. "Walking." Not sleeping or speculating—walking by faith.

4. It was Humble. "Walking in the fear of the Lord." Not in the fear of man, not after the fashion of the world, not with the ungodly.

5. It was Happy. "Walking . . . in the comfort of the Holy Ghost." Not in the comfort of material prosperity (Rev. iii. 17). Satisfied with spiritual things.

6. It was Holy. "Walking . . . in the Holy Ghost." In fellowship with God, seeking to please Him, not to please or amuse the men of the world.

7. It was Multiplied. It grows and increases, because the Holy One is in the midst. His Name is honoured, his Word believed, and his will done.

Negro Schools in Virginia.

THE founder of these Schools, who for ever will be known in history as the great friend of the Negro race — General Armstrong — was born of missionary parents in 1839, on the Hawaiian Islands. His father, having been appointed Minister of Public Instruction, took charge of and partly built the Hawaiian Free School, and some of the higher educational institutes. For thirteen years the boy was more or less his companion, and so got a thorough knowledge of the dark-skinned Polynesian people who inhabit those picturesque volcanic islands. They were, as a rule, kind, hospitable, fond of learning, and generous in contributing of their substance to the churches, at the same time living under conditions which made a high standard of morality almost impossible.

After the death of his father in 1860, Armstrong left for America, and completed his education at the Williams College, Mass. The Civil War found him on the Anti-Slavery side. He enlisted under the Union Flag, and after serving a year as captain and major in the 125th New York Volunteers, he joined the U.S. coloured troops, and served two-and-a-half years as lieutenant-colonel of the 9th and 8th Regiments. Whilst studying his soldiers he found them in many respects like the Hawaiians. The excellent qualities and capacities of the freed-men, their quick response to good treatment and discipline, their devotion to duty and their leaders, convinced him more and more that they were worthy of freedom. Their dash and daring in battle, and ambition to improve—often studying their spelling-books under fire—excited his admiration, and for them repeatedly presented themselves to him.

In March, 1866, Colonel Armstrong was placed by General O. O. Howard, Commissioner of the Freedmen's Bureau, in charge of ten counties in Eastern Virginia, with headquarters at Hampton, which was then the great "Contraband Camp," to manage Negro affairs and adjust, if possible, the relation of the races. To settle matters required both tact and fairness to the two peoples. No better man could have been chosen for the task. The Freedmen's Bureau, which was the first organization on behalf of the ex-slaves, accomplished from 1865-70 an excellent work by re-uniting many families, helping them to work and settling down. Three and a half millions of dollars were granted for educational institutions.

THE FIRST SCHOOL

for Freedmen in the South was opened in 1862, in the vicinity of Hampton, where about 1,500 children were gathered daily in old Hospital Barracks and other buildings. An estate of 125 acres on Hampton river was open to purchase. "Little Scotland," as it was called, appealed to General Armstrong, as the spot historically and strategically most fitted for an educational and industrial institution. Here the Indian was first met; here the first Indian child received into the Christian Church.

When offered the leadership of the enterprise, General Armstrong recognized it to be a call from the Lord. A year later, the school opened with two teachers and fifteen pupils; in 1870 it was incorporated under a special Act of the Assembly of Virginia, by which it became independent of government, of sects, and associations.

From the first it has been true to the idea of education by self-help; nothing is asked for the student which he can provide by his own labour. This system, however, when started, met with much opposition as being too costly. General Armstrong's argument was that the manual labour plan could not pay pecuniarily, but that it should and certainly would pay morally. So it has. Hampton's graduates have been and are a working force for the good of their race. "If the schools had turned out but one Booker T. Washington, it would have been worth while to have founded them," is one of the sayings attributed to this great benefactor of the coloured people. The Institution was planned for Negroes alone, but when in April, 1878, a Macedonian cry came from some Indian prisoners of war in Florida—through Captain R. H. Pratt—seventeen were accepted at private expense.

ON THEIR ARRIVAL AT HAMPTON,

at midnight, they were taken to a camp where kind words of welcome and coffee awaited them. A large audience gathered the next night to hear the old chief, Lone Wolf, who told them: "We have started on God's road now, because God's road is the same for the red man as for the white man." Notwithstanding dismal predictions, the seventeen braves fell cheerfully into line with spade and plough and hoe, awl and hammer, side by side with their comrades of the other race. Their idea of the relation of industry to Christianity might suggest wisdom to any missionary enterprise. One of them wrote once to his friends:

"I PRAY EVERY DAY AND HOE ONIONS."

Other experiments with Indian men and women followed, until a separate school was established at Carlisle. The Hampton Institute still takes in a limited number of Indians.

After General Armstrong's death in 1893, a memorandum was found with his will in which these words occur: "Hampton must not go down; see to it, you who are true to the black and red children of the land." The present Principal, Dr. H. B. Frissell, is a worthy successor of the large and tender-hearted founder. The Institute is governed by a board of seventeen trustees. Its sixty buildings overlook the waters of Hampton river, and accommodate daily over 1,000 workers, 610 boarders (140 of whom are Indians), 350 day scholars, and eighty officers and instructors. It is divided into five departments, the normal, business, academic, trade, domestic science, with both day and night classes. These departments are equipped with improved facilities for special work. They send out yearly to the South and West young people educated as teachers, business men, trade and agricultural instructors and workers, and young women trained in domestic duties, or as school teachers. Over ninety per cent. of the graduates fulfil the expectations of the schools; 80,000dol. yearly are needed for their support.

WILMA MORGAN.

The Gospel Keynote.

AT this time of missions, is it not necessary for all of us to have the fundamental truth of the Gospel very clearly in our minds before we can present it to others?

God's definition of his Gospel is given in Rom. i. 1-4; in 1 Cor. xv. 1-4, and, of course, in many other passages. But the truth which I particularly wish to emphasise is our Lord's resurrection, for, as we see in 1 Cor. xv. 14, "If Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain."

The imperative necessity of this fact being stated, and insisted upon, is clearly shown by our blessed Lord, who, when speaking of his coming sufferings, went on to add, "And be raised again the third day." In the Acts of the Apostles, too, this glorious event was made the ground of demand that the Lord Jesus should be accepted as Saviour. The seventeenth chapter is so full from beginning to end of this subject as to be an object-lesson for all preachers of the Gospel; and v. 31 shows that God has given assurance, or offered us faith, because our Lord was raised from the dead, and so we are commanded to repent.

Of course Satan was annoyed, and will be again, because his first lie in the garden, "Ye shall not surely die," has been fully exposed, and he does not wish his second great lie to be so, which was, "His disciples came by night and stole Him away while we slept"—commonly reported among the Jews until this day, and not thought much about by Gentiles.

To refute these two lies of our great adversary becomes the great object of the Gospel, and unless we do so, we imperfectly present it. Rom. iv. 25, does this very concisely, "Who was delivered for our offences, and was raised again for our justification." The next verse explains why we have peace, because we see that the righteousness of God is satisfied, and He is just in justifying the believer in Jesus.

He that received seed by the wayside understandeth it not. He that received seed in the in the good ground understandeth it (Matt. xiii. 19, 23).

So may we understand that God, who, we read in the Gospels, said, "This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased," and declared Him to be his Son with power by the resurrection from the dead (Rom. i. 4), yea, with mighty power, exaltations, and honours (Eph. i. 20-23).

So may we too rest in the finished work of our Lord who rose from the dead on the seventeenth day of the seventh month, the same day as the ark rested with Noah on Mount Ararat (Gen. viii. 4).

Who is He that condemneth? It is Christ that died, yea, rather who is risen again, who is even at the right hand of God, who also maketh intercession for us. J. D. M.

Blackheath.

London Cabmen.—The annual report of the London Cabmen's Mission is an account of an extensive and useful organization. During the unoccupied hours of a cabman's life, opportunities of speaking a kindly word are taken by the workers, who are invariably welcomed by the men. In all parts of the Metropolis God-fearing cabmen are to be met, and a personal talk with these is often the means of coming in touch with their unbelieving comrades. The services in the Mission Hall at King's Cross have been regularly sustained, and the preaching of the Gospel has resulted in winning many from sin to righteousness. The Bands of Hope and Mercy have done much to enlighten the minds of the young in the neighbourhood. The temperance work among adults and children is bearing abundant fruit. The meetings are often conducted by cabbies, whose telling and homely addresses are used of God to the awakening of the indifferent and the prompting of many to take the pledge. The superintendent of the mission is Mr. John Dupee, 165, Hemingford Road, Barnsbury.

Other Lands.

From Dr. Baedeker.

DEAR SIR,—My advancing years make me eager to seize the opportunities given for taking the Gospel into dark places. The present Minister of Justice in Russia having once again renewed to me for two years the permit to visit the prisons of the Russian Empire, I feel myself under an obligation to make use of this opportunity, and I hope once more to visit the Baltic provinces. But many open doors presenting themselves in Sweden, I purpose going first to that land, my programme including several large manufacturing districts, and also University towns, as well as Stockholm. Thence I propose crossing by boat to Riga, and visiting Mitau, Libau, Dorpat, Reval, &c.

Both in Sweden and in parts of Germany the prisons are open to me for speaking to prisoners and for giving New Testaments to them, and the most noble British and Foreign Bible Society enables me to distribute freely to those who have the first claim to the Gospel of the Grace of God, by supplying at a large reduction the books in the various languages. The Association for the Free Distribution of the Scripture also renders valuable help by grants of money for the same purpose.

Both these Societies have for many years freely and generously sustained my efforts throughout Russian and Siberian prisons, as also amongst Roman Catholics in Austria who desire to be freed from the system of the Roman Church, and who by thousands have come out through the reading of the Word of God, which had been withheld from them. I confidently count on the sympathy and prayer of God's servants as the real fellowship of service, and rejoice in the assurance that those members of the body that seem to be the more feeble are necessary (1 Cor. xii. 22). My present intention is to leave England about April 10 for Berlin, thence to go to Sweden, and later on to Russia, God willing.—In the fellowship of the Lord's service, yours sincerely,

T. W. Baedeker.

Rev. W. A. Essery on Tour.

WRITING from Alexandria March 12, Rev. W. A. Essery says:—I am leaving Egypt this day for Palestine, after upwards of seven weeks in the Nile Valley, visiting the stations of the American Mission as far as Assouan, on the first Cataract. This time has been devoted to preaching, by interpretation, to Egyptian congregations, and in addressing week-day and Sabbath schools incessantly. The missionaries everywhere have given me a very hearty welcome, and made arrangement for the various services.

The fraternal message of the committee of the Bible Lands Missions' Aid Society has been most gratefully received; this was specially so at the meetings of the Synod of the Nile held at Assiout early in February, which I attended and addressed. I have also met labourers of the Soudan Pioneer Mission, the North Africa Mission, the Church of Scotland Jewish Mission, and the Egypt Mission Band.

My visit to the great Training College of Assiout was most interesting and inspiring. Oft have I exclaimed, in view of mission results, "What hath God wrought!" My health has been graciously preserved amidst all the journeys and services. I hope to remain two weeks in Jerusalem, and then proceed to Beyrout. I am collecting stores of deeply interesting information for friends at home. My return passage is booked per Omrah, from Port Said, about May 12, due thirteen days later in London.

War Against Protestants in France.

A VERY disgraceful meeting was held a few days ago in Paris. Short reports of the proceedings have appeared in the English papers, but French organs of opinion have presented at greater length utterances on "true sons of France"—"Up with St. Bartholomew," and "Down with the Protestants!" Some six hundred people attended the meeting. General de la Rocque, who occupied the chair, led off with the opening words of the Lord's Prayer, and proceeded to put the audience through a brief litany:

"Saint Denis!" said the General.
"Pray for us," responded the whole assembly.
"Saint Geneviève!" cried the General.
"Pray for us," replied the audience.
"Venerable Joan of Arc!" "Pray for us."
"Sacred heart of Jesus!" "Pray for us."

"Now," resumed the General, "You may sit down. I see you are all good Catholics, and therefore good Frenchmen. I beg you to remember that you are the millions, and therefore have force with you. Our enemies openly air their evil opinions, and we have the power and right to air ours for the salvation of France. I am persuaded that we are on the eve of a Catholic revolution such as has not been witnessed for centuries. With numbers and force with us we ought to act. If we are the most numerous, it is by God's will. God wills that moral be sustained by material force."

Addresses were delivered by M. Louis Rollin, secretary of the Committee of Justice and Equality [!], and by M. Ernest Renauld, author of "The Protestant Peril," and other inflammatory writings. He said:—"The Protestant danger suffocates us. If you tour about the provinces, you scent it. All public offices are held by Protestants. Here the prefect is a Protestant; the Attorney-General has married a Protestant; the schoolmaster is a Protestant; the public treasurer is a Protestant. How is it that in France, where the Protestants form only one-sixtieth part of the people, the public offices are all, or almost all, held by Protestants? How comes it that even in Paris the Minister of Foreign Affairs is a genuine Huguenot, that the successive Ministers of Marine for ten years have been Protestants? It is because the present régime is essentially Protestant!"

The speaker went on to allege that the Protestants are a political organization, and did not stop short of glaring misrepresentations that provoked contradiction from the audience. At one point the chairman sought to calm the impassioned orator, who from beginning to end was merciless in his attack upon Protestants, high and low, calling them traitors, and demanding their destruction.

The meeting concluded, as it began, with invocation of St. Denis and other saints. The dispersing song included a couplet in which the "traitors" were compared to a flock of crows that have descended upon France:

Frenchmen, fall upon these crows,
With cudgels stout, and strong sabots.

The incident bodes ill for France. The "traitors" will hold their ground—speaking the truth in love. May God bring the misguided Romanist agitators to a better mind!

From Rev. F. B. Meyer.

ss. Majestic, March 12, 1901.

AFTER a somewhat long and stormy voyage, we have safely reached New York, through our Father's goodness. I thank Him for the time for quiet reflection and study which this has afforded, and which has been very sweet.

It seems necessary from time to time to withdraw from the busy scenes of one's ordinary life to stand alone with God, and see things more as they are. And there is no better occasion for this than an Atlantic steamer, with the boundless expanse of sea around and of sky above.

Very earnestly I commend myself to the prayer of my friends, the readers of The Christian, for this very important tour through the Southern States, where I hope for great opportunities of unfolding the deeper things of Christian life and service.

Evangelism and Union in Canada.

THE spirit of evangelism becomes more and more apparent in Canada. Special meetings are now generally in progress throughout the Dominion, and with encouraging results. At Ottawa a concentrated movement was made by the different churches, when more than 500 conversions were announced. A like compaign is planned for Toronto, where Rev. Dr. Henderson, of Brooklyn, N.Y., has been addressing the ministers and Christian workers on "The Twentieth Century Forward Spiritual Movement." A committee has been appointed to make arrangements for a series of meetings, and it is hoped that the movement will extend greatly beyond the limits of the city.

During recent years the question of Church Union has been brought prominently to the front, and a Society to further the movement has been organized. The annual meeting has just been held in Toronto, when there were present leading representatives of the different denominations. Nothing practical has been the outcome, beyond brotherly discussion and closer fellowship. Most prominent in the Society thus far have been clergymen of the Episcopal church, but in outside fellowship the other churches are more closely united in aggressive Christian work. The gradual approach of the different denominations toward one another is particularly gratifying in this young and growing country, where co-operation is greatly needed in furthering the interests of the Kingdom of God.

A Year in Algiers.

I HAD heard of a little gathering of Christians (six to eight) who met each Lord's Day, and broke bread. Naturally I sought to have Christian fellowship with them, and soon the responsibility of a weekly Bible reading fell to my lot. This simple study of God's Word was really effectual in life and principle. Spanish Christians came from a distance, and soon several were anxious to be baptized. During the year there have been five different occasions of baptism. This little gathering gradually increased. The need for Gospel testimony so pressed upon us that we finally decided to hire looking to God for the wherewithal to keep it going. To keep the door of this room open has meant self-denial, but not without souls receiving blessing.

The Spanish Christians continue to meet in their own mission rooms. At the close of last year we hired another small hall in the Rue de la Kasbah, the most notorious part of Algiers for sin and vice. The first hall referred to is situated at Babel-Oued, where we have two Gospel meetings a week, a children's service for Jews on Thursdays, and a class for Jewish young men on Saturdays. In this quarter we have also a children's service on Thursday for Spanish and French children, as well as a weekly Bible reading and prayer meeting.

At the Spanish mission room, Hussein-Dey, we have a Monday afternoon Bible reading, and a Monday evening Gospel meeting in French. The hall is generally packed with a most attentive audience, and the Word is eagerly sought for. At the Kasbah we have two Gospel meetings a week for Europeans and Jews, two children's services, and three meetings a week in the Kabyle language.

Our efforts could doubtless be rendered more effectual by establishing a little medical work. During my eight years among the Kabyles in the interior, I found constantly in the help of medicines, a key to open the door to the heart. We trust also one day to see our way to add to our efforts a little work among the hundreds of "friendless and fallen" of this intensely dark city.

The Gospel in Spain.

THE Association for the Diffusion of the Gospel in Spain has a record of thirty years' fruitful service for the evangelization of that country. Mr. and Mrs. Armstrong work on with untiring devotion to the cause they have so much at heart. From time to time encouraging reports are received of the progress of the work. In recent correspondence Mr. Armstrong wrote: "There is now in Spain a Church of the Living God, probably more numerous than many friends and foes imagine. Its members are to be found in towns, villages, and hamlets, and you meet with the best quality wherever persecutions abound. On the mountains of Asturias live well-known to us for many years. The husband not long ago was rendered helpless by paralysis. At first kindly neighbours assisted him, but being poor themselves they could not long continue the work of mercy. Then the old people were visited by the village authorities and the doctor, offering all sorts of comforts for their last days if only they would 'return to the Church of their Fathers.' The reply was, 'Never; we will starve first!'"

AN AGED COUPLE,

Correspondents from many other parts of Spain write of much blessing experienced in their labours. At times it is from a simple farmer, who, while living by the toil of his hands, preaches the Gospel to a little group which he has formed in his own village, and evangelizes in neighbouring villages. At other times it is a humble Spanish evangelist, who, earning a small salary, builds up a congregation in a central village, and evangelizes in the district. From foreign missionaries at their central stations come tidings of conversions and a deep awakening. Numerous difficulties have to be encountered. The education of the children of the upper classes is almost entirely in the hands of the Jesuits with their splendid colleges, and they are now laying themselves out to get the children of the working classes into special schools opened for them. More or less, employers of labour are under Roman Catholic influences. A card from the priest opens the door for work and wage; a word from him closes the door against the hated and despised Protestant, though he has a wife and children dependent on him for daily bread.

College for Women at Rome.

VISITORS to Rome might be surprised to see the fine building on Via Veneto, in the quarter called Ludovisi, facing the present palace of Queen Margherita, and to learn that it is a Protestant College for Italian women. Started five years ago, with ten pupils, under the direction of the American Methodist Episcopal Mission, with an American lady, graduate of a University, as its principal, it now numbers 165 pupils, with twenty professors and other teachers. Since Christmas it has been located in this large, handsome building, called Crandon Hall, specially built for it, and capable of accommodating 200 pupils, a certain number of these being residents. That it supplies a real want in Italy seems to be evident from its progress, and the fact that so many Italian girls have taken advantage of its splendid opportunities. Great benefit is derived, not only by the true Roman Catholics, but by those also whose parents have become, with regard to religious matters, indifferent, sceptical, or even atheistic, and who obtain here not only a spendid secular education, but also a pure religious training.

The College is also open to all English-speaking girls. One who knows it says: "The institute is in the highest sense a Christian school. There is every morning a simple, devotional service, with Scripture reading, sacred song, and prayer. The students and professors in the building hold a service every Sabbath morning. The Bible is studied in a careful, scientific, and reverent spirit." Former pupils now residing in the country have written to express their thankfulness for having found the true Christian religion when at the College. The Jesuits apparently believe in its influence, for they have shown themselves much opposed to it, and it has even come to this, that a society called "De Preşevanda Fide" has been formed to combat the work of the Methodists in Rome, more especially this College. The Pope has also issued indulgences to all those who will help in fighting this "heretical" institution! This is, no doubt, a work that has already had, and will have, deep and lasting results, that will surely help to bring light and progress in the midst of irreligion and Romanism.

On the Assam Frontier.

THE new home of the missionaries at Sadiya, Upper Assam, has been completed, and Mr. J. Herbert Lorrain writes of the encouraging prospects of the work at this station:—"The Abors, on account of their bloodthirsty raids, have for some years been prohibited from coming into British territory; but about two months ago we heard the welcome news that the Government had decided to raise the blockade, and since then numbers of this wild tribe, in whose country we hope some day to teach the way of salvation, have been down to trade in Sadiya. At first they were rather suspicious of our white faces; but they soon heard that we were "Padré Sahibs," and that we were giving medicine to the sick and suffering, and so some of them ventured to pay us a visit. These braver ones were generally afflicted with some kind of disease or other, and went away happy in the possession of

A LONG-WISHED-FOR REMEDY.

One party of Abors, suffering from ophthalmia, assured us that if the medicine which we had given them should have the desired effect the whole tribe would come down to lay their worldly possessions at our feet. Surely there can be no more potent key than the 'healing art,' combined with sympathetic kindness, to open hitherto fast-barred doors for theentrance of the Gospel messenger! When once the Abors get to know that we are their friends our lives will be as safe in their country as they are here under British protection.

"The Miris, Assamese, and up-country people around us keep most of our spare time occupied in ministering to their sick, and we have reason to believe that here and there not only has the bodily pain been relieved, but the burden of sin has been cast upon the Lamb of God.

"We are deeply thankful to God and to our kind friends for the way in which all our needs have been supplied, and our experiences of the past year send us forward into the future with renewed confidence in the unfailing faithfulness of our Jehovah God, and in your continued practical interest in this effort to give the Bread of Life to the Abors and other wild tribes inhabiting the unexplored recesses of the Himalayas."

Communications respecting the Assam Frontier Pioneer Mission will be received by Mr. T. G. Rogers, 53, Talbot Road, Highgate, London, N.

Distressed Women and Children in South Africa.—The fund inaugurated for the relief of women and children in South Africa, who have been rendered destitute through the hostilities, has met with worthy support. Miss Hobhouse, by going to the Cape, has ascertained the extent and nature of the distress, as well as the relief that is most desirable and needful. She estimates that at the lowest computation there are some 10,000 women and children detained in camps, who are in want of everything outside the absolute necessaries of life. Writing from Bloemfontein recently, Miss Hobhouse says: "I have a family of near 2,000 here, leave alone other places." While acknowledging the generous response which has been made to their appeal, the committee are desirous of reaching a wider public, in order that their delegate shall not be empty-handed in the presence of so much misery. The hon. treasurer of the fund is Lady Farrer, 3, Whitehall Court, S.W.

Among Albanian Girls.

MR. ROBERT THOMSON, of the European Turkey Mission of the American Board, writes (from Samokov, Bulgaria) in the interests of education among the Albanians:—"My father, the late Rev. Dr. Thomson, of Constantinople, suggested that this Mission should take up the Girls' School in Kortcha, and in general should undertake to do what was possible for the people. On this basis the work has now been carried on for four or five years.

"My father left £100 for the evangelization of the Albanians. Up to last summer the disbursements were small; but at that time Mr. Tsilka (a married Albanian), who had completed the scientific and theological courses in our institute, and had then taken the full theological course in America, returned to this country, and was appointed regular evangelist at Kortcha. Meanwhile the school and evangelist at Kortcha are but the minimum of a reply to the apparent readiness of the Albanians for evangelistic work. There are several other places where work might be opened up; and, above all, good tracts and educational works in the vernacular are needed."

Miss Ellen M. Stone, of Salonica, tells of the excellent work being done among women and girls by the sisters Kyrias, who have two brothers also engaged in the work of the Lord among the Albanians. "For eight years the elder Miss Kyrias has been at the head of this, the only school which exists for the education of Albanian girls in their own language. With a devotion which knows no limit save those of the endurance of her body, mind, and soul, Miss Kyrias stands at her post, and is doing a grand work. She has an assistant of the same consecrated spirit with herself, and they find other help from among the girls themselves.

"Hitherto, the school has received only day-pupils, but a small beginning is being made with a boarding department. Miss Parashkevia D. Kyrias graduated from the school at Monastir, Macedonia, last summer; and it is very important that she should be fitted for association with her sister in the directorship of the school by a course of further study in the College for Girls at Constantinople." The annual expense of this would be about £40.

Paris City Mission.

THE twenty-first annual meeting of the Paris City Mission was held on Friday afternoon at the Memorial Hall, Farringdon Street, when Mr. F. A. Bevan presided. The report given by Mr. W. J. Lockie, detailed the work which had been carried on during the year, and the remarkable answers to prayer which had been witnessed in the extensive and successful labours of the twelve missionaries now employed in house-to-house visitation in Paris.

The fact was emphasized that the Mission has never been in debt, and that every amount raised in Great Britain is met by a corresponding sum in France, paid by the pastors or churches employing the missionaries. The death of Mons. Claveau was referred to, and his proposed successor—Mons. Vigier, a converted Roman Catholic priest—was introduced to the meeting. In 1899 Sunday services were instituted by Mons. Vigier in a hall, and with increasing congregations and interest the work is full of promise. The power of the Gospel has been manifest in many conversions. A drunkard was brought to Christ through hearing the story of the Prodigal Son. The man's wife, with a grateful heart, visited Mr. Vigier, to tell him of the change which had come to her husband. "Formerly," she said, "I and my children were cruelly beaten. Now I am happy. My husband reads the Bible, and has family prayers." This is but one among many similar cases. Rev. Geo. Whelpton confirmed Mr. Vigier's statements, and expressed the hope that the £50 required for this addition to the missionary staff would soon be raised. The financial secretary is Mr. H. E. Weylland, 14, Nicoll Road, Harlesden, N.W.

*A Visit to Galilee.

By Rev. E. P. HAMMOND, M.A.

OUR first night beside the Sea of Galilee was passed at Tiberias, one of the four cities which the Jews regard as especially sacred. For they believe that the Messiah will rise from the Sea of Galilee, land at Tiberias, and establish his throne at Safed, which overlooks the lake from the neighbouring heights, the "city that is set on a hill." During the first centuries Tiberias was to the Jew a second Jerusalem. Here for a time was established the Sanhedrim, but in 1837 about 500 lost their lives by an earthquake, and its shattered walls still speak of that terrible tragedy.

We visited the baths of Tiberias. The water issues from the earth, very near the shore of the lake, at the temperature of 144 degrees Fahrenheit, with a bitter taste and a strong smell of sulphur. The house erected over the fountain was of marble construction, contemporary, it is said, with Herod the Great, and perhaps built under his guidance. We found the water at least five feet deep, and so hot as to be well-nigh unendurable.

The next morning it was agreed to have a sail upon the lake, and to witness the union of the Jordan waters with those of Galilee. The accounts we had read of the storms on Galilee seemed exaggerated, for as we looked upon the lake from Safed, and from the shore, it appeared much smaller than we expected. One of our party expressed the desire that we might have a miniature storm, just to call to mind the disciples' experience, when they said, "Master, carest Thou not that we perish?" It was not long before what seemed a perfect tornado burst upon us. As the fierce waves tossed our boat about like a plaything, it seemed as if the lake suddenly expanded in all directions.

I was once upset in a boat on Lake Superior, and had to swim for my life; but only once, and that when we struck an iceberg in the Atlantic, was I so much alarmed. The boat was leaking all the time, and occasionally a large wave paid us an unceremonious visit.

How vividly this brought to mind those memorable words: "There arose a great storm of wind, and the waves beat into the ship, so that it was now full, and He was in the hinder part of the ship, asleep on a pillow; and they awake Him, and say unto Him, Master, carest Thou not that we perish? And He arose, and rebuked the wind, and said unto the sea, Peace, be still, and the wind ceased. He said unto them: Why is it that ye are so fearful? How is it that ye have no faith?" (Mark iv. 37-40).

We thought also of that midnight scene recorded in Mark vi., Luke ix., and John vi. "It was in a desert place," not far from the north-eastern shore of the lake, that He had fed the 5,000 with five loaves and two fishes. As night approached He constrained his disciples to get into the ship and to go to the other side, while He sent away the people. "And when He had sent them away He departed into a mountain to pray. And when the even was come, the ship was in the midst of the sea, and He alone on the land. And He saw them toiling and rowing, for the wind was contrary unto them. And about the fourth watch of the night He cometh unto them, walking upon the sea." No wonder that they were at first alarmed, but when they heard his cheering words, "It is I, be not afraid," all their fear vanished. Yes, and as "He went up unto them into the ship, the wind ceased." We followed the example of the disciples, and crying to Him for his divine assistance with all our hearts we could but feel that He heard our prayer. "And the wind ceased."

As we left Tiberias, riding along the silent shore, and saw the fertile plain of Gennesareth stretching away to our left for two or three miles, with not a house upon it, and only affording sustenance to the wandering Ishmaelites, I could but think of the contrast that scene presented to the eye when our Lord made Capernaum "his own city." At that time all the vale was highly cultivated, and thousands of people inhabited those shores. Eighteen centuries ago Josephus describes Gennesareth as an "earthly paradise, where the choicest fruits grew luxuriantly, and eternal spring reigned." But now, alas! we see the fulfilment of our Saviour's prophecy, and the once flourishing cities which encircled this beautiful sheet of water are blotted from existence. Even their very site is a disputed question.

SUNDAY, MARCH 31.

Missions: Love of Souls (Rom. x. 1).

PAUL'S eager soul poured itself out in longing for the salvation of his people. Here he speaks of his heart's desire and prayer. In the preceding chapter he calls God to witness that he had great heaviness and continual sorrow of heart for them, and would have wished himself accursed from Christ on their behalf, if that had availed to bring them back to God. And these were no idle boasts, because he imperilled his life many a time in his efforts to carry the Gospel to them in their synagogues, in all parts of the known world.

The Apostle Paul had developed in him a very high degree of compassion for souls; and I know of nothing that can sustain us in constant, self-denying, and passionate efforts for men's salvation, unless this holy passion is lighted on the meaner altar of our own hearts. How may we obtain it?

1. Consider well your own salvation. "As we obtained mercy, we faint not," said this great soul-lover. A case in point comes to mind, as I write, in Mr. Gifford, whom Bunyan has immortalized as Evangelist in "The Pilgrim's Progress." He had been a dissolute man as a soldier, and became, if possible, a more scandalously dissolute man as a civilian. His life in Bedford was a public disgrace. He reduced himself to beggary through gambling and drink, but when near suicide he came under the power of the truth. "But at last," so run the records of the church at Bedford, "God did so plentifully discover to him the forgiveness of sins for the sake of Christ, that all his life after he lost not the light of God's countenance, no, not for an hour, save only about two days before he died." Is it wonderful that such a man, knowing so well the darkness and horror of the pit, from the brink of which he had been saved, should spend his life in rescuing others? Think well of what God has saved you from, and what He has saved you for, until your soul is filled with pity for those who are on the edge of perdition, as you were once, and who are missing the eternal joys which stand open before you.

2. Think much of Christ's love to men. What men must be to Him comes out so often in his words. One soul is more valuable than a whole world. If one repents there is joy among the angels, and in the presence of the Father. For one, He is prepared to go over the mountains, wild and bare, through tangled brake, and over precipitous cliff. To save one lost woman He must needs go through Samaria. To assure one malefactor of Paradise He will forget his own dying agony. To restore one backsliding disciple He will appoint a trysting-place on the morning of his resurrection. To Christ one soul was worth all the toil and care of which He was capable. A city full of sinners would elicit copious tears. For a world He would shed blood. Oh to see men as He sees them, until we open our hearts to Him to shed through them, by the Holy Spirit, his own Divine compassion. I remember Mr. Moody saying that he spent a day searching into all the references to our Lord's compassion in the Gospels, till his own heart was filled almost to breaking with the yearning desire for the salvation of others.

3. Read often the biographies of great soul-winners. Have you read the life of M'Cheyne? I read it again and again till I could repeat portions of it almost by heart. It always quickened me, until I felt that I could do and bear all things if only I could see men saved, as he did. Brainerd's life will set you on fire, or Henry Martyn's. It is a good thing to come in contact with living missionaries, to hear them speak, and touch their hand. Oh, that all missionaries who return from foreign fields would remember what young, eager hearts wait to catch the sacred flame from them, to bear it into decades of years, long after their own lips are still in death!

C.E. NOTES.

Last year the Society in Kobe, Japan, raised, with the help of the Women's Society of the Church, nearly £150. This money was used to build a "C.E. House," to provide a comfortable boarding place where young men can be under Christian influence. Twenty can be received at a time.

The sixth annual London Convention will be held at the Metropolitan Tabernacle on Good Friday. In the afternoon, at 3 o'clock, the topic is: "The Endeavourer's Aim;" (1) The development of his own character, Rev. J. D. Lamont; (2) The Advancement of Christ's Kingdom, Rev. D. J. Rounsefell. The subject for the evening gathering at 7 o'clock is, "The Endeavourer's Means of Inspiration;" Prayer, Rev. J. Tolefree Parr; Meditation on the Word, Rev. Thomas Currie; Fellowship, Rev. G. Campbell Morgan. Tickets for admission and tea (9d.) to be obtained from Mr. John Hickman, 17, Wallwood Road, Leytonstone, N.E.

April 7, 1901.

Subject: The Resurrection of Jesus (Luke xxiv. 1-12).
Golden Text: "Now is Christ risen from the dead" (1 Cor. xv. 29).

Key to Blackboard Plan.—The resurrection of Christ from the dead was God's seal to the great plan of salvation. Christ, the first-fruits of the great harvest field, is a surety of our own resurrection. The resurrection was no myth, it was a reality.

A seal is for safety and security.

(1) "Very early" the night had passed, it was the dawn of a new day. So had Christ's night of sorrow, and darkness of death passed away (7).

Study the types of the Resurrection in the Old Testament. Jonah—Matt. xii. 40. Lev. xxiii. 10-12—Sheaf of the first-fruits of your harvest. Also foretold in Isa. xxv. 8; Hos. xiii 14; Psa. xvi. 10; Dan. xii. 2. Jesus Himself foretold his Resurrection (John ii. 19), and Paul said it must have been (Acts xvii. 3). All this shows us it was the crowning point in the redemption of the world, and also that without it redemption would have been incomplete. See also God the Father's part in it all (Heb. xiii. 20; 1 Peter i. 21; Acts iii. 15; 2 Cor, iv. 14; Rom. vi. 4.)

Death is the wages of sin (Rom. vi. 23). Therefore, when Christ had died and risen again, the debt was paid, and He will never die again (Rom. vi. 9). "When Thou hadst overcome the sharpness of death Thou didst open the Kingdom of Heaven to all believers."

Rev. i. 5—First-begotten of the dead.
1 Cor. xv. 20—First-fruits of them that slept.
Heb. vi. 20—Forerunner is for us entered.

All these words teach of the Resurrection, and show Christ risen from the dead.

Acts xxvi. 23—That Christ should be the first that should rise from the dead. Therefore there is no need for the Christian to fear. The empty tomb that Easter morn means empty graves one day for all of us.

Gen. v.—Eight times it says "And he died;" but put against this sentence Rev. xx. 6, 1 Thess. iv. 14, God the Father's part comes also into our resurrection as in Christ's (1 Cor. vi. 14; 2 Cor. iv. 14).

Not only this, but we shall be also in the likeness of his Resurrection (Rom. vi. 5), and we shall be satisfied (Ps. xvii. 15). Can we all speak with the confidence of Job? (xix. 25-27.)

The reality of the Resurrection was witnessed by Mary and the women (10). By the Apostles (Acts iii. 15; iv. 10; x. 40-41; viii. 30-31). By an Angel (Matt. xxviii. 6)—"He is risen." By the stone rolled away—type of the curse of death rolled away, also the fear. By Christ Himself (John xx. 17), &c., and by the Christian to-day.

Christ is our High Priest since He rose (Rom. viii. 34). He is Source of all life (Rev. i. 18), and He is Victor over death and sin (1 Cor. xv. 57). If Christ be not risen (see 1 Cor. xv. 12-20).

The Christian to-dav is a type of the Resurrection. He must die first (John xii. 24; Rom. vi. 4). He dies to sin, and then he rises into the new life of Christ (Rom. viii. 11). He feeds on Christ (John vi. 54). He confesses his belief in Christ (Rom. x. 9). This is the Resurrection life.

See also a type of the death and resurrection of a Christian in Ezekiel xxxvii. 1-14. He lives to Christ (2 Cor. v. 15; Gal ii. 20; Phil. i. 21). Let us all echo the wish with Paul (Phil. iii. 10).

Evangelistic.

Simultaneous Mission Meetings.

THE missioner at Hassocks was Mr. Townshend Martin. The meetings, which were of an impressive character, were held in the Congregational Church (Rev. W. J. Chappell).

During his recent meetings in Cornwall Mr. Herbert R. Francis conducted thirty-two meetings in twenty-one days. Many of his hearers were impressed, and some yielded to the Saviour.

Mr. A. E. Sims, of the Evangelization Society, conducted the meetings at Wilmcote, Tamworth. Through the earnest and faithful preaching, believers were quickened, and there were many decisions for Christ. Blessing was given in the Sunday-school, as well as in the churches.

The meetings at Dartmouth are being largely attended, and through the blessing of God numbers of the people are being brought to decision. Nightly the power and presence of God's Holy Spirit is being realized, and the hearts of Christians, as well as the unconverted, are being touched by Divine power.

W. P.

At Gamlingay, Cambs., the mission was very encouraging. The missioners were Rev. R. Westrope (Westminster Chapel), and Mr. Musa Bhai, a native evangelist from India. Many young people have been brought to a decision. The services were brought to a close by Mr. Musa Bhai delivering a missionary address on "India's Millions."

At Ossett, the continuation of the mission in the south part of the town has proved fruitful. Mr. J. H. Fearnsides, of Batley, was the missioner. There were inquirers every night, both at the children's gatherings and in the evening meetings. The three churches taking part in this movement have been blessed, and rejoice in many accessions to their ranks.

(Pastor) E. Greenwood.

The services at Ashford, Mid., conducted by Rev. D. M. Cameron, have been continued with much blessing. The revival movement reached those who are seldom found in a place of worship. Interest deepened as the Mission proceeded. The services for children were also fruitful. At the suggestion of Mr. Cameron, classes are being arranged, to be led by experienced workers, in order to look well after those who have been brought in during the Mission.

In the Wenvoe District, Vale of Glamorgan, the earnest preaching of Mr. C. Galletly, of the Evangelization Society, has been the means of rousing the Free Churches of the district, and also in impressing the unconverted and bringing some to decision. The meetings were held in Twynyrodyn Baptist Chapel and in the Welsh Presbyterian Chapel. The mission has been fruitful; it has reached many non-churchgoers. Mr. John Cory gave hearty support.

At Wirksworth the mission, which was held in the Town Hall, was conducted by Mr. C. E. Barraclough. The noon-day prayer meetings were Pentecostal, while the afternoon Bible readings were rich in food for the soul. The evening gatherings were the feature of the mission. Hundreds were dealt with in the after-meetings by a large band of workers from all the churches. Over 150 went into the inquiry rooms, a considerable number of whom, mostly young men, voluntarily asked to be allowed to sign the total abstinence pledge. The congregations were large from the first, but they increased every night, until it became necessary, on the last two evenings, to hold overflow meetings in the Temperance Hall, which were ably conducted by Mr. Aspland, of Nottingham College. A large choir rendered most helpful service. The Town Hall was crowded for the farewell meeting, when the missioner spoke encouraging words to the new converts, and, through the kindness of a friend, presented each with a marked Testament.

(Rev.) B. Noble, Secretary Wirksworth Free Church Council.

Mr. Tennyson Smith's recent mission at Bridgend thoroughly stirred the town. The Town Hall was crowded night after night. A mission Mr. Smith has conducted in Coedpoeth has also been fruitful. The interest and enthusiasm grew with every meeting, and people attended from towns and villages for miles around. The Parish Hall, seating over 1,000 persons, on several occasions was packed, numbers being unable to gain admission. The Mission received the heartiest co-operation and support of the Christian ministers and churches of the district. Over 400 adult pledges were taken, in addition to some hundreds which were signed by young people under sixteen years of age.

London Tent Campaign.

With the opening of spring comes the knowledge that soon the time for tent work will arrive, and one of the principles of success in any work is to be ready so that no time be lost. This is especially true of work in tents, for the summer, when such opportunities are given, comes and goes with marvellous rapidity.

Moreover it seems as if the outlook for such work was never more encouraging, for this first year of a new century bids fair to stand out as one of unusual blessing and power in direct Gospel effort. By the great Simultaneous Mission the churches of our country are being greatly stirred. Pastors and people, as never before, are asking, "What can we do?" Alarmed by the awful gulf which seems to exist between the masses and the ordinary church services, they with one voice cry, "Out to the people! If they will not come to us, let us go to them." This is a wise conclusion, and is quite upon apostolic lines, for we have no precedent leading us to expect that the crowds will come to us, rather that we are to go to them, out into the highways and byways; and, even there, we may find them predisposed to resist; and we must "compel them to come in."

Experience has proved beyond question that there is no better way to gather the people than by means of tents, and it is desirable that every city, town, and village in the country should have its "Special United Tent Mission," so that the interest already awakened may be concentrated upon the unreached, unsaved masses. Could not Evangelistic Tent Committees be formed in every county to carry out such work?

To encourage like effort in other centres, a few facts about the London Tent Campaign may be of use. The first great American tent was erected at Dalston in August, 1898, and was afterwards removed to Tottenham, where meetings were sustained until December 27, with unabated interest, 3,000 people gathering on Sundays, and large numbers during the week. The following year, three tents were used with like success.

As a result of the interest and blessing of God upon the work, the committee was enlarged, and the work for 1900 taken up with such enthusiasm, that nine great tents, seating from 1,500 to 2,500 each were used. These were erected in twenty-eight districts in and around London. There were over 1,900 adult services held. These were attended by fully 1,250,000 people. The Gospel was faithfully and lovingly preached by well-known evangelists and soul-winners. As a result over 10,000 names were taken of those who professed to accept Christ as their personal Saviour, and no one acquainted with the work will doubt the figures, for such waves of spiritual power passed over some of the meetings that every heart seemed bowed and broken in the presence of God.

The season's work closed with a great rally of converts and workers at Exeter Hall, and who that was present will ever forget it? The Great Hall was crowded, the Examination Hall and Theatre of the Medical Institute on the Embankment were filled with overflow meetings, and still many were unable to get in. Volumes might be written giving detailed accounts of the Mission, but let the foregoing be enough to convince fellow-workers that the people can be reached by means of large tents, and that the old, old Gospel is still the power of God unto salvation. The same committee, through whose untiring devotion and practical sympathy the work was carried forward to such a splendid consummation, have promised to act this year also, and are already in council praying and planning for still greater things for the coming season. From every section of the city we hear of open doors, and workers anxiously waiting for the tent work to commence.

In order to carry out present plans and open up fresh enterprises for the saving of the perishing, financial help is needed, and we are confident that all the elements are present in this work to call forth the unstinted support of the Lord's people. The hon. treasurer is Mr. A. Garstin, 1-11, Queen Square, Aldersgate Street, E.C., and the secretary, Mr. G. R. Williams, Tent Campaign Office, St. Paul's Buildings, 28 and 30, Paternoster Row, E.C.

Mr. Bob Johnson held a very successful mission service at the West End House Mission Hall, Blackheath Hill, S.E., on March 19. There was a large and attentive audience, and a number of pledges were taken at the close.

L. E. P.

At Stonehouse, Glos., we have just concluded a fifteen days' mission, conducted by Rev. J. F. T. Hallowes, who was followed by Rev. J. F. B. Tinling. A spirit of great earnestness was manifested at all our meetings, and the Bible readings were rich, practical, and helpful. The members of our Free Churches have been thoroughly roused by the powerful presentations of Christian privilege and of the claims and love of Christ. Forty children and adults have been led to decision; but we look for yet greater results.

Thos. Alford, Hon. Secretary.

Mr. Henry Varley in Glasgow.

A correspondent writes:—"We have much cause for thanksgiving in the Mission being held by Mr. Varley at the St. George's Cross Tabernacle. The area of interest increases on all sides. Hundreds come into the meetings from miles around. Mr. Varley's spiritual, clear, and incisive addresses are listened to with the deepest interest. The Scriptures are explained, unfolded, and presented in a way that takes firm hold.

"During the past three weeks Mr. Varley has given more than forty addresses and Bible studies. The people have come to the Tabernacle by hundreds, and to the St. Andrew's Hall by thousands. Large numbers of students, evangelists, and preachers have been and are attending the meetings. On Sunday last, at 2.30, St. Andrew's Hall was packed with 5,000 people, Mr. Varley gave a lecture on 'Billy Bray,' the King's Son. Quaint and deeply interesting, the incidents in the Cornish miner's life, which give his conversion to God, his usefulness and wonderful faith in the living God, held the people in close and rivetted attention.

"At night the Tabernacle was packed, and again the Word of God was proved to be 'living and powerful.' The preacher spoke from the words, 'Now, then, we are ambassadors for Christ.' It was a glorious meeting, quite a number confessed Christ, and the Christians were filled with joy and rejoicing. It is said that hundreds in the city are convicted of sin. Mr. Varley's lectures to men, and his burning words against unbelief and every form of moral and social iniquity, have produced deep and lasting impressions.

"The fourth week of this remarkable work commenced on Sunday, and the evening saw Mr. Findlay, Mr. Varley, and a number of the Tabernacle workers heading a torchlight procession. One difficulty in the work has been, and is, the stolid indifference which holds the great mass of the people. Like Gallio, they seem to care for none of these things. The whisky fiend holds and possesses vast numbers in the city, and the professed Church is in the main utterly silent to this debasing and destroying drink traffic.

"The meetings are to be continued until Monday, April 1. The St. Andrew's Hall has been again secured for the closing Lord's Day, The Bible studies have aroused deep interest, and hundreds come together daily at 3. These continue to the end of the week. The addresses each night are being given to crowded audiences at the Tabernacle, St. George's Cross. Mr. Varley says that not only has the Tabernacle Mission rendered him invaluable help, but the sympathy, fire, and loving energy of the great company who belong to St. George's Cross has been above praise. He regards Mr. Findlay's work as a model one, and as being carried on with spiritual power and strong common sense. The Mission has taken firm hold of the Christians, and hundreds readily tell of the blessing that has come to them from Mr. Varley's ministry." Mr. Varley begins his campaign at Aberdeen on Tuesday next.

Mr. Ira D. Sankey's Meetings.

Mr. Sankey is continually receiving invitations to hold meetings in various parts of the United States. He recently visited Albion, Michigan, and the Albion Daily News said:—"Fully 1,000 people gathered in the Methodist Church, filling the great auditorium to the doors, to hear the noted singing evangelist in a lecture entitled 'Sacred Song and Story.'" Mr. Sankey also visited Battle Creek, where there were very large attendances, and much interest was aroused.

Mr. Samuel Levermore at Bathgate, N.B.

Under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A., Mr. Levermore has conducted a mission at St. David's United Free Church, Bathgate. After the opening nights, there was not a meeting without inquirers; in one or two cases whole families have been blessed. A special feature of the work was the number of young men brought to the Lord, also the absence of excitement, the meetings being of a very quiet character. Bible readings were held in the Y.M.C.A. Hall; these proved a source of great help to Christians. Revs. David Kater, M.A., and Christopher Nicholson rendered very hearty assistance; Mr. Kater's sympathy and tact in the after meetings greatly contributing to the fruitfulness of the work. Mr. and Mrs. Gerrie, of Leith, also took part, Mrs. Gerrie's singing and Mr. Gerrie's assistance in the services being greatly blessed.

Mr. Ned Wright at Crewkerne.

Crowds of people have gathered to hear Mr. Ned Wright during his mission at Crewkerne. On the first Sunday afternoon 600 children were gathered into the Victoria Hall to hear him, and at night hundreds of people were turned away. An overflow meeting was held in the Baptist Chapel. Two hundred work-people from the factories assembled day after day for a noonday prayer meeting in the hall. Afternoon Bible readings were given in the Bible Christian Chapel, and every night the Victoria Hall was crowded.

A correspondent of the Western Chronicle, describing the later meetings, says:—"Ned Wright has evidently been a God-sent man to the town. About 200 persons have professed salvation through faith in Christ during the mission, the influence having been wonderful and widespread. The most remarkable meeting was the Sunday afternoon gathering for men only, when 350 men—and some of them the roughest characters in the town—were drawn to listen to the message of mercy."

"We Never Saw It on this Fashion."

It is no disparagement of the glorious traditions that are attached to the sanctuary known as "Wesley," which is the head of the Preston Wesley Circuit, when we venture to use such a passage as stands at the head of this report. Not within the memory of the oldest officials has such a remarkable work of God been witnessed at Wesley as during the recent mission, conducted by Mr. Josiah Nix. The Sunday services were remarkable for the power of God which rested especially on our young people.

The interest and power were sustained and increased night by night, and the church was crowded to its utmost capacity. On Wednesday night Mr. Nix, at the close of his address, invited the Christians present who had not been living a brave and enthusiastic Christian life, to come out and reconsecrate themselves at the communion rail. The space was rapidly filled, and as some left others took their places, and this continued until the meeting closed, and was repeated again on Thursday night. The Bible-readings on Tuesday and Thursday afternoons were splendidly attended, and the means of much blessing.

On Thursday afternoon the shop assistants "At Home" was held. About 250 responded to the invitation. Mr. Nix gave an interesting and forceful address, drawing valuable lessons from his long association with shop assistants. At the close 125 pledges were taken, and we then adjourned to the church for the evening meeting, which was a time of power, and there were many decisions for Christ.

The service on Friday night, in spite of its being "cleaning-up day" in Lancashire, found a crowded congregation, and there were many more seeking the Lord. Next came the most remarkable service of the series. At 10.30 p.m. some hundreds assembled for the midnight meeting, and soon started on their march, headed by the Salvation Army band, Mr. Nix, and the ministers of the circuit, and led by a trusty scout, who pointed out the line of march through the streets where public-houses most abounded.

We were followed by a crowd of people numbering at least 2,000. More than half entered the church. It was indeed a never-to-be-forgotten scene, drunken men and shameless women singing the Gospel as in the days of their innocent childhood, with tears streaming down their faces as they listened to the burning words of Mr. Nix. At the close of this memorable service eighty-six entered the inquiry room. The second Sunday was as remarkable as the first. There were crowds of people, and scores of seekers. Some very touching scenes have been witnessed, Young men and women having found the peace of God themselves, have at once started out with true missionary zeal to search for relatives, friends and neighbours, and have again and again returned, bringing trophies to the feet of Jesus. Husbands have brought their wives, and wives their husbands. Requests for praise have been read for the conversion of whole classes in the Sunday school.

John Barns, Wesleyan Minister.

In the Primitive Methodist Church, Aspatria, Mr. Thomas Goudie, of the Evangelization Society, held a mission, March 4-17. A spirit of deep conviction rested upon the people, and the meetings were fruitful, over sixty entering the inquiry room. W. H.

Mr. John Hawkins has just finished eight days' services at Stratford Railway Mission. Interest and numbers increased night by night. The Bible readings to Christians were full of help and blessing. Many of the unsaved sought salvation and are now rejoicing in the Lord.

At Arborfield, Reading, Mr. R. Jones has conducted a seventeen day's mission, combining his services with those of the Simultaneous Mission. Tokens of blessing accompanied the work, unsaved ones have been aroused, and Christians edified. Messrs. Rhodes and Walker also took part in the work.

The Wesleyan cause at Longton, in Preston, Lime Street Circuit, has received an impetus by a fruitful mission conducted by Rev. Fred Cunningham, the circuit minister. At every service there were inquirers, and the result is that over seventy were brought to the Lord. The minister spent his days in visiting the people.

Thos. Rushton, Society Steward.

Miss Eleanor E. Archer writes: "An evangelistic mission, which has been a good sequel to the encouraging meetings held in Warwick in connection with the Simultaneous Mission, has just closed with the voice of true praise. The inaugural service of the mission was held Lord's Day evening, March 10, in the Leycester Place Meeting Room, when the missioner, Mr. E. Mayo, of Coventry, was assisted by Mr. G. Kenwick, of Birmingham. The meetings were continued each night for a week, and were marked by the felt presence and power of God.

Cooke, evangelist, 61, Durham Road, Black Hill.

Brighton Central Mission.—For the last forty years mission work has been carried on by the Windsor Street Mission in Brighton. For many years the late Lady Ogle kept a missionary, and there was an ingathering of many souls. At her death a Christian doctor, until lately residing in the town, supported the work under the direction of Rev. J. B. Figgis, Miss Alice Coker, now at the Connaught Institute, being the first superintendent. She was succeeded by Lieut.-Colonel Roberts, R.A., and for the last four years the work has been carried on by Col. Philips. Some months since a notice to give up the premises was received, and every door seemed closed as regards a place for the work; but just at that time the way was opened at the Athenæum Hall, North Street, and this has now been secured for a year, the opening gatherings taking place on March 31. The work includes a large Sunday school, weekly Bible readings, &c.

Among the Churches.

An attack of influenza is detaining Mr. A. H. Baynes, the general secretary of the Baptist Missionary Society, from the duties of his office.

In the Congregational Churches Rev. Ebenezer Rees has accepted the ministry of Grange Church, Sunderland; Rev. G. E. Page of Healey Church, Heckmondwike; Rev. S. Stanton of the church at Lisburn.

In the Baptist Churches Rev. A. Fletcher has become pastor of Prewett Street Church, Bristol; Rev. C. E. P. Autram of the church at Woking, Surrey: and Rev. R. T. Anderson of Adnitt Road Church, Northampton.

The whole of the £50,000 which it was proposed to raise for Church extension in connection with the Presbyterian Church of England has been promised, and the gift of £1,000 offered by Mr. J. A. Maclean has thus been secured.

In connection with Vernon Baptist Chapel, W.C., a series of Sunday evening services is to be commenced at the new Euston Theatre, Euston Road, N.W., on Sunday, March 31, at 7 p.m. Addresses will be given by Pastor Moore.

Recent special services at Denbigh Road Wesleyan Church Bayswater (Rev. Dinsdale T. Young), attracted large congregations, and the pastor's words were blessed to many hearers. At a "social hour," held at the conclusion of the service on Sunday week, Mr. Samuel Smith took part.

A recent meeting of the London and Middlesex Friends was attended by about 200 members. The condition of the Society in the metropolis was naturally under consideration, and it was stated that about 10,000 persons in and around London are in some measure reached by the Friends.

Christ Church, Aldershot, has celebrated its first anniversary, the preachers being Revs. T. R. H. Sturges and F. T. Gregg, M.A., of Brighton. A correspondent writes: "God has graciously blessed this reformed church in witnessing for the truth against sacerdotalism. Rev. Bradbery Parker is fighting a good fight."

Heavy financial responsibilities are pressing just now upon the Church Missionary Society, and it is therefore cheering to know that £5,000 has been received from an anonymous donor for work in India and China. Various sums have also been sent by missionaries in the field in order to avert a deficit.

Canon Hobson, vicar of St. Nathaniel's, Windsor, Liverpool, has announced his intention of resigning his living in May next. For some time past he has been suffering from impaired health, which has resulted in extreme weakness. Canon Hobson has been vicar of St. Nathaniel's for thirty-three years, and during that time has carried on a fruitful work on evangelical lines.

At a meeting of the Truro Cathedral Committee, the Bishop (Dr. Gott) announced that the recent offer of £10,000 for the building of the central tower of the Cathedral was made by Mr. J. H. Dennis, of Arrowe Hall, Cheshire, and Grenchurst Park, Surrey. Mr. Pearson, the architect, said that the erection of the tower could go on simultaneously with the building of the nave, now in progress.

The late Bishop of London arranged for the Diocesan Conference to be held on days which have subsequently been appropriated by the Convocation of Canterbury. The Bishop-Designate has now fixed June 4 and June 5 for the next session in the Great Hall of the Church House. Members who wish to move resolutions are requested to write to Prebendary Glendinning Nash, hon. clerical secretary, Chapter House, St. Paul's, before May 1.

The recent meeting of the Presbyterian committee on intercourse with colonial and other churches was rendered exceptionally interesting by reason of the presence of Dr. Porteous, of Harrismith, who pleaded the cause of the disabled Presbyterian Church of South Africa, half of whose congregations are shattered, and one-fifth of whose charges are almost obliterated. It was agreed to bring the matter prominently before the synod.

St. Paul's Church, Canonbury, is in great need of restoration. The parish efficiently maintains large day schools (with systematic Bible teaching), and last year raised nearly £1,000 for home and foreign missions, and its parochial work. The vicar, Rev. H. L. C. de Candole, 72, Marquess Road, Canonbury, N., writes: "The total cost will be practically £2,500, and towards this sum £1,500 has been raised or promised. The last £1,000 is a real difficulty, and we are compelled to look for outside help in order to raise it."

At a meeting at the Lancashire College Settlement, Hulme, in connection with the Manchester Sunday School Union, an address was delivered by Rev. Carey Bonner, who spoke of the need for well-equipped and properly trained teachers in the schools, and urged the importance of Sunday school unions throughout the country developing some well-considered scheme of teacher training. He drew attention to the teachers' training college in Birmingham, of which the teachers of the district make great use for its evening classes.

In a recent utterance Canon Hensley Henson referred to "the enormous and extravagant cost of the mere accessories of religious worship, the elaborate and costly decorations, the immense sums expended on instruments and music, and the vast scale and cost of mechanical singing." The speaker contrasted these things with the sums expended on active charity, and pointed out that the Church cannot permanently get hold of the consciences, the hearts, and the reason of people by providing them with elaborate and æsthetic amusements.

Meetings in support of the Congregational Twentieth Century Fund were held on March 20, at the Central Hall, Manchester. In the afternoon Rev. J. H. Jowett spoke of the importance of personal Christian service for the regeneration of the world. He would not give a breath for the Twentieth Century Fund unless he thought that its great and primary purpose is to win the world for Christ. At a public meeting in the evening Mr. Albert Spicer explained that the fund was intended to be only a central one, but it was found that this would not satisfy the churches as a whole. Out of the half a million of money promised £356,000 will go direct to local funds.

Fallen Asleep.

Rev. John Pinn, Congregational minister, who for a few years has been living in retirement at Brixham, passed peacefully away on March 9. Many souls had been won for Christ through his efforts, and churches have been revived and built up by his earnest and assiduous labours.—Rev. R. T. Dowriggin who has been labouring faithfully as a missionary for the last thirty years at Cotta, Ceylon.—A telegram was received on March 20 by the Baptist Missionary Society announcing the death of Rev. J. L. Roger, of Arlington Mission Station, Stanley Pool, Congo. Mr. Roger first went to the Congo thirteen years ago.

Requests for Prayer.

For fifteen days' work in Newcastle, from March 31 to April 14, conducted by Herbert R. Francis.

For a fortnight's mission for the young by Mr. Josiah Spiers, at Helensburgh, commencing March 31.

American Notes.

THE National Women's Christian Temperance Union is going to take the doctors in hand now, with regard to the use of intoxicating liquors for medicinal purposes. The most important women in the organization have been appointed for the national, State, county, and local superintendents of a special department created for this purpose. Mrs. Martha M. Allen, of Syracuse, N.Y., the National superintendent, has prepared a circular letter, of which 100,000 copies are to be sent out to the physicians of the United States. It appeals to them to aid the efforts made by the members of the W.C.T.U. to remove all temptations to the formation of the drink habit.

Among the appropriations made a few days ago by the American Bible Society was one of 5,000dols. for Bible distribution by colporteurs among the negroes in the Southern States. This plan is a new departure for the Society, which has hitherto distributed the Word through agencies and societies.

The Chicago headquarters of the Volunteers of America—the organization headed by Mr. and Mrs. Ballington Booth—was wrecked on March 11 by a boiler explosion on the ground floor, but though a number of people were killed, none of the Volunteers were even injured. The building was a large one, containing two large halls, besides a number of rooms used for offices and living rooms.

Some sensation has been created in Denver, Colorado, by the resignation of his pastorate by Rev. Robert F. Coyle, of the Central Presbyterian Church of that city. He has occupied his pulpit for five months, and has found the position he was expected to fill quite incompatible with his ideas of right and wrong. He could not smile upon "the iniquities of fashionable life," he would not tolerate wine parties given by members of his church, and he could not affiliate dancing with a fitness for church membership. His conscience could not be satisfied simply by living in an expensive parsonage, preaching poetical or philosophical sermons on Sundays, and making fashionable calls during the week, even if he were paid 5,000dols. a year for the performance of these duties. So he leaves the church and the 5,000dols on June 1.

The Utah House of Representatives has passed, by twenty-five votes to seventeen, the Senate Bill to protect polygamy. The Salt Lake Tribune, under the caption "The Shame of It," says:—"The Bill of Senator Evans, designed to draw all protection around the actual practice of polygamy in Utah, is but a rehash of a statute which was passed by the Territorial Legislature of Utah some forty years ago. The purpose of that bill was to prevent interference from outside, and to hold a perpetual club over women who have been drawn into the polygamy net. Now the object is to protect all persons in the defiance of the law, unless they please to plead guilty, or unless one or the other of the pair involved becomes jealous as to the sanctity of his or her preserve." Governor Wells, himself a Mormon, vetoed the Bill avowedly to serve the interests of the Church. Rev. W. R. Campbell, of Salt Lake City, who has been a Home missionary among the Mormons for fifteen years, informs me that the Governor had undoubtedly obeyed the instructions of the hierarchy in vetoing the Bill, as it had evidently been received with disfavour through the country.

A despatch from Kalamazoo, Michigan, says that early on March 14 billiard tables, pool tables, cards, and other fixtures of a country gambling joint went up in smoke at Fulton, while hundreds of townspeople held a jubilation around the bonfire they had kindled at the instigation of the women of the W. C. T. U. Their leader, Mrs. Peter Dir, president of the local union, compelled the proprietor to sell his paraphernelia at a ridiculous figure before it was turned into kindling wood. Asked if a new joint opened in Fulton would be handled in the same manner, Mrs. Dir replied, "No, we won't pay out any more cash for pool tables. The next man who opens here will get his place smashed, and get no money in return either."

New York. ROGER MARTIN.

Las Palmas, Grand Canary.—A lady who has been staying in this island writes: "The Lord has thrown me with dear Christian people (Mr. and Mrs. McKnight), with whom I have been staying for a week among the mountains. They are doing a good work among poor dark priest-ridden Spaniards; but they have had to suffer for the cause of Christ. It is marvellous to see the eagerness with which the people drink in the Word of God. The harvest truly is great, but the labourers are few. These friends have prayers morning and evening with the servants—two men and two women. All read and express a thought or two on the reading, all pray, and all sing. It is most united worship, not like the formal family worship in England. The schoolmaster, who used to be a bitter opponent, now comes to read the Holy Scriptures, and passes on to the children all that he hears."

Scottish Notes.

[BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

REV. JOHN MACPHERSON, who recently sent in an application for a colleague and successor in the pastorate of Hilltown U.F. Church, Dundee, has—in response to an appeal from his people—withdrawn it.

At a meeting in Dundee last week it was pointed out that, in connection with the Wesleyan Methodist Home Mission Fund, the expenditure in Scotland last year exceeded the contributions from that country by £625 10s.

The Glasgow City Mission has just held its seventy-fifth annual meeting, when the reports showed that while it had been necessary to withdraw three missionaries, there was steady progress in all other departments.

A huge aggregate meeting was held in Dundee last week in connection with the Boys' and Girls' Religious Society. The occasion was the celebration of the twentieth anniversary, and the Kinnaird Hall was crowded with an audience numbering about 3,000. Mr. John W. Shepherd presided, and the address for the day was given by Mr. John Stewart, children's evangelist from Glasgow.

At the annual meeting of the Scottish Reformation Society, which has now reached its jubilee year, Sheriff C. J. Guthrie, in moving the adoption of the report and the re-election of the office-bearers, said he took encouragement from the fact that Roman Cauholicism was infinitely worse to-day than it was at the Reformation. Although it might be increasing its priests there was alarm amongst the heads of the Romish Church regarding its relation to the people.

Langside Free Church has all along been noted as a centre of Christian Endeavour activity. At the annual conversazione of the congregation last week, the following items appeared, among others, in the report. In connection with the Societies there are three grades—junior, intermediate, and young people's, having a respective membership of 80, 32, and 109. Last year a quantity of provisions was distributed among the people in the poorer districts of Crossmyloof, and the open-air meetings at Langside Monument have been productive of much good. They have representatives in China and India, and they support a child in Quarrier's Homes.

At the annual meeting of the Glasgow Widows' Friend Society, Lord Provost Chisholm paid a high compliment to the management of local institutions, giving it as his opinion, after not a little inquiry and observation, that the philanthropic societies of Glasgow, in comparison with the philanthropic societies of any city he knew, and very specially in comparison with the philanthropic societies of London, were conducted with an economy that was absolutely marvellous, and the Widows' Friend Society only was one illustration of that which many of them had ample opportunities of knowing—that the philanthropic societies of Glasgow were conducted largely by Christian merchants of the city who gave their time, thought, and labour without fee or reward, save that highest of all rewards, the knowledge that "they did what they could."

The report presented last week at the meeting of the Glasgow Houses of Shelter for Females, deserves close and earnest attention on the part of all who are specially interested in such work. The fact is stated, with regret, that an increasing number of the inmates were restless and did not stay the full time. At Hill Street Shelter the number of admissions was considerably greater than in former years, but more of the women this year only stayed a short time. Of those who remained the full period in the house many are doing well, and they had very good accounts of others who were mentioned in previous reports, and who continue to give satisfaction in their several situations. Although there have been disappointments, many falling away and returning to their old habits of whom better things were expected, there had also been some encouragement.

Protests are accumulating against the opening on Sunday of the Edinburgh Museum. At a largely-attended meeting last week, Rev. Mr. Shiach reported that the Sabbath Alliance had memorialized the Scottish Department, and the answer they had received from "My Lords" through Sir Henry Craik was to the effect that they did not feel themselves justified in withholding this privilege from those desiring to avail themselves of it. "Experience alone," the answer went on to say, "would furnish grounds for judging as to the experiment, and to what extent the inhabitants desire to take advantage of the opening of the museum." The chairman, Sir Archibald S. L. Campbell, Bart., of Succoth, remarked there had been no reason for this step, and it had come upon them like a "bolt from the blue." One important point which is being kept well in the front is that the step involves the disqualification for employment in the department of all who object to the performance of such work on the Lord's Day. A committee was appointed to ask an audience with Lord Balfour and Sir Henry Craik, so that the resolutions might be placed before them, along with other protests and petitions which were being prepared by kirk sessions. All the resolutions were adopted.

[BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

THE distinguished Welsh writer and commentator, Dr. Cynddylan Jones, has a long and able review in last week's "Golenad" of a book entitled "Craig yr Pesau," by Rev. R. Williams, Llanllechid. The book is written in defence of the Old Testament, and the reviewer speaks in high terms of the author's arguments as being an effective refutation of the attacks of science and the "Higher Criticism."

The ex-priests who attended the recent Free Church meetings at Cardiff held a meeting on the following Sunday evening at the Cory Hall in the same town. Four of them gave addresses giving their reasons for leaving the Roman Catholic Church and adopting the Protestant faith. Rev. George Whelpton, of Paris, acted as interpreter, and also delivered an address. Mr. Whelpton narrated the case of one priest who had been sent out to hinder the work of American missionaries in America, but who returned after seeing their work, and left the Church of Rome.

The fact has been commented on that Wales has not yet sought to have the Revised Version of the Bible translated into the vernacular. An announcement has been made that the Oxford and Cambridge Press are ready to bring out such a translation if an application be made by the Welsh bishops. It may be as well to remind those who comment unfavourably on the slowness of the Christian Church in Wales to take steps in the matter, that the present Welsh translation of the Bible is decidedly in advance of the English Authorised Version.

Oxford Letter.

[BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

AT the annual meeting of the Oxford Free Church Council, Mr. J. Massie, while not favourable to frequent missions, said we must not lose sight of what these missions so adequately represented—that a solemn and deliberate surrender of self was the only sure entrance into the Christian life, was the only sure pathway to the Christian glory.

We had a visit from Dr. Paton on Wednesday. He told his wonderful story with a simple directness and a touching pathos that moved all hearts. A story of what appears a direct intervention in answer to prayer was that of the savage horde which descended upon the village in which they were working and threatened them with extermination. "Pray hard," was the cry of the natives to the missionaries. The result was that the savages halted, consulted together, and in complete silence walked slowly away.

At an important meeting of the Oxford Licensed Victuallers' Association, some revelations were made as to the way the trade views the efforts which are being made for temperance reform. Mr. E. Levy, of Birmingham, speaking of the two Bills brought before the House of Lords last week, and of the Bill for Prohibiting the Sale of Intoxicating Liquors to Children, urged that they threatened the trade. The reply of the trade must be to all these efforts, "Organize, organize, organize." There was a reference made during the meeting to a readiness to help on reform; but the tenour of the speeches made it very clear that anything that tended to restrict the sale would be strenuously opposed. It is the old cry of vested interests. That these may be preserved it matters little who or what is sacrificed. It is much to be regretted that uncompromising resistance is the note struck on the bills now before the House.

Postal and Telegraph Employes.

THE general annual Conference of the Postal and Telegraph Christian Association (senior) for clerks and postmen was held on March 19 and 20, at the City Temple, when addresses were given by Rev. A. BEVAN and Mr. STANLEY SMITH.

Delegates from the London districts, as well as from various parts of the country, were present. An earnest work is going on at home in connection with this Association, and it is extending to the Colonies and to other lands. The open doors of opportunity are steadily on the increase.

The prayerful remembrance of God's people would be much valued in the maintenance of the Central Postmen's Rest, London, the initiation of a small Convalescent and Holiday Home at the seaside, the wider extension of printed Gospel messages among the post officials in Roman Catholic and heathen countries, and in the latter the support of travelling evangelists.

Obituary.

MR. J. J. KEEN, CHAGFORD.

On March 11, at Chagford, Devon, aged seventy-eight, Mr. John J. Keen passed away suddenly. Brought to the Lord at the advanced age of fifty, he at once set to work for his Master, and when Messrs. Moody and Sankey visited these shores, he was one of the most active workers in the inquiry room, also visiting Ireland with the Evangelists. He kept up correspondence with those whom he had been the means of leading into the light. Up to recent days he received many letters in reply to his, showing how helpful his words of counsel and sympathy had been.

REV. JOSEPH STONEHOUSE.

The London Missionary Society loses a devoted worker in Rev. Joseph Stonehouse, who, according to intelligence received in London on Tuesday last, has been murdered by the Chinese at the ferry of the village of Whanga-lo, on the Hun-ho River, ten miles west of Tung-ngan-hsien, where he was distributing relief to the starving villagers. Mr. Stonehouse lived for some hours after being attacked. The headman of the village informed the British at Lo-fa Station of the occurrence. Mr. Stonehouse had been in China since 1882, apart from a furlough from 1892 to 1894. He was married, and was in his forty-seventh year.

REV. JOHN HUTCHISON, D.D.

A highly esteemed minister of the United Free Church of Scotland has just passed away at Constantinople in the person of Rev. John Hutchison, D.D., senior minister of Bonnington congregation, Leith. Born at Glasgow towards the close of the year 1835, Dr. Hutchison distinguished himself specially in the Greek classes at the university of that city. In 1861 he was licensed by the Glasgow Presbytery of the United Presbyterian Church; and, after a course of further study in Germany, was ordained to the pastorate of a new congregation at Renfrew. After labouring there for fourteen years he was translated to Leith. Dr. Hutchison was of a retiring disposition, and, consequently, did not make a prominent figure in church courts. Yet his merits did not go without recognition, for in 1874 he received his doctorship in divinity from his alma mater, and in 1897 was elected Moderator of the Jubilee Synod of the United Presbyterian Church. He took a share in the compilation of the "Scottish Hymnary," and was also a member of the Union Committee. His published works, which have attained a high position in the opinion of ministers and scholars, include commentaries on Thessalonians and Philippians, and volumes on "Our Lord's Signs in St. John's Gospel," and "The Church; its Life and Work."

MR. ANDREW BYERS, LANGHOLM.

On Sabbath, March 17, Mr. Andrew Byers, Langholm, an outstanding Christian worker, "fell asleep in Jesus." For more than thirty years Mr. Byers has been a stalwart in Temperance Reform, and he has long been actively engaged in evangelistic work as a Gospel singer and preacher, and as secretary of the Langholm Home Mission. Large united and fruitful evangelistic campaigns were frequently organized by him. Being of a bright, active, and kindly disposition, he was much beloved. His illness, of a lingering character, was borne with singular resignation. All classes in the community and neighbouring districts mourned his departure because of his worth and work. His death and the committal of his body to the dust "till He come," brought additional glory to his Master. Mr. Byers, who was a native of Annan, was brought to a knowledge of the truth under Rev. E. P. Hammond, of America, in 1861. His after Christian life was not a little influenced by his saintly pastor, Rev. E. Young. Soon after his conversion he was led to take a very definite stand for Christ. He used to tell how that, "from the time of my conversion I had a great desire to devote my whole time to the work of the Lord; but He has kept me in my calling, and at the same time has enabled me by his grace to witness to his saving power, and to have a share in the blessed service of winning souls in a way I never could have dreamed of. To Him be all the praise."

An East London P.S.A.

One of the most interesting pieces of work in connection with Dr. Barnardo's great People's Hall, "The Edinburgh Castle," is that of the P.S.A. It has thriven remarkably, and has secured a firm hold of the adult population of the district.

The annual meeting of the P.S.A. is always an enthusiastic occasion, and the eighth year's festival held on Monday evening last was no exception to the rule. One keen disappointment there was—the absence, through continued indisposition, of the esteemed president, Dr. Barnardo.

Mr. Walter Notman, who has the general oversight of "The Castle," took the chair. The report, which he read, told of a membership of over 1,100, of increased interest in the temperance movement, of satisfactory results in spiritual matters, and, indeed, of all-round progress. Mr. Notman's pungent remarks were hailed with satisfaction, especially his references to the healthy condition of the women's P.S.A., which is under the guidance of Mrs. Wookey.

The lengthy programme of the proceedings included a large number of musical items, notably a solo, rendered with deep feeling by Miss Angel. Rev. J. Morgan Gibbon gave a telling address, encouraging his hearers to a life of deeper consecration; but after all, perhaps, the chief feature of the evening was the audience itself, a large and intelligent assembly of about 1,000 people, who entered with zest into the spirit of the occasion, and displayed the keenest interest in the spiritual welfare of the organization. Such a gathering was a glowing testimony to the beneficent influence of a well-managed P.S.A.

Canadian Emigrants.

As indicated in our report last week of the noon meeting at the Aldersgate Y.M.C.A., Dr. Barnardo has been busy of late preparing his first party of emigrants "for the Year and for the Century." That party sailed on Thursday for Canada from Liverpool by the steamer Tunisian. We commend this precious cargo of rescued lives to the prayers of God's people, that they may have journeying mercies and that they may be blessed and prospered in the land of great opportunities beyond the Atlantic.

The present party is 255 strong, of whom 251 are boys and lads, mostly of younger years. The average age of the group is just under twelve years, so that they will be well acclimatized before entering upon ordinary situations. Eighty-one of them had, in the past, lived on the streets and by the streets in London and in provincial cities, but even under the pressure that such a life implies, none had yielded to the temptations to dishonesty. They were originally admitted to the Homes from all over the United Kingdom. One was from Belgium, and another was from India. This party will bring the total number of emigrants from the Home up to the total of 11,846, of whom, up to the present, under 2 per cent. have turned out failures.

Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland.—The annual sermons in connection with this Society were preached at St. Mary's Church, Belfast, on the 17th inst., by the secretary, Rev. J. O. Gage Dougherty. Referring to the Readers, the preacher said the majority were men of humble position, but all men of God, who simply read the Scripture from house to house and prayed with the people. How could the ministers of Belfast meet the numerous calls of the parish with its 40,000 inhabitants, were it not for the aid rendered by the agents of the Society? Mr. Dougherty gave a sketch of a week's work of a single Reader, from which it appeared that the average number of daily visits is eighteen, besides numerous cottage meetings in the evenings.

About Books.

MR. MORLEY'S "OLIVER CROMWELL."

As the years pass, and the great issues of the Puritan period of English History are more fully understood, so does the character of Oliver Cromwell stand out in strength and grandeur. Having been denounced as a regicide and apostrophised as a hero, the man is at length presented in his proper character—an undoubted genius, humble as a Christian, strong as a leader of men.

Never were the epoch-making events of the seventeenth century set forth with such striking impressiveness as in the remarkable volume of the Right Hon. John Morley, M.P.—Oliver Cromwell (10s. nett. Macmillan). The portraiture of the man is executed in the light of the latest research; the thoughts and deeds of the men and parties of the time are outlined in living and interesting detail. The pages are as eloquent in literary style as they are rich in historical material.

Mr. Morley's book exhibits a significant grasp of the spirit of Puritanism. We hesitate to accept all his inferences regarding the actions of the great preachers and teachers of the time; the full and complete vindication of much that passed in the days of Baxter and Owen, Cartwright and Howe, has yet to appear. But even in the prologue we have a foretaste of the powerful analysis of human motive and action which characterizes Mr. Morley's noble work. This is what he says of Cromwell:

"It is hard to deny that wherever force was useless Cromwell failed; or that his example would often lead in what modern opinion firmly judges to be false directions; or that it is in Milton and Bunyan rather than in Cromwell that we seek what was best, loftiest, and most abiding in Puritanism. We look to its apostles rather than its soldiers. Yet Oliver's largeness of aim; his freedom of spirit, and the energy that comes of a free spirit; the presence of a burning light in his mind, though the light in our later times may have grown dim or gone out; his good faith, his valour, his constancy, have stamped his name, in spite of some exasperated acts that it is pure sophistry to justify, upon the imagination of men over all the vast area of the civilized world where the English tongue prevails. The greatest names in history are those who, in a full career, and amid the turbid extremities of political action, have yet touched closest and at most points the wide, ever-standing problems of the world, and the things in which men's interest never dies. Of this far-shining company Cromwell was surely one."

Apart altogether from the human interest of the subject, there is much timely instruction conveyed by this book. To understand the Puritans we must acquaint ourselves of their doings as well as read their works. There is much remaining to be done along both these lines of endeavour. The doings of these men of giant will and unflinching devotion to duty find striking reflection here. The reproduction of Samuel Cooper's portrait of Cromwell is a welcome embellishment of a volume that is in all ways worthy of its great subject.

THE "BAPTIST PULPIT."

The "Baptist Pulpit" is a welcome series of volumes (2s. 6d. nett each) issued by Mr. A. H. Stockwell. Here are three of them.—The Evolution of Faith, and Other Sermons, preached in Cannon Street Chapel, Accrington, by Charles Williams; Christ and Men: Studies in the Human Side of the Christian Life, by W. Y. Fullerton, of Leicester; and Studies in Lord's Prayer, and Other Sermons, by J. E. Roberts, M.A., B.D., of Manchester. Mr. Williams' volume is monumental of a protracted and very useful ministry. The discourse which furnishes the title is based on John iv. 53, which shows faith to originate in a sense of need, to express itself in credence, and to attain its maturity in the loving trust of experience. Twelve in number, these are sound and helpful sermons. Mr. Fullerton is evangelistic as well as Evangelical. His sermons are telling, and his points helped home with abundant illustration. Mr. Roberts devotes three discourses to prayer; the remainder deal with subjects of fundamental importance and sublime interest. Altogether, these volumes promise well for the series. They are all practical, and should be useful in home reading as well as in suggestion to Christian workers.

In view of the forthcoming numbering of the people, we gladly call attention to a booklet in which pertinent questions are answered in the words of Holy Scripture—Census Day, 1901, being Sunday, 31st March. (One penny each, 9d. per dozen.) We understand that it is to be circulated among the people in some churches next Sunday. (A. R. Sidders, 55, King's Road, Chelsea.)

Notes & Comments

OUR "Foundation Truths" articles this week present for thought and meditation, topics that well agree with the season of the year. Dr. Pierson's paper strikes the Good Friday note, and Mr. Varley's proclaims the Easter message. We trust our readers will derive spiritual profit and stimulus from these articles.

Once more we remind our friends that communications for any of the correspondents whose names appear in our columns, may be addressed to our care. Donations in aid of the various branches of work which we bring before our readers may also be sent to Messrs. Morgan & Scott, and acknowledged in our Donation List.

To-day (Thursday) the Jewish feast of the Passover commences. The ceremonies observed are simply puerile as compared with those which the Bible commanded to their fathers. The date nearly synchronizes with Good Friday, and while Christendom commemorates the anniversary of His death who was the true Passover, the Jewish world will be occupied with obsolete and meaningless rites. To-morrow, therefore, will be a suitable occasion for specially remembering in prayer the various enterprises which seek to present the true Messiah to the Hebrew people.

We ask our readers' kind attention to the article "Home Missionary Circle" (page 19), describing an effort set on foot without our knowledge, but which we trust will have large success in extending the Kingdom of God, and also our own usefulness. Mr. Sims informs us that branches have been formed in many places.

The new quarterly number of "One-by-One" is just out (Morgan & Scott. 1d.). It consists of matter showing that (in the words of the late D. L. Moody), "The best way to reach the masses is to reach them one at a time." We warmly commend, amongst others, the article "One v. Crowds," as full of wise suggestion, the result of long experience, and habitual prayer for the salvation of individuals, one by one.

One great lesson taught by the recent Simultaneous Mission has been the absolute necessity of more and better open-air work if the masses are to be laid hold of for Christ. In view of this fact, we heartily welcome the approaching publication of an important little book, written by Mr. Frank Cockrem, secretary of the Open-Air Mission, and entitled, "Highway Witnessing: Words to Open-Air Workers." It ought to circulate in thousands among ministers, evangelists, and Christian workers, and should, wherever studied, result in lifting the great cause of open-air evangelization to an altogether higher level than it has ever yet reached, and in raising up an army of workers to carry it forward. The book will be published shortly by Messrs. Morgan and Scott at 1s.

The growing custom of holding old boys' gatherings in connection with schools and colleges might be tried in ways that would be helpful religiously. An illustration may be given of an actual case in point. A Sunday school class leader having had to give up his class in order to become a superintendent, determined to keep in touch with the scholars, and made a practice of inviting them every year to a social gathering. As they got married their wives were also invited, and later still their children. The full list of those who have passed through the class is twenty-eight; but these now represent 100 persons, who were all present at the last gathering. In this way a deep attachment to Sunday School work, to one another, and to the cause of family religion, has been deepened year by year among this unique circle. It is often the custom of Sunday School superintendents to invite old scholars to the annual meeting of their schools. Could not something more personal, like the case just cited, be more frequently done by the leaders of young men's and young women's Bible classes?

In a somewhat notable study of Acts xx. a recent writer has laid much stress upon St. Paul's idea of the burden of brotherhood and of Christian responsibility. The declaration to the Ephesians that he is pure from the blood of all men, as he had "ceased not to warn every man night and day with tears," to Paul merely represented what was required of all who took the Christ ideal as their rule of life. And that ideal is defined thus:—

> To be spiritually and mentally all we can to the souls we draw near: to wear the crown of their triumph, the burden of their sins, and to identify their cause with ours. We shall know when the eternal light beats on our lives what our share was in many souls quite unregarded by us, a share of their holiness, or a share of their shame. And it is in this way, among others, that many who are last shall be first and many who are first shall be last.

The evil of the "bogus club" continues to grow almost unchecked, the Government apparently being unwilling to take up the question. Speaking at the Municipal Conference held at the Guildhall the other day, the Town Clerk of Nelson said that in that place there were more unlicensed than licensed clubs, and that although the membership of the former exceeded that of the latter by only 1,600, more than 10,000 visitors were introduced to the drink clubs in the year. It is not surprising in the face of such facts, and of the strong testimony from all parts of the country, as to the harm being wrought at these places, to find the Town Clerk of Huddersfield testifying that "the flourishing state of bogus clubs is an obstacle to good government."

"The Trade" is issuing placards for exhibition in public-houses, calling upon workingmen to show their disapproval of the Sale of Drink to Children Bill. This is only natural, but we do not believe the working-men of England will swallow the obvious falsehood that the sending of their little ones for beer "does them no harm," which the evidence before the Royal Commission effectively disproved. We hope that all P.S.A.'s, and every other Christian agency that has the ear of workingmen, will put forth strenuous efforts to enlighten them as to the gross evils arising from the pernicious practice. Now is the time for earnest action, and not a day should be lost to enforce it.

Is not our Temperance work too frequently carried on upon the basis that intemperance is a vice of only the working classes and the poor? A French writer who has recently been commenting somewhat unfavourably upon the agitation in regard to alcoholism in France, has taken occasion to dispute the idea that the surroundings have much to do with the craving for drink, and asserts that the alcoholism is as general in the ranks of the rich, and of the well-to-do classes, as it is among the poor of the overcrowded towns. The point is worthy to be borne in mind by temperance advocates, for it may reasonably be argued that the drink traffic would not be what it is to-day if its only outlet were the low public-house. The writer shows, with many interesting details, that there are in France over 10,000,000 of people either directly or indirectly interested in the success of the drink trade. What must the number be in Great Britain, and how important a factor is this in the opposition to remedial legislation!

We are glad to see that Alderman Rev. Fleming Williams intends seriously to raise at the County Council the question of Sunday entertainments in London theatres. Little by little the entertainers have driven in their wedge—their mallet always labelled "sacred"—until at the present moment they have things pretty much their own way. The business is, as Mr. Williams says, a purely money-making affair, and to pretend that, in the majority of cases, there is any idea of "elevating the masses" is hypocritical nonsense. What with the operations of the National Sunday League, Sunday lectures, Sunday concerts, Sunday cinematographic exhibitions, and Sunday cycling clubs, we are on the highway to losing all the repose of the Lord's Day. After all, the people are not clamouring for most of these Sunday extras; a few syndicates are running them for the sole purpose of making money.

The results of the Mansion House Committee's report concerning hooliganism, and the best way to cure it, will be looked forward to with interest. This is one of the most sinister epidemic outbreaks of ruffianism this generation has seen. Some observers have minimised its significance on the ground that the hooligan has always been with us, and this is but a slightly exaggerated form of a perennial trouble. This is so far true as to make the statement very misleading. Ruffianism is one thing, but its organization into a kind of desperate brotherhood at war with society is another, and it is this last fact that confronts us. It is to be hoped that the report referred to will prove that the investigators have gone to the root of the mischief, and that the result of the inquiry will be the awakening of the public conscience to the primary causes of a desperate and humiliating social danger.

The Lancet uses its great influence to protest against the new and disgusting epidemic prevalent in the North of England, of eating for a wager. It is hardly possible to take up a Yorkshire or a Lancashire weekly paper without reading of some wager to consume a certain quantity of food within a given time. Of course the enterprising publican is behind the thing, the exhibitions taking place frequently at licensed houses. In this way much drink is consumed. The Lancet may well continue—

That this kind of thing should be the pride and ambition of so many does not say much for the refining influences of the education about which such a parade is made, for the competitors in this high-class sport have, no doubt, gone through their "standards" in the regularly prescribed fashion.

But then "education" nowadays is deemed quite a distinct thing from morals or religion. It is the animal alone which, in the estimation of many, is worthy of development.

Mr. George Cadbury, of Birmingham, has set an example of heroic dealing with the overcrowding and housing question. His firm having many years ago removed their works into the country, Mr. Cadbury has given a park worth £170,000, and has built 370 cottages for his workpeople, 143 of which have been purchased by them, and the others let to them at low rents. The profits will be devoted to further developments in the interests of the people themselves. The establishment of such communities, with pleasant and healthful surroundings, was one of John Ruskin's ideas, but no doubt Mr. Cadbury has been influenced by a higher Teacher.

It is gratifying to learn that a Departmental Committee has been appointed by the Board of Education to conduct inquiries as to child labour, and to make suggestions to the Government in regard to legislation for the protection of wage-earning children. In many of our large manufacturing towns the lot of many children is a very painful one, and legislation is necessary to protect them from the hardships to which they are subjected by idle and drunken parents. If all child labour, except in cases in which certificates are given by the local educational authorities, were made illegal, it would go far to lessen the burdens and brighten the lives of the young.

The Camberwell Guardians have now an experience of three years in regard to the system of boarding out the orphan and derelict children of their parish. The results are so satisfactory that the old barrack-like establishments in which the children were herded in hundreds will now be abolished. By-and-by the parish will be dotted over with the tiny homes, each with its "mother" and its ten children of both sexes, who will be brought up in the family life. Taken quite away from the pauper taint, educated with other children at the Board schools, trained as total abstainers, and attending Sunday schools, the little ones are not only removed from much that was evil under the old collective pauper plan, but under the personal influence of good women they are prepared for a useful and good life. Further, as the cost is less, the excellent example should be largely followed throughout the country.

No Englishman can afford to disdain the remarkable series of articles which has appeared in the Daily Express upon the threatened decline in our foreign trade. Making every allowance for exaggeration of special points, there remains much to cause uneasiness. Unless we are blind and deaf the country ought to see that its commercial house is in order. Mr. Lloyd George, M.P., referring to the matter recently, asked why American workmen can beat our own in quickness and skill, and he himself offered a reply by stating that American workmen drink only one-half the quantity of alcohol which British workmen consume. Mr. George pointedly says that a country which annually spends £160,000,000 upon drink is ruining its chances of success in the labour markets of the world. A northern ship-master recently stated that at least twenty per cent. of the delays in fulfilling contracts were directly due to drunken workmen. Are there no means of making these men understand that they are helping to ruin their country as well as themselves?

A correspondent calls our attention to the serious extent to which travelling and sight-seeing are indulged in on the Lord's Day by tourists—many of them professing Christians—in Palestine.

As they are going to see sacred sites, and are in a holy land, they think travelling, which involves mules, horses, carriages, and dragomans, quite pardonable on the Lord's Day.

All this cannot fail to leave an unfavourable impression on the native population among whom missionaries are labouring, and these workers feel sure that, in some cases at least, the matter only requires to be mentioned to secure the attention it deserves. It is hoped that during the season which is now opening a clearer witness will be borne before the Mohammedans in the lives of Christians.

In the discussion upon the Associations (Religious Orders) Bill, now before the French Chamber, a great deal of anti-Christian as well as anti-Catholic feeling is being shown. It is very painful to read of members of the Chamber expressing their approval of the Bill upon the ground that it would clear away not only Catholic influence, but the "incubus of religion itself." In a measure of this kind, and among such a people, it is inevitable that sentiments of this sort will be expressed. We are convinced that true religion will not suffer because the interfering clerics have their power crippled. We should like, however, to see our Protestant brethren in France quite ready to enter the door which will be opened to them through this Bill. Somehow, many of the Protestant churches in France lack force. It would be a splendid thing for that country if there could be a federation of all Evangelical societies and churches. At present there is too much isolation.

The Spectator is taking a firm and manly stand on the Chinese question, and against such a handling on our side of the delicate questions involved as would lead to a dangerous rupture with Russia. Just at present there is a call for a self-restraint and a patience, which it is not easy to attain in the face of the sensational newspaper reports, which are constantly appearing. "Collisions" between our troops and those of other countries, &c., are not the most perilous elements of the situation. Those papers which make an appeal to the sensitive feelings of the public, which taunt our Government with cowardice or dilly-dallying, which print on their notice boards inflammatory headings of the simplest occurrences, are the real enemies of their country. Patriots, in the present juncture, are those who work for forbearance, for mutual concessions, for a spirit of tolerance among those Powers who, through their representatives, are endeavouring to untie one of the most tangled diplomatic situations which the present generation has seen.

For many years Germany has professed to be in favour of the total abolition of slavery in Colonies under her rule. It is, therefore, ominous to find the Reichstag taking a retrogressive step, in rejecting a measure providing that children of domestic slaves should be declared free. The sanction of Parliament is thus given to hereditary slavery, the ground for the action being simply "consideration for Colonial interests." As a matter of fact, while the slave trade and slave raiding are discountenanced, domestic slavery is, it is asserted, openly recognised and encouraged in all the German possessions in Africa, and no doubt the recent action in the Reichstag will have the unhappy result of increasing it.

"The Shame of Chatham."

"They went to Baal-peor, and separated themselves unto that shame" (Hos. ix. 10).

WE have read some stirring articles by "A Minister of the Gospel" on the above subject, with shame that the Shame of Chatham is more or less the shame of every town and city; and with profound thankfulness that a minister of the Gospel in Chatham, with a wisdom of language by which none can be offended, has had the moral courage to search out the Shame, and to describe it, and that The Chatham Standard has had the moral courage to insert his letters.

In order that the unmasking of this plague may be effectual in abating the evil, a higher tone of public opinion and feeling and conviction must be created. The responsibility for this lies at the door of every minister of the pure and holy God, and of every one who claims to be a follower of Christ. Medical men, military and naval chaplains and officers, fathers and mothers, teachers and guardians, must be brought to feel the obligation to counsel and warn the young, and to remove stumbling-stones out of their way.

The spurious and affected decency which shrinks from

to those whom they concern, must give place to a true and robust delicacy which does not make the words of the Lord Jesus, "I have yet many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now," an excuse for never saying them; but rather follows his example, and with many parables (with which all nature abounds) speaks the word unto them as they are able to bear it.

We must deliver ourselves from the cant which sanctions indecency under the name of Art. We must beware of the tendency to degrade our periodical literature, and to make our bookstalls and news-shops the outlet for prurient, suggestive, and corrupt vulgarity.

If this plague is to be stayed, there must rise up from among the congregation a Phinehas with a javelin in his hand, which he does not shrink from using. If this Philistine garrison is to be taken, there must be a Jonathan who says, "Come, and let us go over unto the garrison of these uncircumcised; it may be that the Lord will work for us; for there is no restraint to the Lord to save by many or by few," and an armourbearer who replies, "Do all that is in thine heart; turn thee; behold I am with thee according to thy heart."

The Phinehas, the Jonathan, has been found in Chatham in the "Minister of the Gospel," and the armourbearer in the Editor of The Chatham Journal. Oh! that God may raise up the like in every town and city in our land.

FOUNDATION TRUTHS OF THE GOSPEL.

CHRIST'S DEATH AND RESURRECTION.

XII.—The Significance of the Cross.

By ARTHUR T. PIERSON, D.D.

CHRISTIANITY is inseparably linked to the Cross. The full meaning of this undoubted fact, however, or its real value as an evidence of the Divine origin of Christianity, few of us appreciate.

The central thought of which the Cross is the symbol, is sacrifice, and more particularly the sacrifice of self. This is the soul and essence of the Christian religion, and finds its fullest and best expression and exhibition in Christ's voluntary assumption of the cross—the offering up of the self-life as a service to God and a sacrifice for men. To miss that, whatever else is found in his life and death, is to fail to see the grand centre around which all else moves.

Self-offering is simple, and yet it is complex, because of man's complex being. First of all it involves a will, fully surrendered to the will of God—supreme reference to, preference for, and deference to, the Father's pleasure. "Not my will, but thine be done!" "I do always those things that please Him"—these were the two great sayings that were written in blood on the pages of history, when the cross was set up on Calvary. And, because the will is the central fact and factor in all being, a true self-surrender must mean the actual yielding up of the very life to God. In the case of a perfect being, like the God-Man, this includes also the full allegiance of the convictions and affections, a surrender based on no compulsion or constraint, but on a perfect confidence in the Father's wisdom and love, and such outgoing of responsive filial love as makes obedience cheerful. "I delight to do thy will, O my God."

Up to this point, the positions taken will not be contested even by sceptical minds, for they are obviously reasonable and right; but even nominal disciples begin, often, at this point to diverge from

THE PLAIN PATH OF SCRIPTURE TEACHING.

It is plainly declared that, "without shedding of blood there is no remission of sins." There is a reluctance, if not a rebellion, exhibited by too many against the emphasis laid on the blood. But "the blood is the life," or, as Trench says, "the seat of the life, the seat therefore of the epithumia, or 'desire,' which, in fallen man, is at variance with the will of God."

When Christ took the sinner's place—"made sin for us"—there was of necessity a literal outpouring of his blood, of "his soul unto death," as the representative rendering up of this rebellious principle. Christ on the cross, suffering as man's Substitute, yielded up the life, as that which in man whom he represented had, in all time and in all things, been lawless, the very principle not only of hamartia (sin), and adikia (unrighteousness), but of anomia (lawlessness), and therefore worthy only to die. Christ's death was, therefore, a concession and confession of this desert of death in fallen man.

In Him indeed was no sin. The believer is judicially reckoned as crucified in his sinless Representative, as in Him suffering the due reward of his deeds, expiating penalty, satisfying a broken law. In Christ the believer is regarded as pouring out his own blood, and so yielding up his own life, as something habitually lawless, and deserving death. Penitence unites with faith in the acknowledgment that the Innocent died for the guilty who might justly die; and, accepting God's dear Son as the Substitute and suffering Surety, in so doing virtually hands over to death the old self-life, that a new life in Him may take its place. Such faith is the expression of a new desire (a regenerate epithumia) that all rebellion may for ever cease, so that the life surrendered as forfeited may be given back, in God's mercy, as a new trust, pardoned, forgiven, cleansed.

Few worshippers intelligently read the deep meaning of the old sacrifices, as did the writer of Psalms xl. and li., so as to know what they were really doing; yet more or less obscurely, "this lay in the background of the worshipper's mind." Sacrifice was a parable in action, to be read and interpreted by the spiritual mind; but however few its interpreters, this was nevertheless its real meaning. No sacrifice could be real without the giving up of that which cost the offerer something, and in proportion to the cost was its value. And, since nothing is so dear as the self-will, its surrender even unto death implies and involves the giving up of all of lesser value, as the greater includes the less. Our Lord's will was, of course, never opposed to the Father's, and hence there was no rebellion in Him to be abandoned. Yet even has a will of his own, and in its surrender to the uttermost of sacrifice obedience reaches its utmost possible limit.

We have taken pains carefully to lay down what seems to be the Biblical philosophy of that vicarious sacrifice represented by the Cross. But this is not all that the Cross signifies.

It stands for Humiliation, and in Phil. ii. 5-8, the "death of the cross" is therefore the last and lowest step downward in Christ's self-emptying. But the humiliation was followed by a corresponding exaltation, until, as by seven steps upward, the crucified One at last took his seat beside the Father on his throne. To the believer, the Cross stands for an identification with Christ so complete that he becomes first a partaker of his sufferings, and then of his joy and glory. He takes up his cross and follows his Master in his humiliation; and in the regeneration, when the Son of Man sits on the throne of his glory, he also sits on a throne. Identified with his Cross, he also is identified with his Crown. He can say, "I am crucified with Christ," and with equal confidence, "We shall also be glorified together."

The Cross, therefore, stands for Reconciliation, both with God and with man. Enmity is done away, both toward the Father, God, and the brother, man. Christ hath "made peace by the blood of his cross." Rebellion is not only atoned for by blood, but displaced by love. The old self-life died as God's implacable foe, and the new Christ-life takes its place: "Nevertheless I live: yet not I, but Christ liveth in me."

And so the Renunciation of the world and the flesh becomes another element in the significance of the Cross. "They that are Christ's have crucified the flesh with the affections and lusts;" and in his cross "the world is crucified unto them, and they unto the world." This is not, in fact, a separate act, but is involved in the faith which, in laying hold of Christ, becomes identified with his person and his attitude toward God, and consequently toward all that is essentially opposed to Him.

It will be seen, therefore, how shallow and superficial is that view of the Cross which sees in it nothing but a symbol of martyrdom, or an example of voluntary sacrifice for the truth's sake, or even an exhibition of God's love to man. The least we can Scripturally affirm is that it stands for the Vindication of a broken law, and an insulted authority. "The soul that sinneth it shall die," was the awful legal sentence, and there must be a death, or the sin could not meet its penalty. One who Himself knew no sin was that justice might be honoured and mercy be exercised without the compromise of eternal truth and holiness. The "offence of the Cross" will never cease, for unregenerate man so rebels against God, that he stumbles, not only over his law, but over his love; and is unwilling to be under obligation even to grace. Yet, nevertheless, the foundation of God standeth sure, and the great Substitute, who "bare our sin in his own body on the tree," has been lifted up from the earth to draw all men unto Him; and millions of believers have known, and do now know by experiment, that the Cross brings both peace with God and newness of life in Him.

Benjamin Wills Newton well calls attention to the three crosses on Calvary as God's lasting pictorial parable of Salvation: on the one side the impenitent thief, standing for death in sin; on the other the penitent thief, representing forgiveness and reconciliation in Christ; and Jesus in the midst; so that as we look from one to the other our very glance passes "from death to life through Jesus Christ our Lord."

XIII.—The Resurrection of Christ.

By HENRY VARLEY.

"AND they came and held Him by the feet, and worshipped Him." Thus is recorded the answer of the disciples to their Lord's triumphant "All hail!" on the morning of his resurrection. No wonder that they desired to retain the Prince of life and glory in their midst. The mists were rolling away as the Sun of righteousness beamed upon them, his glory still tempered with the recent humiliation of his passion and death. The auspicious morning, however, is yielding clearest light. They and we now understand our Lord's former words: "Therefore doth my Father love Me, because I lay down my life, that I might take it again. No man taketh it from Me, but I lay it down of Myself. I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again. This commandment have I received of my Father" (John x. 17, 18). Yes, verily, the Good Shepherd had given his life for the sheep, and God hath indeed begotten us unto a living hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, "to an inheritance incorruptible and undefiled and that fadeth not away" (1 Peter i. 3, 4).

How invaluable is the fundamental doctrine of the resurrection of Christ from the dead. Guarding the supernatural from all the attacks of rationalism, this great truth of revelation and historic fact, as with the flaming and revolving sword, protects the way to the tree of life. Eternal life (as distinguished from continuity of being) is through Christ's death, and partnership in his resurrection life. Christ risen is the eternal life of all believers. Their life is hid with Christ in God. Christ risen is the impregnable citadel against which all the enemies of the Cross of Christ storm in vain. His resurrection is the top-stone of the arch of the revelation of God in Christ.

Resurrection equally with atonement had place in God's eternal counsels. When by man sin entered the world, and death by sin, then was revealed that which already existed, the Divine provision for redemption, resurrection, and eternal life. The Apostle did but unveil the truth when he wrote, "Where sin abounded, grace did much more abound; that, as sin hath reigned unto death, even so might grace reign through righteousness unto eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord" (Rom. v. 20, 21). This is which existed before human history began. It will be interesting to establish this position. It has been said that the resurrection is a New Testament doctrine and a fresh revelation. We shall see that this is not so, though we frankly admit that this great truth has been hidden by ignorance, and even now is most imperfectly understood.

In proof of the position, we recall our, Lord's argument with the Sadducees. Our Lord said: "Now that the dead are raised, even Moses showed at the bush, when he calleth the Lord the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob. For he is not a God of the dead, but of the living; for all live unto Him" (Luke xx. 37, 38). The Lord shows that Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, were then alive unto God. He was not referring to their bodies, which had long since mouldered into dust. Our Lord's reference to the burning bush is conclusive as to the fact that Moses recognized the Eternal Son of God therein. The word in Deut. xxxiii. 16, "For the good will of Him that dwelt in the bush," settles that. Moses beheld a type of the consuming and yet enduring "Plant of Renown": a fire-proof life that was not and could not be destroyed: life in and through the death of Christ who in resurrection showed that He is "made after the power of an endless life," without beginning of days or end of life (Heb. vii. 16).

Abel also paid the price of his loyalty to faith in Christ. His brother, Cain, who was a rationalist, slew him. Declining submission to Cain, Abel was the first of the noble list of faith's worthies, who refused to accept deliverance, and at once obtained the "better resurrection." Jesus Christ, who is the same yesterday, and to-day, and for ever, heard the voice of Abel's poured-out life that cried unto Him from the ground. The Lord of glory, showed Himself to be the life of the dying martyr. How could it be otherwise? Did not the Prince of life and glory say, "Whosoever liveth and believeth in Me shall never die"? (John xi. 26.) How could Abel's faith fail of partnership in the eternal life thus secured from the beginning to all believers?

"THE RESURRECTION AND THE LIFE,"

Job also says, "I know that my Redeemer liveth, . . . and though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God: Whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold, and not a stranger" (Job xix. 25-27). Let Isaiah record the Holy Spirit's testimony: "Thy dead men shall live; together with my dead body shall they arise. Awake and sing, ye that dwell in dust: for thy dew is as the dew of herbs, and the earth shall cast out the dead" (Isa. xxvi. 19).

HOW CONCLUSIVE THIS TESTIMONY of one who, as John says, saw in the temple Christ's resurrection glory, and spake of Him" (Isa. vi. 1-3; Luke ix. 30-32; John xii. 41).

Hear David's words: "I shall be satisfied, when I awake, with thy likeness." And again: "He hath ascended up on high, He hath led a multitude of captives" (Psa. xvii. 15; lxviii. 18). Let Hosea be heard: "I will ransom them from the power of the grave; I will redeem them from death: O death, I will be thy plagues; O grave, I will be thy destruction" (Hosea xiii. 14). Let Daniel add his testimony: "Many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt" (Dan. xii. 2). So also Ezekiel, Moses, and Jonah in his typical death and resurrection. What are all these but witnesses and types of the great truth of Christ's resurrection and eternal life?

With what conclusive point and meaning did our Lord refer to the fact that He Himself was referred to, when He said: "These are the words which I spake unto you, while I was yet with you, that all things must be fulfilled which were written in the law of Moses, and in the Prophets, and in the Psalms, CONCERNING ME. Then opened He their understanding that they might understand the Scriptures, and said unto them, Thus it is written, and thus it behoved Christ to suffer, and to rise from the dead the third day" (Luke xxiv. 44-46).

Many more testimonies exist in the first part of the Word of God, but enough has been said to establish the fact, that as by one man, at the commencement of human history, sin entered the world and death by sin, so also in God's own time the Second Man, the Lord from Heaven, brought in redemption, everlasting righteousness, and eternal life. We further establish the position by appeal to the second part of the Word of God, the New Testament. We notice the Lord's own words in proof of the absolute certainty of his death and resurrection. This is his prophetic testimony, given in the Synoptics: "From that time forth began Jesus to show unto his disciples, how that He must go unto Jerusalem, and suffer many things of the elders and chief priests and scribes, and be killed, and be raised again the third day" (Matt. xvi. 21 and refs.).

Six times do these words, or their equivalent, have place in the early part of the ministry of the Lord Jesus. They rebuke rationalism and of his death and resurrection. They are found in Matthew, Mark, and Luke's Gospels. The burden of the last chapters also of the three Evangelists is the fact of the death and resurrection of the Lord. In other places, such as Luke xx. 27 to the end, the subject is "resurrection." The Gospel of John is full of direct statements, metaphors, and illustrations, setting forth the same great truth, with direct reference to the Lord, who so emphatically said, "I am the Resurrection and the Life" (John xi. 25).

Varying the character of the testimony as to Christ's resurrection from the dead, I affirm that, so long as true verdicts are arrived at by conclusive evidence received from faithful witnesses, this supreme fact is proved. By the testimony of Mary, of Simon Peter and of John, of the two going to Emmaus, then of the eleven disciples, then of James, afterwards of 500 brethren at once, and last, not least, of Stephen, and of Paul himself, the truth of the death, resurrection, and ascension of Christ the Lord is proved beyond all question.

Scientific objections, the fact that resurrection from the dead is out of line with human experience for the past thousand years, these and all other oppositions are ruled out of court in this case. We are not dealing with the evolutionary notion of "the flower of humanity," or Jesus, "the highest type of the evolved man," or God's illustration of "the survival of the fittest;" but we are dealing with the Word of God concerning Him who is the Resurrection and the Eternal Life, the Lord of glory. Hearken to his wondrous prayer, recorded in John xvii. 4, 5: "I have glorified Thee on the earth, I have finished the work which Thou gavest Me to do. And now, O Father, glorify Thou Me with thine own self with the glory that I had with Thee BEFORE THE WORLD WAS."

This is both spring and Eastertide! Whatever heathen festivities may have gathered around this term and season when the dark mazes of Pagan and Roman Catholic festivals caricatured the resurrection, our minds are fixed upon Him "who died unto sin once, but in that He liveth He liveth unto God." In 1 Cor. xv. a mine of wealth in regard to Christ's resurrection is found. From the twelfth verse to the twenty-third the constant recurrence of the name Christ is deeply interesting. Not once does the sacrificial name, Jesus, occur, nor the title of Lord, but always Christ, the Anointed One, thus emphasizing the great truth of his resurrection. "Now is Christ risen from the dead." The burden and the strength of the testimony gathers about this victorious and blessed name.

Twelve times in as many following verses is this remarkable prominence given. It is to the greatest fact in the history of the world. He is placing before the Church of God the truths which belong to and concentrate in "Christ the Wisdom of God and the Power of God," who is "declared to be the Son of God with power, according to the Spirit of Holiness, by the resurrection from the dead" (Rom. i. 4).

Mark the stupendous undoing to the Church and the world if Christ be not risen. We simply tabulate the main issues which are suggested as being involved:—(1) Christ Himself has not risen; (2) Our preaching is vain; (3) Our faith is vain; (4) We have no Gospel; (5) We endorse a lie, which involves the truthfulness of God; (6) The resurrection of the dead is not; (7) They that have died have perished; (8) Our hope concerning them is delusion; (9) We are yet in our sins; (10) We are unredeemed and in bondage; (11) Without God and without hope; (12) We are awaiting the judgment of sin and sinners. What a terrible picture is here, darkness indeed that may be felt. Nothing more awful could be thought of than the consequences to the Church and the world if Christ's resurrection and eternal life is not the greatest fact of the revelation of God.

How gladly we turn away from this suggested desolation and alternative to listen to the inspiring and conclusive words: "But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the firstfruits of them that slept. For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead. For as in Adam all die, so in Christ shall all be made alive. But every man in his own order. Christ the firstfruits. Afterward they that are Christ's, at his coming" (1 Cor. xv. 20-23).

How completely the testimony of the Holy Spirit in this chapter transcends the resurrection of the body. This is, of course, largely referred to, but we are here taken into the fastnesses of spiritual death, and are brought face to face with Christ's complete triumph over sin, death, and hell. To use the graphic language of Col. ii. 15: "And having spoiled principalities and powers, Christ made a show of them openly, triumphing over them in it."

In closing this Easter offering to Him who, from resurrection's sphere and glory reminds us that "The winter is over and gone, and the time of the singing of birds is come," I dwell for a few moments upon which are ours, and which may be described as the fruits of the power of Christ's resurrection. Here again we rapidly tabulate: (1) Christ Himself is risen from the dead; He is the eternal life of all believers through all time. All these are alive unto God in Him for ever. (2) Our preaching is simply glorious. We preach the unsearchable riches of Christ. (3) We have the only Gospel given under heaven among men — "the glorious Gospel of the blessed God." (4) We know He "died for our sins and was raised again for our justification." We have died in his death, we are risen with Christ and share his eternal life. (5) We are true witnesses for God, and eternally saved; our life is hid with Christ in God. His resurrection is the great gulf which has for ever separated from judgment, sin, and death all who have received Him. (6) We hold and endorse the truth, for we are in Him that is true, being begotten with the word of truth, and in resurrection with Christ, made partakers of his Divine nature. (7) The resurrection of the dead is held fast, for the conclusive reason that we have been crucified with Him, and now share his resurrection life and glory. (8) We maintain that they who have died in the Lord are with Him. They are alive in Him and cannot die any more. They share his incorruptible life; death has no lien, part, or place in incorruption. (9) We have been separated from our sins. They have been blotted out and put away, Christ's resurrection being the conclusive proof. (10) We have been redeemed by Christ's precious blood. We are his purchased possession—spirit, soul, and body—children of God, heirs of God, co-heirs with Christ. (11) We are justified and made free from sin, we have our fruit unto holiness, and the end everlasting life. (12) We are one with God and Christ for ever. His prayer for us is, "That they all may be one, as Thou, Father, art in Me, and I in Thee, that they also may be one in us."

What a glorious consummation! Well may the Gospel of Christ be called "the Gospel of the glory of the Blessed God." The beloved Paul might well discount the confidence of the Jews in relation to their choice in descent from Abraham. These are his words, written to the Gentile Church at Ephesus: "According as God hath chosen us in Christ before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blame before Him in love" (Eph. i. 4). How magnificent the words! What convincing proof they carry of inspiration. In the light of them let every believer trace his genealogy to the Christ of God. Our line of life is not backward to Adam, but upward to Christ. "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ" (Eph. i. 3).

This is the true "ascent of man." This is neither evolution, human religiousness, nor morality, but the reality and power of Christ's resurrection, and our partnership in the glory of that resurrection and life, as Paul expressed it! All the great spiritual blessings here pourtrayed are the outcome and fruit of God's wonderful love in Christ, consummated and declared when "the God of peace brought again from the dead . . . that great Shepherd of the sheep through the blood of the everlasting covenant" (Heb. xiii. 20). Glorious Eastertide memories! With great joy, beloved fellow-believers, we remind you of the triumphant words, "The Lord has risen!" To you, therefore, the words come with deepest meaning—"If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God" (Col. iii. 1).

The Easter of the Soul.

"AND JESUS DREW NEAR."

It was not fancy, nor a dream,
We felt Him standing there,
So close, so real, with such a gleam,
A glow we scarce could bear.

Our heart o'erwhelmed—as though oppressed
With love divine—stood still;
Or seemed to stand, in final rest,
Awaiting his sweet will.

For life, or death, or earth, or heaven,
That moment, whate'er came,
If called, or left, or kept, or given,
To us 'twas all the same.

. . . .

'Twas in the furnace hours of life,
When earthly helps had flown,
And we must face the fire and strife,
In weakness and alone.

Then, raised aloft 'twixt earth and sky,
For trusting in his Word,
Where silence was our only cry,
Someone drew near—the Lord!

. . . .

Our secret they could not divine,
'Tis not in language told;
For perfect peace alone doth shine,
When Jesu's arms enfold.

The outward man did perish, true,
'Neath blows and stripes and scorn,
But oh, the inward peace we knew,
By his strong arms upborne.

We've felt it in the prison cell,
And in the darksome lane,
Where poor enslavèd hordes of hell
With gleaming knives have lain.

We've felt it in the palace courts,
When tempted "not to die,"
Where flesh to compromise resorts,
And weak disciples fly.

When incense to some modern god—
"One pinch"—would save from ban
And excommunication's rod,
And earn us praise of man.

For o'er the vision passed a scene
Of coming ruin's woe;
The voice of Christ had passed between:
"Lo, I foretold it so!"

. . . .

Where arbitrary "law" decreed
Our right to save was "wrong,"
That we must work no loving deed,
And sing no saving song;

That we should "in no Higher Name
Speak to the people low,"
Or else return from whence we came,
Or to the dungeon go.

When friends for compromise would plead
Or urge some fleshly claims,
"O sacrifice men's souls instead!"
Then carnal fear exclaims;

When all the forces of a world,
A people, court, or king,
Upon a single soul are hurled,
Who Jesu's praise will sing.

We've felt, we've seen, and known it all,
The pressure of such hours,
Where proud apostate forces fall
In coalescing powers.

Crushing to earth a heaven-born soul,
To force it to give in,
That God and man may lose the whole,
And worldly wisdom win.

For troubling contrasts may not live,
To show some higher life,
The carnal mind can ne'er forgive,
Aught that provoketh "strife."

The peace of death is e'er its hope,
Its faith is unbelief,
In all that claims beyond its scope
To give the soul relief.

. . . .

We cried while ocean tides of faith
O'er all our being swept;
"Oh, let me die the righteous' death,
But let my soul be kept."

Let me but have the lions' den,
The furnace and the fire,
Where walks the lowly Nazarene,
I welcome all your ire.

Men born of God can overcome
The world, the flesh, the fiend;
They love not life, to rescue some,
From fear of death e'er screened!

Come, strike and smite, let Love's blood flow,
Dear blinded sons of earth,
That you may see and taste and know
The power of royal birth;

That God can turn a water heart
To one as firm as rock,
And may your conscience feel his dart,
With Pentecostal shock;

That in the love-blood spurting forth
Upon your hands and feet,
A brother of the lowly "Fourth,"
Your souls, at last, may meet.

That life thus springing out of death,
Repentance out of crime,
Ye may in God renew your faith,
While yet there still is time.

The Triumphal Morn.

Morn of triumph! Morn of gladness,
Light supernal reigns around!
Earth puts off its robe of sadness,
Christ arises, joys abound.

Strong the bars of death had bound Him,
But the bars are broken now!
Glory's peerless beams surround Him,
Light adorns the Conqueror's brow!

Shout his triumphs! seraphs praise Him!
Saints to do Him honour throng!
To the height of glory raise Him,
With undying, matchless song!

Hail, Immanuel! Hallelujah!
Hail! victorious o'er the grave!
Hail, Immanuel! Hallelujah!
Mighty now to bless and save!

ALBERT MIDLANE.

The Risen Christ.

JOHN XX. 19-23.

Not on the cross art Thou, but in the glory;
Our Christ, our King!
The scars upon thy Body tell the story
Thy merits bring
To hearts which know thy "speaking-blood" applied,
Thou Lamb of God, once slain, now glorified.

Not from the cross, but from the throne of heaven,
We hear Thee speak,
Assuring us thy cross and shame have riven
The bonds we break,
Because we hear thy "speaking blood" declare,
"My stripes have loosed thee, O my dove, my fair!"

As to the early saints Thou didst appear,
Thou comest still,
Revealing unto hearts that weep and fear,
Our God's good will:
Thy piercèd hands and side Thou bidst us see,
Declaring, "Lo, I died and rose for thee."

The fruit of Calvary's shame thy lips declaring,
"Peace, perfect peace,"
With all who in Thee died Thou still art sharing,
With hearts which cease
From all they loved, and held, and called "their own,"
Until "the light of life" upon them shone!

Even on these the Risen Saviour breatheth
His life of love:
Their humble souls the Holy Ghost receiveth,
Sent from above:
And "As the Father sent Me," hear Him say,
"So send I you into the world to-day."

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, April 7. Micah iii.

THE princes are first denounced in scathing terms (1-4). They should have known judgment, but they devoured their people. Their time would however come, when God would as certainly reject their cry, as they had turned a deaf ear to the cry of the poor for pity. Then the prophet turns to the false prophets, who were willing to prophesy anything, if only they might receive their hire, but if that was threatened, had no hesitation in threatening war to the knife. Their punishment would come in the darkness which should supervene, blotting out their power of vision. When men use God-given power for their own emoluments, they will find it fail them. "The sun shall go down upon the prophets, and the day shall be dark unto them."

In what glorious relief stands the servant of God. He is conscious of power, of judgment, and of might. The baptism of the Holy Spirit implies all that. This was the experience of Pentecost, and is within the reach of all. "One night," Mrs. Howard Taylor tells us of one of China's scholars, "Hsi was alone in his room in prayer. . . . The story of Pentecost had raised his expectations, while it quickened his longings, and for this fuller baptism he prayed. Alone in that midnight hour, as he waited upon God, with dim perception, but sincere obedience and simple faith, the answer came. Heaven itself seemed opened over that little room, as once again the promise was fulfilled, 'I will pour . . . my Spirit on him that is thirsty.' With this there came a clear and definite call to the work of God, and a deeply solemn consciousness was given him that he was called of God to the ministry of the Gospel."

MONDAY, April 8. Micah iv.

In moral and spiritual elevation the influence of the Jews is already unique among the nations. The Lord's House is already exalted above the greatest religions of the world, and attracts all nations. In a very deep and true sense the law is going forth out of Zion, and the Word of the Lord from Jerusalem. But this prophecy has a more literal fulfilment awaiting it, and then its concluding portion (3, 4) shall also be literally realised; for the implements of war shall be gathered into museums, as the signs of an extinct and barbarous age—an age of which no one shall keep the memory, save with shame. With such a hope in view the pious Jews had every reason to cling to the name of Jehovah, let others do as they might (5).

With what radiant colours the prophet paints the future! The great Shepherd would gather home his sheep, those that were driven away and scattered, and those that limped; and the earliest supremacy of Solomon's glorious reign would return to the redeemed people (8). There was no need for panic, or to cry aloud, for even if king and counsellor had perished, Jehovah was in the midst of his people—He was King and Counsellor both. And even though He allowed his people to go down to Babylon, this was only a stage in their purification and deliverance. Ponder those wonderful words, "Thou shalt go to Babylon, and there shalt thou be delivered." With all other nations, going to that great city had been the doom and grave of hope; but with Israel, the dayspring sprang out of the heart of the dark sea of trouble. O soul, do not mistrust thy God's dealings. What you so much dread, instead of being the end, is only a stepping-stone to an end more glorious than thou canst conceive.

The clouds ye so much dread,
Are big with mercy, and shall break
In blessings on your head.

TUESDAY, April 9. Micah v.

The first verse of this chapter reminds Israel that there will be a time of severe trial before the glorious predictions that follow shall ensue. The captivity in Babylon, and the awful persecutions of Antiochus, are evidently referred to. Always the darkest hour precedes dawn. Next we come to that glorious Messianic prophecy, so readily quoted by the scribes, when Herod inquired where the Christ should be born (Matt. ii. 4).

Bethlehem might be little, but so is earth among the thousands of the stars, and littleness in size is nothing to God, to whom all is great, where He deigns to work. The Lord Jesus came forth from Bethlehem, but his goings forth had been from everlasting. Born in a stable though He was, He was ruler and Prince. Though He lay in his mother's arms, He was to stand in the strength of the Lord. Though He was so poor and humble that the great of this world knew Him not, yet He has been tending his flock through the ages, in the majesty of the name of the Lord his God. Though He came forth from so lowly an origin, He is great to the ends of the earth. He is our peace, who hath made peace between God and man by the blood of his cross, and is now intent on making peace between man and man the world over. What though the foes of God's people, symbolised by the Assyrian, assail them, deliverers shall arise from their midst who shall deliver them, and the influence of God's people shall refresh the world like dew, whilst they shall be strong as lions (7, 8). Dew and lionlike prowess go together in the children of God. They refresh with the gentle influence of a holy life; but they are like lions in courage.

WEDNESDAY, April 10. Micah vi.

Micah comes back from the vision of glorious future times to the actual state of his people, which, as this chapter shows, was most deplorable. The very mountains, which are the most enduring features in nature, are called in to adjudge the controversy between Israel and Jehovah. How pitiful is the case when God is driven to plead for a recognition of his loving, gentle mercy! How truly might He justify Himself with respect to us! What cause did He ever give us for our waywardness and wilfulness? What has He done to afford us ground and warrant for our rebellion and backsliding? Nay, did He not redeem us, and bring us up out of the house of bondage?

The following verses, from the fifth, must surely be a fragment of conversation between Balak and Balaam. The questions were put by the King of Moab, in the agony of his desire to stand rightly with God, and so to ward off the attack of Israel, which he felt would inflict condign punishment. The answer, so majestic and sublime, must be Balaam's. It is in keeping with the rest of those great prophecies which he delivered in spite of himself. Few men have known more sublime truths than Balaam did, or have uttered them more suitably. But he loved the wages of unrighteousness. His palm itched for Balak's rewards. He was the Mr. Worldly Wiseman of the Old Testament, and his doom was correspondingly awful.

From the ninth verse onwards the Lord's voice cries against the city. He is of purer eyes than to behold iniquity, and cannot look on sin. He cannot count them pure who use wicked balances and deceitful weights. He cannot but make desolate because of sins. Lastly, the doom of the sinful soul is announced. It is condemned to live on food that lacks the elements of nutrition, like the nardoo grass of Australia, from which a man may get bread that seems to stay his appetite, while his flesh and bones drop away. Give not money for that which is not bread, nor your labour for that which satisfieth not.

THURSDAY, April 11. Micah vii.

Things had come to a pretty pass in the favoured city. There were no righteous men left. In this it resembled Sodom of old. The good man had perished out of the earth. Princes, judges, and great men were bound as in a threefold cord to resist whatever was of God and heaven. And they wrapped up their evil counsels in a deadly secresy, doing evil with both hands earnestly. Those two phrases are very memorable. The inner life of the family circle was affected by the same dry-rot, so that none could trust his dearest. In times like these the child of God has but one resort: he must look unto the Lord, and wait for the God of salvation. He will hear and save (7).

What inspiring words are those which follow, and how applicable to us still! There are times when we are grossly misunderstood, when calumny points its finger at us, and even seems justified in its accusations. The enemy rejoices, and we seem devoid of the evidence necessary to silence him. Then there is nothing for it but to wait until God arises to plead our cause, as He most certainly will. Then they that were our enemies shall see it.

Notice the prayer and answer with which the prophecy closes. The prayer: O God, feed thy flock as in olden days (14, 15). The answer, which shall astonish the nations (16-20). Ah, what a God is ours. He not only pardons our iniquities, but subdues them, trampling them under his feet, until they line the seaboard, as did Israel's, as the ransomed left the bondage of Egypt behind them for ever. May it be true of thee, my friend, that there shall not be so much as one of them left.

FRIDAY, April 12. Nahum i.

Though Nahum, as a Jew, could not but have a measure of satisfaction in the overthrow of Nineveh, which had already carried into captivity the ten tribes, and now, under Sennacherib, was menancing Jerusalem, yet he accounted its fate a grievous burden—"the burden of Nineveh!" The prophet's name signifies alike vengeance and consolation—these two elements blend in his pages. His native village was Elkosh, near the Lake of Galilee. Capernaum is literally the village of Nahum. He lived about 150 years after Jonah.

What a magnificent preamble (1-8)! How it combines the goodness and the terror of God! His willingness to forgive and the inevitableness of his punishment to wilful and high-handed sin! The mystery of his providence, since his way is in the whirlwind of the storm, while the clouds are as dust to his feet! But fear not ye who have fled to take refuge in Him, for He is good, a stronghold in the day of trouble, and He will remember and defend you. The experience of all the ages confirms this. Yes, the Lord is good! God is explained as an abbreviation of Good!

In the ninth verse the prophet turns to the Assyrian hosts, and compares them to tangled thorns, which are cast to the burning. The enemy might be many and strong, but God would deliver his people. He had used the Assyrians to afflict them, but they should afflict them no more. The rod would be cast aside, and broken. The mountains should yet be trodden by the feet of those who brought the glad tidings to Judah that Assyria had fallen, never again to rise.

SATURDAY, April 13. Nahum ii.

This is a prophetic description of what was at least a hundred years distant, namely, the overthrow of Nineveh by the Medo-Babylonians. The prophet announces to the great tyrant-city that the dasher-in-pieces is come, because the time fixed for Israel's deliverance has arrived (1, 2). He describes the appearance of the invaders' tents and shields. He sees also the preparations for defence, the jostling chariots (4), the mustering of the captains and soldiers (5). But, by a rapid change, he announces that all is unavailing, since the river, on which the city had trusted for its defence, had been diverted, the bed emptied of its streams. Huzzab, the Queen, is led into captivity. Nineveh is deserted by her people and defenders. The foremost citizens cannot arrest the stream of fugitives, call they never so loudly, Stand! Stand! (8). And the city finally resembles the deserted lair or den of lions that had made the forest tremble, but had fallen beneath the huntsman's spear.

We need to look to ourselves that no such fate should overtake our British people, for ours also is the lion-empire. Has God forgiven the iniquity of the opium traffic, or forgotten it? Does He not take note of the methods by which we have extended our empire since the days of Clive? Do not the impurity and drunkenness of our streets weigh with Him? Let true patriots confess these things before Him, and plead with Him to spare us that we may yet spread his Gospel to the world.

Moody Bible Institute.

A QUESTION that was asked by many friends when Mr. Moody passed away —"What will the schools do without him?"—has been answered in a very practical manner during the year which has elapsed since the founder of the institutions was called home. Writing of the Chicago Institute, the secretary (Mr. A. P. Fitt) reports:—"It has been the best year in every respect that the Institute has known. Encouragement may be found in every direction. The attendance of students has averaged higher than ever. The spiritual tone has been good. The class-room work has been satisfactory. The teachers and officers have proved their loyalty and devotion by unusual sacrifice in the heavier demands upon them. The place being taken in the world by old students gives cause for increasing gratitude. The blessing of God has been evident in no uncertain way, as those to whom Mr. Moody committed the work have carried it on along his well-known and well-tried plans, with the confidence and assistance of donors and other friends." As in previous years, the have proceeded: (1) Biblical, (2) Musical, (3) Practical. Students are required not only to study the theory of Christian work, but also to engage in it under the supervision of the superintendents of the respective departments. During the summer months, when schools and colleges are usually closed, the Institute remains open, and the students engage in forms of aggressive Christian activity, which can be undertaken only during the summer. Many workers also gladly welcome the opportunity of spending their vacation at such an institution, studying the Word of God, and learning how to be more efficient in the service of their Master.

Each year the Institute becomes more and more of a nucleus for evangelistic and lay workers, which is demonstrated particularly at the Convention which is held in the autumn. The last occasion proved a great blessing in the emphasis which was laid upon for Christian life and service, and the stimulus to Bible study, prayer, and personal surrender and consecration.

In connection with the Women's Department the Students' Aid Society assists many who otherwise would be unable to secure the training necessary to fit them for devoting their life to God's work.

In addition to the work done in the Union Bible and Music Classes, the tutors conduct meetings and conferences, and are often called upon to lecture and teach at conventions. Another phase of the extension work is the organizing of Bible conferences in small communities, where is often to be found a real hunger for the truth, and no difficulty is experienced in securing engagements and operating this branch on a self-supporting basis.

THE COLPORTAGE ASSOCIATION.

The Colportage Association, which is the publishing department of the Institute, continues as a successful organization. Its operations have extended beyond the shores of America, large shipments being made for sale and distribution in India, Tasmania, South America, Cuba, Porto Rico, the Philippines, and China. Although this branch is only in its infancy, it has already exceeded the anticipations of its founder, hardly a day passing without news coming to hand of blessing being received through the reading of the publications circulated.

The outlook for the future of the Bible Institute is full of promise. The confidence of old supporters and adherents has been retained, and the merits of the work have appealed to many new friends, and never were teachers and officers more desirous of following Mr. Moody's methods and attaining the object he cherished. Mr. Fitt may be addressed at 80, Institute Place, Chicago

Young Women at the Cape.

FRIENDS in this country are feeling very strongly the necessity for some immediate steps being taken towards making provision for the numbers of young women who may be expected to go to South Africa as soon as the country is more settled. At present the Cape Town Y.W.C.A. is engaged in raising £3,000 for their new home.

Miss Bessie Porter writes:—"God is truly blessing the work in and around Cape Town. On January 14 a lady came to see me, and was so much interested in what we were doing that, on her return to her hotel, she sent me a cheque for £200 towards our Building Fund. We had a drawing-room meeting at the Attorney-General's house, when the large room was full, and Lady Gill (wife of the Astronomer Royal) presided admirably. Miss Clarke, of Wellington (a cousin of Jean Ingelow), told something of the work from an American point of view, as she had been for some time connected with the Harlem (U.S.A.) Association. I followed, and the result was practical, as twenty ladies became hon. associates, and several promised help towards the building.

"I hear frequently from the Y.W.C.A. in Port Elizabeth, and am told of blessing there, too; but the landlord refuses to renew the lease of the present Home, which expires in May, and there will be difficulty in getting another house in a suitable position. There will also be testing this year over the funds, as the Port Elizabeth people have had such a strain on them with refugees and the Boer women's and children's camps."

Several generous contributions have been received, and we commend the object to the prayerful consideration of our readers.

The Indian Famine.

ACCORDING to the Bombay Gazette, the latest reports from Western India show that there is no hope of escaping the prolongation of famine over a wide area through another season.

Many of the distressed natives, it appears, are consuming bread made from grass seed, which is thus described by the Bombay Guardian:—"The seeds to bite resemble glass beads, and are as hard, or harder, to crack. The bread in colour is just like mud, and as a food stuff must be utterly inadequate properly to support life. Yet human beings in increasing numbers are compelled to eat it."

Dr. Colin Valentine, of Agra, writing on March 13, says:—"I have letters from missionaries and others in several parts of Rajputana, and Western India, revealing a state of matters bordering upon acute famine; so that for these parts the assistance of kind friends at home is asked."

Rev. Dennis Osborne, of Poona, writes: "By the latest summary no fewer than of both sexes are gathered in by missionaries within mission asylums. These are from the famine of 1900 alone; those rescued from the earlier famine of 1896-7 would raise this number to over 30,000. All these have to be fed, clothed, and trained. The plague is recrudescent, and the people are fleeing before it. The census just taken has shown the depopulation of some of the fairest and busiest tracts of India with painful clearness."

It is satisfactory to find that the Indian Government is displaying more interest in the questions of famine relief and prevention. The Calcutta correspondent of The Times says:—

"The Government resolution that programmes of public works should be prepared beforehand, in case of famine occurring in any province, is important, as showing how, in spite of past experience, there are seldom ready to hand projects of permanent utility upon which work can be immediately begun when State relief is instituted. It is admitted that, although the provincial famine codes contain rules intended to secure this end, yet their programmes have proved imperfect and unreliable. It is now directed that the whole subject of relief programmes should be fully investigated by expert engineers in every province, who are ordered to report next autumn. The Government will then have a mass of evidence upon which to base its operations hereafter. Their action corresponds to forming a plan of campaign, the famine being the enemy to be fought. The Government are convinced that many opportunities exist, which are not, or are very imperfectly, utilized for constructing minor canals or storage reservoirs for the utilization of hill streams."

The Needs of Ashanti.

AT the midday meeting at Exeter Hall on Tuesday of last week, Rev. F. Ramseyer, of the Basel Missionary Society, related the thrilling story of his thirty-five years' experience on the Gold Coast. It will be remembered, from the account which recently accompanied a portrait of Mr. Ramseyer in our columns, that this missionary and his wife, with others, were interrupted in their mission work at Kumasi at a time when their undertaking was full of promise, and the results of their labours were becoming apparent. During the revolt of the Ashanti chiefs against the British Government their mission station was utterly destroyed, and all their personal effects looted by the rebels. While many Christians were killed by the heathen chiefs, the missionaries had a marvellous escape, and after much suffering, privation, and wandering, during which Mr. and Mrs. Ramseyer were called to mourn the loss of their child, they arrived in Europe. With an intense longing to return to the Ashanti people, they are now appealing to the English people for help in order that the work so distinctly owned of God, yet so suddenly interrupted, may be renewed, and the Mission re-established. The loss of buildings and property amounts to more than £2,000.

Rev. F. B. Meyer in America.

THE first gatherings in connection with Mr. Meyer's American tour were held in Broad Street Methodist Church, Richmond, Va. In a few brief lines of description written on March 15, Mr. Meyer says:—"The meetings at Richmond, the old Southern capital, have been much blessed. Great crowds came from the whole district, and large numbers of ministers, many of whom have received blessing from my former visits to this side. I have been specially encouraged by this. Last night, nearly everyone in the great audience remained to the after-meeting, to wait on God for the fresh, anointing of the Holy Spirit. It was very affecting. From every sign, I am looking for a tidal wave of blessing, through this tour, and ask for the prayers of God's people. The Southern people are very warm-hearted and disposed towards religious questions."

I write from the beautiful city of Atlanta, which thirty years ago was utterly destroyed by General Sherman, and has now become one of the largest and most influential cities in the South. It lies on an elevated plain, 1,100ft above the sea-level; and we are enjoying charming weather, as warm as June.

Mr. George Needham is here, bright, and well after thirty years of evangelistic work in the States; Wm. Phillips Hall, who is initiating the Twentieth Century Gospel Campaign; Mr. Jacob, the sweet singer; Dr. Torrey, and others. The Convention, which is held in Dr. Broughton's spacious church, holding 3,000 people, is attended by vast audiences. Ministers and people have come in from an area of 200 miles; some have come from New Orleans, 500 miles distant, and the power of God is mightily present.

I am very well, though speaking three times a day, and can only attribute this wonderful tide of blessing to the prayers of God's children on our behalf. It seems as though days like these must affect the entire religious life of this part, as there are upwards of 200 ministers in attendance. With love in Christ.

"Christian Science."—The startling development in America of the so-called Christian Science, with its many kindred superstitions based upon clairvoyance and hypnotism, has rendered it necessary for strong measures of repression to be taken. The New York Legislature have, therefore, passed a measure providing that those who practise these things may do so only upon the condition that they make no charge.

THE LATE

Edward Colpoys Johnson.

SOLDIER, MISSIONARY, AND EVANGELIST.

THERE passed away, in the East Cornwall Hospital, Bodmin, some six months ago, a Christian whose career had been unusually varied and interesting. Born on August 11, 1835, Edward Colpoys Johnson was the youngest son of Colonel Charles Christopher Johnson, of the 17th Lancers, and came of an ancient Irish family which had supplied soldiers and sailors to the realm in the days of the American and French wars.

Mr. Johnson began his career as an ensign in the 57th Middlesex Regiment, but retired after a brief interval. On the breaking out of the Crimean War, he applied for and obtained an appointment in the commissariat department. After arriving at the seat of war his desire to be engaged in actual fighting could not be suppressed. Notwithstanding admonitions from the Deputy Commissary General, he contrived to be in the thick of the struggle at the Battle of the Alma, and ultimately received the Crimea medal with clasp for this engagement.

The indulgence of this propensity for seeking the post of danger eventually led to disaster, for a day or two before the memorable charge of the Light Brigade at Balaklava, he and a small party were entrapped and made prisoners by the Russians. For a year and a half Mr. Johnson was detained as a prisoner of war, and in recognition of his zeal and courage he was then permitted to obtain a commission for the second time, and was gazetted to the 99th Foot, then stationed at Cork.

While living at Cork, Mr. Johnson was seized with a serious illness, and during the weeks of quiet the Spirit of God strove with him, bringing home to him the fact that he was without hope in the world, as well as his need of the all-sufficient sacrifice provided in Christ. When at length he was restored to health, the Sun of Righteousness had arisen on his soul, and had brought healing in his wings. From henceforth his life was to be entirely changed. Consecrating all to the service of his Master, his first care was to seek for souls among the men of his own regiment.

In 1857 the regiment was ordered to India to take part in the suppression of the Mutiny. For the first time Mr. Johnson was brought face to face with the darkness and superstition of the city of Calcutta. Like Paul at Athens, "his spirit was stirred in him when he saw the city wholly given to idolatry." After meditating much on the state of affairs, he recognized that there was a definite call to him to make known the good news of the Gospel to the people with whom he had thus been brought into contact. Relinquishing the profession which had exercised such a fascination over his youthful ambition, and at the same time the comfort and refinement incidental to the life of a British officer in time of peace, he cut himself adrift from all his old associations and environment, and threw himself whole-heartedly into what was to be the great work of his life.

The same zeal, energy, and courage which had characterized his military life, were carried into his efforts as a soldier of Christ, leading him to seek out fields of work as yet unoccupied by other Christian workers. With great rapidity and thoroughness he mastered the Bengali language, and immediately began to visit the native Christians in the Sunderbunds*, preaching to the scattered denizens of those malarial jungles, infested as they were by tigers, snakes, and numerous other forms of wild animal and reptile life.

After a few years, Mr. Johnson removed to Santalistan, and formed a connection with the Baptist Missionary Society. There he met with the narrowest escape of his life. The villagers sought his aid to rid them of a royal Bengal tiger, which was committing numerous depredations. He at once acceded to their desire, and, accompanied by a Danish brother missionary (Mr. Boerssen), set out. Mr. Johnson carried a rifle, but all the ammunition he possessed consisted of a single charge. He knew that such armament did not warrant them in trying conclusions with an antagonist so formidable; but in this as in all other matters his trust was in God, and he felt that something must be done to help the poor people in their time of need.

The natives had located the tiger in the jungle. Close by was a ravine, and into this Mr. Johnson stepped, his friend and a large party of the villagers being a little behind, well supplied with sticks and old tin cans. Seeing the beast a dozen paces from him, Mr. Johnson fired. Whether his shot took effect or not he never knew; but the next thing he was conscious of was the sight of the stripes of the tiger's belly immediately above his head, as the monarch of the jungle descended on him, having cleared the distance between them at a single bound. He felt the tiger's jaws close on his left hand, crunching the bone as though it had been matchwood; he sent up a cry to God, and then unconsciousness ensued.

Seeing what was happening, Mr. Boerssen also lifted up his heart in prayer, and it seemed as if a voice from heaven told him to clap his hands and shout. He was alone, the natives having fled; but the effect was like magic, for the tiger released its victim and disappeared. Mr. Johnson was saved, but he was in desperate straits. He was placed in a dooly, and then followed a journey of about twenty-four miles, to the nearest government dispensary. By the time the cavalcade arrived there, he was almost exhausted from the loss of blood, and the surgeon, seeing the serious condition of the wound, advised immediate amputation.

From Photograph by Mr. J. C. Bull, Lahore.

Some years later Mr. Johnson embarked on a missionary effort among some tribes inhabiting the mountainous regions of the north-west frontier of India, who were Mohammedans of the most fanatical disposition. Any European travelling in the region without sufficient escort might expect mutilation, and even death of the cruellest description. Into this mysterious abode of fanaticism Mr. Johnson had determined to penetrate with the Gospel, and the ordinary routes being closed to him, he crossed the river on inflated skins used by the natives. In this way he was on several occasions enabled to visit the tribesmen, by whom he was received kindly and shared their rude hospitality—his courage in venturing among them alone and unarmed appealing apparently to that side of their character susceptible to humane influence.

In 1873 Mr. Johnson tried to reach Kafiristan by way of the Mohmund country, and in disguise successfully passed the various British barriers; but at Jellalabad his nationality was discovered by the Afghan authorities, he was arrested and, after a confinement of some days, was sent back to the British border under an escort of 300 soldiers.

For the last sixteen years of his life Mr. Johnson made Lahore his headquarters. Here he engaged himself in the translation of tracts and the distribution of them among the natives in the bazaars. Here, too, he was ever ready when occasion offered, at volunteer camps or similar gatherings, to say a word in season, or to preach to the European and Anglo-Indian residents. In the years 1893 to 1896 he suffered from a succession of illnesses, which obliged him to return home. Having recovered a considerable degree of strength, in 1897 he started again for India to resume work in the more salubrious climate of Simla; but he again broke down, and in 1898 quitted the beloved scenes of his Indian labours for the last time. He removed with his family to Germany, where he enjoyed a large measure of restored health and strength, and once more became eager to engage in active Christian work.

His thoughts turned to his beloved Ireland, and having during his stay in Germany made considerable proficiency in the study of the Gaelic language, he proceeded to Connaught in February of last year to carry on Protestant evangelistic work in the native tongue. But his labour was of brief duration. On May 1 he had a paralytic seizure, and on his recovery had to be removed to his family residence at Twickenham. After a second stroke he was taken home.

Having a moderate private income, it was Mr. Johnson's privilege to have been throughout his career an honorary worker, and to be able to render his ministry free of charge. His was a character rich in the material that goes to make the hero and the martyr, in which the elements of faithfulness stand out in bold relief. When he recognised what he believed to be a duty, he put his personal convenience and inclination entirely aside. His faith burned clear in spite of all surroundings, difficulties, and weaknesses, "as seeing Him who is invisible." In August he said to a friend, "I am waiting for the summons; it cannot long be delayed now." Then, deploring his growing weakness and infirmity, he added, "I can do nothing now except distribute a few tracts."

Such a life comes as a refreshing and inspiring example that may cause many of us to thank God and take courage.

Mr. E. Olsson's Work.

FROM a Spanish newspaper of Buenos Ayres, the Evangelical Standard (El Estandarte Evangelico), Mr. William Greene has extracted a brief account, contributed by Mr. Olsson, of journeys made into the south of the province of Buenos Ayres.

"I commenced my journey by the railroad to Canuelas. I visited Flores, Tandil, Ayacucho, Maipu, and Mar de Plata, and had a good sale of Bibles. I found no difficulty in putting many Scriptures into circulation. In a later journey I visited Canuelas, Lobos, Saladello, and Bolivar, with good success, as I sold two boxes of Bibles, Testaments, and portions, in two weeks. I met people who saw a Bible for the first time. A man who purchased one came to me by night, asking me to explain it to him; and after speaking and praying he left satisfied, and I trust was saved. I am so sorry that there are no Gospel meetings in any of the villages I visited. I found no Evangelical Christians except in Bolivar, where I met Francisco La Moglie, who is established here. I held a meeting in his house, with the blessing of the Lord. The editor of the paper El Progresso showed his interest in the work by attending."

The Manchester Refuges of Mr. Leonard Shaw.

IT is almost a generation since the great philanthropies which have for their object the rescue and care of destitute and homeless children, were established in some of our leading cities, and one feature deserving of special attention in this connection is the fact that several of the greatest of them have been founded and established by the enthusiastic, patient, and persevering labours of some one individual.

While such honoured names as Müller, Barnardo, and Quarrier occur to one's mind, the history of the Manchester Refuges is no less an instance of the blessed and remarkable result of devoted personal service in the cause of orphaned and suffering children. To outline the history and growth of the institution during the thirty-one years of its existence is largely to tell Mr. Leonard Shaw's life story for that period; for though, all that time, he has been immersed in the strenuous commercial life of the city, the interests of the poor children and the Homes into which they were being gathered were always before him, claiming and receiving not only unremitting oversight, but constant sympathy and help.

In the earlier years, the common lodging-houses in the most disreputable parts of the city knew Mr. Shaw as a frequent visitor at night, seeking the waif who might turn in there. At a later hour the well-known haunts of the poor lads who had no lodging money were visited—a cart shed here, a dark passage there, among bales of cotton, in empty houses, or under the stalls at the market; and often "one of the least of these" was found, and was safely sheltered in a comfortable home.

THE MANCHESTER AND SALFORD
BOYS' AND GIRLS' REFUGES AND HOMES, AND CHILDREN'S AID SOCIETY,

to give its full title, was founded January 4, 1870, when a dwelling house was opened as a "Night Refuge for Homeless Boys." This was the outcome of work carried on in St. Ann's Sunday Ragged School, where Mr. Shaw was a teacher, and Mr. R. B. Taylor, still a trustee of the refuges and member of committee, was superintendent. The actual fact which was the seed of the charity, is worth recording. It was Sunday night in the autumn of 1869. The school had been dismissed, but two very ragged boys, with lingered at the top of the stairs. Questioned as to why they did not go home, they replied they had nowhere to go. Further investigation showed that one had been sleeping under a railway arch and the other up an old staircase in a Deansgate entry. It will be seen from this that the institution was founded to meet a pressing social need, and guiding the committee by trust deed are as follows:—To receive homeless and destitute children found in Manchester and district; to give immediate admission to such without distinction of creed; to provide such with suitable food, clothing, and industrial training; to educate such in Christian principles based on the Bible only.

PINCHED AND WEATHER-BEATEN FACES,

The great qualification was destitution, or, pending investigation, apparent destitution, on the part of the applicant; but the closest investigation followed. It would be impossible to recount Mr. Shaw's labours in making personal visits and inquiries, and in conducting correspondence in respect to almost all cases admitted, the importance of this in carrying out the fundamental object of the institution being fully recognised.

The true law of growth has been well exemplified in the slow and gradual increase of the extent and scope of the institution. In the third year when nine boys were sent to Canada. The following year saw sixteen go, and with few intermissions the stream flowing Westward has continued ever since, the total sent out up to last year being 1,322. The Canadian Home in Belleville, Ontario, from which the children are distributed and supervised, receives high commendation from the immigration department of the Ontario Legislature.

THE EMIGRATION WORK BEGAN,

An arrangement was made with the Indefatigable Training Ship at Liverpool to receive some of the lads anxious for a sailor's life. The ship became very popular, and every year since has seen some boys pass from Strangeways to it. The heroism of some of these poor lads, both in the early and the later years, might be shown in stories of thrilling interest if we had space.

Another important development occurred in 1873, when the

was added. As the Central Refuge became full, some fifteen of the elder lads who were in regular work, and had become steady and reliable, were formed into a separate Home, and under the care of a new father and mother grew up in true family life. Three other Homes on similar principles were established at intervals during succeeding years, ultimately forming, when the work was concentrated at Strangeways, the Working Lads' Home and Institute shown, with other branches, in the accompanying sketch.

So far the door of the institution was only open to boys of ten years and upwards. Younger children were unprovided for, and there was evidence on all sides that they, in their neglected condition, were the recruiting ground of the waifs and strays. The question arose why the younger ones should not be admitted, and a step be taken in the direction of prevention rather than cure. The generosity of a friend enabled the Committee to establish the first Home for Little Orphan Children. In the years that followed five additional Orphanages were opened, each one the gift of an individual or of a family; and now there stand in one group at Cheetham Hill six Homes filled with of tender years. The family principle has been consistently carried out, a mother and helper with fifteen little children forming a true family group, gathering at one table, and sharing in the duties and privileges of a common home life. The children, with no common dress, attend neighbouring Board Schools, and thus are merged in the community like the other children in the district.

A HOME FOR GIRLS.

It was not until eight years' work on behalf of the boys had been accomplished, that a Home for Girls was added to the trust. A neighbouring Home with which Mr. Shaw was associated had met the need to some extent, but was now full. With the call to widen the scope of the effort, there came, in the providence of God, means to do so. An old lady sent a cheque for £1,000 to provide the first Home, which was the forerunner of four others for girls added in succeeding years.

Many children unsuitable for admission being still found on the streets, through the compulsion of dissolute parents or the negligence of indifferent ones, to provide for these there was established in 1881 a Boy Messenger Brigade, which, with the City Shoeblack Brigade, employed last year 204 boys under hourly supervision. Thirty-six from these were passed on to permanent situations during the year.

A SEASIDE HOME.

Another pressing need was the poor, weakly city children who were pining away for lack of a few weeks of fresh air and nourishing food. This resulted in the opening of a Sea-Side Home at Lytham, which for over seventeen years has given this boon annually to nearly 200 poor children recommended by Ragged Sunday School teachers and others.

Three years later the first Summer Camp in England, providing a week's holiday for poor city lads, was started, and has grown into a large work. It is open three months in the summer, during which some 1,500 poor lads, who have no chance of a change otherwise, go down in batches.

A Children's Shelter in the heart of the city was opened in 1884, the door of which has never been closed night or day, receiving from the police and others homeless, lost, or illused children, as well as girls up to eighteen years of age, who may be destitute or in moral danger. Last year 485 cases were admitted, 172 of them after ten o'clock at night.

THE BOYS' HOMES, MANCHESTER.

BETHESDA HOME FOR CRIPPLED AND INCURABLE CHILDREN.

The local Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children was formed in connection with the Institution in 1886, and did the work until the National Society established a branch in Manchester. A little later a Police Court Mission and a Mission at the Prison Gate were begun in the interests of youthful prisoners.

THE "BETHESDA" HOME

for Crippled and Incurable Children (see illustration), erected twelve years ago, was another instance of natural and inevitable development. Children of this class had been among the applicants for admission, doubly needy because of their affliction, but requiring care and accommodation such as could not be given in the ordinary Homes. Again the means came, and about forty such boys and girls, crippled or ill, are now cared for. The last addition was in 1897, when the Home for Motherless and Neglected Little Girls was opened. Last year forty-three were admitted.

In the sixteen Homes, 720 young people, from two to twenty-one years of age, have been under care and training during the past year. The younger children attend day school, while the older boys are employed in the five excellently equipped workshops at the central Refuge —tailoring, shoemaking, printing, carpentry, and firewood making—or in town situations. The elder girls are trained in laundry, sewing, and household work at the "Rosen Hallas" Home. One of the fundamental principles inculcated is that of self-help, and the committee point to the noble effort made by the children of working age towards self-maintenance, resulting last year in the large sum of over £2,500, or about one-fifth of the cost of the whole institution.

Five thousand seven hundred and forty-one children have been admitted to the permanent benefits of the institution, while several times that number have been dealt with through one or other of the organizations, and given temporary help. Representatives of the Strangeways Homes are to be found in most lands as well as at home; some are ministers of the Gospel, doctors, and lawyers, while others are themselves at the head of Rescue Homes, and seeking to win others.

In 1883, when in Manchester, Mr. D. L. Moody saw some of the orphan boys of the Cheetham Hill Homes, and ultimately arranged to receive twelve of their number for training at Northfield. Mr. and Mrs. Shaw took them out to the States in June of that year. The present record of these boys is excellent.

Those who are most intimate with the history of the Institution associate Mr. Shaw's name so closely with its inception and administration as to think of it as a monument to his indefatigable labours on behalf of the poor children of Manchester and neighbourhood. And so undoubtedly it is, though Mr. Shaw may deprecate the making of such a statement, and would be the first gratefully to acknowledge the help and sympathy of many past and present co-workers.

DIMINUTION OF CRIME.

The city and the community at large recognise the services, so long and ungrudgingly given, as not only of incalculable benefit to poor and homeless children, but as being, in consequence, an important factor in the diminution of juvenile vagrancy and crime. In the future annals of Manchester the work of the Strangeways Refuges must have an honoured place, linked with the name of one of its worthiest citizens. Mr. Shaw's devotion to the work has been characterized by a tireless energy and an assiduous attention to detail. He has spent himself not only in laying its needs before the wealthy and the great, and officially pleading the children's cause before Municipal and Parliamentary authorities, but in being a father to the fatherless in a very true sense. One day has seen the tearful applicant comforted, the wandering prodigal restored, the perplexed one guided, the despondent encouraged, the wayward admonished; and such days have passed into weeks and months and years, filled with like blessed toil. The affectionate testimony of hundreds of former boys and girls is of greater volume every year, and comes from all parts of the world.

Mr. Shaw has found time to write several booklets, philanthropic and devotional. "Street Arabism: Its Cause and Cure," published in 1881, treated the subject fully, and was a considerable factor in educating public opinion in the matter. "The Cry of the Children," and other booklets followed. "From Twilight to Sunlight," and "Noontide Thoughts for Busy Lives" are more recent publications, and tell a more personal experience which has been blessed to many.

MISSIONARY INTEREST.

For the past twelve years monthly meetings for the Deepening of the Christian Life have been arranged by Mr. Shaw, in response to a felt need. A Missionary Day has opened each session, and an abiding missionary interest is associated with the Strangeways Hall, many of the children contributing, by a system of little self-denials, towards a fund which entirely supports two missionaries in China and India. Mr. Shaw frequently conducts the public evangelistic service held every Sunday evening in the Hall, at which the children are present, as well as others exclusively for them.

In seeking to set forth the success and blessing of this Manchester Institution, we are not unconscious that the emphasis has been placed on the human instrument, honouring the labourer, and we trust encouraging others. This, we think, does not so much need a correction as an addition, which we would make in Mr. Shaw's own words, quoted from the last annual report: "Wisdom guided those who began the work; the blessing of God much sought was vouchsafed, and so prosperity followed. In the silent, quiet work of the Homes God's miracles are being wrought. To Him be the glory, while ours is the blessing."

We close by quoting the minute passed on the occasion of the twenty-fifth anniversary:—

The Committee cannot hope adequately to convey their estimate of Mr. Shaw's labours on behalf of the poor and homeless children of this district, but they would, at least, bear testimony, as those who are in a position to know, to a life devoted to the service of this Institution in a spirit of obedience to the twofold command of love to God and to man. And this is no less true of Mrs. Shaw, who has so worthily seconded her husband's efforts in promoting the real interests of the children. The Committee earnestly pray that they may both long be spared to give that counsel and direction which so rich an experience has made invaluable to the cause they love so well.

Convalescent Soldiers at Dover.

THE Grosvenor Convalescent Home has now been in existence ten months, during which time about 100 men have passed through it; about sixty being Colonials from all parts of the Empire, the remainder men from our English regiments. It had been intended to close the Home on March 23, but the need for it being still apparent, an effort is being made to keep it open for a further period, as it is one of the few that were started at the commencement of the war that still remain open.

Our men still continue, and will do so for months, to come home weary and wasted with wounds and sickness, and the need of such quiet resting-places is apparent to all. "The Grosvenor Home" is a home in every sense of the word; recognising the fact that the soldier is "on furlough," we bind him by no rules or regulations, simply putting each new comer "on honour." This has proved the safeguard of the Home, for "Tommy" has greatly appreciated the trust reposed in him. "The Grosvenor Home" has had the hearty support of the military staff in Dover, and has for its patroness the Countess Grosvenor, and for its president Mr. George Wyndham, M.P. The Home is visited by ministers of various denominations. (Miss) Lucy R. Hardy.

Ratcliff Strangers' Rest.

THE annual gathering, on Friday, was an evidence that there is no declension of interest in the many-sided ministry of the Strangers' Rest. Owing to the enormous changes which mercantile shipping has undergone during the last few years, the number of sailors who frequent the district has materially decreased, consequently the meetings at the Rest for some time suffered accordingly. It is gratifying to learn that lately the attendance has considerably improved, and signs have not been wanting that Divine blessing has rested upon the efforts put forth. The services are no longer restricted to sailors, but outsiders and passers by of every class are heartily welcomed.

In the absence of Mr. W. H. Seagram, through indisposition, Mr. J. E. Mathieson occupied the chair, and recalled the early days of the Strangers' Rest, and the names of many who were associated with the work in its initial stages. The institution had been the foster-mother of many similar organizations, now to be found in different parts of the world.

A sense of deep gratitude marked the address of Mr. J. T. Isaac, in reviewing the year's work. Seamen of various nationalities have listened to the Gospel daily, and the message of God's servants has been received to the salvation of souls. The efforts which have been made to reach the mothers and children have been crowned with blessing, and give every promise of further development. Referring to the management of the Rest, Mr. Isaac reminded the friends that two years ago he felt compelled to resign the office of secretary. As much difficulty was anticipated in finding a successor, he consented to serve the Rest until other arrangements could be made. He was now happy to announce that others had been found willing to undertake the responsibility of the work. In thanking subscribers and friends for the confidence which had been placed in him during the last twenty-one years, he wished it clearly understood that while resigning his official position with the London Rest he still retains his connection with the Zanzibar Strangers' Rest. The trustees and treasurer had also resigned, and the names of their successors were heartily received by the meeting.

The new secretary, Dr. Andrew M. Neatby, in entering upon the duties, expressed the determination of the trustees and officers to continue the work on the same lines as hitherto, confident that no change was needed so long as the preaching of the Gospel to weary strangers and seafaring men was held to be the primary object. Already he had received encouragement from those who had been benefited spiritually by the Rest. Among other communications placed in his hands was that from a sailor at sea, who wrote: "The one vision I have during the voyage is my visit to the Strangers' Rest."

Mr. Milton Horner, who is taking up the office of treasurer, solicited a continuance of the practical interest which has been shown towards the Rest.

Rev. J. G. Train gave an earnest and thoughtful address to the workers; and words of encouragement and cheer were spoken by Rev. E. W. Matthews (British and Foreign Sailors' Society), Mr. A. Garstin, and others.

It is not too much to say that the outlook of this long-standing work is more promising than for some years past; and under the new management there is reason to believe that the future will witness greater progress than has of late been enjoyed.

Preventive Work at Liverpool. — The "Bethesda" Mission and Training Homes fill a very necessary place in Liverpool life. The objects of the work are: (1) The moral protection, (2) Salvation, (3) Training, (4) and general amelioration of friendless, domestic, and business girls. No fewer than 3,000 such girls have been saved on the brink of their plunging into a life of shame since 1892. At present the work is badly in need of friends. Reports and other information may be had from the hon. secretary, Rev. A. Price, "Bethesda" Homes, Netherfield Road South, Liverpool.

Home Missionary Circle.

WHATEVER the blessings enjoyed and results secured otherwise, there was one point speaking failure upon which practically all who took part in the recent great Mission are regretfully agreed: outsiders were for the most part unreached. But far from diminishing hope and zeal, the realization of our failure here is a cause for buckling on our weapons with renewed determination and ardour. We must—God helping us, we will—reach and win those who are strangers from God!

How to do it? The solution of the problem resolves itself into a mere question of methods. Outsiders must be reached by individual church members in the opportunities afforded in daily life. The responsibility for failure to capture the masses of the unsaved must be rolled upon the saved. The guilt for the blood of the sinner must be nailed upon the door of the saint (Ezek. xxxiii. 7, 8, 9). How comparatively few of those who belong to the Kingdom of God seem to comprehend what the constitution of that Kingdom really is!

In this voluptuous age the dictum set forth in Romans xiv. 17 (R.V.) needs to be rainbowed across the sky: "The Kingdom of God is not eating and drinking, but righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost." Reduced to a simple interpretation, we have the charter of the Kingdom of God strikingly defined—

"NOT SELF—BUT OTHERS."

Oh, to blaze this abroad! Negatively, God's Kingdom is never "Self"; positively, 'tis ever "Others."

Accepting this exegesis as correct (who will doubt it?), what do we perceive? That many perfectly sincere subjects of the Kingdom are under a grave misconception. "Lord, bless me!" is the cry of the multitude in the Kingdom. "Lord, bless others!" is the cry only of "one among a thousand."

Nor should the rank and file of the Kingdom be saddled with the whole blame for thinking they were brought into it solely for the benefit of self. The members of God's Kingdom are soldiers in the highest sense. The Church, then, should be a home for a fighting force. Is it? Alas! how oft does it answer simply and purely to the nursery—with the bottle, the rattle, the ring! How are matters to be righted? We must come down to apostolic ideals and methods! "The Kingdom of God is not selfishness, but unselfishness." We must proclaim the first and last lesson in Christ's school to be "self-denial." We must appeal to followers of the Lamb to share his Cross. We must sound the warning that spiritual self-seeking is suicidal. We must fearlessly echo the battle-cry of the Kingdom, "Others!" We must teach individual Christians to reach, influence, and win souls. "Saved to save!"

Already there are many agencies at work seeking to lead individual Christians to engage in aggressive effort to reach the unsaved. Such agencies must be multiplied. We cannot have too many. Think of the glorious results if only each saved person were the means of winning yearly

ONE SOUL INTO THE KINGDOM!

Desiring to help towards securing this end, we were led some three months ago to establish the Home Missionary Circle—the object of which is missionary enterprise at home by Bible study, Bible speaking, and Bible living. The conditions of membership are simple and Scriptural:—

I promise, by God's help, for the sake of perishing souls, to seek to have—

I. A PREPARED BIBLE. "Search the Scriptures" (John v. 39). "A workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the Word of truth" (2 Tim. ii. 15).

II. A PREACHED BIBLE. "If our Gospel be hid, it is hid to them that are lost" (2 Cor. iv. 3). "Do the work of an evangelist" (2 Tim. iv. 5). "Preach the Word" (2 Tim. iv. 2). "Warn them from Me" (Ezek. xxxiii. 7).

III. A PRACTISED BIBLE. "Be ye doers of the Word" (Jas. i. 22). "Adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour in all things" (Titus ii. 10). "The Kingdom of God is not in word, but in power" (1 Cor. iv. 20).

CIRCLE MAGAZINE. THE CHRISTIAN has been selected, which all members undertake to procure and read.

We have now members and branches in many parts of the country, enjoying daily tokens of saving power. Ministers of various denominations have expressed grateful thanks for the existence of such an organization, believing that wherever adopted it cannot fail satisfactorily to solve the problem—"How to reach outsiders." Any information concerning the Circle will be gladly supplied by the organizing secretaries, Albert E. Sims, Hope Mission, Upper Stamshaw, Northsea, Hants; or, John Clifford, Congregational Hall, Southchurch, Southend-on-Sea, Essex. Form of membership, post free, twopence.

Soldiers' Home, Winchester.

EVER since the outbreak of the South African campaign, the Misses Perks, of the Soldiers' Home, Winchester, have exercised a kindly and far-reaching interest in the troops as they have embarked for the Cape. With the prospect of keen suffering, exposure, and innumerable dangers contingent upon active service, the men have been cheered by words of timely counsel and sympathy. Writing materials, books, and other useful articles were handed round on board, and their distribution afforded a happy opportunity of emphasizing the need of accepting the priceless gift of God's Son.

As an instance of the outcome of these efforts, a letter received by Miss Perks from a soldier in Pretoria speaks for itself:—"I read the little Testament you gave me on board, and the words you spoke went further than you thought. I knew you were right all the time, but I would not own up to it. I am sorry I turned away, but thank God He has turned me round, and now I am quite a different man."

No one yet thinks of speaking of the war as a thing of the past. The casualty list is still to be found in the columns of the daily papers. The meaning of this is that every day brings to light distressing cases of new widows and orphans, and it is to be regretted that at the moment when help is needed more and more at the Soldiers' Home, the end of the supplies should be almost reached. Warm wraps, chest protectors, and cholera belts are in great demand, and the store of Gospels and Bibles is exhausted.

Not less important are the needs of the troops as they return to the homeland. The Misses Perks and their helpers devote themselves to ministering to the necessities of the men who have so nobly fought and suffered for their country, and now bear many painful evidences of the cost at which victory has been bought. The beneficent work of the Winchester Home has established a lasting claim to the support of the public, by reason of its unsectarian and spiritual character, and its far-reaching influence upon the life of soldiers and their dependents.

The Open-Air Mission.

STAMFORD Fair is probably unique in the class of people who frequent it. While watching the crowds who patronized the merry-go-rounds, &c., one was amazed to find that they were not only those usually seen on such occasions, but also some of the well-to-do people of the town. Especially in the evening there were crowds of young men and women, gentle and simple intermixed, indulging in all the horseplay one usually associates with Hampstead Heath on Bank Holiday. Into such a carnival as this a company of our evangelists went with the Gospel every afternoon and evening, heralding the message of salvation in song and speech amid all the din and bustle inseparable from such a scene. We were heartily supported by many local friends, who were themselves greatly stirred up by the open-air services and the meetings for prayer held each day.

During the forenoons services were held in a number of the back streets of the town, people coming out to their doors to listen, and many thousands of Gospel books and tracts were distributed, and for the most part readily and gratefully received.

Y.W.C.A. Anniversary.

LAST Thursday evening the members of the Young Women's Christian Association were gathered in from all parts of London and suburbs. The occasion was the twenty-first annual meeting held in Exeter Hall, the Association itself being, however, forty-six years old. No effort was spared to celebrate the coming of age of this branch of the work in a noteworthy fashion. The audience was one which would have brightened the dullest surroundings, and this was heightened by a new feature introduced on the present occasion. The members belonging to each branch were to be seen round a banner bearing its name; and these parties were grouped according to the divisions of the metropolitan area, with the banners coloured white, blue, red, or green accordingly.

From the opening prayer, led by Rev. E. W. Moore, a deeply earnest tone pervaded the whole proceedings. The chairman (Lord KINNAIRD) in fitting terms pointed out the various reasons for which it behoved the Association to return humble and hearty thanks to God. He then passed on to show how the growth of the Christian Endeavour movement might be expected to affect the future, through the inevitable linking together of different branches of Christian work. Turning to speak of the Greater Britain beyond the seas, the members were called on to aim at the establishment of a branch in every city and town throughout the colonies, special importance being placed on the present need in South Africa.

The report (presented by Mr. ARTHUR H. HABERSHON) showed progress all along the line of work. At Islington, Brixton, Brompton Road, Bedford Place, and Hampstead, improvements or additions are being made to the premises in use, and the various institutes and homes throughout the city are flourishing. The number of members and associates is over 15,000, and it is believed that the branches are in touch with at least as many more young women. An urgent appeal was made for the wiping out of the deficit on the funds, now amounting to £1,737.

Two notable and helpful addresses were delivered by visitors. Speaking under the burden of recent calamities in China, Mr. STANLEY SMITH, B.A., presented the subject of showing that those who know the way of the Master find only one path to the accomplishment of the fruit-bearing to which the people of God are called, "and that is through death." This he believed to be the central truth of Christianity, and is not for the few, but "unto all" (Luke ix. 23). The essential teaching of the Cross is the destruction of our "old man," and the teaching of the Lord and of the Apostles was seen to be unanimous on this point.

The word which Rev. J. STUART HOLDEN emphasized was "supposing" (Luke ii. 44), and in this connection he divided his audience into three classes—(1) those who are Christians and know it; (2) those who are not Christians and know it; (3) those who are not Christians and "suppose" they are. "Many suppose Jesus is in their company, because they are orthodox;" and none are free from temptation to build on some foundation of this class. It was then shown that those who have no real evidence of Jesus being with them lack (1) peace, (2) joy, (3) victory over sin, (4) sympathy with holiness, (5) sympathy with the aims and purposes of the Lord Jesus Christ, (6) compassion like his, and (7) communion with Him. The lesson of the passage is that "the blessedness we knew when first we saw the Lord" is just where we left it, and for its renewal we have to go back to that point in our history.

Among Theatrical Women.—Mr. William Forbes has during the past three weeks been vigorously prosecuting his work among chorus and ballet women belonging to the theatres at Leeds, Bradford, Sheffield, Liverpool, Manchester, Blackpool, Edinburgh, and Glasgow. Never were sadder or more needy cases coming to the front; but old friends of this work are dying off, and it seems likely to suffer unless fresh ones are raised up.

Pen Pictures From Afar.

THE CHILDREN'S "FINGER IN THE PIE."

THE "pie," I am afraid, is not quite the one you will think of when you have read the title.

No! It was not made of the usual items—flour, suet, water, fruit, sugar, and what not—that go to make a successful pie for your tables.

The "pie" of which I am thinking was a chapel-building scheme at Epworth, in Mashonaland, and the native children, whose fathers and mothers had taken Christ as their Saviour, did not think it quite fair that they should be left out in the cold.

At last it was arranged that the boys and girls should share in the work. Little hands like theirs could not make the bricks nor quarry the stones. They could not saw the timber into boards, or make the door and window frames for the chapel. They were not strong enough or clever enough to use plane and hammer to make the seats. They had no money to pay the bricklayers. What then could the children do?

When the bricks were made, and burned, and ready for carting, willing helpers were needed to load the waggons which were to take the bricks to a site where the chapel was to stand. And this the boys and girls could do. And this they did. So they had a "finger in the pie" after all.

You may think that loading the waggons was such a trifling thing that it was hardly worth the doing. But even that could be done in the spirit of love to the kind Jesus. It was in this spirit, I believe, that the boys and girls in this African village did it. And of course the Lord was pleased with their work. They did what they could, and they did it as unto the Lord.

If you think of it a little, I fancy you will see that their offering to the building of their chapel was quite as acceptable to God as the silver and gold which Solomon gave to adorn the Temple at Jerusalem.

Ten years ago there was not a single Mashona Kraal where the name of Christ was known. The chapel which has been recently built is the gift of the natives themselves. It is clear that God's blessing has rested abundantly upon the labours of Christian missionaries. The silent Spirit of God has taken the things of Jesus, and shown them to the dusky men and women—ah! and the bairns, too—at Epworth. And the chapel is the thankoffering of the first converts and their friends. I am right glad, too, that boys and girls had a finger in it.

The natives subscribed the money to buy necessary material and pay the bricklayers. They quarried the stones, and shaped the bricks, while the missionary himself did the carpentry work with his own hands. No fewer than 40,000 bricks were required for building purposes. Don't you think the children's hands and arms must have been very tired with loading such a large number upon the waggons?

When the walls of the chapel were built, and everything was ready for the roof, the missionary called the men together, and sent them to cut grass for thatching. Two or three days were occupied in cutting the necessary quantity. Waggons were then sent to bring it in, and it was piled close to the building.

When the missionary came to look at it he found that instead of being neatly cut and strongly tied, it was most disorderly; many of the bundles were falling to pieces. It happened to be the day for the mid-week service. The men were requested to stay behind, as he had something to say to them.

After discussing the matter, it turned out that the men did want to do their very best for the House of God. But they had not understood that the grass was for his house. And, besides, they thought the chapel was to have an "iron roof." This was their dream, an "iron roof" for God's house.

"See!" said the chief Cherimba, who had once been a noted witch-doctor. "See! down there in the village I have been building myself a large, new hut, and it has a roof of thatch, and shall the house of God only have a roof the same as mine? Nay! but let it have a roof of iron."

What could the missionary do but consent to this, although at an extra cost of about £100? What was his joy to learn that they would be responsible for the money! So the House of God at Epworth was completed with an "iron roof."

But the work of the girls and boys in loading the waggons with bricks was no less valuable and important. My dear young friends, all that God asks from you is that you would do what you can. Be honestly sure that what you do for Jesus, who gave Himself for you, is your very best. You can do that. J. W.

After the Census.

By WILLIAM LUFF.

HOW excited the children have been over the Census! It was such an important thing to have one's name recorded: but not half so important as being included in God's Census.

Is my name written there,
On the page white and fair?
In the Book of the Kingdom,
Is my name written there?

Let us look over the Census Paper and apply the particulars to spiritual things.

NAME.

We all have at least two names, one inherited and one given. "Sinner," is our inherited name; but we are not only sinners by birth, we are "ungodly" as to character; so that our full name is, "Ungodly Sinner." Some names will be changed since last Census through marriage relationship; and some, through a new relationship to God, will have changed their spiritual name, once "Unjust," now they are Justified.

RELATION TO HEAD OF FAMILY.

This can be filled in as "sons and daughters of the Lord Almighty" (2 Cor. vii. 18). Not "servants," though all God's children are servants; but they are much more. "Visitors." Some will be thus recorded on the Census schedule. Let us not be mere visitors in God's family.

AGE.

Even the baby a week old will have to be recorded. Our Father has babes; but they are written down. According to 1 John ii. 13, there are little children, young men, and fathers in the Divine family.

PROFESSION.

A young lady who kept house for her brother put down in this column "My brother's keeper." A good occupation for every sister. "Is your father a Christian?" a lad was asked. The father's behaviour was so shady just then that the lad replied, "Well, yes, I suppose he is a Christian; but he isn't working at it just now." In the profession column God's people may put down (1) Shepherds, who obey the Lord's orders, feed my lambs, &c. (2) Husbandmen, to whom is let the heavenly vineyard. (3) Fishermen, who seek to catch men, as did Peter. (4) Builders, like Paul, building with wood, hay, stubble, or gold, silver, precious stones (1 Cor. iii. 12). I think all who profess to be Christians ought to be able to fill up the column where the word "worker" is to be written; even children can be workers in God's house and workers "at home;" but not the oldest must write the word "retired;" nor can any return themselves as "living on our means." We have no means of our own to live upon.

WHERE BORN.

"At the Cross in the county of Repentance," is that where? At mother's knee—in the Sunday School—at the Christian Endeavour—by the seaside during the Children's Special Services? This is the most important of all the questions, for Jesus said, "Ye must be born again." "That which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit. Marvel not that I said unto thee, ye must be born again" (John iii. 6, 7).

The last column of the Census records is a very sad one, for it is for any in the family who are deaf and dumb, blind, lunatic, or imbecile. How sad must be the parent's heart who has to write any of these words against the names of any member of the family; but are not some of God's children deaf and dumb, not hearing his voice, not speaking his name, and are not some to say the least, feeble-minded? Does it not grieve the Father's heart that it is so?

Just one more lesson. In order that the enumerator, one of 50,000, calling for the schedule on Monday, April 1, might not be hindered, the Registrar-General requested that the papers should be filled up "early on the morning of that day." Children, young people, the early morning of life is the time to see that your names are written in God's records, sons and daughters, heavenly subjects, and workers, emphatically workers "at home;" then may you "rejoice, because your names are written in heaven" (Luke x. 20).

"The Christian" Bible Searcher.

NEW QUARTER.—RULES.

Answers to the "Bible Searcher" are acknowledged in two lists:—

(1) Those received up to Monday morning, in the next Thursday's issue.

(2) Those received later, in the one following. Answers for the "second list" which reach the office after mid-day Wednesday are too late. Those from Scotland and Ireland only will be received till Thursday morning.

No Concordance may be used or help given with the answers, but the questions may be explained when necessary.

No papers can be re-examined.

It is necessary that letters should be properly stamped, and that names should be written very distinctly. A star (*) is given for neatness and extra care in answering the questions.

A Prize Competition is given the last week of March, June, September, and December. To be eligible, every child must have been correct nine times during the preceding twelve weeks.

Those whose 10th or 13th birthdays occur during the quarter may continue the weekly Searcher in the same division, but must enter for the Prize Competition for their actual age. There is no limit of age for weekly competitors; but no one above eighteen years of age can enter for the Quarterly Competition.

All communications must be addressed to "Uncle Tom," the Young People's Editor of "The Christian," 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C.

THIS WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 273).

Rev. i.-iii.

In commanding John to write to the Seven Churches, the Risen Christ calls himself by a different name each time.

1. Give these titles.

2. To which of the churches did He speak of "overcoming"?

3. What are the promises to those who overcome?

4. With which of the churches was He not satisfied?

5. To which of the churches did He say—(a) "I will come unto thee quickly;" (b) "Be thou faithful unto death;" (c) "Hold fast till I come;" (d) "Be watchful;" (e) "Behold I come quickly;" (f) "Behold I stand at the door and knock"?

6. To which of the churches does He speak of—(a) The Nicolaitanes; (b) Satan; (c) Antipas?

[Children under ten, do No. 5; between ten and eleven, Nos. 5 and 6; under thirteen, do Nos. 2, 5, and 6; between thirteen and fourteen, Nos. 2, 4, 5, and 6; under seventeen, answer any 5 questions.]

Christian Endeavour Topic.

SUNDAY, APRIL 7.

"Dead to Sin, Alive in Christ" (Eph. ii. 1-10).

Our Original Condition. There is a three-fold Trinity for us all. Above, Father, Son, and Spirit; within, spirit, soul, and body; beneath, the world, the flesh, and the devil. See how the latter come out in the opening verses of this paragraph. The course of this world, the spirit that works in the sons of disobedience, the lusts of the flesh, the desires of the flesh and of the mind. As long as we walk in these, we are dead. Just as the corpse has no appreciation of the world around it—the tears of bitter grief, the last warm kiss of love, the scent of flowers, the summons of daylight—so the spirit of the unregenerate is dead to the love or fear of God, to the existence of the unseen and eternal. "She that liveth in pleasure is dead while she liveth." The soul is keenly awake, and so is the body in its every sense; but the spirit is as devoid of perception as Lazarus was in the funeral vault before Christ's voice summoned him to arise. They who are dead unto God may be very much alive to the world around them, very quick to the appeals of sense, very alert to do the devil's prompting; but all the while they will be absolutely opaque to the spiritual and divine. They have no light in their eyes, no voice in their ears, no perception of spiritual sense. What an act of divine creative grace that is by which such are quickened.

Our Quickening. Notice the stress laid by the Apostle on the grace which has quickened us. Our regeneration began with God's great love. He loved us when we were dead in sins. Not because of any beauty or comeliness which he saw in us. Not because of any professions or promises we made. Not because of our repentance and faith. But because He was rich in mercy. Let us for ever magnify that wealth of his grace, which, as in the parable of the Good Samaritan, came where we were, and bent over us when we were cast out to the loathing of our person, and said—Live. The essence of the change was in the impartation of a new life. Quickening is life-giving. We were spiritually dead; i.e., while our body was alive, and our soul alive, our spirit was dead. But God breathed into it the breath of his own life. He begat us again unto a living hope. "He that believeth hath eternal life." The spirit is now life, because of righteousness. We live, yet not we, but He who is the Life, lives in us. This quickening is part of the quickening of our Lord. "Quickened together with Christ."

Our Standing. In all Paul's Epistles, and indeed in all true thinking of the mysteries of the inner life, we must distinguish between what we are in God's purpose, and what we are in our own experience. The distinction is expressed by the use of such terms as Position and Condition; or Objective and Subjective; or Standing and Walking. It matters little which expressions are employed, so long as the distinction is always borne in mind. For instance, in Rom. vi., the first ten or twelve verses evidently refer to what we are in the Divine Intention; then the Apostle bids us to realize that Intention by ever-growing approximation, through faith and the blessed assistance of the Holy Spirit.

So here the Apostle is evidently dealing with God's purpose. When Jesus revived from his grave on the Resurrection morning, we revived with Him. When He was raised up, a Victor over the grave and death, we also conquered, and passed into a triumphant position in regard to the arch-enemy of our race. When Jesus was made to sit at God's right hand, all rule and authority and power being made the footstool of his feet, we were held to be identified with Him; and if only we will hold that position of supremacy, and assert it, and live on that level, and treat Satan as a subject power, we should have the blessed realization of it all.

But it is by grace, and through faith. We do not level up to this glorious position by our works. But we are put on it by the sheer dead-lift of the grace of God, and then bidden to walk on our high places.

C.E. NOTES.

A Society has been started at Manila, in the Philippine Isles, with twelve active and five associate members. There is prospect of a society being formed at Iloilo.

Dr. Clark's experiences of his recent visits to China and Japan in the interests of C.E. have just been published in a volume, entitled "A New Way around an Old World."

The Japan Endeavourer tells of four new societies in Japan, and an old one revived. One of the new recruits is in the Naniwa Girls' School, Osaka, and has forty five members.

The Lord Mayor of Sheffield (Alderman John Eaton) will hold an official reception of the delegates to the British National Convention in Sheffield Town Hall on the Saturday before Whitsuntide.

Monday and Tuesday are largely devoted to the discussion of specified subjects in connection with the young—the Church, citizenship, missionary work, &c. In these some fifty Endeavourers of national reputation will take part, as many as six meetings being held simultaneously.

The chief items in Sunday's programme will be the Convention sermons by Dr. Clifford in the Albert Hall and Rev. John Pollock in Masbro' Independent Chapel, Rotherham, and the men's meeting in the Drill Hall, addressed by Dr. Clifford and Rev. James Mursell. Many of the city pulpits will also be occupied by Endeavour visitors.

About twenty Endeavourers meet every Monday in the School Parlour at Tripoli, Syria. The meetings are conducted in the tongue of the Koran, but in the spirit of Paul. Every Saturday, with brooms and dust-pans, they shine up the chapel for Sunday, and put the caretaker's fee into their missionary treasury, for which they raised £5 last year.

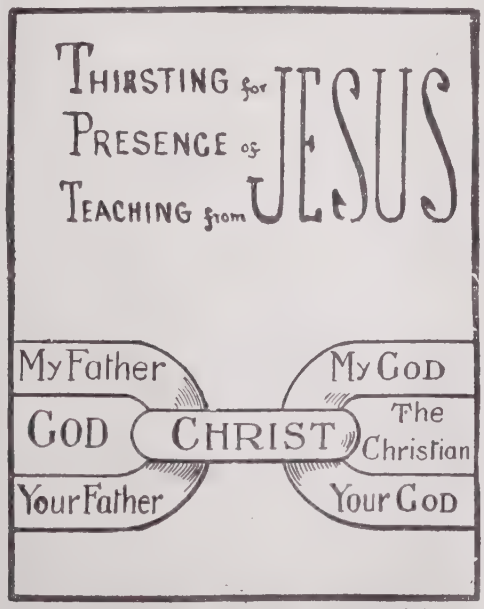
There are four native societies in Egypt—one for young men in Alexandria, one in the young men's college in Assiout, one in the girls' boarding-school, and one in the girls' day-school in Cairo, each with over fifty members. In addition to these there is a society for English-speaking people in Cairo, and at the present time a drawing-room is filled every Sabbath with young men and women. Italians, Syrians, Armenians, Copts, Hindoos, Germans, English, American, unite in the one family and have blessed times of fellowship.

International S.S. Lesson.

April 14, 1901.

Subject: Jesus appears to Mary (John xx. 11-18).
Golden Text: "Behold, I am alive for evermore" (Rev. i. 18).



Key to Blackboard Plan.—The three links of a chain show how Christ brings together God and the Christian, for it is through Christ alone we are brought nigh to God and can call Him Father.

Thirsting for Jesus.

This woman is a type of all who are seeking for Jesus and longing to find Him.

(13) Weeping, full of sorrow; and the three words, "I know not," open up the secret of the sorrow. "I know not" is the secret still of misery. "Whom to know is eternal life."

Contrast the rich young man who might have known Jesus, but would not, and "went away sorrowful" (Luke xviii. 23), with the eunuch of Ethiopia, who when he knew Jesus "went on his way rejoicing" (Acts viii. 37-39).

He was close to Mary (14), so is He close to every seeking soul (Job xxiii. 3, Ps. xlii. 1-2). These two verses tell all He wants, and He will draw near.

Isa. lxv. 24 and Dan. x. 12 both say the same thing. Remember the "Ask, seek, knock, and it shall" (15). Whom seekest thou? We need to be quite certain if it is really Jesus we want (Ps. cxlv. 18).

Presence of Jesus.

Mary soon found out it was Jesus Himself speaking to her, and she was filled with joy (16, 18). The presence of Jesus brings us joy too (John xv. 11), a knowledge of ownership (17), "my" (John x. 28) peace (Mark iv. 39), rest (Matt. xi. 28), salvation (Luke xix. 9), communion (Luke xxiv. 32).

Jesus called the woman by her name (16). When Jesus comes into our lives, He calls us by name (John x. 3). There is a name for all his sheep (Rev. ii. 17). He knows, for He has put it in his Book (Luke x. 20; Rev. xxi. 27). The Christian answers back (16), "Master." Is He your Master?

Teaching from Jesus.

What God is (17). In the Old Testament God was always known as Jehovah and Lord; but Jesus brings the new word with Him, and teaches us to say, "Our Father." He also shows how near God comes to us (17), and all through Himself, by the words "my and your."

Christ puts us on a level with Himself as regards our Father—God (Rom. viii. 17). Heirs of God and joint-heirs with Christ (Mark iii. 35; John i. 12).

The other lesson Jesus taught Mary was that, having found Him and seen Him herself, she must tell others and not keep it to herself (Matt. xxviii. 10).

Thirsting for Jesus comes first, and the longing for Him will bring his presence into the life, and after this He will teach the soul what to and how to live to his glory.

The Y.M.C.A. in New York.

THE mortgage debt of 300,000dols. on various buildings of the Young Men's Christian Association in New York, has been paid by the gifts of four gentlemen. Early in the year, two friends of the Association subscribed together 100,000dols., and Mr. John D. Rockefeller promised the same amount if the balance were raised by June 1. When the matter was brought to the notice of Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan, the great railroad and finance magnate, he promptly promised the remaining 100,000dols. needed. In addition to the benefits thus enjoyed, the Association has raised in contributions another 100,000dols. for the completion of a fine building in East Eighty-sixth Street.

Mr. William E. Dodge, chairman of the Board of Trustees of the New York City Association, has promised over 100,000dols. for the erection of a building on the campus of Columbia University, to be the headquarters "for the development of the spiritual, philanthropic, and religious life" of the students under the direction and control of the Board of Directors of the City Association. A few days ago a Branch was established for coloured men, which has the cordial support of pastors of coloured churches of several denominations. An excellent site for a new building for the French branch has also been purchased.

Children's Special Service Mission.

Mr. J. Spiers, Helensburgh, to April 14. Mr. J. S. Tyler, Worthing, April 4; Kemp Town, April 10; Worthing, April 14; Hove, April 16; Tunbridge Wells, April 28. Mr. E. Arrowsmith, Easter Holiday Services, Surbiton, April 14-28. Mr. F. C. Ranger, Woolwich, April 14-19. Mr. Hankinson, Throcking, Buntingford, April 12; St. Andrew's Hall, Barnsbury, April 30. Mr. T. E. Alvarez, M.A., Schoolboys' Meetings, Surbiton, April 7-21. Mr. H. Salmon at Dublin.

Conferences will be held at Hope Hall, Liverpool, April 15 (4 and 7.30); Y.W.C.A., Manchester, April 16 (3 and 6.30); Central Hall, Bolton, April 18 (7.30); Y.M.C.A., Sheffield, April 22 (7.30); Y.M.C.A., Leeds, April 23 (7.30); Church Institute, Bradford, April 25 (7.30).

Cage Lane Mission.—The sale of work held last week in Cage Lane Mission Hall, Plumstead, brought fresh interest into the work from distant friends, while it has shown the active sympathy of local workers. The deficiency of last year's balance has been more than cleared.

Scottish C.E. Convention.

THE annual gatherings of the Scottish National Christian Endeavour Union were held in Edinburgh last week, under the presidency of Rev. John Pollock (Glasgow). The Convention sermon was preached on Sabbath by Mr. Pollock, in West Port United Free Church, his subject being "The Paying of Vows" (Eccles. v. 4). Rev. Dr. Craig (Bristo Place Congregational Church) and Rev. John S. Bowie (minister of the congregation) took part in the service, the church being crowded in every part.

The annual report—presented by Mr. Andrew Alston—showed that since "Paisley, 1900," fifty-four new societies had been registered (thirty-seven senior, two intermediate, fifteen junior), with 1,152 active and 498 associate or trial members. Deducting fifty societies dissolved, the total number remains at 491. The membership of senior societies was 9,939 active and 2,099 associate members, total 12,038, and of intermediate and junior societies 2,506 active and 1,990 associate members, total 4,496. The grand total was thus 16,534, being an increase of 1,000 over the aggregate total of the previous year.

It was agreed to hold next year's meetings at Aberdeen, and Rev. Alexander Smellie (Original Secession Church, Carluke—formerly editor of the Sunday School Chronicle) was appointed president.

At a public meeting in the evening, Rev. T. S. Dickson welcomed the delegates in name of the local societies, Sir James Russell spoke on behalf of the municipality, and Rev. Dr. Alexander Whyte in name of the churches of the city. Dr. Whyte quoted the saying of Dr. Arnold, that Evangelicals were men of good heart and weak intellect, and proceeded to show that there were never greater men in Scotland and England than the old Evangelicals. It was they who made Scotland, and England so far as she was good. Evangelicals were at one time the statesmen, the scholars, and preachers of the country, and he had yet to learn that men like John Milton, John Owen, John Bunyan, Samuel Rutherford, and Thomas Chalmers, were of weak intellect. Dr. Whyte recommended those belonging to the movement not only to be pious and prayerful, but to be of strong understanding.

On Tuesday an important conference on "Present Day Evils" was opened by Rev. Dr. John Smith, Edinburgh. Rev. William Muir, B.D., B.L. (Blairgowrie), followed with an address on "The Liquor Traffic," Rev. T. E. Miller (Dunfermline) spoke on "Gambling," and Rev. Alexander Smellie dealt with "Sabbath Desecration." The afternoon was devoted to mission work, Rev. James Muir (Glasgow) taking up "The Home Field," and Mr. T. Jays (S.V.M.U.) "The Foreign Field." In the evening the speakers were Rev. Charles Davey (Belfast), subject, "The Power of Witness-bearing," and Rev. Dr. Black (Inverness).

The Late Mr. Thomas Matheson.

DURING his fifty-one years' residence in Liverpool, the late Mr. Thomas Matheson was ever in the front of truly philanthropic and Christian effort, while of some societies he was the very life and soul. It is felt that such long and devoted services, so unostentatiously rendered to the city, should be commemorated in some fitting manner; and, in view of Mr. Matheson's exceptional interest in the City Mission, it has been agreed that there could be no more suitable memorial than a missionary, permanently designated by his name. Hence a fund of £2,500 is being raised, to be vested in trustees, and the income to be paid to the City Mission towards the salary of an additional missionary, to be called "The Thomas Matheson Memorial Missionary."

Mr. Matheson was specially interested in the public-house missionary, who was originally appointed at the suggestion of the late Mr. Alex. Balfour, and supported by him until his death. It is therefore intended that the missionary in connection with the fund should be appointed to these duties. The treasurer of the fund is Mr. E. W. Cropper, 3, Hackin's Hey, Liverpool.

Welsh Notes.

THE proposed extension of the sphere of the Welsh Forward Movement's operations to England has become an accomplished fact. On Sunday, March 24, Rev. J. Pugh, D.D., the superintendent of the Movement, preached at the opening of a new centre at Cinderford, Gloucestershire.

The Welsh Wesleyans have not originated a centenary fund of their own, but are contributing towards the Million Guineas Scheme. Towards the sum of 25,000 guineas which they hope to raise, over £14,000 has already been paid. Nearly three-fourths of the amount collected stands to the credit of the North Wales district.

A convention, under the auspices of the Sunday School Union, was held on March 28 at Cardiff. The speakers included Rev. Carey Bonner, Mr. Frank Clements, Rev. Frank Johnson, editor of the Sunday School Chronicle, and Mr. Andrew Melrose. The addresses dealt with various aspects of Sunday school work, and were of a helpful kind.

Rev. T. Shankland, of Rhyl, who has already achieved some distinction as an historian, has made some important discoveries in the Record Office. These bear on the early history of Welsh Nonconformity. A great service will be rendered to the cause of denominational fraternity if Mr. Shankland's discoveries will settle for ever certain questions which have been agitating and dividing the Church of Christ in the Principality for some years.

Scottish Notes.

IN connection with the combined Christian movement in Dundee, special meetings are being held this week, in the afternoon in St. Mary's Church, and in the evening in St. Clement's. One of the ministers will preside at each of these meetings, and five or six others will take part. Special subjects will be dealt with at each service. A full programme has been published. In the afternoon the general subject is the work of the Holy Spirit, so as to make the meetings as personal as possible; and in the evening the work of Christ, socially as well as individually.

The subject of house-to-house visitation is again emphasized in the report of the Dundee Home Mission Union. As in former years, it has been noticed that in those districts where systematic visitation is organized, the happiest results have followed. In addition to the good effects of such visitation it is often the only means of reaching the sick and aged in many districts of the city. The unvarying testimony to the excellence of this method leads the council to regard it as of first importance, and to affirm that the congregations and missions which have not organized such visitation are neglecting one of the first principles of home mission work. The visitation of this year, like that of the previous year, has also brought out the fact that much still remains to be done in stimulating and developing mission work in the city. The organization of systematic visitation has been improved, though there are still a few mission districts where it is not carried on.

Discussing the need for such efforts at the annual meeting of the Scottish Reformation Society, Rev. John Sturrock (Edinburgh) said that certainly, during all the fifty years of its existence, there had been need—and ever-growing need—for earnest and sustained efforts being put forth on behalf of the Protestant cause in opposition to the persistent advances of Rome. These efforts, it must be acknowledged, had not always had the success that could have been desired, and this mainly through the spurious charity and false liberalism that had prevailed, and the apathetic indifference which so many professed Protestants had shown in relation to the whole question of Papal aggression in our land. For in spite of all these efforts, and those of kindred societies, Rome had advanced in numerous directions. The need of such work as this and similar societies were carrying on being continued, and not only continued but extended, and made still more effective, was as great and urgent at the present moment as at any time in the past.

At last week's Temperance Convention, Ex-Bailie Lewis, when moving a resolution in favour of the total and immediate suppression of the drink traffic, touched a deeper question. He said forty-two years ago he stood on that platform of the Scottish Permissive Bill Association supporting a similar resolution. He saw nothing during the whole time to convince him that they were not thoroughly right in the position they took up then. He confessed that the attitude of the Church in relation to the drink traffic was a great ecclesiastical puzzle. He did not refer merely to the ministers and kirk sessions, but included every man or woman whose name was on the communion roll. He observed in the newspapers that in Glasgow something like 420,000 of the population never crossed the threshold of the house of God, and yet the Church was comparatively silent in regard to this tremendous evil. He contended that if the Church would take a strong stand on the temperance question they would solve the question of non-churchgoing. He thought that prohibition of the drink traffic was the normal condition of society.

Irish Notes.

SOME thirty-four circuits have now paid the full amount of their promises to the Methodist Twentieth Century Fund. A total of about £36,000 has already been received by the treasurers of the fund.

Mrs. Irwin, of Newbliss, co. Monaghan, has been addressing meetings in connection with the Mothers' Union in the South of Ireland, and has succeeded in establishing branches of the Union in various centres in co. Cork.

The Society for the Orphans of Presbyterian Ministers and Missionaries paid last year a sum of £786, and was able to meet every request that came within their rules. When the Society commenced a capital sum of £20,000 was aimed at, and of this amount a sum of £18,000 has been obtained.

The Central Presbyterian Association, Belfast, which aims at the mental, moral, and spiritual improvement of young men, is doing a splendid work. Right Hon. W. J. Pirrie presided at its annual meeting last week, and delivered an address, in the course of which he urged that there is nothing secular, and that everyone should perform his duties in life with faithfulness, and a single eye to God's glory.

The Earl of Shaftesbury presided last week in Belfast at the annual meeting of the Ulster Society for the Deaf, Dumb, and Blind, and said that the institution, which aimed at the mitigation of the loss of three senses, is one of the best managed of the kind in the United Kingdom, and that he was in favour of the proposal that parents should be compelled by law to send deaf and dumb or blind children to such an establishment. There are at present eighty-two children upon the roll.

New York Notes.

THERE was a great mass meeting of women on Sunday afternoon in the Carnegie Music Hall to protest against the protection of vice by the officials of New York. Mrs. Charles Russell Lowell presided, and she was supported by about 100 ladies, representing at least half that number of societies, churches, clubs, and other organizations. The resolutions adopted protested, "not only against the illegal licensing of vice by official blackmail, but also against the imposition of fines as a punishment for vicious conduct, because this is, in reality, legal licensing. Under both systems offenders are authorized to repeat their offences again and again upon the payment of a money compensation, and we maintain that both systems are an outrage against morality." It was also resolved: "That we will use every effort to arouse parents to a realization of the enormous increase in the temptations and dangers which are forced upon their children by the present conditions, and exhort them not only to guard their own sons and daughters more carefully, but to awake from their indifference, and as citizens demand that such conditions be changed."

Last Wednesday evening, at the prayer meeting at the old Bedford Street Methodist Church, Deacon Gibson rose and asked for prayers for Deacon Codington, who, he said, was sick at home. "I met him on the street the other day," said he, "and he said, 'I'll be in heaven before you, Brother Gibson.' I replied, 'Now, wouldn't it surprise you, Brother Codington, to find me in heaven when you come?' And now he is sick, and I'm afraid he'll go first. He is just a few days older than I—we are both eighty-one." Before the Sunday morning service both deacons were in that home towards which they had travelled together for sixty years as friends, neighbours, and brothers in the church. They died within four hours of each other, and Deacon Gibson went first. One funeral service was held for the two. Roger Martin.

New York, March 20.

Proposed Protestant Demonstration.—Colonel Porcelli writes from Ellington, Ramsgate:—"It is proposed to hold a monster Open-air Protestant Demonstration in London this spring, with a view to showing the Government that our patience is nearly exhausted, and that we will no longer submit to the inroads of Popery upon the Constitution. A petition will therefore be prepared and presented in person to the Government, stating the points insisted on. The co-operation and assistance of all Protestants and of all Evangelical societies is earnestly invited, so as to insure success."

Simultaneous Mission Meetings.

FEATURES of special interest marked the services in Queenborough. The missioner was Rev. S. Lumley, of New Brompton, who had just risen from a sick bed, but who was wonderfully upheld. On the first Sunday afternoon he addressed the Sunday scholars, and, without any excitement or sensational appeals, half the scholars flocked into the inquiry rooms, and very many declared their trust in the Lord Jesus Christ. In the services held every evening, a number of adults entered into peace, and some were remarkable cases. One young man, at first inclined to scoff, was so deeply convicted that he had to leave his employment, and a fellow-workman took him to see the missioner, who pointed him to the Saviour, in whom he found peace. An unusual effort was made on the Saturday night, a service being held in the street at the hour for closing public-houses. The crowd was drawn to an indoor meeting that lasted until midnight. Many of the victims of drink attended the services next day. Many of the Lord's people, as well as the new converts, will ever remember this mission as the beginning of better days in their experience.

At Gloucester the Gospel was earnestly and faithfully proclaimed by the local ministers. About eighty inquirers were spoken with in the after-meetings.

At Dartmouth, the mission was conducted by Rev. A. T. Jones, of Newport, Mon., with satisfactory results. Large audiences gathered in the Subscription Rooms every night, where the powerful and impressive addresses delivered by the missioner were instrumental, under the blessing of God, in bringing many of the unconverted to Christ. On four occasions during the mission afternoon Bible readings were also held, and well attended by the members of the various Christian churches. The Bible readings, which were full of spiritual food, were much appreciated. Many answers to special prayers for members of families and unconverted friends have to be recorded, with deep gratitude to God. A children's service on the Saturday afternoon was well attended, and many of the scholars sought the Saviour. A feature of the mission was the singing of hymns by a united choir at the street corners of the town. The people were invited to the services, and many of the careless and indifferent were thus drawn into the mission rooms to hear the glorious Gospel. W. P.

The Methodist Churches in the central part of Ashton-under-Lyne, including the Wesleyans, the Methodist New Connexion, and the Primitive Methodists combined, and fixed upon Mr. E. P. Telford as the missioner. Eighteen years ago Mr. Telford conducted a remarkable mission in Ashton-under-Lyne, in the Stamford Street Methodist New Connexion Chapel, the plentiful fruit of which remains to this day.

All the houses in the central part of the town were visited twice, and many of them three times, and hearty and affectionate invitations were given to attend the services. During the week preceding the Mission the three churches combined held united meetings for prayer. The result of this welcome unity, and of the careful preparations which had been made, and of the earnest faith and abundant labours of God's people, were manifest at the first Sunday evening service, when sixty-three persons publicly decided for Christ. Every night, out of the congregations of 800 to 1,000 people, many publicly accepted the Lord Jesus Christ as their Saviour. In all, 550 people of all ages, and belonging to all the religious denominations, and some who had never been in the habit of attending any place of worship, passed through the inquiry-rooms. The weather was very cold, and one night we had a heavy fall of snow, but the people were not deterred from attending the services, indeed, on a snowy night we had the largest number of seekers. The services have been a great blessing to the churches and the town. C.

Dr. Munhall's American Tour.

A mission lately held at Springfield, Ohio, by Rev. Dr. Munhall, was of a fruitful character. The meetings were held in the Baptist, Presbyterian and Methodist Episcopal Churches. In the afternoon Dr. Munhall held meetings for business men; of the first of these the Press-Republic says: "The audience at Grace Methodist Episcopal Church was a magnificent one. The interest of the business community was something of a surprise. People came ten miles to the services." The evening meetings were also very largely attended, and there was much blessing.

Mr. Henry Varley in Glasgow.

The interest in Mr. Henry Varley's mission at the St. George's Cross Tabernacle, Glasgow, was fully maintained to the close. Thousands of people have attended the lectures at St. Andrew's Hall, which has been crowded to the doors again and again. The afternoon Bible studies have also attracted large audiences, whilst night after night the deepest interest and enthusiasm has possessed the audiences at the Tabernacle. Out-door meetings have been held, and Mr. Varley's addresses to men only have produced deep impressions.

St. Andrew's Hall was crowded on Sunday afternoon last, when Mr. Varley gave a striking and powerful lecture, entitled "God's Settling Day," with special relation to the war in South Africa. Enthusiasm was displayed when Mr. Varley spoke in favour of securing the freedom and liberty of the native races of Africa.

On Sunday night the Tabernacle was quite inadequate to hold the crowd that came together. The meeting was one of the most impressive of the fifty large gatherings which have been held, and many proofs of the working of the Holy Spirit through the word preached were afforded. Mr. Findlay in the name of the great company expressed an earnest desire for Mr. Varley's early return to Glasgow. This was endorsed by the whole congregation rising to their feet, an action which was also a pledge of sympathy, prayer, and hearty help should the missioner be led to return. At the close of the meeting some hundreds of believers gathered to the Lord's table, and a time of tender and most hallowed fellowship was experienced. The farewell meeting was held on Monday night.

Mr. Varley was announced to commence his mission in the Music Hall, Aberdeen, on Wednesday last under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A.

Mr. J. Newcombe Goad (London City Mission) has just concluded a fruitful mission at Kentish Town. About fifty persons accepted the Lord Jesus as Saviour during the eight days, while the Lord's people were refreshed and encouraged.

The Cotelingam Brothers have held a five-days' mission at Penzance. Mr. Richard Colenso, President of the Y.M.C.A., writes: "Their short stay in Penzance has left a lasting impression, especially on those interested in foreign missions."

Mr. W. R. Lane has conducted a brief but fruitful mission at Rev. Archibald G. Brown's Church, Chatsworth Road, West Norwood, S.E. On last Lord's Day evening the service was a remarkable one. Many who had long listened to Gospel preaching but without seeking Christ, were broken down under conviction, and there were fifty inquirers.

Mr. C. Russell Hurditch reports "good times" on Sunday last at all branches of the Evangelistic Mission. The work at Victoria Hall (formerly called Bramblebury Hall), Melody Road, Wandsworth Common, is making good progress. Mr. Edward Hurditch is the superintendent. His address is now 97, Melody Road, Wandsworth, S.W.

Rev. A. T. Burnell, Principal of Emerson Normal College, Mobile, Alabama, U.S.A., writes: "Mr. James Wharton has come and gone, leaving good results. Somewhat more than thirty adult students and children were hopefully impressed. Our citizens as well as members will follow brother Wharton with a 'God-speed' on his zealous pilgrimage."

There being a large number of Jews in the town of Brynmawr and district, we recently arranged a special meeting in the Assembly Rooms. The gatherings out-door and in the room were addressed by Mr. Paul Redwood, of the Mildmay Mission. The effort was so fruitful that we purpose making further arrangements whereby these sons of Israel may be gathered in.

Gerald R. Coultas.

Mr. Herbert Francis, of Gloucester, has been giving most instructive lectures—with his model of the Tabernacle in the Wilderness—in the Mission Hall, West End, near Southampton, when not only did he teach Christians, but brought out the Gospel in a most striking way. This "eye-gate and ear-gate" instruction is most satisfactory in these days of sad indifference. J. R. St. B. B.

Sunday last was a reaping time at the Metropolitan Theatre, Edgware Road. It was the last Sunday but one of Mr. Charles Cook's twenty-sixth annual series of services, and the attendances were very large. Among those who sought the Lord was a young man visiting the theatre in company with his parents, both of whom had found Christ in connection with these services, eighteen and twenty years since, respectively.

Mr. Bob Johnson, the converted "negro minstrel," has just conducted a seven days' mission at the Congregational Chapel at Little Waltham, Chelmsford. The services were marked by a growth of interest and power, until on Sunday night we could not find room for the people. Best of all, a wave of spiritual power has passed over the place, more than thirty making their peace with God, and many Christians have also been awakened to a new life.

John Neville, Pastor.

A fifteen days' mission has been held, by Mr. Charles Noakes, of the Evangelization Society, at the Mission Hall, Hollinwood (originally built for the late Mr. Richard Weaver). The meetings were well attended; the Gospel was faithfully preached, and there were more than eighty seekers. The mission also proved the means of stimulus to Christians. Two meetings, which were held for "men only," at which the subjects were "Personal Charity" and "Ideal Manliness," were made a blessing.

J. Isherwood.

A ten days' mission has just been concluded at the Hope Mission Hall, Merton. From the outset, the meetings were largely attended, and the results have been such as to call for deep thankfulness. The services were conducted by Mr. W. Collard. A large number of persons were brought to the feet of Jesus; the converts being chiefly among the young people of the congregation. Christian workers have been inspired to renewed efforts. A tea and testimony meeting brought the mission to a close.

A fortnight's evangelistic mission has just been conducted in the Baptist Chapel, Princes Risborough, by Mr. Ernest Bailey, of the Evangelization Society. Mr. Bailey's addresses have been fresh, forceful, and faithful. The spiritual life of God's people has been quickened and deep impressions made. Several have expressed their desires for blessing, and it is felt lasting good will result. Owing to the increasing interest in the services the mission was extended for three nights, and closed with a public tea and meeting.

A fruitful mission was conducted by Mr. Henry Thorne, March 16 to 25, in the Milk Street Free Methodist Church, Bristol. Although comparatively few of the non-church-going public were attracted, a number of young people, both from within and without the congregation, openly decided for Christ. The daily Bible readings proved to be "seasons of grace and sweet delight." During the mission, Mr. Thorne and the pastor of the church, Rev. James Roberts, held a meeting in the breakfast hour at Messrs. Fry & Sons' cocoa factory, which was attended by 1,500 of the employés, and presided over by Mr. J. Storrs Fry.

Requests for Prayer.

For blessing on meetings at Malden Hall, N.W., to be conducted by Mr. G. E. Stallworthy.

For a "Mission to Schoolboys" at the Jubilee Hall for the Blind, Hanley Road, Crouch Hill, April 15-20.

That the plague of locusts appearing in the Holy Land in this time of drought through lack of rain may be graciously stayed.

For blessing upon an extended tour amongst the villages and towns of the Egyptian Delta, by Mr. C. T. Hooper, commencing April 8.

Rev. John Kilburn at Helsingfors.—Being now in the enjoyment of improved health, Rev. John Kilburn recently conducted a fortnight's meetings at Helsingfors. The different Protestant missions united, and various nationalities were reached—Swedes and Finns—through interpreters. The meetings were held at the Lutheran Tabernacle, where a number of Finnish young men are being prepared for the foreign field. The audiences grew night by night, prejudices were broken down, and a spirit of love without distinction poured out.

Behaviour of Our Troops.

HAVING received from South Africa statements of outrage by our soldiers during the present war, we are thankful to be able to quote from the Natal Witness of February 11, 1901, the following testimony of Rev. H. S. Bosman, who has been in Pretoria during the whole period of the occupation as minister of the Dutch Reformed Church. It is absolutely certain that if anything of the kind had happened he would have heard of it. But what is his testimony?—

Natal Witness, February 11, 1901.

DUTCH MINISTER'S TESTIMONY.

Cape Town, February 8 (Reuter).—The following is officially communicated:—

February 8.—Serious and repeated accusations of rape and other outrages having been made against the British forces in the Orange River Colony and the Transvaal, the Military Governor of Pretoria has referred certain specific cases to Rev. Mr. Bosman, head of the Dutch Reformed Church, and received from him the following reply:—

"Not a single instance of criminal assault or rape by non-coms. or men of the British army in Pretoria on Boer women has come to my knowledge. I asked several gentlemen, and their testimony is the same as mine. I never before heard the names of Mrs. Gomos and Miss Vanpeeana, purporting to live from eleven to twelve hours from Pretoria. It is just possible, however, that there may be such persons in the neighbourhood, but I don't know them, and never heard that they had been insulted by soldiers. The discipline and general moral conduct of His Majesty's troops in Pretoria is, under the circumstances, better than I ever expected it would, or could, be. There have certainly been cases of immoral conduct, but in no single instance, as far as known, has force been used. They only go where they are invited, and are welcome.

"(Signed) H. S. Bosman.

"Pretoria, February 2."

This testimony is borne out by that of M. Constantine, the Swiss Consul at Pretoria, whose report is said to have created a profound impression in Switzerland, where, as elsewhere on the Continent, the most shameful calumnies have been asserted and believed.

Friedenheim Hospital.

READERS of The Christian have always taken such a kindly interest in "Friedenheim," the Home of Peace for the Dying, at Swiss Cottage, that I venture to give a statement of its present financial difficulties. It, like other institutions, has suffered during the past year from the many public calls on the generosity of the charitable, and there is now an overdraft on our bankers of about £1,000. This cannot go on, and unless help is sent, the work must be reduced or closed. It seems impossible to believe this can be permitted, as the Home was founded on this principle—"To ask the Lord and tell his people," and I think it is right to carry out the latter part of the sentence, while continuing to wait on our God to supply our needs, as He has so faithfully done hitherto.

It seems a testing time to our faith, and if we can only trust Him, He is sure to come forth to our aid in his own time and way.

More than a thousand patients have been cared for in the Home. Of these 700 have passed away, tenderly nursed to the end, most of these, we have good reason to hope, in peace.

The wards are generally full, and many more applicants are waiting than can be admitted. The need of the Home is fully proved, and the medical testimony to its value practically unanimous.

Our great desire is to increase rather than diminish our boarders; but the first step must be to repay the loan to our bankers. There are several other difficulties just now which I cannot enter into, but for which I would ask the earnest prayers of Christian friends, that we may have guidance and wisdom "as the matter shall require."

Friedenheim Hospital, Swiss Cottage, N.W.

Rev. Robert Govett's Works.—As several inquiries on the subject have reached us, we have pleasure in announcing that such of Mr. Govett's works as are still in print may be obtained through Messrs. Fletcher & Son, publishers, Norwich.

Obituary.

MR. ABRAHAM JUDAH LEV.

MANY will learn with regret that this earnest worker died after a period of great suffering on March 27, in the sixty-seventh year of his age, and within two years of the death of his beloved wife. Although he had been engaged in various works of a philanthropic character ever since 1854, the year in which he was received into the Christian Church by baptism, he was best known to readers of The Christian as the founder of the Postal Mission to Jews. We understand that the Postal Mission will not be continued.

HENRY SMITH, M.R.C.S., L.R.C.P.

Many friends share with the members of the North Africa Mission their sense of loss through the death at Assiout, on March 10, of Dr. Henry Smith. Originally Dr. Smith underwent a course of training in the Regions Beyond Institutes, and then laboured for a time in India. Returning home, he commenced the study of medicine, but before finishing the course went to South Africa. Coming back again he completed the studies required, and eventually offered himself as a candidate to the North Africa Mission. His health was such as to render it desirable that he should not continue to reside in England, and as it was believed that the climate of North Africa might be suitable for him, he was accepted under special conditions. Having proceeded to Tripoli in November, 1891. Dr. Smith was transferred to Alexandria in September, 1892, with a view to beginning medical mission work in that city. He continued, with some breaks, till the spring of 1896, when a very serious illness occurred, after which he was never able to resume missionary work; and in May, 1898, he resigned his membership of the Mission. For two or three winters he acted as medical adviser on Cook's Nile steamers, spending the summers in England. During the closing days he was under the much appreciated care of Dr. Henry and Sister Dorcas, of the hospital at Assiout, and passed peacefully into the Father's presence.

Personalia.

Good tidings continue to reach us of the progress of Mr. and Mrs. William M. Oatts in their tour round the world. Their visit to New Zealand was a time of refreshing to many, as well as of stimulus to the Y.M.C.A.'s and Y.W.C.A.'s of the colony. The work among young men at Dunedin has been dormant for some years, but, as the result of the visit, is likely to be revived on a new basis.

Mr. Bewley Weaver writes from Hanley:—"I am devoutly thankful that I have had strength given me to travel home, and hope, through a continuance of the Divine favour, to make rapid progress towards a complete recovery. Please, through The Christian, thank the friends who have remembered me at the throne of grace. I am hopeful, after a few weeks, to get away for a change, and then to take up once again my loved work."

Rev. Norman Bennet, who went to South Africa last year for rest from his work in public schools in connection with the Church Parochial Mission Society, is expected home on April 12. Mr. Bennet has been for five months an acting chaplain on the lines of communication between Kroonstad and the Vaal. The story he will have to tell of Christian work at the front will be illustrated by an interesting series of photographs. Mr. Bennet has also visited the principal Cape schools and colleges, where he carried on for three months similar work to that which he conducts among the schools at home.

Temperance Work in East London.

THE East London Women's Christian Temperance Union (affiliated to the N.B.W.T.A.) held its annual meeting at the East London Tabernacle on the 25th ult., when a very large audience assembled to welcome the Hon. Mrs. Bertrand Russell and Mrs. Maynard, who delivered helpful addresses. Dr. Robertson presided over the meeting, and the singing was led by a "White Ribbon" choir of young people of the district. Short addresses were also delivered by Dr. Robertson and Miss Keighley, while a brief summary of the work of the Union for the past year was read by Miss Atkinson.

The Y.M.C.A.

A THREE days' mission to young men was conducted at Tunbridge Wells, March 24-26, by Mr. Pringle, of the Bombay Y.M.C.A. Instead of the Bible class on the Sunday afternoon, Mr. Pringle gave an interesting account of his work in Bombay. Several cases of blessing resulted from the meetings.

A reunion of young men who have, during the past year, visited Shaftesbury House, Margate, the seaside home of the Central Y.M.C.A., was held at Exeter Hall, on March 27, upwards of 400 being present. The guests were received on behalf of the committee by Mr. Howard Williams, who said how gratified they were with the increasing popularity of Shaftesbury House, the result in a large measure of the care and attention bestowed upon the home by the manager and matron.

The annual meeting of the Glasgow Y.M.C.A. Temperance Society was held on March 27, Mr. William Duffus, the president, occupying the chair. From the annual report, read by Mr. Hugh M. Dunlop, the secretary, it appeared that the membership of the Society now stands at 1,138. Satisfactory progress has been made, and the Committee report that Temperance Sunday was more generally observed than in previous years. A Conference on Temperance Work was subsequently held.

The annual meeting of the Sheffield Association was held recently at the Town Hall, the Lord Mayor presiding. Rev. Canon Fleming, who was the principal speaker, described the many ways in which the Y.M.C.A. helped young men. He was glad, he said, to be associated with such an institution, the work of which is done by young men for young men. The Y.M.C.A. has never attempted to establish a separate sect, but it has a distinct mission of its own, which it is fulfilling with usefulness.

The Mayor of Paddington, Sir John Aird, M.P., presided over the forty-fifth annnal meeting of the Stafford Rooms Association on March 29, when a satisfactory report of work for the past year was presented. The Mayor expressed his sense of the value that must always attach to efforts directed, as were those of the Association, to the moral and spiritual, as well as the educational and physical training of young men. Among others who took part were Revs. G. V. Prescott, vicar of the parish, and J. Morgan Gibbon, Messrs. W. H. Mills and Hind Smith.

The annual meeting of the Penge Association was held on March 26. The vicar of Christ Church and Rev. Wesley Boud were the speakers. The former, who had engaged for some years in deputation work in various parts of the country, testified to the great usefulness of Y.M.C.A. work as he had seen it in many towns; he also expressed his warm appreciation of the brotherly kindness extended to him by the local Association since he had come to Penge, and, as a small acknowledgment, asked the committee to look to Christ Church for the discharge of a debt existing on their funds.

The British Conference of Y.M.C.A.'s is to be held at Oxford, June 25-28. On the 25th, following a gathering at Balliol College, there will be a public reception of delegates in the Town Hall, presided over by the Mayor; on the 26th, a sermon will be preached at noon in the University Church, by the Dean of Norwich, following which the Conference will be entertained at luncheon by the heads of colleges. A meeting is to be held in the Town Hall in the evening, under the presidency of the Marquis of Northampton, when the Bishop of Liverpool will be one of the speakers. The proceedings on the 27th will include a garden party at Blenheim Palace; and a farewell gathering will be held in Mansfield College Chapel on the morning of the 28th, when Principal Fairbairn has promised to take part.

Fox Court Ragged School and Mission.—For more than half a century this institution has quietly and unobtrusively rendered hearty service in ministering to the needs of the inhabitants of the numerous courts and alleys in the district of Fox Court, Gray's Inn Road. While many improvements in the neighbourhood have been effected, there are still crowds of hungry and ill-clad children to be fed and clothed, sickness and destitution still call for relief, and the Gospel is still needed to be taken to the homes of those who are either too indifferent or too degraded to seek it for themselves. Bands of earnest workers sustain the evangelistic services, Sunday schools, Bible and week-evening classes, with many tokens of Divine blessing. The numerous agencies for the temporal benefit of the poor also have been widely appreciated by young and old. The School and Mission establish a strong claim to the sympathy and hearty support of all who are anxious to aid those labouring among the poor, by assisting the needy and encouraging thrift among them. The hon. secretary is Mr. Thos. Fagg, 136, Pentonville Road, London, N.

About Books.

An attractively written and fully illustrated record of a great event is The United Free Church of Scotland, by Rev. Dr. Fairbairn, Principal of Mansfield College, Oxford. (1d. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier.)

Pro Patria, by Max Pemberton (6s. Ward & Lock), is a tale of English and French life, in which the interest is well sustained throughout, although the plot is made to turn on a rather improbable point in international intrigue.

The Boy and the Angel: Sunday Morning Talks to the Children, by Rev. John Byles, has been reissued. (3s. 6d. T. Fisher Unwin.) These are addresses of more than usual interest. The Evangelical note is not emphatic; but the stories, legends, and other items, historical and descriptive, will afford suggestive material for workers among the young.

The life story of Joseph has often been "improved" to good purpose. Rev. Thomas Taylor, of Falkirk, has given us a thoughtful treatment of the subject in From the Dungeon to the Palace: The Story and Teaching of the Life of Joseph. (2s. 6d. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier.) The various lessons are indicated with point and force.

Many of the choicest poems called forth by the death of the late Queen have been gathered in a volume, edited by J. A. Hammerton. Printed in black and purple, and delicately bound, the book is entitled The Passing of Victoria: The Poets' Tribute. (3s. 6d. Horace Marshall & Son.) The poems number over seventy, and they are varied in sentiment and measure.

The Early Home of Richard Cameron is the title of a welcome pamphlet. It gives an account of a Scottish village in Covenanters' times, with quaint and curious excerpts from original records. Such illustrations of history are as valuable as they are readable. This has been compiled with excellent judgment by John Downie, M.A., formerly Examiner in History in Edinburgh University. (1s. nett. Alex. Gardner.

My Tour in Palestine and Syria, by F. H. Deverell, is a narration of things seen and heard, with the impressions they made upon a thoughtful mind. The author was a careful observer; not an expert, not a littérateur. He gives us, in somewhat discursive form, many an interesting trifle not to be found in pretentious volumes. A special feature of the book is its many excellent reproductions from photographs. Intending travellers will find this a very helpful companion. (Eyre & Spottiswoode.)

Mr. Frank T. Bullen has made, in With Christ in Sailor Town (1s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton), an earnest appeal on behalf of the Seamen's Mission, which receives much of its point and interest from the personal element introduced. From the same pen we have also received The Palace of Poor Jack (1s. Nisbet), in which the story is told of Mr. Passmore Edwards' princely gift to the British and Foreign Sailors' Society, and £10,000 named as the sum required for endowment, equipment, and enlargement.

The late Canon Pennington's volume, The Counter-Reformation in Europe, has been issued in a popular form by Mr. C. J. Thynne. (2s. 6d. nett.) It is a valuable sequel to Reformation history, and outlines the work of the Jesuits and the Inquisition in a very instructive manner. There are chapters on the Council of Trent and the Thirty Years War. The St. Bartholomew Massacre is described, and in connection with the struggle in England the story of the Spanish Armada is well told. This is a book for the times, and we trust it will have many readers.

Those who would study Bunyan's works with care will welcome a new edition, in one volume, of The Pilgrim's Progress, Grace Abounding, and A Brief Relation of his Imprisonment, as edited with biographical introduction and notes by Canon Venables. (3s. 6d. Henry Frowde.) This edition has been revised by Mabel Peacock, who has enriched the explanatory matter in many ways. Students of Bunyan's style will find much that is valuable in the notes, literary and philological. There is a portrait, also several woodcuts, all of them admirably finished.

A recent thesis by Canon Hammond, placing Dissenters outside the Church, and exhibiting the Church of England in an unscriptural light, has evoked a noble reply in few words by Mr. C. E. Chapman, I.C.S., of Dovercourt—"A Lay Member of the Church of England." It is entitled Why we Believe there may be Unity without Uniformity. In circles where the unchurching paper has been circulated, this booklet should be disseminated. It shows that the household of God is not limited to one ecclesiastical fold, and that schism lies more in the accentuating of differences than in loving service of God in obedience to an enlightened conscience. (1d. each; 6d. per doz. A. R. Sidders, 55, King's Road, Chelsea.)

The April issue of the British Monthly has full-page portraits of the new Bishop of London and Lady Henry Somerset, also a special plate of Prof. G. A. Smith. There is an illustrated account of the Manchester Wesleyan Mission, also a sketch of Rev. J. P. Struthers, of Greenock, the well-known editor of the "Morning Watch."

Abra of Poictiers, a story of the days of St. Hilary, by M. A. Ames, is an attractive volume. (3s. 6d. Nisbet.) The love tale may interest some—it is entertaining. We have been struck by the setting of St. Hilary, and are glad that even in this way something should be done to appreciate his life and work. In the preface some explanation is given of the reasons why this man, though canonized by Rome, is little heard of and his writings neglected. The mediæval inquisitors attacked his writings, and they have not yet recovered so as to deliver their message to our day.

Pretoria From Within, during the War 1899-1900, is a very readable narrative by Rev. H. J. Batts, Baptist minister, of Pretoria. (3s. 6d. nett. Shaw.) From the special facilities enjoyed by the author, one expects an accurate and graphic story; and the expectation is abundantly realized. As a frontispiece there is a capital portrait of Lord Roberts, who, in a letter, reproduced in facsimile, intimates that he has read the story "with great pleasure." Mr. Batts "knows a thing or two" about Transvaal affairs, and he unfolds his tale in an interesting manner. There are excellent illustrations.

A little volume of deep interest, and suitably dedicated to "God's Suffering Children," is: "Yet Will I Trust Him," an autobiographical sketch of Mrs. H. R. Higgens. (1s. 6d. Religious Tract Society.) The lady who here narrates her own religious experience, in order that those sorely tried by sickness may receive comfort and help, resides in Australia, and is suffering from the mysterious malady known as "Raynaud's Disease." There are prefatory notes by her pastor and doctor, also by Rev. C. H. Irwin, M.A., of London, who knew the patient during his residence in Melbourne. There is a portrait of the sufferer, whose story is assuredly a contribution to the great literature of "Christian Evidences."

Perfect Health: How to Get It, and How to Keep It, is a remarkably clear statement by one who acted on the advice of Dr. E. H. Dewey, whose book on "The True Science of Living," has made so much stir in America. The statement is in the form of a personal testimony by Charles Courtney Haskell, and others follow him in attributing cure and comfort to a like treatment. In a word, the plan of living advocated by Dr. Dewey is—(1) Abstinence from the early morning meal; (2) never to eat except to satisfy natural hunger; (3) thoroughly to masticate every mouthful of food; and (4) to abstain from all drink when taking meals. These counsels lie at the foundation of "Perfect Health," and the book says much in their favour. (2s. 6d. nett. L. N. Fowler, 7, Imperial Arcade, Ludgate Circus.)

Some books have title-pages that furnish a good introduction to the argument or story that follows; others have title-pages that raise questions which they do little or nothing to answer. A volume of the latter class is—Happiness: Its Pursuit and Attainment, by Rev. W. J. Kelly. (3s. 6d. John Long.) The first question suggested is—Who is the author? Nothing is said whereby he may be associated as to his communion, or identified in the world of letters. We must read to learn. In a prologue, the author sketches "A Dream of Happiness." Then, in twenty-four chapters, he deals with life in its various manifestations, and discusses, with considerable freedom, the various aims and concerns that engage the hearts and minds of men. He quotes poets of all orders, and philosophers of high and low degree; and although the note, so far, is not very definite, the reader is carried forward with a measure of interest. When well on in the book, however, one detects a new element; alongside excerpts from such Protestants as Cowper and Milton, there are references to "the Fathers"—to St. Thomas, St. Francis, and others. Moreover, the Scripture quotations are obviously from what is called the Douay version; and at length "the teaching of the Catholic Church" is openly expounded, and Conciliar definitions are cited to settle points in dispute! The title by no means prepares one for such developments. There is assuredly something Jesuitical in the author's ecclesiastical standing being withheld from the title-page. "To be forewarned, is to be forearmed."

The account published by the Factory Helpers' Union of their Prize Tea Party is interesting reading (26, George Street, Hanover Square, W.).

Mr. Sydney Collett has published a vigorously worded protest and warning against any alteration of The King's Declaration (4pp. 1s. 6d. per 100. Partridge).

Messrs. Raphael Tuck & Sons have issued several new series of picture postcards, the subjects including:—1. Coloured portraits of the King and Queen; 2. Souvenir postcards, commemorating the visit of the Duke and Duchess of Cornwall and York to Greater Britain; 3. Rough Sea Views; and 4. Reproductions from some of the principal Galleries.

Among the Churches.

The work of the Baptist Pioneer Mission at Hoddesdon, Herts, has been handed over to local friends, and a church has been formed.

Rev. Stanley Rogers, having recovered from his recent illness, will resume his ministry in Westminster Road Congregational Church, Liverpool, on Sunday evening next.

Rev. H. B. Kendall will retire from the editorial office of the Primitive Methodist Connexion at the forthcoming Conference, and will be succeeded by Rev. Henry Gooll, of South Shields.

At a largely-attended meeting of the members of Clapham Congregational Church, held on March 28, it was resolved to invite Rev. D. L. Ritchie, of Newcastle-on-Tyne, to accept the pastorate in succession to Rev. J. Guinness Rogers, D.D.

The ladies of the Presbyterian Settlement, 56, East India Dock Road, E., would be very grateful for any flowers sent to them on Wednesday mornings (visiting day at factories) during the coming summer, for distribution amongst the women and girls in East London.

Hayling Island Congregational Church is an evangelistic station under the Hampshire Congregational Union, and the pastor-evangelist, Mr. W. L. Spelt, has been there seven years. The annual statement of the church shows that much good is being done in many departments of Christian work.

A Missionary Exhibition was held last week at the Bishop Wilson Memorial Hall, Islington, under the auspices of the clergy of the rural deanery of Islington. It was arranged in a series of courts. Short talks concerning India, China, West Indies, and Australasia were given by returned missionaries.

The Didsbury Wesleyan College Committee met last week preparatory to Conference, in order to consider several staff appointments of the institution. Dr. Randles, who presided, intimated his desire to retire as theological tutor in August, 1902. The nomination of his successor was unanimously in favour of Rev. R. Waddy Moss, who is at present classical tutor at the same college.

The Primitive Methodist churches show, for the ninth year in succession, a substantial increase in their membership. So far as the returns go—and they are practically complete—there will be probably a net gain of 2,500 to report at the ensuing Conference, the largest increase for seventeen years, and this does not include the large additions received through the recent Simultaneous Mission.

Home mission work is being vigorously taken up by the London Congregational Union. Mission centres will be established in several needy centres of the metropolis, a superintendent, chosen for proved capacity and adaptation for missions, being appointed for each. The movement will be under the direction of a committee, and an appeal is to be made for £10,000 to establish the work.

The anniversary of the pastor's settlement was celebrated recently at the Baptist Church, Horley, Surrey. The report was very encouraging, showing progress in all departments. Dr. Dowen, of Brixton, preached, and Mr. Samuel Barrow, J.P., presided over a public meeting. The speakers were Revs. G. Davies (Redhill), J. McAuslane (Crawley), C. Potter (Marlow), and Pastor H. R. Cripps. The gatherings were largely attended, and were enthusiastic in character.

The report of Bloomsbury Baptist Chapel (Rev. B. J. Gibbon) shows that the membership stands at 583. The total amount contributed for all purposes during the year was £1,236. The domestic mission, in the crowded neighbourhood of Soho, is accomplishing an excellent work by its mothers' meetings, girls' sewing class, boys' brigade, and district visitation. A deaconess is specially engaged in attending to the needs of a large community. Open-air services are regularly conducted during the summer months.

A service for those engaged in the milk trade or any other inevitable Sunday work was held at St. Mark's Mission Hall, Hornsey Road, on Sunday evening, March 10, from eight to nine o'clock. At the request of the proprietor of one of the largest dairies in the district invitation letters were issued personally to the milkmen through the co-operation of the different managers. A fair number came. The service was bright, and the hymns were led by a string band. A lantern address was given by Rev. E. Hugh Hammond, the curate.

The recently-issued "Official Year Book of the Church of England" is not altogether satisfactory reading. Unfortunately this year a number of its statistics point, not to an increase commensurate with that of the population, but to positive retrogressions. Thus, the ordinations show a decrease of over a hundred, while the confirmations have fallen nearly 33,000 in a period of four years. Equally, or even more serious, is the startling decrease in the ranks of the Sunday school scholars, a decline due, it is said, to "the growing disregard of the Sabbath."

The annual meeting on behalf of Wesleyan Methodist education was held recently at Wesley's Chapel, E.C., Rev. Dr. Wallace, secretary of the Education Committee, gave an historical survey of Methodist education, and said that, as a church, they had put £1,225,000 into their elementary schools. The two training colleges maintain their high efficiency, and out of the £200,000 which they expect from the Twentieth Century Fund for educational purposes, it is hoped to allocate a sufficient sum to build a third training college in Lancashire or Yorkshire.

The twenty-second anniversary of the foundation of the work at West Cliff Baptist Tabernacle, Bournemouth (Pastor Rev. G. D. Hooper) was celebrated on March 27. Dr. John Gritton preached in the afternoon, and a tea and public meeting was held. A membership of 295 was reported, with a flourishing Sunday school, Christian Endeavour Societies and other institutions. The sum of £60 was raised at the anniversary towards the reduction of the debt. The total raised by the church during the year for home work and foreign missions was £1,582 11s. 4d.

Fallen Asleep.

Whitehaven Presbyterian Church has suffered a great loss by the death of Mr. Stacey Gee, at the age of eighty-two. He was the senior elder, had been actively connected with the church for the past fifty-six years.—At the close of Blackburn Wesleyan Quarterly Meeting Mr. Robert Carmichael, one of the circuit stewards, fell to the floor and died before medical aid could be summoned.—The body of Rev. Malcolm M'Coll was recently found in the Crinan Canal at Ardrishaig. He had been minister of Ardrishaig for about twenty years, but had recently resigned, and had not been granted a retiring allowance.—The Congregational churches of Bedfordshire have sustained a serious loss in the death of the Rev. J. Compton Burnett, the secretary of the County Association. He entered the ministry in 1862, as the first pastor of the church at Burnham, Essex.—On March 20, Mrs. Rhoda Smerdon Dixon, wife of Mr. J. L. Dixon, of Stephen's Green, Dublin.—At Annaclone, Banbridge, Rev. Wm. Dobbin, a highly-esteemed Presbyterian minister.—At Bangor, co. Down, Mrs. Price, wife of Rev. Wm. G. Price, Methodist minister.—At Durrus, co. Cork, Mrs. Cole, mother of Rev. R. Cole, of Carrickfergus, and of Rev. John Cole, of Portarlington.—At Summerhill, co. Down, Mr. J. Newell, a devoted Presbyterian elder.—At Grange, co. Antrim, Rev. H. Stewart, an earnest Presbyterian minister.

Notes & Comments

NOTHING is more hopeful for the future of the Free Churches than the way in which one denomination after another is falling into line in establishing mission-centres in the central districts of London and other great cities. The Congregationalists labour under some disadvantages for this work, owing to the looseness of their organization; but, judging from last week's meetings in connection with the London Congregational Union, they are determined to take a bold step in advance of all their previous methods and attempts in the "inner circle." It will be some years before the resolution to establish four great mission-centres, in "strategic positions" as regards population, and ease of access for workers from the suburbs, can be carried out, but they are working along the right line, and great good is sure to ensue if the suburban churches will give them due support.

Judging from the many grateful references which have been made to it, the address of Mr. Jowett on Preaching, of which we gave an abstract a fortnight ago, struck a much-needed note. It seems to have been a chief topic of conversation ever since amongst those who heard it delivered. Now, it is asked, "How can we obtain this tender, compassionate note in our ministry?" The answer is found in the Gospels. It is a striking fact that every time our Lord is reported to have been "moved with compassion," the preceding words are "when He saw." Vision of need excited his special compassion. This fact is worthy of the deepest attention. Men who shut themselves up in their studies all the week are not so likely to be moved with compassion as those who mingle with needy men and women in the throng of life. It would do many a man good to escape for a time from the shelter of his happy life, and to go out and study at first hand the miseries of men. The world knows the difference between professional preaching and that throbbing pity which is born of contact with need. "When He saw . . . He was moved with compassion." Compassion is not born in the soul by magic.

Canon Knox Little, in one of his Lenten addresses, put a great deal of sound theology into a single sentence:—

> Sin is that deep thing that we never notice until we understand that the measure of its mischief is the Cross.

The modern attitude on the question of sin is that it is an infirmity rather than a crime. The modern attitude towards the Cross is that it represents a martyr's beautiful death in behalf of love, and not a sacrifice for sin. These two facts are more closely related than at first sight they seem to be. We can only see sin in its hideousness when we realise that "the measure of its mischief is the Cross." We can only see the Cross in its glorious appeal and power when we realize that He that died on it "was made sin on our behalf, that we might become the righteousness of God in Him."

Among the extreme critics of the Old Testament it has been quite the fashion to brand as unhistorical the narratives of the Hexateuch. Under their apparatus the substantial figures of the patriarchs are attenuated until they appear only as tribal ghosts evolved out of the imagination of Semitic peoples. A revolt, however, is setting in against these wild and extreme positions. Professor G. Adam Smith, in his recently-published book, says that critics are now admitting the historical reality of the patriarch Abraham, and the writer on the "Exodus" in the extreme Encyclopædia Biblica admits the truth of the Exodus from Egypt into Caanan. These rebounds are very significant; we shall yet have more of them. They ought to teach eager novelty-hunters the unwisdom of snatching at every bait that presents itself. Especially they ought to impose silence upon some of our pulpit mountebanks who hasten to proclaim every new theory as if it were an established fact—quite heedless of the terrible injury they inflict upon their hearers.

In an interesting lecture on the present position of Christian Evidences, Mr. Augustine Birrell recently drew attention to the fact that the evidence for the miraculous, instead of being argued on theoretic grounds as of old, is now being found in the historical Resurrection of Jesus Christ. This indeed is the most stupendous of all the miracles, and once faith is won over to a belief therein, the difficulty of accepting the other miracles becomes insignificant. It should, however, be added that a belief in the Resurrection as a fact does not bring with it any saving power. The mere marvel that "one rose from the dead" is nothing; it is the relation of this supreme event with its twin event, the death on the cross as a sacrifice for sin, that gives either fact its meaning for faith. In other words, miracles are of no value except as credentials, and as channels of revealing power. The facts are priceless as vehicles for truth and grace.

This (Easter) week the eighth International Anti-Alcoholic Conference is being held in Vienna. Judging from the programme, it is one of the most important conventions ever held, since a good deal of space is provided for the consideration of the subjects from a scientific standpoint. No fewer than fourteen medical men are on the committee. The president is a doctor of great eminence, who is supported by the leading men in Austrian political and scientific life. Perhaps the most useful items promised are those which deal with preventive work, for this, after all, is where the chief difficulty lies. Temperance workers will await with interest the report of these important meetings.

Whatever may be the reason, it is encouraging to learn that for once there is a not inconsiderable drop in the annual returns of the drink bill of the country. The expenditure in 1900 for intoxicating liquors was less by £1,271,756 than the figures of 1899. Dr. Dawson Burns puts this down to the work of the temperance societies. The Times, however, in a leader on the subject, will have none of this, and attributes the decline to the fact that so many of the habitual drinkers of the country are at the seat of war. Let us hope, if this is so, that their present enforced abstinence may prove so congenial and beneficial that they will continue it voluntarily on their return! Let temperance workers meanwhile take heart, and continue their good work with renewed energy. If the million pledges aimed at be secured, it will make a far bigger drop in next year's drink bill than even this year shows.

The jubilee of the first great Exhibition of 1851 is to be celebrated this year at the Crystal Palace in a manner far enough removed from the project of the late Prince Consort. The idea of that Exhibition was to encourage trade and good feeling amongst the peoples, and so indirectly to make war impossible. The jubilee this year will be celebrated by a great Naval and Military Exhibition. It is a curious piece of irony, but it exactly suits the temper of the present time, and it is sure to be hugely popular. But we cannot help regretting, deeply regretting, the present war spirit which has seized upon so many of our people. There are certain coincidences between 1851 and 1901 that are more than superficial. The great peace project of the former year was followed by some of our sorest troubles and some of our most terrible wars. Now that the jubilee of the first exhibition has come, the world is practically an armed camp, despite the fine sentiments and speeches of the Hague Convention.

A London daily, in a significant leading article, comments upon this irony of events, and remarks that so far from trade leading to peace, it is at the present moment the chief cause of war. And the article goes on to say that "human nature will remain human nature as we know it, for long enough, in spite of all the idealists"—an opinion worthy of a Pagan. To say that human nature per se is bound to be quarrelsome, is to libel our Maker. The truth is that none of these oracles take into account the chief element in the situation, i.e., the presence of that foreign and unnatural element—sin. It is because human nature is so perverted by sin that these broils are perpetual. Men do not love God, and therefore they cannot truly love their neighbours. This is the radical cause of all the maladies which afflict society to-day. Let none charge it to the account of human nature that we are where we are to-day, but to the account of a perverted and a godless human nature. The only hope many of us have for the future is that "Blessed Hope" of our Lord's second coming.

It is, perhaps, inevitable that military topics should to a large extent monopolize the magazines and reviews just now (there are five such articles in the Nineteenth Century this month); but the leaders of public opinion should see to it that the spirit of militarism does not infect the country by the insistence with which it is kept before the people's attention. Talk about the principles of peace is apt to be misunderstood at a time of war; but, nevertheless—rather all the more—is it our duty to kill the war-spirit, and to renew faith in the Divine message of peace and goodwill, which is of the very essence of our religion. It is possible, in many an incidental way, both in pulpit and press, to keep this matter within sight, even at this time of conflict and sorrow, and no opportunity should be missed of doing so. After all, the casualty lists are the best sermon against war; but behind them should come the word of the preacher and reformer, to drive the message home to the national conscience.

The pulpit has always been one of the greatest safeguards of Protestantism and of the Evangelical faith. It is therefore cheering to note that even the Anglo-Catholic Review acknowledges the place that should be accorded to it:—

A reaction against Protestant ways and methods has led many amongst us to an un-Catholic and most mischievous tendency to depreciate the value of the pulpit. We know of no pose more contrary to Catholic feeling, and more pernicious in its effects upon souls, than that which considers the office of the preacher a negligeable quantity in the Church's system. The ten-minutes sermon has done more harm than good.

If once the pulpit had its true opportunity and place in the National Church, the Anglo-Catholic tendency would be provided with a corrective that would react most beneficially both on the clergy and the people. The sermon is an appeal to the intelligence as well as the heart, and in this lies its power to counteract the mere appeal to "sensuous æsthetics," on which so many Ritualists rely so much. Stimulate men's thoughts about God, and they will care less about the accidents of religion.

The most flippant article we have yet seen upon the Ritual Question appears in the April number of the Nineteenth Century. It is from the pen of an "advanced" Churchman. Intrinsically it is without value, but, appearing in the pages of such a magazine, it may have a certain amount of influence with a certain order of mind. Mr. Walter Walsh's "Secret History of the Oxford Movement" is referred to as "a thing of shreds and patches," and by the advanced clergy has been "welcomed as an unfailing storehouse of jokes and a source of harmless mirth." This is an extraordinary attitude of mind in the presence of an exposure so drastic as that of Mr. Walsh's!

What, however, shall we say to the statements that the "Catholic" position is stronger than ever amongst laymen in the English Church—"proofs" of which are found in the increasing support given by High Churchmen to the most advanced men, and in the "unmistakable failure of the 'Protestant' cry at the last General Election"? The publicans claimed the results of the last Election as a triumph for them; the High Churchmen also claim a triumph. The truth is that the country was too much occupied with the war to think of anything else.

The article goes on to condemn the Lambeth decision on "Reservation," since it led immediately to certain "priests" going over to Rome. And finally the serious admission is made:—"There is an unsettledness amongst the clergy which is of ill-omen. There seems to be at last something of the Romeward tendency. . . . For this the bishops, and the bishops alone, are answerable." In this quotation the whole secret is unwittingly exposed. Even the very little that the bishops have commanded or prohibited has served to show the reality of the Romeward tendency, which so many have openly denied. Some men have been honest enough to go over; others think it fitting to treat the movement against their dishonesty as an "unfailing joke." Most ordinary people will be more than astounded that a clergyman can thus unblushingly advertise himself.

The Bishop of Sodor and Man has cut the Gordian knot of the Establishment in this characteristic way. There are two, and only two, alternatives before the Church—either establishment and subordination to the State, or autonomy and disestablishment. The strange attempts made by the Anglican party, as led by the Church Times, to cling to the State and its emoluments while scorning all State control, is one of the impossible situations of the hour, and the Bishop is right in thus confessing to the illogical and untenable position.

The accession of the young King of Italy has resulted in a marked attitude of sternness towards the demeanour and conduct of the Italian clergy. The Roman correspondent of the Chrétien Français reports that no less than 176 priests have been punished recently by the Italian tribunals, the offences including such serious crimes as murders, rapes, and forgeries, and other offences against public morals. This increased attention of the authorities to the character and conduct of the clergy is awakening a general attitude of repulsion in the community. This is mirrored in the Press, which till recently had preserved a "discreet" but most impolitic silence as to the delinquencies of priests.

The Government is treating measures for the bettering of affairs in London with extraordinary discourtesy. Three well-considered recent plans passed by the County Council have been formally rejected by Parliament. London has elected its representatives, but apparently they are to be ignored in favour of a political party which has not the slightest interest in London's affairs. The rejection of the steamboat service in particular is a most unreasonable thing. The establishment of such a service would have been a boon to workpeople in many ways. The reasons given for its rejection are really silly. Men who are disinterestedly striving might and main to make London life more endurable for the poor, ought not to be perpetually pushed back by party politicians. Our late gracious Queen, in her Diamond Jubilee address, said she hoped the London County Council would do everything in its power to keep London worthy of its place as the capital of the Empire.

Mrs. Mahood discusses in the Nineteenth Century the question, "Are Englishwomen less modest than they used to be?" and in support of her contention, she finds one of the chief reasons in the state of the contemporary stage. Any exposure of its condition in the religious Press is met with a howl of indignant protest as a prudish interference with the liberty of the dramatic art; but it would be difficult to find a more damaging indictment than this writer brings against it in our leading secular review. The majority of attendants at theatres are decent and respectable middle-class women, and yet in the plays which they delight to see vice is glossed over by "humorous" situations or tricked out in a false sentimentality; men, and especially women, are continually represented as condoning immorality under the assumption that passion, and not honour, reason, and duty, ought to be the ruling impulse; indecency is only saved from its native sordidness by the consummate art of an actor or an actress, by splendid dresses, sparkling music, and superb mounting in general.

It is clear that here is an institution that is bound to sap the very foundations of refinement in taste and modesty in demeanour.

Alexandra Palace Drink Licence.

VALUABLE service to the community has been rendered by the London Temperance Council, in calling attention to the imminent danger which is threatened in connection with the licensing of the Alexandra Palace and racecourse for the sale of intoxicants.

It will be remembered that the preliminary steps in connection with the preservation of the Palace and Park as a place of public recreation were taken by an Acquisition Committee, which formulated a scheme for the approval of Parliament. That scheme was embodied in a Bill, and passed into law.

Under the Act, provision is made that the cost of the estate, with the purchase expenses, making a total of £150,000, should be raised by contributions made by public bodies from the rates. The sum was secured, with the exception of £7,000, and application was made to the London County Council to contribute that amount. The Council agreed to do so upon condition that the liquor licence should be given up, and that at the expiration of the eight-years' lease of the racecourse, that licence, also, should be abandoned.

The Acquisition Committee, however, refused these terms, on the specious plea that decision in the matter must rest with the Board of Trustees about to be formed, and proceeded to raise the needed sum from Urban District Councils which had already contributed.

It is much to be regretted that the Board, on being duly constituted, proved lamentably deficient in a sense of responsibility for the protection of the public. A deputation of ratepayers of the neighbourhood requested the Board at least to limit the number, and fix the situation, of drinking bars, and to refuse to sell upon the Lord's Day. The deputation was duly received, but only to be told that the trustees knew how to conduct their business, and that no apprehension need be entertained.

A petition was subsequently presented to the responsible licensing justices; it set forth the position in the following terms:—

Your petitioners view with concern the continuance of the sale of intoxicating drink in the Alexandra Palace and Park in the altered circumstances, especially as the Palace and Park are to be free and open to the public.

Your petitioners understand that it is the intention of the trustees of the Alexandra Palace and Park to use the Palace very largely as an educational institution, and that the scheme of management will partake of the nature of a Polytechnic, and that therefore the Palace and Park will be frequented by large numbers of young people for the purposes of recreation and education, to whom (as well as the general public) the sale of intoxicating drink will be detrimental.

The sale of intoxicating liquors in public parks and open spaces is not desirable, is likely to be the cause of great nuisance and disturbance, and will attract the presence of undesirable persons, especially on the days when the racecourse is open.

The Bench, however, renewed the licences both for Palace and racecourse, and that, too, without imposing any restrictive conditions whatever. The cause of national morality has thus met with a set-back, the seriousness of which it would be difficult to over-estimate. The Palace can scarcely fail under its altered conditions of admission and management to become one of the chief public resorts of the metropolis, and it is as amazing as it is painful to find that a directorate which uses public money and manages a public institution fails to act with any high appreciation of public interests, but takes the retrograde and unhappy step of placing temptation in the way of those whom it is their duty to protect.

FOUNDATION TRUTHS OF THE GOSPEL.—XIV.

THE BIBLE: Its Origin and Contents, and How to Use It.—I.

By Rev. CANON GIRDLESTONE.

EVER since the close of the first century of the Christian era there have been in existence and in reverent use certain books, some no bigger than a leaflet, none larger than a pamphlet or ordinary tract, which have constantly supplied pabulum and furnished direction to the Christian soul. These books have been as eagerly sought after, and as greedily read, by converts to Christianity in this last century as in the first. A Chinese colporteur has sometimes sold thousands in a day. The people of Uganda surround the cases containing these books when they arrive, bringing with them cowries or whatever else they possess, travelling sometimes 100 miles, and giving the missionary no peace until the boxes are opened and every copy is disposed of. Meanwhile, we sober Englishmen read them and pray over them every day; we teach them, expound them, analyze them, discuss them, and write books about them ad infinitum.

By the force of this teaching the old mediæval system, which had become practically non-Biblical, was broken up, and the Reformation effected. Light, Liberty, and Love were proclaimed afresh to the dead-alive nations of Western Europe. Men awakened as from a long sleep, and the spirit of life in Christ Jesus once more pulsed through the heart and mind of the searcher after truth. These books have been burnt, torn up, and scattered to the four winds, over-laden with glosses and burdensome commentaries, mis-copied, mis-translated, mis-read, and mis-taught, yet they have emerged practically uninjured by nineteen centuries of wear and tear. Together, with the sacred writings of Israel, they make up THE BIBLE.

As one reflects on these extraordinary phenomena, one is inclined to ask—and in no captious spirit—the questions once put to Christ Himself:—"By what authority doest Thou these things? and who gave Thee this authority?"

A plain man who knows and loves his Bible has a ready answer. "I know nothing," he says, "as to the origin of the books, or as to the way in which they have been preserved and transmitted; but one thing I know—that in and by them God speaks to my soul; they commend themselves to my conscience; they have found me, have arrested me, have directed my thoughts, cheered my heart, encouraged me to go right, stimulated my hopes, and buoyed me up when sinking. They have enabled me to break away from error and from deadening superstition, and, thanks to them in great measure, my feet are on the Rock. The older books teach me about God; the later about Christ, and the Holy Spirit, and the Resurrection. I hold them because they hold me." Experience is thus the plain man's voucher for the Books. In them God's Spirit has spoken to his spirit, and he is satisfied.

But in order to search into this matter of authority a little further, let us throw ourselves back into the earliest ages of Christianity. The Lord Jesus, after visiting the world, has returned to his Father. He has left no writings, but has empowered certain men to teach in his name. Did they write? Have we any books which have come from the hands of the Apostles and prophets of the first century? And if so, how are they to be esteemed? There are two ways of answering. We may imagine ourselves living in the generations which immediately followed that of the Apostles—say, in the second century—and learn from the extant writings of that time whether there were in existence any books which could claim Apostolic authority.

We are fortunate enough to possess a formal defence of Christianity presented to the Emperor Antoninus Pius in the middle of the second century. If we had nothing else, this important document would be enough to tell us what we want to know. The writer's name was Justin. His early home was Shechem (Nablous), though his parentage, on one side, must have been Latin. He died a martyr to his convictions in about A.D. 165. He was brought to believe in Christ in a remarkable way, which is narrated in another of his works, "The Dialogue with Trypho," in which he contrasts Judaism with Christianity at great length. But in his Apology, or Defence of Christianity, there are two passages which bear directly on our subject. In writing about the Eucharist, he says (§ 66): "The Apostles, in the memoirs composed by them which are called Gospels, have thus delivered unto us what was enjoined upon them, that Jesus took bread," &c. Again (§ 67): "On the day called Sunday all who live in cities or in the country gather together to one place, and the memoirs of the Apostles or the writings of the prophets are read, as long as time permits; then when the reader has ceased, the President orally instructs and exhorts to the imitation of these good things."

We gather plainly from these two extracts, first, that the Apostles and prophets left writings behind them, some of which were of the nature of memoirs, which are called Gospels; secondly, that these documents were regarded as a written authority; thirdly, that they were read out in church, just as the older Scriptures were read out in the Jewish synagogue.

It would be easy to multiply quotations from the early Christian writers, most of them quite of a casual nature, all tending to show that the Christian Churches did possess writings which had reached them from the Apostles and prophets, by whom, under God, the Christian community was enlarged and instructed; that the writings in question were regarded as of the highest authority; and that, when extracts from them are examined, they prove to be neither more nor less than the books which make up our New Testament.

It is sometimes said that "the Church gave us the Bible." It can hardly, however, be seriously suggested that we owe the Old Testament to the Church; and in what sense did the Church give us the New Testament? If we only mean that each generation of Christians has handed the books down to the next generation as a sacred and literary treasure, to be held if not studied, the statement is a truism. If it is thought that a list of the books which constitute the New Testament was prepared by one of the General Councils and ordered to be held by all Christians, it is simply untrue. The business of each early Church was to get a copy of every book written by the Apostles and prophets of Christ. Some Churches were more successful in their search, and were more quickly supplied, than others. There seem, indeed, to have been plenty of unauthorized books in existence in quite early times, professing in some cases to have been written by St. Peter, St. Paul and others. But a sifting process was constantly going on, and the sanctified common sense of the early Christians led them to select the wheat and reject the tares. It was a case of the survival of the fittest, carried out, not by a Church Council, but by natural (i.e. providential) selection. The question about each book which was put forth as authoritative was this—"Who wrote it?" The practical answer which has come down from the post-apostolic ages is that the books which now make up our New Testament stand out from all the rest as the written voice of the authorized founders of Christianity.

The last century has been prolific in discoveries bearing on this subject. What a day that was in which Tischendorf brought to light the magnificent MS. of the Scriptures in Greek at the convent on Mount Sinai! How wonderful has been the verification of Tatian's "Diatessaron," or Harmony of the Four Gospels, dating from the second century! A long list might be made of "finds" in the monasteries in the Levant and the Nitrian Lakes, in the libraries of Constantinople and Mount Athos. They would include Mrs. Lewis' Syriac Gospels, the Didaché, the missing part of Clement's letter to Corinth, and many other precious fragments of early literature.

Fifty years ago German speculators were busily propounding "myth" theories, based on the idea that possibly the Gospels might be brought down into the second century. But where are those "myth" theories now? Lightfoot, Westcott, Sanday, and others, profiting by new discoveries, have compelled men to retrace their steps. They have done it slowly and unwillingly, but when such men as Harnack abroad, and Percy Gardner at home, yield to the necessity of the case, and acknowledge that these sacred books cannot be brought down below the first century, we see the beginning of the end. Disintegration is now the order of the day, in the New Testament as in the Old; but the disintegrators, whose theories are chiefly "made in Germany," are not unlikely to follow their brethren, the mythologists, into obscurity.

Meanwhile, the Word of God holds men's hearts and consciences, and that with increasing force. This is largely owing to the internal evidences of the authority of the books, i.e., their archæological correctness, their candour, the marks of their having been written by eye-witnesses and by qualified persons, their adaptation to the needs of Churches, the earliest and the latest; and last, but not least, their spiritual power. These are sufficient to prove to the world that we are not following "cunningly devised fables."

With regard to the Old Testament, the case is in one sense simple, in another sense complicated. The Saviour vouches for the authority of the Jewish Scriptures again and again; and his apostles and prophets follow in his track. The Christian Old Testament is the Bible of the Jew, book for book. There is no conflict of opinion between us English Christians and our Jewish neighbours on this point. Josephus, himself a Jew, contemporary with St. Paul, says that the Scriptures of his nation were all written by prophetic men, and none of them later than Artaxerxes

(i.e., than the age of Nehemiah). There are, indeed, very few links between those days and the Christian era, simply because we have next to no literature for that long period of 400 years, except such links as are in the Apocrypha. The most important references to the Old Testament are in Ecclesiasticus and the Books of the Maccabees. For practical purposes, however, it is best to imagine ourselves living in the days of Nehemiah and looking back. What indications can we find that there were Scriptures already extant in his days? Having carefully ascertained the answer, we push our way back to the age of Samuel and the early kings, and ask the same question. At last we find ourselves with Joshua, still using and quoting the literature of the past, which had come into his hands from Moses. Once more we stand at the close of the patriarchal age, with the

RECORDS OF JOSEPH IN OUR HANDS.

There is a long literary age still behind us, both in Egypt and in Chaldea, and we can see with our own eyes in the British Museum the handwriting of men as far back as the traditional date of Noah, if not further. With regard to the contents of this long range of writings, what was prophetical in ancient times is now largely fulfilled; what was historical, so far as it touches on outside nations, can be illustrated by the marvellous series of archæological discoveries brought to light during the last century in Palestine, Egypt, Babylonia, Assyria, and Persia. The history of the past has risen from the grave, and adjusts itself naturally to the requirements of the Biblical record. It is very seldom indeed that the two are at cross purposes.

It is certainly disappointing that we have no ancient MSS. of the Hebrew books which have descended from the pre-Christian period—unless we may except the Samaritan Pentateuch—but the MSS. of to-day bear in themselves witness to their antiquity, and even to their trustworthiness. The archaic style of the early books is most striking; and there are provincialisms in certain sections of these Hebrew books which testify to the age and country in which they were written. We find them in the patriarchal narrative, in the story of the Egyptian bondage, in the account of Balaam, in the times of Elijah and Elisha, in the Book of Jonah, in the Chronicles as compared with the Kings, and in Daniel. Altogether it may be said that, making allowance for the extreme antiquity of parts of the Old Testament, for the mistakes of copyists, and for the occasional introduction of notes and appendices later than the body of the books, we have the Old Testament substantially as it was when it left the hands of Ezra and Nehemiah 400 years before the birth of Christ.

Enough has been said, and perhaps more than enough, on this somewhat abstruse side of our subject. It is a pleasure to turn from the antiquity and authority of the Bible to its contents. R. B. Girdlestone.

Temperance in Wales.—It is now twelve months since Mr. Tennyson Smith commenced at Cardiff a temperance crusade in Wales. The campaign has proved a remarkable success. In almost every town visited the largest buildings have been crowded, and numbers turned from the doors. Thousand of pledges have been taken, over 100 adults frequently signing publicly at a single meeting. At Bridgend recently 153 adults signed at one meeting, and at Nantymoel 219 pledges were taken on Sunday alone. Many of the unconverted have been led to the Saviour. Mr. Smith is still carrying on his campaign in South Wales, where he is likely to continue for some months.

*Satan's Devices.

By Rev. PENRITH BURNETT.

"We are not ignorant of his devices." (2 Cor. ii. 11.)

SATAN HAS DEVICES (I.) FOR THOSE WHO ARE INDIFFERENT TO THE CLAIMS AND BLESSINGS OF RELIGION.—Inasmuch as man is, by nature, born in sin, i.e., inherits Adam's sinful nature (not Adam's sin), he is dead to spiritual religion, and Satan's object is to keep him dead. Man in this condition cannot estimate his loss. He is dead in trespasses and sins, and the preaching of the Cross is foolishness to him.

A favourite ruse of Satan in dealing with the unsaved is to get them to affirm that there is no such person as the devil, and that there is no such place as hell; that every man's conscience is his hell, that its monitions and rebukes are the only torment he will ever suffer; and that when this life is ended he will be launched into eternal annihilation, because there is no existence beyond the grave! The Evil One, having gained his point thus far, knows well that his dupes will not be slow to press such false reasoning to a terrible conclusion:—"Let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die" (1 Cor. xv. 32-34; Luke xii. 19-21). In this way the arch-enemy issues a permit for licentiousness; the awful and degrading tendencies peculiar to man's fallen nature are lashed into tumultuous waves, and the victim

BECOMES A MORAL SHIPWRECK.

There is a certain class of subjects of our crafty foe, an individual member of which one often meets. We find him in every congregation, in every condition of life, among the rich and among the poor, among the educated and among the unlettered. He is generally of the hail-fellow-well-met type, and the world's consensus of opinion is that "he is a jolly good fellow." But let us hear what this interesting person has to say for himself. We will ask him the question: "Are you a Christian—are you converted?" With an air of apparent contentment and self-satisfaction, he replies: "Well, you know, I am not a hypocrite; I don't profess anything." By a strange perverseness of the human mind we here see the non-profession of religion claimed to be a virtue, and a hypocritical parade of religion on the part of others given as a reason for exemption from religion's claims!

II. FOR THOSE WHO ARE MORE OR LESS INTERESTED IN THE THINGS OF GOD, THOUGH STILL UNSAVED.—So long as the dead soul is willing to remain dead, there is no need for the special vigilance of the enemy; but as soon as there is a rustling "in the tops of the mulberry trees" (2 Sam. v. 24), indicating that God is near and at work, and that the blessed Spirit is striving to arouse the spiritually dead soul to life, then he, whom St. Peter (1 Peter v. 8) likens to a roaring lion, in his rapacity for the souls of men, springs up, shakes himself and pounces upon his prey. His method of operation varies with the character and circumstances of the object of his attack. At one time the value of religion is underrated as being fit only for women and children; at another, it is the fear of man—friends, relatives or workfellows.

Or, again, it is whispered into the ear that God is too merciful to cast any one into hell. If this should not produce the desired effect, the method of assault is changed, and the anxious one is perhaps told that he need not hope for forgiveness and salvation—that God is too holy to have anything to do with him!

But let us suppose that the drawing of the Holy Spirit is so far effectual, and that these difficulties are overcome; will the enemy be effectually defeated? No; there is still scope for further designing. The thought probably comes to the weary and heavy-laden soul—"Surely I must do something to be worthy of forgiveness and justification?" "Yes," says the Devil, "you are on the right path now. Justification by works—that is the passport for heaven."

The discovery, however, is made that FAITH comes into God's plan of salvation. "By grace are ye saved through faith" (Eph. ii. 8). But Satan, with dogged perseverance, sees yet a chance of success. "Quite so," he exclaims; "that is the way to be saved; Justification by works and faith." He takes care, of course, to give the incorrect and unscriptural order by placing works first. At length the earnest seeker after truth sees his error in this particular also, and is led into the full and clear light of the glorious Gospel: Justification by faith in Jesus Christ alone. He plants his feet firmly on the Rock, Christ Jesus, as his only ground of hope! This is too much for the adversary of souls. He cannot wrest the simple believer from his Saviour, but he will devise schemes which will hinder his growth in grace, and cause him to have many ups and downs in his journey Zionwards.

Salvation is "the gift of God; not of works, lest any man should boast." (Eph. ii. 9; 2 Tim, i. 9; Titus iii. 5.) The believer must, indeed, manifest good works; but by faith of the salvation worked out for us by Christ; for no works of ours, performed either before or after we are justified by faith, can procure salvation for us.

III. FOR THE CHRISTIAN.—"Now there was a day when the sons of God came to present themselves before the Lord, and Satan came also among them" (Job. i. 6). May we never, for a moment, lose sight of the fact that the devil is ever actively at work among the people of God. Christian soldier, give attention to the gaping joints of your armour, or the wicked one, who is a practised marksman, will pierce you with his fiery darts. Your besetting sin, impure thoughts, the unkind word or look, harshness and lack of sympathy, the uncharitable remark, that temper of yours which burns within, though you check the angry words you would like to utter; pride—yes, and such pride as detracts considerably from your likeness to the Master—pride in your growth in grace, pride in the use God is making of you, pride in your very humility; these are beams in the eye and flies in the ointment which mar the lives of so many unwary Christians, and these are the points at which Satan will approach you. With the dexterity which a bird-catcher exercises in of his trap,* the devil places his bait before the Christian in an unguarded moment, with the deplorable result that he is caused to stumble.

Take heed, above all, with regard to those special seasons when you are in the enjoyment of very close communion with your Lord; or when your heart is gladdened because you have had a measure of the Spirit given you equal to your need in the performance of some specially important service; or when you are brimful of joy and praise to God because He has made you the humble means of bringing some wanderer to his feet. At all such seasons, "be not ignorant of his devices."

By the absence of watchfulness here, the fruit of weeks and months of communion with God, of self-tutoring, Bible-reading, and prayers may be dashed to the ground in a moment, and as a result your peace and joy may be lost for many a day. Be not, therefore, led into temptation by a reliance on your changeable feelings, but always keep in mind your standing in Christ. You are dead to sin (Rom. vi. 2, 11; Col. iii. 3; 1 Pet. ii. 24), and are so to reckon yourself. Use the same weapon as your Master wielded—the Sword of the Spirit—and your victory, or rather the Lord's victory for you, is assured. With every temptation there is a way of escape. The Word of God, read, studied, treasured up in the mind, and immediately applied when the temptation is presented, has an edge which proves too sharp for the tempter. "Resist the devil, and he will flee from you."

* From a trenchant brochure bearing above title (1d., 7s. per 100, St. James' Book Depot, Salford, Clitheroe). Also FEAR NOT, same author and price.

* This is the force of the Greek word skandalon, which means the bait-stick of a trap, and which is translated by "stumbling block" in Rom. xi. 9; 1 Cor. i. 23; Rev. ii. 14.

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, April 14. Nahum iii.

THIS terrible chapter again prognosticates the doom of Nineveh, whose rapine never ceased (1). She had used infamous means of alluring surrounding nations under her power, and now her shame was to be discovered and exposed (3-7). In spite of her walls, her temples, and her hundred gates, that mighty city fell, because God had pronounced sentence against her; and could Nineveh dare to cherish the hope of escape (8-10)?

She might do her best to prepare against the siege, by drawing water, strengthening her fortresses, and making bricks; but all would be useless. Her strong men and leaders would become as locusts, which the cold paralyses and deprives of the power of flight. Her people would be scattered as sheep upon the mountains. Her enemies would exult over her fall, clapping their hands in glee (11-19).

The literal fulfilment of these predictions is matter of common history. Mr. Layard first began the explorations that unearthed the ruins of the mighty city, and the very stones have cried out to attest the truth of the Divine Word. Not one jot or tittle has passed away; all has been fulfilled. Let us take heart and warning.

MONDAY, April 15. Habakkuk i.

This prophet lived, probably, at the commencement of the reign of Jehoiakim, when as yet the Chaldeans were only preparing to invade the country. Their invasion was imminent. The condition of Jerusalem was terrible to witness. Crimes of violence and lawlessness had become so numerous that the prophet could not bear to look on them; and he sadly points his people to the fate which had overtaken other nations, and which, however difficult it might seem to credit it, would certainly come upon themselves. Verse 5 is quoted by the Apostle Paul, Acts xiii. 41.

Then follows a description of the Chaldeans, bitter and hasty, not hesitating to possess themselves of the cities and wealth of other nations, terrible to a fallen foe, against whose action there was no appeal, since their judgment proceeded from themselves. The leopard, the evening wolf, the east wind, are their symbols; and at times their pride would overleap even the usual limits, relentless, remorseless, overpowering (6-11).

From the foe, the prophet turns to Jehovah, in an agony of expostulation and entreaty. Was He not from everlasting? Was He not Israel's Rock? Did He not hold the Chaldean in his hand for purposes of correction, to be laid aside when his end was gained? And then he solaced himself with the reflection, "We shall not die." R.V. margin gives an ancient alternative reading: "Thou diest not," which reminds us of the words of the living Christ, "I am the Living One: behold, I am alive for evermore." O thou undying, unchanging, life-giving Saviour, our souls cling to Thee amid the storm of the invader, as the limpets to the rock. Surely, said the prophet, Jehovah can never keep still amid the perverseness and cruelty of the Chaldeans, who gathered the people as a fisherman does his fish, and sacrificed to their own nets and skill!

TUESDAY, April 16. Habakkuk ii.

It is not enough to pray and cry out to God, as the prophet did, in the previous chapter. We must learn to get up into the high mountain of lonely fellowship and communion, and wait to see how He will answer. What He speaks to us in the dark we are to tell in the light, and what He whispers to our ear we must be prepared to tell from housetops. Visions are given to us to make plain; and to write in characters so clear that the man who runs past them may have no difficulty in deciphering their significance. We must use great plainness of speech, the Apostle said. The fulfilment of our visions may not be yet. We live by faith. We are saved by hope. We hope for that we see not, and with patience wait for it. That the just lives by faith, lives by faith, and lives (moment by moment) by faith, is the threefold conclusion, which later Scriptures derive from these memorable words (v. 4).

The prophet then introduces an ode which shall be sung over the Chaldeans when their end is come, i.e., when the vision has been fulfilled. It consists of five stanzas, beginning respectively at verses 6, 9, 12, 15, 18. The invader is compared to a hated usurer, to a proud and lawless oppressor, to a tyrant who builds in blood, to a drunkard who compels to drink, and to an idolater, who is destined to find the impotence of his idols. And from all the confusion attending his overthrow we are introduced into Jehovah's holy temple, where peaceful silence reigns, the symbol of omnipotent and undisquieted might. Let us live in that secret place.

WEDNESDAY, April 17. Habakkuk iii.

This Psalm was evidently composed for public use, as the musical terms scattered through its course indicate. Perhaps it was intended to be sung by the captives, during the captivity, which was so near. In the earlier verses, the prophet tells God how afraid he has become, since he has received the news of the advent of the Chaldean hosts; and pleads that in the midst of wrath He would remember mercy.

From 3 to 15 inclusive, there is a recital of the great deeds of Jehovah in the past. We are first taken back to Sinai, where, like dawn, the coming of God breaks on his people. His brightness is as the light, rays emanate from his hand, but the fulness of his power is veiled, as when Moses put a veil over his face. In the seventh verse we are reminded of the victories and deliverances of the Book of Judges: in the eighth of the passage of the Red Sea and Jordan. In the following verses a variety of natural phenomena are grouped, which had their special counterparts in Jewish history. God's vengeance on the part of his people fell heavily on the heads of the house of the wicked, i.e., the leaders and kings of the nations who opposed them (13), and also on the villages in the obscurity of the country.

Notwithstanding all these assurances, the prophet could not contemplate the future without dismay. He trembled, and longed to be at rest before the Chaldean hosts broke into the land (16). Then he breaks into the sublime refrain, with which the prophecy closes, and which has been the solace and song of myriads of tried believers. Supposing that it is not the Father's will to withdraw his child from the tumult; supposing that he should be condemned to see the country devastated between contending armies, so that its fruit should be trampled under foot; supposing that all his labour should fail—even then he would triumph in God. When God's gifts fail, you always have God Himself; and the gifts are often withdrawn, that He may be more livingly apparent to the soul.

THURSDAY, April 18. Zephaniah i.

Zephaniah, whose name means hidden, probably flourished at the beginning of Josiah's reign, and co-operated with the good King in his efforts to put down idolatry. His prophecy begins with the nation's sin and the fearful retribution which would be inflicted by the Chaldeans, though they are not directly specified by name.

The word consume in the Hebrew is scrape away. The Chemarim were boy-priests, who were dressed in black garments. Malcham was Milcom. The guests whom God had bidden to his feast were Nebuchadnezzar and his soldiers. Side by side with idolatry there were the foreign customs and dresses which were forbidden (8). Violence also filled the private houses, in the thresholds of which the servants leapt for glee when they had acquired aught for their masters by violence. These are signs of the depth of moral evil which was rife in the holy city.

From the tenth verse we have a description of the punishments which were about to befall. The Chaldean troops marched in through the Fish Gate, and, as they advanced further into the city, cry after cry arose from the terrified populace. These were terrible prognostications, which were as terribly fulfilled. It would be an interesting thing if some Christian historian would write a book, connecting the sins of nations with the judgments that have overwhelmed them. As we write these notes from the Southern States of America, and see the results of the old slave-days, and hear the story of what slavery really meant, we cease to be surprised that the whole system was swept away in the great Civil War. Has Great Britain yet received her punishment for the unmitigated crime of the opium and drink traffics?

FRIDAY, April 19. Zephaniah ii.

In the earlier verses the meek are summoned to pray for themselves and their land, that even now God's vengeance may be averted, or that they may be sheltered. For us, also, there is warning and encouragement. Let us shelter in the Lord Jesus! He is our hiding-place. Let us study in prolonged and loving appreciation the infinite adaptation of Jesus to all the needs of our soul-life.

The prophet turns next (from the fourth verse) to announce the doom of the Philistines, Moab, Ammon, and others, together with Ethiopia and Assyria. The reason for their overthrow is given in the tenth verse. What a marvellous phrase is that in the following verse: "He will famish all the gods of the earth," as though a god might die of famine. The prophecy against Nineveh in the thirteenth verse is specially to be noted (v. 13, &c.). Nothing seemed, at the time of writing, so utterly improbable as that the capital of so vast an empire, a city sixty miles in compass, with walls 100 feet high, and so thick that three chariots could go abreast on them, could be so utterly destroyed as that it would be difficult to discover the site. Imagine it being announced that within 100 years the eagle and hawk should roost in the palaces of London and New York—with what incredulity and suspicion would the announcement be received! But, as individuals, we may take warning. We have to do with a jealous God, who cannot bear sin. He will not hesitate to cast away those who know the better and deliberately do the worse. If God spared not the natural branches, neither will He spare thee!

SATURDAY, April 20. Zephaniah iii.

The prophet returns to the sins of Jerusalem. Notice that second verse, and beware of the fate that attends when we obey not the voice, receive not correction, trust not in the Lord, and cease to draw nigh to our God. Each of these indictments might be framed against ourselves. The justice of God compels Him to take cognizance of sin.

The chastisements which befell other nations were intended for the warning of the Jews, but they were in vain. They would not take notice of God's manifest intention and meaning; therefore judgment would descend in full force (8); but when it had done its work, then happier, holier results would accrue. The remaining verses are very sweet, recording as they do the story of a restored nation; and laying down the lines on which God will draw near to bless the penitent and believing soul.

Let us enumerate these blessings:—"A pure lip;" "service with one consent;" shame for all the past, extorted by the mercies of God which lead to repentance; the trust of poor and afflicted souls, which is so unerring and touching; the promise that the remnant of Israel should not do iniquity! Ah, how great were the results of that long and terrible Babylonish captivity. Let us ask that these traits may be found in us, and that we may know that the Lord is in the midst of us, that He is mighty, and that in his love, He is alternately silent in the inexpressible tenderness of it, and full of song in the irrepressible joy. The time is not yet ripe for the realization of the last two verses, but they are yet to be fulfilled, and probably in the near future.

Other Lands.

France and the Inquisition.

The French paper, Le Siècle, is continuing its articles on Romanism as an enemy of domestic and civil freedom. In a recent issue it published a paper by M. Alexandre Bertrand, suggested by the appearance of a translation, by M. Salomon Reinach, of the "History of the Inquisition of the Middle Ages," by Henry Charles Lea, of Philadelphia. Authoritative documents are quoted in abundance, and they unfold a thrilling story. Inquiring what these teach us, M. Bertrand says:—

FIRST, that the heresies of the tenth, eleventh, and twelfth centuries originated less in quarrels about dogma and interpretations of Scripture than in the revolt of a great part of the populations of the South and most civilized parts of France against the corruptions of the upper ranks of clergy, prelates without morality, who were almost solely occupied at that epoch with their temporal interests, while the lower rank of clergy were sunk in ignorance, and, having long abandoned the practice of the virtues taught by the Gospel, had completely lost the respect and confidence of the people.

Second, the heretics presented quite a different aspect. In the same degree as the lives of the orthodox clergy were reprehensible and un-Christian, those of the heretics were exemplary and conformable to the spirit of the Gospel.

The Vaudois and Albigenses are true disciples of Christ, despisers of wealth, honouring manual labour by which it is their principle to live; chaste, pious, respecting the liberty of others as long as their own is not interfered with; hostile only to a clergy forgetful of their duty.

IRREPROACHABLE IN THEIR PRIVATE LIFE,

At one time the success of the heretics is overwhelming. They become masters of the fourth part of France. The Church is unable to arrest their progress by its own unaided forces. The heretics set about organising their churches on the model of the Primitive Church. The orthodox hierarchy is in danger. The movement is entirely anti-sacerdotal. It is then the bishops, whose temporal interests are menaced, feel the danger, and call the secular arm to their aid. Crusades are preached against the heretics, with the same ardour as against the Turks. Fanatic crowds arise at the call of kings and lords. The heretics are decimated, but not vanquished.

Third, parallel with the heretical movement, the decay of Christian virtues in Spain, Italy, and Gaul had produced a mystic reaction. St. Dominic and St. Francis felt the need of raising men's minds to a higher level. To counteract the degrading love of wealth, and the anarchy which permeated the Church, they pronounced themselves to be the apostles of the two opposite virtues—

POVERTY AND ABSOLUTE OBEDIENCE.

The crowd admired and followed them. In a few years their disciples numbered legions, and presented to the world an edifying appearance of Christian life. The public gave them the name of the begging friars.

Innocent III. saw the advantage to be gained from these orders by a Church torn in pieces and threatened with dismemberment. The regular clergy no longer preached, confessed but few, and were alienating themselves daily more and more from their congregations. The Pope found a providential aid in these new societies. Out of these mendicant orders sprang the Holy Office, that is, the Inquisition. Once it was established the Pope's change of militia should follow. The Jesuits had succeeded the preaching monks in the combat against the Protestant Reformation, but they had only a partial success, and the unity of the Catholic Church in Western Europe was definitely broken. There is a striking analogy between the present actual state of Christianity, and that which produced the development of the heresies which sprang up in consequence of the moral decadence in the clergy.

Count Campello's Work.

By Dr. ALEXANDER ROBERTSON, Venice.

IT is twenty years since Count Campello, voluntarily, for love of our Lord and his cause in Italy, placed the resignation of the canonry he held in St. Peter's in the hands of Cardinal Borromeo, and, turning his back on the Vatican and the Papal Church, went to live in his quiet mountain home, and to enter upon his true life's work as a humble evangelist of the cross of Christ in Arrone, among the lower hills of the Apennines, in Umbria. When he took this step the proud Monsignori of the Vatican said he was mad—mad to resign his exalted station, his princely income, his sumptuous chambers in the Vatican Palace, for poverty and suffering; but to them he was able to respond in the words of St. Paul: "But what things were gain to me, those I counted loss for Christ."

During these twenty years the persecution of the Vatican has never ceased. Often, often he has been urged to return to his old ecclesiastical dignity, but as this would mean for him the negation of Christ, he has been able to respond, as Polycarp did when urged to betray his Master, that "these many years he had served Jesus, who had never done him harm; why then should he betray Him?" During these twenty years, in spite of all persecution, Count Campello has laboured indefatigably and successfully. His doctrine is evangelical, his form of church government and ritual is episcopal. His liturgy was formally examined and approved by the Bishop of Salisbury, the late Archbishop of Dublin (Lord Plunket), and Canon Meyrick. The beginning, middle, and end of his work is to make known to the ignorant, the priest-misguided, and the superstitious, Jesus Christ and Him crucified. He does this from Monday till Saturday in meetings and in day and evening schools, and on Sundays in his schools and churches, making use of forms of devotion and service such as are used in the evangelical churches of the Church of England.

Never was the work more promising in these valleys than it is at present. Schools, frequented by all the children of the place, have been opened in many villages. Evening meetings for are held constantly. God has set before him an open door. The harvest is plenteous, but the labourers are few. More evangelists are required. Two well known to myself are ready to begin work. The Count wishes to employ them and others also. But the means required for their maintenance is lacking. What is required is little. The wage of a working man in England is enough to secure the services of an evangelist here in connection with the Italian Reformed Church founded by Count Campello. The president of the London committee is Professor Hull, and the secretary Mrs. St. George Patton, both to be found by letter at Church House, Westminster.

It is from the centre of this reform movement that I now write, from the house of Count Di Campello at Arrone, in Umbria, and it is from personal knowledge of what is going on that I make this appeal to friends in England for help towards its maintenance and extension. No Christian worker in Italy has made, I believe, greater material sacrifices than Count Campello, the ex-canon of St. Peter's. Of this he never speaks, but it remains a fact, an heroic deed, worthy of being remembered and recorded. He has grown old in the fight, but like Enrico Dandolo, the old Doge of Venice, his vigour of mind and are unabated, and he can himself achieve and lead others on to victory. Count Campello is less able to go about, but otherwise I never saw him exercise more mental vigour, or display a more humble trust in God, or a greater Evangelical zeal, for the continued success of the work. But he needs reinforcements and supplies in the battle; and I hope that his heart may be cheered and comforted, and fresh victories secured by the fresh sympathy and help he may at this time receive from England.

Among American Indians.

WRITING from Sparkbrook House, Winnipeg, Archdeacon Phair sends an interesting account of the work among the red men of North America for nearly forty years, from which we make the following extracts:—

Numbers of the Christian Indians are desirous of spreading the Gospel among their countrymen, and not a few of them have been found prepared to carry the message themselves. Visiting one of the missions not long ago, I was pleased to find the hearty way in which they engaged in prayer and singing; some of them travel long distances to come to church, and all make a point to bring their Bibles with them. The only excuse for remaining away would be sickness; indeed, their own laws make it binding on all those who are not sick to be twice in the praying house on the praying day, that they may meet and hear words from the Great Chief in heaven.

The Master's message, with life, and love, and power in it, has done wonders for these scattered tribes of Indians, and many a poor isolated Indian receiving the glad tidings has been led to rejoice in his Saviour; but there is still a part of the original message as it came from the Master badly needed among these people. I mean the message that deals with their bodies. Nothing has been attempted in the way of counteracting the ravages of sickness, or in any way alleviating the sufferings of any of those who pass so quickly into an early grave.

The Indians have no adequate idea of the importance of sanitation, and their greatest need is hospital treatment. I have long felt this, but how to solve the problem gave me the greatest concern for years. At length the Great Physician Himself came to my aid. He put it into the hearts of a few Christian women who met to seek his will as to how they could best advance the cause of missions. They were women not merely of prayer—they took action. They prayed, they believed, they acted. A sum of money was collected, and a suitable building was purchased.

In a short time the hospital was opened, and the work undertaken by workers who claimed it as a privilege to tend and care for the sick and suffering ones simply for the Master's sake. For the last four years this good work has been carried on in simple dependence upon God for its support. He has astonished us by opening up ways and providing means of which we had not the faintest conception.

We think the time has come when we should look for a competent medical superintendent. He must be "an holy man of God" coming to us from Him, and for his sake. Next, he must be duly qualified in his profession, and we would like the person who takes the supervision of the hospital work to do so in a way that would relieve the little committee of much of the responsibility. I venture to hope that among the readers of The Christian someone will be found willing to undertake this good work on the lines indicated above. A generous Christian friend gave us the money necessary to erect the building needed for the medical superintendent, and we trust the doctor will be in readiness when the building is finished. We also need a Christian man to undertake the duties of farmer and gardener; a married man will be preferred.

Mr. James Sprunt in Charlottenburg.—From March 16 to 31 Mr. James Sprunt conducted a series of Bible readings every afternoon, the subject being, "The Glory of Christ, as revealed by the Spirit of God in the Epistle to the Hebrews." Every evening he preached the Gospel with power, and sang of the love of Christ. Though everything had to be done by means of interpretation, believers have been instructed and encouraged in serving the Lord, and some precious souls have been brought to a saving knowledge of Christ. We commend the work to the continued prayerful sympathy of our readers.

The Evangelization of Brazil.

SAO PAULO.

WRITING from Rua da Liberdade, 62, Sao Paulo, S.P., Brazil, Mr. and Mrs. R. J. Young continue to give promising reports of the strong efforts which are being made to refute the errors of Romish teaching by evangelistic endeavour. From recent communications received we learn that:

"Several are on the threshold of open confession—a Spanish couple whose hearts have been deeply moved, and who are more and more enlightened and convinced as they attend the preaching services; and also an Italian family consisting of a widowed father and three daughters. The padres have done all in their power to thwart God's work here, execrating us, and warning the people against us, getting up all kinds of counter-excitement; but all in vain. Our meetings are full of interest, the power of God is manifest week by week, and from every standpoint we have abundant cause for thanksgiving.

"The people have heard a nominal Gospel all their lives, mixed up with all the lies and superstition that the padres teach. We trust God to extend our borders. We could spare two of our workers to open up work elsewhere in about two months from now, as we have already a good man to stand by us here in Mr. Andrew, who has been in this country thirty years. When we came here he seemed much attracted to our work, and has stedfastly testified to the leading of the Spirit of God."

BAHIA.

Mr. J. D. McEwen writes from Onobo, Bahia, referring to missionary effort in the north of Brazil:—

"The Bahia State has a people particularly religious, but they have many gods and many lords. There is a church in every house, but it is filled with idols, and is a miniature chapel. The Bible chained is not an untrue picture of the state of religion here. The priests for centuries have sealed the sayings of God, and have shut the doors of truth, and gross darkness covers the people. In this State the work on the coast is hardly more than established, while in the interior it is merely begun. Three missionaries who live in the interior have parishes hundreds of miles square, with cities, towns, and villages, and houses in the woods between.

"Many are praying that light may penetrate the darkness here. Will the readers of The Christian join them in intercession at the throne of grace?"

A TRANSFORMATION IN BAHIA.

Among the 175,000 inhabitants of the city of Bahia the Protestant force is not only holding it own, but is making progress on every hand by the unveiling of idolatry and the proclaiming of the truth. Pastor T. Collins Joyce writes that in what was formerly used by the Roman Catholics as the Inquisition Buildings, the Gospel is now preached. Some years ago this massive prison structure was purchased by Mr. L. C. Taylor. In the basement of the building, where once religious martyrs were confined and tortured, was placed the printing press of the Mission, from which have been issued thousands of tracts and translations of numerous English works that have proved a means of blessing to many dark Brazilian souls.

The church has now a membership of over 200; ten other churches have been organized in the district, and over 700 converts have been baptized. Ten native preachers have gone forth, and a native missionary society organized.

At its monthly meeting a few weeks ago £20 was contributed by people who almost without exception are poor or struggling, often boycotted by their Romish neighbours, and enduring persecutions, which test their faith and earnestness. There are many places in Brazil that are calling for the Gospel; whole States are as yet un-evangelized. The address of Pastor Joyce is Caixa 104, Bahia, Brazil. Communications may also be sent to care of Mr. W. Roger Jones, Missionary Pence Association, Exeter Hall, Strand.

Boys' Home in Poona.

OF the 520 lads in the Boys' Christian Home, Dhond, India, a large number are orphans rescued from the throes of famine and plague. One of the most interesting events in the history of the Home was the visit of the boys to Kedgaon just before Christmas. The occasion was described by a local paper as follows: "The boys were given the freedom of the grounds, and, under the oversight of the superintendents, mingled with the girls. Then a scene transpired that was certainly soul-melting. Many of these girls had brothers among the boys, from whom they had been forced to separate in the awful famine, and as they sought for them here and found them, how their tears of joy flowed down, and what demonstrations of delight! Then others, both of the boys and girls, learned the sad facts of the death of their brothers or sisters by sickness or starvation, and they lifted up their voices in lamentations loud and mournful indeed. Their disappointments and sorrows seemed heartrending. Such a scene of

of such young souls was seldom, if ever, seen."

The boys of the Home work with earnestness at school, and are contented and happy. Visitors frequently remark upon their cheerful disposition, as well as industrious habits. None of the lads are brought up to idleness. Most of their time is spent in school work, many of them have made good progress in their mental efforts, and some have a working colloquial knowledge of two languages besides their mother tongue.

From the commencement of the work it has been felt that the greatest antidote to doubting and the greatest encouragement to faith are the devotional reading and daily study of God's Word. In this spirit the Home has been conducted, and God's Word has been magnified in faith and obedience. The superintendent of the Home is Rev. Albert Norton, Boys' Christian Home, Dhond, Poona District, India.

Training Evangelists for Malaysia.

IN connection with the work of the American Methodist Episcopal Mission in the Malay Peninsula a new mission station was opened five years ago in the native state of Perak, in a tract of country about 6,000 square miles in extent, which, but for the occasional visit of a travelling missionary, was wholly without Christian services.

At Ipoh, the chief town, we were welcomed gladly by European, Chinese, and Tamil Christians, and steps were taken to erect a school-church and mission house, for which the Government gave the land. In less than a year, a beautiful brick church, seating 300 people, was opened free of debt. Nearly seventy souls have been gathered in, in connection with the Chinese services, and about eighty Tamil Christians meet in fellowship. In three other towns in the district English and native services are held. As we have no buildings we meet in the court houses, but feel that the time has come for the erection of two small mission churches, for which £300 will be needed. Who will help us, for our countrymen's as well as for the heathens' sake?

In one year the Ipoh Mission school increased so much that we were obliged to take steps to erect a separate school, which was opened free of debt, accommodating 200 boys. It is wholly self-supporting.

Recently an Evangelists' school has been started in Penang, and six Chinese young men are now in training: £10 to £12 a year is sufficient to support one student. Mr. G. A. Angus, 99, Balfour Road, Highbury, London, N., will give information. W. E. H.

Mildmay Deaconess House.—In connection with the Diamond Jubilee celebration in 1897, a sum of £220 was raised for the maintenance of a "Queen Victoria" bed in the Mildmay Mission Hospital, Bethnal Green. A keen desire is felt that a permanent endowment fund should be now provided. The hon. secretary (Miss M. W. Thrower) estimates the amount required at £1,500.

Beginning Work in Amiens.

THE M'All Mission has now begun work in the city of Amiens, a great city of some 90,000 inhabitants, with extensive faubourgs, where no Gospel work has yet been carried on, the Protestant Church (numbering in all about 700, including children) having never attempted to organise work among the population in general. The M'All Mission has, however, been urged by the newly-appointed pastor, M. Donald Bruce, whose name clearly indicates his ancestry, to come to his aid and to attempt a work of evangelization among the people. Helped by friends in Washington with funds for commencing this new enterprise, the Mission has opened the first mission hall in the faubourg of Hem, M. Lockert, the evangelist, having taken up his abode in that quarter.

The city is a busy manufacturing centre, with large spinning mills, dyeing works, velvet factories, &c., and it has the reputation of being among the most "drunken" towns of France, alcoholism having there, as in all the towns of the north. We ask much prayer for this fresh work, and are indeed thankful that at last we have a footing in Amiens, as it was often on the heart of Dr. M'All as a burden that nothing was ever done to take the Gospel to the people of the capital of old Picardy. It will not be an easy work, and our brethren will need great patience, wisdom, and perseverance. But the field is a splendid one for the lover of souls.

So many British travellers will be going by Amiens in the course of this year, that we specially commend this sphere of work for the Lord to those who love Him as they pass through the well-known station. Let an earnest prayer ascend from every believing heart thus journeying through Amiens that the Lord will truly visit his people there, and give them to be living witnesses for him. The address of the pastor is 47, Rue de Metz.

Mission Work at Evian-les-Bains.

THERE is every reason to anticipate that the mission work among Roman Catholics at Evian-les-Bains, Haute Savoie, will have far-reaching and extensive results. The untiring labours of the evangelists have naturally called forth occasional opposition from the priests, and persecution often follows those who leave the Church of Rome. Evangelistic meetings are held almost daily, as well as social and work-gatherings for women. In the villages the progress is most encouraging. From the diary of one of the French helpers we read: "Went to see N——. She told me a woman had slandered her to the people to whom she sold her fruits and vegetables, saying they could not buy of her, as she was a fanatic; that and tried to get others to do the same. N—— suffered greatly; at first she could not understand the coldness and contempt shown her. No one would buy anything of her. 'But, now,' she added, 'things are changed, and I can sell my goods.'

"A man who took his stand for Christ some five years ago, amid a storm of persecution from his parents, and who literally gave up all for his faith, continues to prove a light in a dark village. He still has to suffer, and is sorely tried by the neighbours, who do all in their power to make his children drink, and draw him away from God."

The Cottage Home answers a useful purpose in providing a change for sickly children during the summer. Two are also supported in a Protestant orphanage, for whom a sum of £15 is paid annually.

The Misses Wellington, Evian-les-Bains, Haute Savoie, France, will gladly furnish fuller particulars of this work among Roman Catholics.

The Butler's Wife.

THE one thing laid on my heart by God during the twelve months of my country curacy was to seek out individual souls and prayerfully to bring the Gospel claims constantly before them, and unceasingly to pray for each one until he or she was converted to God. Not that I only sought them out singly; I sought them all in the preaching and visiting. But I mean, I asked God to definitely guide me to specially take up some whom He would certainly save.

The butler's wife was one such. She lived in a very pretty cottage near the Hall. She was a nice sort of woman, but cared nothing for religion. She "had seen enough of religion and of religious people, and had no desire to throw in her lot with people who professed far more than they practised. She paid twenty shillings in the pound, told no falsehoods, brought up her children respectably, and lived a much better life than those who were always talking about religion."

The only reply I had to this was, "I believe all you tell me is quite true, but your uprightness and respectability are poor props on which to lean for the salvation of your immortal soul. You are an unsaved woman, and if God takes you away in this condition you will be for ever lost. Now remember, every Saturday night we are going to have a very definite petition offered up for you, that you may be saved by Christ. Now, don't forget, as each Saturday night comes, we will plead with God to show you yourself as you really are, and to show you Christ as your personal Saviour."

Poor woman! "Do you mean to say you are going to EXPOSE ME TO ALL THE VILLAGE?

Why, everybody will be talking about me. I do hope you will not do this. Surely you cannot mean this?"

"Yes, indeed I do. We shall pray for you without mentioning your name, but I shall know, and God will know. We will pray until you are converted to God." I then left her.

Time after time I went to her house, and each time she asked me, almost excitedly, "Are you praying for me?" And I replied, "Yes, we are." She would have done anything to have induced me to give up doing so, and she declared boldly that she would never give herself to Christ. But after a while the spirit of curiosity was so greatly aroused that she began to come to the prayer meetings to see if we really did pray for her. It was there the Lord met with her and convinced her of sin. One day, when visiting her, I saw there was a complete change. Her face was lighted up with joy. The old careworn look had vanished. Something had happened.

"Why, Mrs. Thomas, what's the matter? You look very happy."

"Happy? Yes, I am happy. I've got Christ, and I am saved!"

"Praise God," I said. "Tell me about it."

She said: "I could not bear the thought of all your prayers hanging over my head. I felt satisfied with myself, but I knew you were not satisfied about me. I tried to forget it, but it haunted me night and day. When you preached the other Sunday about the woman falling down before Jesus, and telling Him all the truth, I felt simply awful. I came out of church with the question ringing in my ears, 'Dear sinner, won't you fall down before Jesus, and tell Him all the truth?' For several days I tried to shake off the thought, but I felt worse and worse, so I got down on my knees, told Him all the truth, and accepted Him as my Saviour. I can hardly believe it is true, and my infidel husband thinks it is a miracle; but, thank God, I know in my heart I am saved. Oh, do kneel down with me and pray for my poor husband, that he may be saved also." We knelt and prayed earnestly that God would work in her husband's heart, and bring him to know Christ as his wife now did, and then believed that God would graciously do it.

Leaving his wife, and brimming over with joy and thankfulness to God for his great goodness, I hastened across to the Hall to see Thomas the butler. "Well, Thomas, I want to have a few words with you privately." Going with him into a quiet room where we should be undisturbed, I said: "Thomas, everybody knows you as a man who neither professes to believe in God, in the Devil, in the Bible as God's Word, in heaven or in hell. Is not that so?"

He said: "I'm afraid I've never believed in these things, but rather opposed them; and besides, what has hindered me greatly from believing these things is what I have seen of the lives of so many who profess and call themselves Christians. I am sure I have lived a more upright and moral life than most of them."

"Well, now I want to ask you a question: Your wife has been converted. She has given her heart to God. She has started to walk on the way to heaven as a Christian. Now, I want to ask you honestly, 'Do you believe in your wife's conversion?'" I must confess I asked the question with some hesitation, not knowing how he might answer me; but he said at once: "Believe it? Why I can't help believing it. It beats me altogether to explain it. There is no doubt that something wonderful has happened to her. Why, she now reads her Bible, kneels down to pray with the children, kneels down and prays before retiring to bed, and even several times she has actually got out of bed in the middle of the night and begun praying for me. I never thought there was anything in religion before, but I don't know now what to think.

RELIGION MUST HAVE SOMETHING IN IT

if it can make such an alteration in a woman like my wife, for it certainly takes a lot to move her. In fact, it's wonderful. I never could have believed it to be possible."

The fact of his wife's real conversion, her changed life, her testimony, and her prayers for his salvation, very strongly influenced him, and after a few interviews and much prayer definitely on his behalf, he gave himself unreservedly to the Lord Jesus. You may easily imagine the wonder and surprise caused in our prayer meeting when the butler and his wife walked in, and, pouring out their hearts in audible prayer and praise, not only thanked God for saving their souls, but pleaded with God most fervently for the salvation of the people in the village. It was for some time quite the topic of conversation at the village public-house, and at the important meeting-place, the old cobbler's, who, whilst mending his boots, always welcomed anyone who would come and sit beside him to tell him any news. Many thought these new converts would not last long. It was only a passing emotion. They would soon get over it, and settle down as usual. Still, they acknowledged it was wonderful; the persons who had been converted were the very last people in the world whom they would have

EXPECTED TO "TURN RELIGIOUS."

My idea being to single out certain people, and to stick to them till they were converted, soon seemed to become understood by many of the people. They got somewhat afraid that each, in turn, would be "buttonholed," and prayed over earnestly till they gave themselves up to the Lord. Oh, what devices many of them had to avoid or to get away from me! How frightened many of them seemed that the new parson would come and fasten on them searching personal questions about sin, condemnation, and eternity! Yes, I was after their souls, and they very soon found it out.

Now that the Lord had really converted the infidel butler and his wife, my courage was strengthened, and my faith to believe that God would, in his infinite mercy, take hold one by one of the most hardened and most rebellious. I could believe that nothing was too hard for the Lord; if he could save Saul of Tarsus, He could save any of the people in this village. Even the scoffers and those who treated religion with contempt could and must be brought to his feet. He had shown his power in some cases, and his power would do the same thing in saving many others.

[The above true story, written by a clergyman, is sent us by Mr. Thomas Hogben (Welcome Mission, Portsmouth), founder of the "One-by-One Band."]

Mr. Meyer in America.

WE finished our work in Atlanta amid scenes of much interest and blessing. Dr. Broughton's large church, holding 3,000 people, was crowded morning, afternoon, and evening, with mighty audiences. Dr. Torrey, Mr. Needham, and others, took part. Many prominent people have been converted, backsliders reclaimed, and numbers of believers led to appreciate their privileges in Christ.

From Atlanta we came to Birmingham, the centre of a coal and iron district, which is swiftly growing into a large commercial centre. Here all the churches have united in promoting the services in a very imposing Methodist church, holding over 2,000 persons. From the first service there have been great audiences, and every manifestation of spiritual quickening. One's only lamentation is that one cannot remain as many weeks as the programme permits of days.

In each of these cities I have also had the privilege of holding SERVICES FOR THE COLOURED PEOPLE.

They do not attend public meetings with the white people, and therefore if they are reached it can only be by going to their own churches. Their ministers in many cases are highly educated. For instance, the minister of the Baptist Church, where I preached on Sunday morning, was familiar enough with Hebrew and Greek to read his Bible in the original. He told me that the more educated the coloured man becomes, the more he feels the ban under which he and his race labour. Of course, an Englishman, who has travelled in India and witnessed the same line of demarcation there between the English and the natives, has nothing to say in the matter. But it is a sore problem.

Strong efforts are being made to educate the young coloured men and women in great seminaries, in some of which as many as 500 are being boarded and trained for various positions; and there are signs that the race is improving its social standing. For instance, in this city many and they have a bank. Still they have to learn to husband their resources. My one message is that, in the power of God, they should rise to a higher type of character for truth, purity, and integrity. Some of them, I fear, count me rather stolid and unfeeling. For instance, on Sunday morning I had to entreat one of the "Aunties" who was breaking in with the most extraordinary outcries, to moderate a little, for I found it was exciting the rest of the congregation to such an extent that it was almost impossible to proceed. So she left off crying out, only rocking herself to and fro.

Poor children of a long enslaved race, with the hot passion of Africa still within their veins, there is no doubt that, notwithstanding all that is laid to their door, many of them are devout lovers of our Saviour.

Mr. Needham told me that on one occasion he asked an old coloured woman what she would do in the hour of death, since Satan was so strong. "Well," she said, "when two dogs are fighting for a bone, does the bone do anything? It don't fight, it lies there between them, and the stronger gets it. So, when I come to Jordan, an' ole Satan tries to get me, I'll turn him over to Jesus, and jest keep still, for Massa Jesus He's stronger than Satan."

The white ministers and Christians are kindness itself. It is impossible to think of any courtesy which they are not prepared to show the stranger. About eight ministers met us at the station on our arrival. The Christian Endeavourers of the city greeted us with a handsome bouquet of flowers. We leave to-morrow for Chattanooga and Louisville. But, oh, for a few more lives to spend in this work, which is so needful and so appreciated.

Birmingham, Ala., March 24.

The Late Major Whittle.

MAJOR WHITTLE—who, as we announced in our issue of March 7, had been three days earlier called home from the scene of his earthly labours—was born at Chicopee Falls, Mass., November 22, 1840, and in 1861 entered the employment of the National Express Company, Chicago. The war which broke out in that year led him to resign this post in order to raise a company among the young men connected with the Board of Trade, and of this he was chosen lieutenant. The company was enrolled in the 72nd Illinois Volunteers, and Major Whittle served with it until wounded in 1863.

Returning to duty after only a short leave of absence, he then joined the staff of General O. O. Howard. Serving under one who was himself noted for outstanding Christian character, Major Whittle found an open field for seeking the spiritual interests of the men.

Unique opportunities for Christian work were afforded in the great camps into which recruits were gathered before being sent to the front. The men came together with their minds set on very different things; but the time of waiting allowed the good seed of the Word to take root. Soon a number were found to be in a state of deep concern. The movement spread to such an extent that on one Lord's Day, at Chickamauga alone, fifteen services were held, and nearly 600 men signed cards definitely stating that they had decided for Christ. All over the United States there are men who recall with gratitude the light on spiritual things then received through Major Whittle and his coadjutors.

The Major's own testimony was that he began doing the work of an evangelist in 1874, "led into it by that bundle of electricity, and steam, and dynamite combined, D. L. Moody." This is his story:—

In 1863 I was in Chicago, home on a brief furlough, with a wound received at Vicksburg. There was a great demonstration at that time, and Bishop Simpson was to give an address, stirring up the people in connection with the work of the Christian Commission. I was brought to the platform, and I never felt so foolish in my life as in being there. The friends received me kindly, because of the patriotism and love of the soldiers they felt. Mr. Moody was in the audience, and as I stood on the platform he rose to his feet and waved his hat, with that face of his all it up. I told him afterwards how foolish I felt, and he said to me, "Whittle, that night, and you have never been out of it since."

I TOOK YOU INTO MY HEART

He followed me right along, and one night, in the city of Chicago, I received my ordination. Mr. Moody was the bishop who ordained me. We stood under a lamp-post as we were walking home. We were talking about the work, what ought to be done, and what could be done. In that earnest, simple, direct way of his, he pulled out his Bible, and put his finger on 2 Tim. iv. 1, 2, and said, "See here, Whittle, this is what God wants us to do—Preach the Word."

In 1874, Mr. Moody brought Mr. P. P. Bliss to Major Whittle as one well fitted to accompany him on his campaigns, singing the Gospel; and this was the beginning of a blessed co-partnership in the work of the Lord. At the very meeting at which they were introduced, Major Whittle told the story of how General Sherman once signalled to his beleaguered troops by means of white flags, "Hold the fort, for I am coming." Mr. Bliss was quick to seize the incident, and wrote the stirring melody which is so well known as No. 1 of "Sacred Songs and Solos." When Mr. Moody was in Scotland in 1874, he wrote repeatedly to Major Whittle and Mr. Bliss, urging them to give up business and to devote themselves entirely to the work of the Lord; and, after much waiting upon God, they took the step about the same time. For nearly three years the fellowship lasted, until Mr. Bliss was suddenly summoned home by the fatal railway accident at Ashtabula. When a new song was written Mr. Bliss would spend half an hour in thanksgiving to God, and prayer for his blessing upon it; and then he would say, "Oh, Whittle, God has given me another message right from himself."

Some weeks were spent by the two friends at Northfield in 1875. In October, 1876, they joined Mr. Moody in a great campaign at Chicago, and were busy right up to their last meeting at Peoria, in the middle of December.

MAJOR WHITTLE AND HIS GRAND-DAUGHTER.

Strange are the leadings of Providence, for it was Mr. Bliss who first spoke to Major Whittle about Mr. James McGranahan. The Major has told the story himself:

A week before Mr. Bliss left me he read to me a letter he had just written. He said it was to a man whom he very much wanted to see in Gospel work, who could write music and sing, and whom he wanted to do these for the Lord. He asked me if I knew anyone who would go with Mr. McGranahan. I said I did not know of anybody, but that if he would consecrate himself to God someone would be raised up to accompany him.

When the Major went to Ashtabula on hearing of the disaster, a man went up to him and said, "Mr. Bliss was one of my dearest friends; my name is McGranahan." There stood the man whom Mr. Bliss had chosen to be his own successor.

Among Mr. Bliss' papers there were many MSS., including the words of the song, "My Redeemer," which Mr. McGranahan was able to wed to music.

After labouring together in many parts of the United States, Messrs. Whittle and McGranahan became widely known in this country by the campaign of 1880-81, when among other coadjutors whom they enlisted was Dr. Moxey. The series of meetings closed with a conference on "The Winning of Souls," at Belfast, in connection with which Dr. Knox wrote in The Witness:—

Major Whittle is one of the most humble and lovable men I have ever known, and (as far as one can judge) a man of the loftiest aims and the purest motives. In everything he says and does he seems to hide behind the Master. When he and his companions leave Belfast they will carry with them the prayers and hearty benedictions of God's people.

On October 9, 1883, there landed at Queenstown an evangelistic party, consisting of Mr. Moody, Mr. Sankey, Major Whittle, and Mr. and Mrs. McGranahan. After a tour in Ireland the friends proceeded to London, where the great was beginning to manifest itself.

A long and memorable visit was paid to these islands, the Major arriving in the autumn of 1888, and saying farewell in May, 1890. Beginning in Ireland, town after town was found to be well prepared for the sower of the Seed of the Kingdom. In the earlier months of 1889 a widely extended tour was made in Scotland. The movement found its main centre in Edinburgh. Many leading men took part in the effort, and the Major's son, Charles, found good work laid to his hand in special gatherings of young people. In an address to his congregation, Dr. Alexander Whyte referred to the effort in the following terms:—

I do not know whether any of you have been to hear Major Whittle; you have missed a great deal if you have not. Last week I was present. It was a grand meeting. I never got my heart as warmed in my life as I did at the meeting of young men.

A short visit was paid to London in the end of June, when Major Whittle gave an address at the Mildmay Conference on "One with Christ in Death and Life." Returning in the early autumn, the northern tour was brought to a close in November. For some months special attention was given to the London district, when at the services held particularly at Greenwich and Woolwich, young people were laid hold of in a special manner. The entire tour of about twenty-one months was brought to a close by a large gathering of friends at Mildmay, when an affectionate good-bye was said to Dr. Pierson and Major Whittle on their leaving for home.

When in Ireland in 1892, Major Whittle re-visited Bandon after an interval of nine years. The testimony afterwards was that the town the large town-hall being quite inadequate to accommodate the people who crowded to the meetings.

HAD NEVER BEEN SO MOVED BEFORE,

The mission at Wexford, immediately following, was also described as the most successful that the local workers had known. On the earlier visit (1881) the opposition to evangelical truth was such that serious riots took place. Houses were wrecked, extra police had to be drafted into the town to keep order, and great expense was incurred in making good the damage done by the mob. In 1892 everything was changed, and with one solitary exception not an offensive act or word was offered to anyone connected with the undertaking. Good work followed at Kingstown, Wicklow, Arklow, Enniscorthy, Athlone, and Belfast.

Major and Mrs. Whittle came to this country in the autumn of 1896, and after a few weeks were joined by Mr. and Mrs. Stebbins. In our issues at the time we traced their progress to Alloa (where such a movement began among children in board schools that 1,200 were present on one afternoon), Glasgow, Inverness, Dingwall, Edinburgh, Leith, Kilmarnock, Greenock, Dumfries, Airdrie, Aberdeen, and Thurso. May, 1897, was spent in London.

In 1898, a great work for God was done

AMONG THE UNITED STATES TROOPS

engaged in the war with Spain. The special effort began in the camp at Tampa, where Major Whittle was again associated with General O. O. Howard, Dr. A. C. Dixon, himself an old soldier, and Mr. J. H. Burke, the well-known Gospel singer. The following extracts from the Major's letters will give the best impression of the spirit, nature, and encouragement of the work:

May 18.—Over 200 men asked for prayer in the meetings last night. May 23.—We had a grand day yesterday with the soldiers. About twelve services in all were held, and many were blessed. May 30.—100 or more asked for prayer. June 10.—Conversions every night. The men are very tender and responsive. Last night numbers professed to accept Christ at both meetings. June 16.—I called on a dying lieutenant this morning, who says he was led to God at the first meeting held by me in the camp. June 24.—We now have nineteen field tents among the 50,000 men concentrated at Chickamauga, Georgia, used by the men as reading and writing places during the day, and for meetings in the evening. In many regiments revivals have broken out, and scores of men are being converted to God. I have never seen a more genuine work of God's Spirit than here among our soldiers.

REMINISCENCES FROM BELFAST.

By Rev. Henry Montgomery.

May, 1881, when Major Whittle, with Mr. and Mrs. McGranahan, first visited our Northern Irish metropolis, can never be forgotten by those in the city who are interested in the ingathering of sinners, and in the movements of the Holy Ghost.

The noon meetings were held in a central church, long since pulled down, and were scenes of spiritual power and quickening. The dew of heaven rested on God's servant. He spoke so quietly, so logically, so Scripturally, that many received divine impressions and impulses which lifted them up to a new and fuller experience of the life more abundant. He was very tender and careful about the requests for prayer sent in, and had some telling illustrations of the power of prayer, and of answers by which God graciously encourages his children to continue instant in this blessed exercise.

The evening meetings began in another central church, and were, for Gospel services, most singularly solemn and awe-inspiring. His text on the first evening was deeply impressed on the writer's memory —"For the wrath of God is revealed from heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men" (Rom. i. 18). It was like bringing people out for execution to hear him speak. He certainly showed man to be in a bad case, without a grain of hope apart from the Gospel, but the main drift and purport of his earlier addresses were a solemn vindication of God and a strong indictment against man. Though this was the line adopted, the meetings grew and the conviction was deep. His address to Christian workers (Soul Winning. 1d. Morgan & Scott) is full of wise and timely counsel, and is in reality an account of his own methods in the inquiry room.

Major Whittle strengthened the service of song by several of his new hymns on the occasion of this visit. One can never forget the the lifting power of "The Gospel of thy Grace," "O what a Saviour," and other such songs introduced by the beloved evangelists.

The most fruitful end of the mission was the meetings for the young. The missioners were owned of God in leading many of the better-class boys and girls to a clear apprehension of the truth as it is in Jesus. Not long since, the writer had a letter from a lady missionary in China, a medical doctor, who as a girl yielded her life to the Saviour in one of Major Whittle's meetings.

These qualities strongly recommended him in the South and West of Ireland, where, though sometimes opposed through priestly intolerance, he always had a large section of his audiences Roman Catholics. On one occasion it was the writer's privilege to share a meeting with the evangelist in a South of Ireland town. Almost half the congregation of 700 or 800 were Roman Catholics, it was said. When the first meeting ended groups lingered behind, and one of these was a party of young men numbering perhaps fifty or sixty.

On asking the Major the meaning of this he at once replied that the group consisted of bright, intelligent young men, who were waiting for an interview regarding the sermon and the Saviour. We had long and earnest conversation that night over the Douay Testament, and we read many portions bearing on the Gospel message. Such was the conciliatory and friendly attitude of Major Whittle that the warm-hearted Irish really loved him.

ALL ROMAN CATHOLICS,

His long and last illness has about it a pathos almost unspeakable. The old fire burned within him even when the powerful frame had become weakened by illness. Never, we believe, did there pass into the presence chamber of the King a more loyal and loving subject than our well-loved friend.

The Pentecostal Gift.

OUR Lord during his earthly ministry delighted to speak of the Holy Spirit. In his conversation with the Samaritan woman (John iv., 10, 13, 14), He spoke of

THE HOLY SPIRIT INDWELLING.

"If thou knewest the gift of God, and who it is that saith to thee, Give Me to drink; thou wouldest have asked of Him, and He would have given thee living water. . . . Every one that drinketh of this water shall thirst again: but whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst; but the water that I shall give him shall become in him a well of water springing up unto eternal life." The world and its pleasures cannot satisfy; they please only for a season. When the Holy Spirit takes up his abode in the heart, He becomes the Satisfier of the believer, whom He feeds on the Bread of Life. In the last day, the great day of the feast (John 7/37), Jesus spoke of

THE OVERFLOWING HOLY SPIRIT.

He stood and cried, saying, "If any man thirst, let him come unto Me, and drink. He that believeth on Me, as the Scripture hath said, out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water." The Evangelist adds, "But this spake He of the Spirit, whom they that believed on Him were to receive: for the Spirit was not yet [given]; because Jesus was not yet glorified." This passage teaches us that the Holy Spirit is given to "him that believeth" on Christ; and shall not only satisfy the believer's own soul, but shall flow out of him in blessing and refreshment to others.

THE HOLY SPIRIT GIVEN ON BELIEVING.

By the Authorised Version of Acts 19/2 in which the Apostle Paul, coming to Ephesus and finding certain disciples, inquired of them, "Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed?" an impression is conveyed that the incoming of the Holy Spirit is an act subsequent to faith. But the question as put by the Apostle, as is made clear by the Revised Version, was, "Did ye receive the Holy Ghost when ye believed?" This goes to prove that the Holy Spirit is received when a sinner believes on Jesus. This is confirmed by the same Apostle when, in writing to the Church at Rome (Rom. 8/9), he says: "Ye are not in the flesh, but in the Spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you. But if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his." This is again confirmed by St. Paul's Second Epistle to the Corinthians (1/22), to whom he says, God "sealed us and gave us the earnest of the Spirit in our hearts." As a farmer marks the sheep he has purchased, so God seals his children by the gift of the Spirit; as a man receives a deposit, as a pledge and token of more to come, so God gives us the Holy Spirit as "an earnest" of all the spiritual blessings with which He has blessed us in Christ Jesus.

THE HOLY SPIRIT NOT GIVEN BY INSTALMENTS.

The Scripture does not say that God gives us an instalment of the Spirit, as some have sincerely but mistakenly supposed, but He gives us the Spirit as "an earnest." The Word of God is very clear in its statements that when God gives the Holy Spirit, He gives without reserve. "He giveth not the Spirit by measure" (John 3/34).

THE HOLY SPIRIT GIVEN TO ALL CHRISTIANS.

The believers at Corinth had been born and brought up in a corrupt and licentious city. The most abominable sins formed part of the temple worship in which they had participated. These sins had become so habitual that the temptation clung to them after their conversion. Paul insists on their entire separation from these sins, and anticipating that they would plead their inability to overcome, he says to them in his first Epistle (6/19), "What? know ye not that your body is a temple of the Holy Ghost who is in you, whom ye have from God? and ye are not your own; for ye were bought with a price: glorify God therefore in your body." If this was true of the carnal Corinthians, in their early stage of spiritual attainment, thank God it is true also of us in our weakness and imperfection. "Your body is a temple of the Holy Ghost, who is in you."

This is the Scriptural explanation of how a poor degraded sinner, on believing, at once becomes "a new creature" in Christ Jesus; "the old things are passed away; behold, they are become new" (2 Cor. 5/17). The drunkard, the liar, the thief, can at once resist and overcome temptation; he can at once enjoy the things of God, and join the fellowship of the redeemed. He is born again and indwelt by the Spirit of God. That and on no other ground, is clearly seen from St. Paul's Epistle to the Galatians, of whom he asks the question (3/1—3). "O foolish Galatians, . . . this only would I learn from you, Received ye the Spirit by works of law (by merit) or by the hearing of faith (by grace)? Are ye so foolish, having begun in the Spirit, are ye now perfected in the flesh?" "Because ye are sons, God sent forth the Spirit of his Son into our hearts, crying, Abba, Father" (Gal. 4/6). The exhortation to be is only met with once in the Epistles (Eph. 5/18), and there it is addressed to recent converts from heathenism; still, like the Corinthians, prone to indulge their old fleshly licentiousness. "Be not drunken with wine, wherein is riot," the Apostle says, "but be filled with the Spirit." When one wishes to fill with liquid a bottle that is partly filled with something else, its contents have to be poured out that its new contents may be poured in. It is this emptying of ourselves of sinful desires and selfish delights to which we are exhorted. According to the measure in which this duty is fulfilled by us (by the grace of God) will the Holy Spirit fill the vacant space; and as this is done afresh morning by morning, and oftener, the renewed man is constantly being filled with his blessed presence and power. The responsibility rests wholly upon us. We are in no wise "straitened in God." By this indwelling and filling,

"THE COMMUNION OF THE HOLY SPIRIT" is sustained. The Lord Jesus said to his disciples, "It is expedient for you that I go away" (John 16/7), that when He went He would send the Holy Spirit, the Comforter. "He dwelleth with you and shall be in you" (John 14/17). There is a very definite sense in which the Lord Jesus has gone away to the right hand of the Father. In these days it is the Holy Spirit who "dwells with men." A remarkable omission, which is apparent in the greeting at the commencement of every one of the Pauline Epistles (whether addressed to churches or individuals) makes this apparent. As a rule, the greeting runs in each epistle, "Grace be to you and peace from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ." No mention is made of the Third Person in the Godhead. On consideration the reason is manifest; greetings come from absent persons, not from those in our midst. Hence the benediction at the close of the Second Epistle to the Corinthians (13/14) embraces all the Three Persons, "The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Ghost, be with you all."

This word "communion" means fellowship, partakership, partnership, "to have things in common." What marvellous condescension! that God will in very deed dwell in sinful men; that He will share our difficulties, and trials, and temptations; that He will hallow our prosperity and joys. Above all, that He will reveal unto us the things of God. "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man the things which God hath prepared for them that love Him. But God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit" (1 Cor. 2/9,10).

Friends' Work in London.

CONTINUED expansion has marked the mission work of Friends in London during the year. The enlargement of the premises in Commercial Road, Stepney, has been completed, and provides ample accommodation for the maintenance of this much needed ministry among the poor of the district. Extension into the suburbs is also commenced; a site having been acquired in Gipsy Lane, Forest Gate, an iron building, known as Barclay Hall, was erected and opened. Sunday school, morning and evening meetings, Band of Hope, and other gatherings were instituted, and soon were widely appreciated. The school having grown as large as the existing accommodation would permit, and the need being felt for other agencies, it became necessary to enlarge the premises by the erection of a second hall.

A large share of caring for the rapidly increasing working-class population of Barking is zealously taken by Friends. In an outlying district, which has no religious agency within effective reach of the residents, a mission-room has been opened, and the attendance already is equal to the accommodation. In connection with Bunhill Fields centre, branch classes have been opened at Walthamstow, Stratford, and New Southgate, which give promise of serving a useful purpose.

Several of the branches are situated in neighbourhoods noted for gangs of hooligans, and here strenuous efforts are being made to counteract the influences that tend to produce this class of roughs, by providing helpful friendships, useful occupations, and pleasant places in which to spend their evenings other than the dram-shop. Efforts in this direction have been attended with gratifying results, and it is not too much to hope that the outcome of such endeavour will benefit communities from both moral and financial standpoints. Details of the work carried on at the nine centres of the Association are given in the annual report, copies of which may be obtained from Mr. Reginald A. Slader, Bedford Institute, Quaker Street, Spitalfields, E.

Children's Scripture Union.

TWO interesting meetings were held at Exeter Hall on April 1, to celebrate the twenty-second anniversary of the Children's Scripture Union. Each gathering was largely attended by local secretaries and friends from various parts of the country. The secretary and founder of the Union, Mr. T. B. Bishop, had prepared a report which was presented by Mr. G. A. King, giving a historical and descriptive account of the work, since its inauguration in 1879, with 7,000 readers of the appointed Scripture portions. So remarkable has been the progress made, that last year no fewer than 580,000 cards of membership were issued for the English-speaking branches in Great Britain and the Colonies; and about 100,000 cards in addition had been issued in thirty foreign languages. There are now more than 5,000 branches of the Scripture Union in the United Kingdom, which are to be found in as many as 2,850 different towns and villages. The Union has led to the establishment of a large number of weekly or monthly meetings for children in connection with the various branches. The Union is also an important handmaid to foreign missionary effort; several who, as young people, became members of the Scripture Union, have gone out to labour for Christ in the foreign field.

Much regret was expressed at the gatherings at the absence, through illness, of Rev. E. A. Stuart (president). Professor Handley C. G. Moule, Mr. Eugene Stock, Dr. Harford Battersby, and others, spoke words of encouragement; and Rev. E. H. Elwin (Sierra Leone) and Mr. A. C. Kestin (Calcutta) also gave helpful addresses.

Scottish Fishing Stations.—Arrangements are being made for following up, by the United Free Church, of the vigorous and harmonious efforts made among the fishing population by the two branches during recent years. The Union will lead to greater concentration of effort and economy of labour.

The Evangelization Society.

THE Society closed its thirty-sixth year on March 31, and now another tent season is rapidly approaching. It is hoped and expected that from May to September the Society will have forty tents at work, with seating capacity for fully 10,000 people. The tents will be made as attractive and cheerful as possible, being comfortably seated, well-lighted, and provided with a good supply of hymn books. The evangelists will be specially chosen, and be men of tried ability, tact, and experience. Usually the tents are worked in connection with local correspondents or committees; and wherever possible united missions are arranged, the hearty co-operation of the clergy, ministers, and local workers being sought.

Experience has proved the great utility and value of these tent missions, both in the cities and country villages. Thousands are willing to attend them who are seldom found in our churches and chapels. Last season the Society's tents visited thirty-two counties in England, and fourteen counties in Scotland. Every care is taken that the evangelists shall keep clear of all subjects but the Gospel, remembering that if lovingly, clearly, and faithfully preached it must have abiding results. In addition to the Society's own tents it is hoped that many others will be supplied with preachers, and, of course, the tent missions compose only about one-fourth of the Society's work.

Full particulars will be sent to any friends interested, and the new annual report, which will be issued in May, will be forwarded on application to the Hon. Secretary, 21, Surrey Street, Strand, W.C.

Orphans at Brixton.

IN common with similar institutions, the Brixton Orphanage has suffered financially through the unusual calls upon the public which marked the year 1900. Notwithstanding this difficulty the work of the institution has not been allowed to fall off. An addition of forty-nine has been made to the large orphan family. Twenty have been placed in service, and others have returned to friends through change of circumstances. The number remaining in the Home at present is nearly 300, who are being educated, and given a Christian training, in order that they may be fitted for spheres of usefulness. In the school the progress has been encouraging. Every care has been taken to bring the scholars forward in their studies, and the efforts of the teachers have been rewarded by the increased devotion of the girls to their work. As many of the children are of delicate constitutions, they stand in much need of a change of air, and the superintendent will be grateful to friends who can spare letters for convalescent homes, or assist in sending them to the country or seaside during the summer months.

It is gratifying to learn that numerous working parties are held at private residences, as well as at the Orphanage, which have proved a means of relieving the expenditure by supplying garments for the use of those in the Home. Communications may be addressed to Mrs. Montague, Brixton Orphanage, Barrington Road, Brixton.

Firemen's Widows and Orphans.—The Metropolitan Fire Brigade Widows' and Orphans' and General Benefit Fund fulfils a beneficent purpose. Its objects are to provide a sum of ready money, as the result of a man's savings, on his retirement from the Brigade, whether invalided or otherwise on pension, and to provide a fireman's widow or orphans with an allowance which will keep them from seeking charity. During last year over £420 was paid in pensions, and the grants made to widows, orphans, and relatives of firemen amounted to £364. Friends of the society are reminded that the Fund has no collectors, as numerous complaints are received that persons pretending to assist the widows and orphans of firemen obtain subscriptions from the unwary. The president is Commander Wells, R.N., Headquarters M.F.B., Southwark Bridge Road, S.E.

Dublin Prison-Gate Mission.

IN reviewing the operations of Dublin Prison-Gate Mission in the annual report, the hon. superintendent writes:—"Looking at the record of those who were with us during the past year brings many memories. Some have started into a new life, and are doing well; some have gone to America, and in another land have made fresh ties. . . . The dormitories have sheltered many women and young girls, and we thank God every day for the blessed help to the work of this safe shelter, and for the opportunities thus given for personal conversation. Many sad stories are told us, and letters written to friends. Only eternity will show what God hath wrought among the poor and destitute. The cottage, with its bright, fine, and cheery welcome, is more and more appreciated; 980 men and girls attended it during the year. The women, as a rule, listen with great earnestness to the good news of salvation, and in quiet, homely fashion we talk together of Him who laid down his life for us. Some of those who come do not need the help of the Mission, but go from the cottage to their own homes. Others have been sent to institutions in the city, and many a poor woman has come to us, seeking help in various ways. The two little rooms of our cottage have brought comfort and gladness to wayfarers." Communications may be addressed to Miss Rice, hon. lady superintendent, 40, Blackhall Place, Dublin.

Ladies' Irish Association.

THIS useful organization, the office of which is at 24, Merrion Square, Dublin, is actively pursuing its three-fold mission. It seeks, through the instrumentality of Scripture readers, to make known the Gospel, both in the Irish and the English languages, in remote parts of large parishes. The readers have seen considerable fruit from their labours, and find evidence of an increasing desire to hear the Word of God and to escape from the darkness of Romanism.

The Association also maintains in very poor districts day and night schools, in which instruction is given in both Scripture and secular subjects. The teachers, as well as the Scripture readers, work under the direction of the local rector.

Another department is that which gives relief to ladies who, through no fault of their own, have been reduced to poverty. At the present time there are before the committee some cases of a distressing character.

The Connellan Mission.—It is gratifying to learn, from the annual report of the Connellan Mission, that a day of greater religious toleration has dawned for Ireland. The workers, happily, have been left unmolested in their labours, notwithstanding that the meetings in the Metropolitan Hall, Dublin, and elsewhere, have been attended by atheists and agnostics, as well as Roman Catholics. The gatherings are to be extended wherever it is possible to secure halls or schoolhouses. The meetings in Dawson Street are invariably crowded, and have become a centre of vigorous evangelical activity. It is through such agencies as the Connellan Mission that the sons and daughters of Ireland are saved from the bondage of Rome, and are led to enjoy the liberty of the children of God. The superintendent is Rev. Thomas Connellan, 51B, Dawson Street, Dublin.

"The Story of St. Luke's House" (hon. secretary, Mrs. Annesley) is a touching tale of help rendered to the dying poor during the past seven years. It is felt that the premises at 50, Osnaburgh Street (Regent's Park) have answered well for the first stage of the experiment, but the time has now come for more enterprising effort. A larger and more suitable building has been taken, and is now undergoing alteration and improvement; and the statement is sent abroad in the confident assurance that sympathy and pity will not be unresponsive to the cry, and that those who are denied the privilege of giving personal service will contribute to the fund. "Any poor man or woman can always be admitted without payment, provided their history is respectable and untouched by pauperism, and their malady entering upon its later and fatal stage. The decision as to eligibility rests entirely with the medical superintendent."

Jesus Keeping Hold.

ONE Sabbath afternoon, some years ago, I was visiting a school in a poor district. As several of the teachers were absent, the superintendent asked me to take charge of a class of little boys who would not otherwise receive any attention. The locality was in the east end of the city, and the children were all poorly clad.

After we had read together the Bible lesson for the day, I was anxious to find out if they understood what was meant by being saved through the blood of Christ. In reply to my questions they told me that their teacher, Miss Brown, who was then seriously ill, was a lady of whom they were very fond. She was a bright, cheery Christian herself, and had told them over and over again how much Jesus loved them, how that the secret of her life was the having of an almighty Helper and Friend, and how He was waiting and longing to be the same to them. They knew by her smiling face, as well as her kindly words and deeds, that Jesus had made her very happy; and in every one of their hearts there had grown up a wish to have Jesus as their Saviour too, but for a long time they could not understand how the change was to be brought about. Miss Brown assured them again and again that it was by taking Jesus simply at his Word, and accepting salvation as a free gift from God, but the boys still thought that this must be too easy a way to settle a matter so important. Indeed, like many grown-up people, they could not help thinking that they must do something in the matter themselves or prepare in some way for being converted.

Some months before I was introduced to the class, it had been announced that a well-known evangelist was coming to a hall in the neighbourhood to hold a series of special evangelistic services for boys and girls. Miss Brown had been praying much about the matter, and when the time came took all the boys with her to the meetings. As the story of Jesus was told evening after evening, it became plain that there could be nothing for them to do or to pay, because Jesus had paid the whole debt with his own precious blood. Then they took him at his word, and teacher and scholars all rejoiced together, praising the Lord for his goodness.

There were a great many things which the boys would have liked to ask Miss Brown in the days that followed, but she fell ill just after the meetings. For a number of weeks she was not allowed to receive any visitors, though she would have liked very much to see her dear boys, and to learn how they were getting on as young Christians.

Unfortunately they had fallen into some serious mistakes, and were very sad at heart. It did not take them long to find out that they were going to meet with difficulties. Some of their companions, and even grown-up people, laughed at them in a way that was very hard to bear. Others tempted them to do wrong, and tried in many ways, by ruffling their tempers, to cause them to say and do the very things they were striving against. They struggled bravely for a time, but by-and-by found the battle was too much for them. Their first mistake was that they thought it necessary for them to keep hold of the Lord Jesus, if they were not to fall away from being Christians, and they found that to do this would require more strength than they possessed.

As soon as Miss Brown was a little better they went to her home, and begged that they might be allowed to see her. When they were taken to her room they had tears in their eyes, but could not speak a word at first. Their teacher saw that something was wrong, and set herself lovingly to find out what it was. After a good deal of difficulty they explained that they had come to ask her to give them back their promise to be Christians, because, as they said, they were not able to keep it up.

Miss Brown's heart ached to think of all the trouble they had been passing through; and then with a smile on her face, though there were tears in her eyes too, assured them that they need not be afraid, for it was all right. Their faces brightened as she explained that it was not to her the promise had been made, but to the Lord Himself, that He was both able and willing to keep the hold if they had committed themselves to Him, and that so there was no need for them to take back their word at all.

The boys learned a precious and important lesson, and went home with a feeling of settled confidence in their hearts. Now, besides knowing that Jesus had been able and ready to save them at the time of their conversion, there was another side to the transaction, for He was also able to keep that which they had committed to Him. This had all happened before I met them. We had a nice talk that afternoon about the Lord Jesus; and, though I have never met any of the boys again, I am persuaded that, wherever they are, they are keeping on the heavenly way, if they have not already arrived at the end of the journey.

London Endeavourers

AT THE METROPOLITAN TABERNACLE.

THE Sixth Annual Convention of the London Council of Christian Endeavour was held at the Metropolitan Tabernacle on Good Friday. Two sessions were held. In the afternoon the floor of the building and the lower gallery were full, with a number in the upper, while at night the place was crowded from floor to ceiling. It was an inspiring sight to see the great building full of eager, earnest young people. Here and there folk of mature years could be seen, but it is probably a conservative statement to say that fully 90 per cent. of those present were under thirty years of age. Surely there is reason for hopefulness with reference to Christian work in the future, when so many young people will devote one of the few days of holiday to such a gathering as this.

At the afternoon gathering, Mr. Charles Waters (ex-president) occupied the chair. He welcomed those present, first as Christian Endeavourers and then as representatives of the churches of various denominations working together for our common Lord. In referring to the denominational lines, he spoke of the American custom of having no fence between the houses. He confessed to preferring a barrier of some kind. He and his neighbour could be just as good friends notwithstanding the fence, whilst it might prevent his neighbour's dog from destroying his flowers. Christian Endeavour did not aim at destroying the fence, but rather at handshaking and real friendship over it.

The secretary's report was read by Mr. Hickman, and then two addresses were given on

"THE ENDEAVOURER'S AIM."

Rev. J. D. Lamont, President of the C.E. Union of Great Britain and Ireland, spoke first on "The Development of his (the Endeavourer's) own Character." He said there was danger of neglecting self in the eager desire to help others. Thought needed to be turned more to our development. He defined character as being the sum total of our hearts, thoughts, desires, and experiences, and reminded his hearers that Jesus Christ is the only one who has ventured to found a kingdom on character. To develop this is to develop the best in a man, and such growth only leads to attainment of full stature. Character must be developed along God's lines. Young people, he said, are impatient of processes. They want results. But God's method is that of silent unobserved growth. He emphasized the little things, "Trifles make perfection, and perfection is no trifle;" and then, after indicating some things essential to such developments—such as reading, reflection, and prayer—he concluded a rousing address by urging the fact that there is no age limit to this progress. It must continue all through life.

The next speaker was Rev. D. J. Rounsefell, whose subject was "The Advancement of Christ's Kingdom." His was a stirring appeal, and his opening words, in which he spoke of the fiery Cross of the Scottish clans, sounded the keynote of the whole. He urged that Christ had a claim upon the young life. There was work to be accomplished.

THE METHOD OF CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR

had differed from that of some other organizations in that it was less demonstrative. Quiet permeation had been the means of its greatest achievements; but notwithstanding the quiet there must be enthusiastic aggression.

Brief conferences followed both these addresses, Endeavourers rising and taking part in a very prompt and encouraging manner. At the close tea was served in the basement and in the college adjoining.

The evening meeting was presided over by Rev. H. J. Tressider, president for the current year. In his address he pleaded for loyalty with the pledge and the wearing of the badge. The first speaker was Rev. J. Tolefree Parr, and his subject was "Prayer as a Means of Inspiration." Very earnestly he urged the necessity of finding time for private prayer, for having a place of prayer, and for reviving the prayer meeting. As a remedy for wandering thoughts he urged articulate prayer. His address was full of excellent thoughts, and is sure to do good.

Rev. Thos. Currie, M.A., followed on "Meditation," insisting upon the necessity of finding time to be quiet and to think. The last address was by Rev. G. Campbell Morgan on "Fellowship." The speaker received a remarkable ovation, the cheering being renewed again and again as he essayed to speak. He said the word "Fellowship" had many shades of meaning. He emphasized two—companionship and partnership. These characterize our fellowship with God, and within the realm of fellowship with God lies the possibility of fellowship one with another.

A large choir under the direction of Mr. M. L. Carter led the singing. Altogether the Convention was a great success—a source of encouragement to the officers, and an inspiration to everyone privileged to attend.

A Carol of Hope.

At the springtide of the year
Flowers upon the earth appear,
Making blighted hopes less drear,
With bright suns.

Birds are singing some new song,
For the days are growing long,
When their thrilling notes grow strong,
Sweet, and clear.

Christ has risen from the dead,
Knitting members with their Head,
Like the sap through branches spread
In the vine.

Loved ones soon will meet again
Where there shall be no more pain,
And with Christ for ever reign,
Throned above.

Hope is one great Easter thought,
With new nature it is fraught,
And a Resurrection brought,
To our hearts.

Homeless Girls in Salisbury.—Established over forty years ago, and having for its headquarters 46 and 48, St. Ann Street, Salisbury, the House of Industry receives homeless girls and little children who have been deprived of maternal care, to train them in the fear of God. The inmates are prepared for service by teaching them laundry work, and training them as domestics; while girls are received at a cost of £12 a year, but in specially urgent and necessitous cases they are received at either a reduced premium or gratuitously, the number of these depending upon the funds in hand. The highest testimony to the usefulness of the work is the increasing number of girls, once verging on ruin, who are now in respectable service, leading consistent Christian lives. Rev. Edgar N. Thwaites, Fisherton Rectory, Salisbury, is the secretary.

Christian Endeavour Topic.

SUNDAY, APRIL 14.

Foundations (Matt. vii. 21-27).

ONLY our Lord could foretell what will happen at the last; only He could give us a photograph of a scene that shall take place at the door of the marriage feast. He is the Master of the house, and knows precisely the conditions on which some will be admitted, and others for ever excluded. Let us be very sure that we build on foundations which will not fail us in that last dread hour.

Self-deception is consistent with apparent respect for Christ. Those who are destined to exclusion approach the door with Lord, Lord on their lips, as though they had cherished, and were cherishing, high regard for Him. The same salutation is repeated in the following verse. You may think highly of the Lord Jesus as a great teacher and admire his holiness, and yet be lost.

Self-deception is consistent with prophesying in his Name. This was one of the special gifts of the early church. It has the sense of inspired and authoritative teaching, and ranks next to apostleship (1 Cor. xii. 29; Eph. iv. 11). Its counterpart with ourselves would be preaching or teaching. But there is a way from the teacher's chair and the pulpit to the bottomless pit of darkness and despair.

Self-deception is consistent with the working of miracles. It is clear that Judas, who could not cast the devil out of himself, had often cast him out of others; and we may have been able to deliver men from drunkenness, impurity, and other evils, and yet be castaways (Luke xiii. 24, &c.).

Self-deception is consistent with participation in the Lord's Supper. "We have eaten and drunk in thy presence" (Luke xiii. 26). To have knelt at the Holy Table, and been a communicant and church member, will not secure admission into the Saviour's presence, unless they are the expression of the new birth, and the indwelling of the grace of God.

The Master will profess that He was never deceived. He will repudiate the claim to friendship which they had thought to establish. He will say, "Our friendship has not been broken off; there never was any." He only regarded them as workers of iniquity, whom He wished to be gone. It was as though all they had professed and known had only aggravated their case.

This is what our Lord calls building on a foundation of sand. To hear his sayings, if we fail to do them, will not secure us from irretrievable loss. The builder is intent on what suits the eye, the beautiful architecture, appointments, and furnishing of his home. He is too indolent or careless to make the foundation deep and strong. The sand is easy to dig, and therefore he selects it, perfectly content with the slight hold that it gives to his main walls. For a few weeks the structure looks pretty enough, and many a merry festivity is held within it; but when the summer is past and the winter storms begin to sweep land and ocean, when the overflowing waters swirl around the frail folly, it falls a mass of toppling ruin, and it is only by a miracle that any of the inmates escape.

On the other hand, the wise man, who hears the Lord's words, and does them, shaping his life according to the pattern shown upon this Mount of Beatitudes, and, above all, who is united by faith with Him who spoke them with such inimitable force and beauty, builds on rock. His house becomes jointed into the rock, and partakes of its stability. Let the storms come at any moment; and last for any length—they excite no tremor of suspicion or fear. To build on these words of the Son of Man, to follow Him, to obey Him, to give Him your whole confidence, and to ask the Holy Spirit to keep his commands in your mind, and write them on your hearts, these are the secrets of everlasting stability.

May none of us be shut out, "when once the Master has risen up." Even in this life, I think that the holy feast, with its fellowship, its joys, its satisfaction, begins; and obedient souls enter into fellowship with the saints of other days, and above all, with the Lord Jesus Himself. To do his will, trusting in his Blood and Spirit, this is the secret of the Kingdom of Heaven—here and hereafter. F. B. M.

C.E. NOTES.

During the Simultaneous Mission the U.M.F.C. Endeavourers at Redruth organized a "Public-house Brigade." They went every night for about an hour and a half before the service, to every public-house in the neighbourhood, visiting about four a night, and taking certain parts of the town each night. Much good was done by this effort, some leaving the public-house and coming to the services, where they signed the pledge and gave themselves to God.

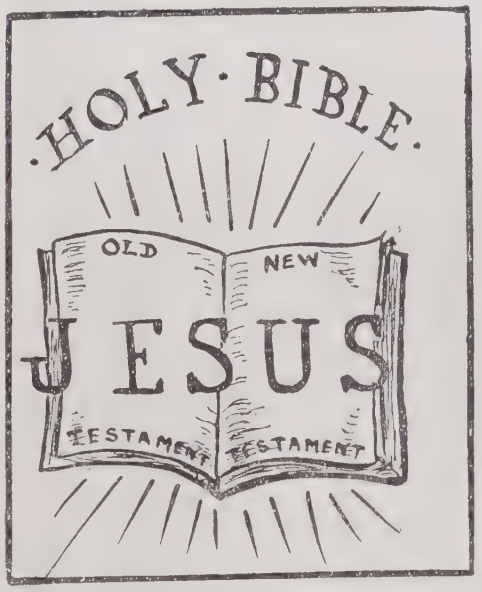
The Primitive Methodist Demonstration in Newcastle, held on Saturday, March 30, was most inspiring. In the afternoon the Juniors gave the object-lesson, entitled, "World-wide Endeavour." The evening meeting was characterized by all the fire and fervour for which Primitive Methodists are famous. Addresses were given by Rev. S. Horton, of Edinburgh, Rev. W. Knight Chaplin, and Rev. G. Bennett. After the meeting, a band of enthusiastic Endeavourers held an open-air service in the Bigg Market.

International S.S. Lesson.

April 21, 1901.

The Walk to Emmaus (Luke xxiv. 13-35).
Golden Text: "Did not our heart burn within us while He talked with us by the way (32)?



Key to Blackboard Plan.—The whole Bible, in all its books, points to Jesus the Saviour of the world. The Old Testament has its types and symbols, the New Testament the earthly life, and how the Christian is to live the Christ-life.

1. What the Two Men Talked About.

ABOUT Jesus (15): it is always good to talk about Him—see promises for such (Matt. iii. 16, 17; Eph. v. 19). Jesus always draws near to such people (Golden Text). They did not know Him, neither did Mary (last week's lesson) at first; but afterwards they did (31), and what a difference it made to them. (17) "Sad;" (34) rings with joy and confidence. They talked about Jesus.

See different names for Jesus in the lesson, and by them what a great deal we get to talk about Jesus too.

"Stranger" (18). He had been treated as a stranger all through his earthly career.

John i. 11. He came to his own, but his own knew Him not. John i. 5. "Comprehended not the Light;" (10) "world knew Him not;" (26) "whom ye know not;" (31, 33) "I knew Him not."

Jesus said (Matt. xxiii. 37), "How often would I . . . and ye would not;" and in Luke xix. 41: "He wept over the city." See Heb. v. 7. All this shows how He was treated as a stranger (Jer. xiv. 8). "O hope of Israel, the Saviour, why shouldst Thou be as a stranger in the land?" But many still keep Him out in the cold (Rev. iii. 20).

"Jesus" (15). Jesus Himself. When He comes into a heart He brings with Himself his Presence (29)

Peace (36)
Power (49).

"Jesus of Nazareth" (19). His earthly name takes our thoughts back to his childhood, his obedience, his lowliness (Matt. ii. 23; Luke ii. 51, 52).

"A Prophet" mighty in deed and word (19). Recall his deeds, miracles, kind acts, healing, and restoring the sick in body and soul. His words (Luke iv. 22): "Gracious words" (32). His word was with power (36). What a word is this! In the same three verses it tells us the people wondered, were astonished, were amazed at his words.

"Christ"—consecrated, sacred, set apart (26). The two names Anointed and Messiah mean the same. He was the Great Deliverer set apart by God for this special purpose.

2. What Jesus Talked About.

All the Scriptures concerning Himself (27). He said, too, Moses wrote of Him (John v. 46). Look up some of these types from Moses.

Promise to Eve (Gen. iii. 15).
Promise to Abraham (Gen. xxii. 18).
The Passover Lamb (Ex. xii.).
The Tabernacle and all its sacrifices (Exodus).
The scape-goat (Lev. xvi.).
The brazen serpent (Num. xxi. 9).
The star and sceptre (Num. xxiv. 17).
The smitten rock (Num. xx. 11).

How the prophets spoke of Him—Immanuel (Isa vii. 14). Unto us a Child is born, &c. (Isa. ix. 6, 7). The Good Shepherd (Isa. xi. 10, 11). The Meek Sufferer (Isa. l. 6). How He bore our sins (Isa. liii.). The Pierced Victim (Zech. xii. 10). The Lowly King (Zech. ix. 9). And many more can be found. See v. 44 of lesson chapter.

3. The Result of it.

He opened up the Scriptures (32).

He opened their understanding, that they might understand the Scriptures (45).

In both these cases Christ teaches God's own Word; but before these men, or we ourselves, can understand, we must have our understanding opened too. See John v. 39, &c.

Christian Light in the Lighthouses.

IT will be generally admitted that the light-keepers who are stationed around the British Isles have some claim upon all Christian people who sit at home at ease. By night and by day, in storm or calm, they are at the post of duty, taking care that their lights are burning full and clear from sunset to sunrise. At certain stations—in the case of lightships more especially—the service is often one of actual danger, for at times we hear of a ship with its light and men being swept away by the irresistible force of a passing storm. In other cases, in which the magnificent columns—erected at a vast expenditure of skill and money—hold their own against the fury of wind and water, the situation is one of extreme solitude, while the nerves may have all that they can bear. At each end of the British Isles we find a station, the keepers of which may be said to have won distinction by devotion to duty under trying conditions. The light on St. Agnes among the Scilly Isles—six calm days in a year being the average—might remind us that there a British flag-ship, with its admiral and 800 men, went down some two centuries ago. About 900 miles away, at the end of the Shetlands, the North Uist Light is a beacon which shines nearly 200 feet above sea-level, but over which the waves send water and spray in rough weather. All round the coast, between these two extreme stations, there are hundreds of others, the keepers of which are grateful for attention in the way of having good reading posted to them.

Some years ago an invalided pastor, Mr. Green, made it the business of his last years to post evangelical reading to the keepers of lighthouses and lightships at home and abroad, and the large number of letters he received showed how greatly such service was appreciated. About three years ago it was thought that similar service might be continued on behalf of the Council of the British and Foreign Sailors' Society, and Miss L. E. Holden Pike (Winchmore Hill, N.) undertook the work of distribution. Again it is found that the reading sent is much valued, numbers of letters being received from time to time testifying to that fact. In some cases the keepers are devoted Christian men who are encouraged by the attention accorded them. In reply to letters sent to them, many have replied giving interesting particulars of their work. Miss Holden Pike also undertook to collect funds for working expenses, the chief outlay being for postage, and an account of receipts and expenditure is rendered annually to the British and Foreign Sailors' Society, which has partly supplied the literature sent out. Contributions are asked for so that in due time the distribution may be extended to stations in Canada and the Continent and islands of Australasia. From time to time the Religious Tract Society, Home Words Office, Messrs. Passmore and Alabaster, and other friends have sent supplies of reading matter. It may be added, however, that parcels of old religious papers, reports, and miscellaneous pamphlets are not suitable contributions among such readers as lightkeepers and their assistants. The chief want is stamps for postage.

British and Foreign Sailors' Society.—Not only the young sailor, but more often the old seaman finds that through fierce competition, increased now by so many foreign seamen pressing into our ships, he is often well-nigh stranded. A. J. is a typical case. He had discharges of which any man might well be proud, but his troubles culminated this month in absolute destitution. A crimp stole his box, boots, and overcoat. Fever set in, and the old Dreadnought Hospital took him in. Coming out in February, he went to Gravesend, but when the last penny was gone, he crossed to Tilbury, and began his weary walk back to London, spending a night on the road. After another night upon the streets, he found assistance from the Princess May Samaritan Fund of the British and Foreign Sailors' Society. It is announced that the Fund in question, unfortunately, is overdrawn, although many such needy cases are needing help.

Dublin Medical Mission.

SOME recent encouraging cases will be of interest. A Protestant young man came for the first time to the Sunday evening meeting. He was touched by the address, and that evening yielded himself to the Lord for salvation. As he did so, he prayed for his Roman Catholic wife's conversion. A few days later she attended the Dispensary service, and before a week had elapsed she, too, had rested for salvation in Jesus Christ.

A young man who had constantly been under the influence of drink, gave himself to Christ during the Mission, to save and keep him. He says he has not even had a wish to touch drink since.

A young girl of nineteen, who had been led astray, is now safely sheltered in the Gardiner's Street Home, having learned in the Mission that there was pardon for her through the precious blood of Christ.

A year ago, on the floor of a back kitchen, a young woman lay drunk, her clothes wet with rain. She caught cold, which turned to pneumonia, then to consumption. Dr. Pigott and the nurse visited her constantly, and had the joy of leading her to the Saviour—her wretched dwelling became a very heaven. She has gone to be with her Saviour, and her joyous deathbed will not easily be forgotten by those who stood beside her during her last days on earth. Thus does God use the Medical Mission in reaching the lowest and most degraded in the Irish capital, as well as many of the more respectable poor.

The eighth annual meeting was held at the Mission on the 5th inst., when Rev. Maurice Day, M.A., presided, the speakers being Revs. S. Prenter, J. O. Parke, and the Mission doctors. The Mission premises (Chancery Place) are old houses (three in one), and consequently have had to be altered and adapted to the needs of the work.

At the beginning of the year it was found necessary to alter the matron's and nurse's rooms—to make them more healthy and habitable. Quite recently, too, it was found needful to re-arrange the consulting rooms, dispensary, and surgery.

The Mission, like almost all other charitable institutions, has suffered because of the many exceptional funds which have been collected for the Indian famine, the war, and other similar needs. The approximate total attendances at the dispensaries, and visits paid during the year, are as follows: Doctors, 2,993; Matron, 80; Nurse, 928; Attendance at Dispensary, 11,071.

Lydd Soldiers' Home.

THE annual report of the Lydd Soldiers' Home is a record of fruitful and extensive service among the troops. All the year round soldiers are stationed there, offering abundant scope for the labours of those who seek to promote their spiritual well-being. The Home is situated on the main road from the Artillery camp to the town, and is visited by numbers of men in the evening. Here they are provided with every comfort, literature, newspapers, refreshments, &c. The primary aim is of course to bring them under the influence of the Gospel, and to this end evangelistic services are regularly held, with many evidences of the Spirit's power in bringing men to the Cross of Christ.

The result of personal intercourse in not a few cases has been witnessed in sinners seeking the Saviour; the conviction of sin has been followed by the assurance of pardon, and many have learnt to combine with the service of their country the duties of Christian discipleship. The need of a larger Home is keenly felt. A suitable site for the building has been offered, and a sum of £136 has been promised towards the £200 required before the extension can be contemplated.

Mr. F. E. Wootton, North View, Lydd, Kent, will be glad to forward copies of the annual report, and any information concerning this effort to take the Gospel to our troops at home and provide a counter attraction to the many temptations of military life.

Liverpool Endeavourers.

AT a gathering of Liverpool Christian Endeavourers on Good Friday, a deeply interesting address was delivered by Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., president of the Union. After referring to various national and intellectual movements, he spoke hopefully of the immediate future. He said:—

"I think I see signs that portend what we may call a national revival of religion. The trials the nation has passed through have sobered it. There is much less of the spirit of boastfulness, and there is a great increase of the spirit of patriotic self-sacrifice. Multitudes have freely offered themselves for the service of their country, and all that involves self-sacrifice elevates a man. Furthermore, the death of our noble Queen has deeply impressed the nation with the power of Christian character. It is obvious and allowed by all that the splendid devotion to duty which distinguished Queen Victoria drew its inspiration from the deep roots of personal religion. The merely material view of life has been rebuked by the spectacle of the best of all our Sovereigns drawing her strength from the verities of the Christian Faith.

"I think I see a decided ebb in the tide of unbelief, and a greater openness to admit the claims of Christ. What may be called blatant atheism has quite gone down. The evil now is not so much reasoned infidelity as indifferentism. The common people acknowledge a good life when they see it; and whether it is Bishop Ingram in the East End of London, or Rev. Hugh Price Hughes in the West End, they readily perceive and admire true consecration of life.

"I think I note also a marked return to what I may call rational orthodoxy among the Free Churches. A generation ago the tendency was the other way. It looked as if large sections of the Christian world were losing their hold of the supernatural side of religion, and substituting mere humanitarianism for the faith of Christ. This movement is arrested, and the action of the Free Church Council is all for Evangelical belief. But are finding a place in the conception of the Christian faith which the harder doctrinal systems of earlier ages almost shut out. It is now perceived by many that the Sermon on the Mount is an integral part of the Christian faith, as well as the Gospel of St. John and the Epistle to the Romans. The words 'Believe in Christ' are not dissociated from the words 'Follow Christ' as they have too often been. 'Christ for us' is rightly conjoined with 'Christ in us.'

"I look with great satisfaction on the wonderful growth of the Christian Endeavour movement. It takes hold of the young at the impressionable time of life. It supplies wholesome companionship when the character is plastic and easily moulded for good and evil. It keeps up the study of Holy Scripture, and encourages the young to make a confession of faith and discipleship. The three millions of members already enrolled are a mighty army for good. They mean Christian citizenship and national righteousness wherever their influence goes. I grieve that the movement is so much confined to the Free Churches; why should it not spread equally in the National Church? I fear the reason is the growth of priestly doctrine, and the discouragement of religious work by laymen, which always follow sacerdotal teaching. The Christian Endeavour movement is a preservative against priestcraft. It emphasizes the Lord's words: 'Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them;' also these other words, 'Let your light shine before men that they may see your good works and glorify your Father who is in heaven.'"

Irish Society.—The success of the recently inaugurated experiment with a Colportage Van has been such that the Committee (Rev. T. Keane, secretary, 32, Sackville Street, W.) have added a second, which will be the home of two evangelists, and which will, it is hoped, be a movable centre of missionary influence in more remote parts of Ireland.

Bank Holiday at Kilburn Hall.

THE Bank Holiday Conference is a specialty of the Evangelistic Mission, and not the least noteworthy of the long series took place on Monday. Mr. C. R. Hurditch directed the meeting. Prayer was offered for many missions, and Mr. Hurditch's own manifold work and that of the members of his family, at home and abroad, were lovingly remembered.

The speakers in the afternoon were Messrs. John McCall, R. C. Morgan, and W. R. Lane; in the evening Mr. J. E. Taylor, Rev. J. Wilson (Woolwich), Dr. Monro Gibson, and Lord Radstock. The keyword of the day was "Evangelistic"—"Ye are my witnesses." The interest and fervour increased from hour to hour, and when Mr. Wilson spoke of the sound of abundance of rain, with illustrations from bygone days, including mention of the prisoner of the Lord who prayed Mr. Moody from Chicago to Islington, and 400 were added to the church, we seemed to breathe the prayerful atmosphere of 1859, and the following fruitful years.

Dr. Monro Gibson continued the emphasis on prayer, and went on to speak of Work, from Haggai ii. 4, 5: "Yet now be strong . . . and work . . . My Spirit remaineth among you; fear ye not." The nineteenth century had made unprecedented progress, materially and intellectually, but it had wrought no deliverance. The riddle of this painful earth was more painful than ever before. The time is fulfilled; the old world has been rolling up its riches, but we hear the sigh of despair; sin, misery, rottenness abound. We want the new heart and the right spirit, not only in the individual, but in society—the spirit of man dethroned, the Spirit of God enthroned.

Lord Radstock fitly concluded this solemn assembly by dwelling upon the Real Presence in its true meaning. "The Lord Himself is with us." The blessedness of life is intercourse with God. The object of Christian life is to have everything in common in communion with Him. In all our affliction He is afflicted, and the Angel of his Presence saves us. When there was no water He brought water out of the flinty rock. No bread—He gave them bread from heaven. Live in his presence. Take root downward, downward, downward, and bear fruit upward.

A Slumber Song

For the Sick Ones whom Jesus Loves.

"I will both lay me down in peace and sleep; for Thou, Lord, only makest me dwell in safety" (Psa. iv. 8).

Rest thee, O weary head,
Rest, and be calm!
God's shadowing wings are round thee overspread,
Safe from all harm.
O lay thee down and sleep in trustful peace,
For Jesus bids thy surging fears to cease.

Rest thee, O beating heart,
Rest and be still.
Hush throbbing pulse, all anxious thoughts depart,
Rest in his will.
He gives his angels charge e'er thee to keep,
Until He sends to his beloved sleep.

This be thy slumber-song—
God's perfect love;
Faith pillowed there sees thro' the night-watch long
Stars shine above.
Beneath thee are the everlasting arms;
Sleep, sweetly sleep, kept safe from wild alarms.

Rest thee, O sick one, rest,
Whom Jesus loves.
Lean back, like John, upon the Saviour's breast,
Till morn disproves
All the dark shadows and vague dreams of night;
God give thee sleep until the dawning light.

Calm shalt thou sleep at last;
"To rise with Him."
The restless nights of pain for ever past,
No tears to dim
The face of sunrise, when God's morning breaks,
And He who giveth sleep, his loved, awakes.

Scottish Notes.

At the closing meeting of the Glasgow class of the Protestant Institute of Scotland Mr. W. J. Isbister expressed the regret of the committee at the falling away in the number of students. The general subject of study had been "The Creed of Pope Pius IV.: The Doctrines of that Creed Tested by Scripture," but among the various classes of students in the city there was not the same interest as formerly in such questions.

The Glasgow United Evangelistic Association are faced with special difficulties in connection with the Fresh Air Fortnight Scheme during the coming season. Special precautions will be taken to prevent the spread of smallpox by this means, and it is hoped that friends will not withdraw support on account of the epidemic now prevailing in the city. Lists of the addresses will be sent every week to the medical officer of health, and no child accepted without his approval.

An important spiritual movement is reported from the parish of Uig, Lewis, where Rev. D. T. Mackay (Tiree) recently co-operated with the Free Church minister (Rev. Donald Macarthur) in a special mission. Two meetings were held each day, and in the evenings the people gathered in from distances up to about six miles. A goodly number with whom the the Spirit of God had been dealing, found peace and joy in believing. A spirit of prayer and awakening is spreading into neighbouring districts.

At the annual meeting of the Edinburgh Sabbath Free Breakfast Mission, held a few days ago, it was announced that the attendance at the Drill Hall reached during 1900 a total of 38,676 persons, the adults numbering 28,301 and the children 10,375. The average was 743, the smallest number present 569, and the largest 1,001. The various departments of Christian work in connection with the Mission were meeting with excellent results. The donations had amounted to £813 2s. 11d.; the expenditure to £764 18s. 2d.

The nineteenth annual meeting of the Lanarkshire Christian Union took place on Saturday, March 30, at Motherwell, Mr. John Colville, M.P., presiding, when the Town Hall was filled with friends from all parts of the county. The subject for consideration was "Zeal for God." The principal speakers were Rev. Dr. J. Smith, Broughton Place, Edinburgh, and Mr. Henry Varley. The Chairman read the report, which showed that the income for the year was £622 14s. 7d., and met all expenses. Although it was admitted that many could not be reached, cause for gratitude was found in the great and blessed results of the aggressive work of the Union in the county during the nineteen years of its existence.

On Sabbath of last week the Empire Theatre, Edinburgh, was filled three times with enthusiastic audiences gathered to greet General Booth. Among the officers who assisted in the services were Colonels Eadie and Hodder, Brigadier Roberts, and Majors Cox and Greenaway, while the brass band from the Leith branch accompanied the singing. Having for his morning text, "Serving the Lord with gladness," the General spoke frankly about the numbers of people, servants of God, who did not answer to this description. They might go as far as serving the Church or the Army, but the idea of serving God was far from their minds. They were servants of sadness and not of gladness, and the reason was that they not got the glad heart. Backsliding was dealt with, and at the close the penitent form found occupants.

At the annual meeting of the Dundee Tent Mission, held on April 2, the report showed that 430 indoor meetings had been held during the year. These were preceded by prayer and open-air meetings. Forty thousand visits were made, and in every case a tract or Gospel leaflet was left, while thousands of tracts were distributed in the streets. Many have testified to the blessings received. The income for the year amounted to £206 7s. 9d., while the expenditure was £208 14s. 11d., leaving a deficit of £2 8s. 11d., while there is still a debt on the hall of £300. The evangelists engaged in the tent work during the season were Messrs. Macfarlane, Moodie, Fenn, and Hendry. Words of cheer and encouragement were spoken by the President (Rev. John McPherson), Mr. McIntosh, Mr. Farquharson, Mr. R. McLean (Evangelization Society), and Rev. J. Bisset (Lochee).

The results of the experiments in the public management of the retail liquor traffic which have been tried at Hill of Beath and Kelty, Fife, are leading to the introduction of the same system in other localities, and to trials on a more extended scale. A company has been started in Glasgow by a group of influential citizens, under the name of the "Public-house Trust (Glasgow District), Limited," and similar companies are, it is understood, being promoted, and will shortly be incorporated in Edinburgh and Paisley. Movements tending in the same direction have been set on foot in Aberdeen, Dunfermline, Kirkcaldy, and in various other places. From the Glasgow prospectus it appears that these various companies are co-operating with each other, and with similar organizations in England, and that an influential central council has been formed to promote and stimulate the movement. It is also stated that the reason which has led the promoters to form the Trust is their belief that "the public management of the retail liquor traffic will do much to promote sobriety and diminish drunkenness," and they set forth as the principle underlying the methods which they propose to follow the elimination, so far as possible, of private profit in connection with the sale of alcoholic liquor.

Irish Notes.

THE anniversary meetings of the Irish auxiliary of the Wesleyan Methodist Missionary Society have been in progress throughout the country for almost three weeks, during which time nearly two hundred centres were visited. The meetings were on the whole well attended, and the collections are believed to have been well up to the average of former years. The addresses also were earnest and pointed, and much valuable information was given with regard to the mission cause.

The results of the Simultaneous Mission just held in the various Methodist churches throughout Ireland, though in some respects disappointing, the services were a means of spiritual blessing to many souls.

Some three years ago, through the instrumentality of Lady Henderson, day nurseries for the children of working women were established in Belfast, and since then, according to the testimony of the coroner, there has been a great falling off in the sudden deaths of children in the city.

Magee College, Londonderry, closed its session on 3rd inst., when Professor Henry, D.D., delivered an address on the "Romano-Anglican Orders Controversy in Some of its Remoter Issues," and on the following day the session of the Assembly's College, Belfast, came to a close, Professor Walker delivering the address on the "Book of Job." Rev. Dr. Killen, now in his ninety-fifth year, presided, and attributed the falling off in the number of theological students to the effects of the "Higher Criticism."

Welsh Notes.

PRINCIPAL FAIRCHILD, of the Church Training College, Bangor, has petitioned the Government for increased financial assistance for Church schools. If help is not forthcoming, the Principal declares that many of these schools will have to be closed. A fund is being raised in the diocese of Bangor, but so far the contributions are disappointing.

The amount which the Welsh Baptists hope to contribute towards the Twentieth Century Fund is £40,000. During the recent tour in the Principality on behalf of the fund, undertaken by some of the leading ministers of the denomination in England, one of them, Rev. W. Cuff, made the statement that the Welsh people were contributing well, especially the colliers. On the other hand, the well-to-do members of the denomination had, so far, not helped adequately.

The report that the Welsh Forward Movement had extended the sphere of its operations to Gloucestershire is not correct. The visit of Dr. Pugh on Sunday, March 24, to Cinderford was for purposes of investigation as to the desirability of establishing a Forward Movement centre in that populous district. The visit was prompted in large measure by the application of an undenominational mission in the town of Cinderford to be taken into the Welsh Movement.

A Sunday School Conference was held at Newport, Mon., on Good Friday. Papers were read and addresses delivered by various ministers and laymen. The conference sermon was preached by Rev. Richard Richard, of Bristol. At the evening meeting, Mr. Albert Spicer declared that the Sunday schools of the Free Churches were practically stationary. He was afraid that some of the strength which should go into the Sunday school had been diverted into other channels of Christian effort.

It is significant of the spirit of the times that within the last few weeks public attacks have been made on the Puritanism of Wales, and on the Evangelical Revival of the last century. The first was declared by a Welsh Member of Parliament in a recent speech to be responsible for the slow progress of art in the Principality. The attack on the influence of the Evangelical Revival of the last century is made in the columns of Young Wales. Fortunately the Christian faith in Wales does not want for true and able defenders, and the defence has been characterized by a strength most obviously lacking in the attacks.

Letter from New York.

THE Governor of Utah's veto has not been sufficient to relegate the Evans Bill in favour of polygamy to the oblivion he desired for it; and so far as New York is concerned, Mrs. Susie Young Gates, of Provo, Utah, has come out with a statement in The Tribune for which he and the Mormon hierarchy will hardly be grateful. The fact that she is a daughter of Brigham Young himself, gives additional interest to what she says. Mrs. Gates calmly asks us to believe that the promoter of the Bill told her that his Bill was only meant for a "bluff," as he well knew that, as the Mormons were not anxious for the restoration of "plural marriages," the measure was "practically both unnecessary and hopeless." She says, too, that "even in the old days, only about 4 per cent. of the Mormons were of that order (polygamists)."

The Congressional Record shows that altogether there were twelve Acts of Government secured for the Temperance cause, the greatest, of course, being the passage of the anti-canteen amendment to the Army Bill, in spite of the furious opposition from the combined forces of the liquor trade and the War Office.

On Sunday afternoon, at St. Andrew's Methodist Church, in this city, a mortgage for 100,000dols. was burned in the presence of an enthusiastic congregation, including Bishop Foss and a number of prominent members of the denomination. Ten thousand dollars had been given by two men outside the denomination. The church was established in 1864, with a membership of twelve people.

A despatch from Chicago recently said that three ladies had announced their intention to seek a writ of mandamus to compel the Mayor to enforce the law by closing the 6,000 saloons of the Windy City next Sunday.

The latest item from Topeka shows further practical fruit of Mrs. Nation's "smashing" methods. A new registration of voters in Topeka exhibits 15,000 names, as against 10,174 for the Presidential election last fall. The increase consists largely of women who, in Kansas, can vote at municipal elections; 6,000 have enrolled themselves for the coming municipal contest, in which the enforcement of the liquor law is to be a distinct issue.

New York. ROGER MARTIN.

The Y.M.C.A.

THE work of the Henley-on-Thames Association has been greatly revived, and new premises are shortly to be opened.

An Armenian Association, founded at Constantinople, has just been admitted to the World's Alliance.

The current number of L'Esperance, the national organ of the French Associations, gives an admirable exposition of the work for young men now being vigorously prosecuted at a large number of centres in France.

Mr. Christian Phildius, of the World's Committee at Geneva, recently visited Lapland, while on a tour in Sweden. He met a number of eligible young men, and had the satisfaction of forming the first Lapp Association.

The next World's Conference of Young Men's Christian Associations will take place at Christiania, Norway, in 1902. The Central International Committee are already in continual touch with the friends in Norway, who have addressed themselves courageously to the onerous task of preparing for the assembly.

The Danish Associations are doing excellent work among young sailors. The movement was originated by Mr. William Rasch, a member of the Copenhagen Y.M.C.A., and rapidly extended. Amongst the agencies is a large library, the volumes of which are circulated amongst the crews of ships leaving for foreign countries.

An effort is on foot to resuscitate Association work in Bradford, and a meeting for this purpose, arranged at the instance of young men resident in the city, is convened for the 12th inst. The Association in the neighbouring town of Wakefield, which has recently held its annual meeting, is doing a very successful spiritual work.

The German associations have established at some of their larger centres systematic means of communicating with newly-arrived young men. Thus, in Berlin, during the past twelve months, over sixteen thousand young men coming fresh to the city were visited, with the result that 456 joined various associations and 182 became full members.

Pastor Klug, of Barmen, has been elected president of the German National Committee, in place of the late widely-respected Superintendent Krummacher. Mr. H. Helbing, of Elberfeld, is to be called to the position of national secretary, thus consolidating the work of the sixteen travelling secretaries employed by the various groups of associations.

Evangelistic.

Simultaneous Mission Meetings.

At Ashbourne, Mr. and Mrs. S. J. Alexander conducted the meetings. The Bible readings in the afternoon were very helpful to Christians, the children's services were most encouraging, and the men's and women's meetings were good gatherings. The services held each evening were largely attended. The evangelists delivered earnest and pointed Gospel addresses, and the interest in the mission was more and more apparent as the days went by. We are hoping that the good work will be carried on, and that the interest that has been awakened may be maintained and strengthened. G. P. S.

At Shepley, near Huddersfield, the Wesleyan and Methodist New Connexion churches united for the mission. Prayer-meetings were held every night for a week preceding the mission, and were seasons of great refreshing. The township was divided into districts, and an invitation to the services was given at every house. The missioner was Mr. Francis Holmes, of the Evangelization Society. His clear and forceful Gospel preaching was abundantly owned of God, and during the mission eighty persons passed into the inquiry room. The change that has been wrought in the lives of many of them is simply delightful to behold. The members of the churches have received much blessing, and the mission has made a lasting impression upon the village. Mr. Holmes gave three Bible-readings which were greatly appreciated by the goodly numbers of Christian people who attended them.

F. G. S.

Mr. Henry Varley in Aberdeen.

Mr. Varley's mission in Aberdeen has opened auspiciously. Large meetings are being held twice a day, arousing deep interest among all classes. The service on Sunday morning last at the Gordon Mission Hall was full of blessing. In the afternoon at least a thousand men packed the new hall of the Y.M.C.A., and the gathering was a remarkable one. At night the Music Hall, said to hold nearly 3,000 people, was crowded. The outlook gives cause for joy and expectation.

Mr. Ira D. Sankey's Meetings.

From time to time Mr. Ira D. Sankey continues to conduct meetings in various cities of the United States. A recent visit to Lansing, Mich., was described by the State Republican of March 16 as follows:—"The meetings conducted by Mr. Ira D. Sankey yesterday afternoon and evening at the First Baptist church were worthy of the interested crowds which attended. Experiences in his life work were related, and the evangelist held his listeners, especially by the songs and the story of their composition. He told of his thirty years' association in evangelistic work with the late Dwight L. Moody. He made a strong appeal for capable Christian singers."

Mr. G. R. Cairns at Leeds.

Mr. G. R. Cairns recently concluded an eight days' mission in connection with Salem Congregational Church, Leeds. On the Sunday afternoons, he addressed the P.S.A. gatherings of working men, when the church was crowded, and on the Sunday nights, arrangements had to be made for overflow meetings in the large lecture hall. All through the week the meetings grew in interest and power, and the last day was the crowning time of all. The beneficent result of the mission is manifest in every department of the church life. During the week 200 persons decided to follow Christ.

One of the most satisfactory features of the mission has been the absence of all artificial excitement. Everything has been quiet, solemn and impressive. Mr. Cairns' visit to Leeds will long be remembered.

Good Friday Meeting of Theatricals.

For the twenty-third year Sir George and Lady Williams invited the employés of the various London theatres to a social gathering at Shoreditch Town Hall on Good Friday, April 5. In the absence of Sir George in the south of France, his son, Mr. Alfred Thomas Williams, presided. Between 700 and 800 persons partook of the hospitality. Earnest addresses were delivered by Revs. J. Salmon (St. Leonards, Shoreditch), L. J. Bailey (New Tabernacle), Captain Lowe, and Mr. T. C. Chadwick. Mr. Ehrlich (the veteran city missionary who for twenty-three years has arranged these gatherings), Mr. Jones (missionary to theatricals), Rev. T. C. Udall, and Mr. George Nokes also took part in the meeting, Mrs. Chadwick and other friends singing solos. The Religious Tract Society presented a handsome volume, and the Bible and Flower Mission a bouquet, to each visitor. The gathering was called by the Committee for Special Religious Services, 3, Bridewell Place, London, E.C.

Mr. W. R. Lane at West Norwood.

I rejoice to be able to tell of a season of great blessing at Chatsworth Road, West Norwood. Our beloved brother, Mr. W. R. Lane, has just concluded an eight-days' mission in our midst. From the very commencement there was remarkable power attending the Word. The afternoon Bible readings were not only greatly appreciated, but became very popular. During the three closing days we were obliged to adjourn to the large new hall, which was filled up to the last row of seats. The evening meetings were remarkably good, and on the Sunday evening and the closing night of the mission about 1,200 were packed into the chapel. Best of all, there were conversions every service, and many families in the district are rejoicing over sons and daughters brought to the Saviour. It has been a wonderful week, and I praise God for the gifts and grace of our beloved and honoured brother. Archibald G. Brown.

Rev. John McNeill at Airdrie.

The United Evangelistic Committee of Airdrie, composed of twelve of the ministers of the town and representatives from each of their churches, have carried on united missions of an evangelistic nature every year with one exception for the past thirteen years, and the town has been visited by many well-known evangelists.

This year Rev. John McNeill was the missioner The opening meetings were held in the Public Hall. At the evening service the large building was crowded, hundreds standing in the passages and at the back of the platform, while an overflow meeting was held in the West U.F. Church. The week-night meetings were at first held in Broom Knoll U.F. Church, but as it was soon felt that the building would be too small to accommodate the people, the committee decided to ask for the use of the parish church for the second week.

This was readily granted, and Rev. D. H. Paterson, the minister, took a deep interest in the mission. The church holds 1,200 people, and was crowded in every part before the end of the week. Mr. McNeill departed from the usual style of evangelistic meetings, as far as the after-meetings were concerned, but the preaching of the Gospel was with great power, and those interested in the work have every reason to believe that many were led to decision for Christ during each address, or, as opportunity was given, during a few moments of silent prayer that preceded the close of the meetings. Mr. McNeill's visit was full of interest to himself, the village of Glenboig, where he commenced his ministry, being only three miles from Airdrie.

The eight days' mission conducted by Mr. Bartley Angel in the Railway Mission Hall, Willesden, brought precious results. There were seekers after salvation, and workers were much encouraged. A. F.

At the Railway Mission, Abbeyhill, Edinburgh, we have concluded a fortnight's special mission with Mr. S. Levermore. Several remarkable cases of decision have cheered the hearts of the workers, and the clear proclamation of the foundation truths of the Gospel has helped many Christians. Mr. Levermore's solo singing was much appreciated.

T. H. Ridley, Superintendent.

Once again has Mr. Charles Inglis visited the Edinburgh Castle, Rhodeswell Road, E. During the month of March he has preached the "Word of Life" with vigour and earnestness. The labour of the Lord's servant has not been in vain, for it has been our joy to witness an evident anxiety on the part of those who have listened to the Gospel message; some professed decision for the Lord Jesus Christ. W. N.

The recent visit of Mr. Charles E. Barraclough to Forfar, where he conducted special services for a fortnight in the Baptist Chapel, was a time of blessing. The attendances were exceptionally good. Many believers received blessing, while decisions for Christ on the part of the unsaved were not lacking, and some of the cases have given rise to much joy and hope. We are convinced that the influence of these services will remain for many days.

(Pastor) J. C. Shildrick.

A fruitful eight days' mission has been conducted by Rev. J. T. Vine, at Hazelville Road Baptist Chapel (Rev. J. E. Joynes), Hornsey Rise. A large number passed through the inquiry room and signified repentance towards God and faith in Jesus Christ, a notable feature being the awakening among men and children. Helpful and well-attended afternoon Bible-readings were given by Mr. R. C. Morgan and Revs. Wm. and J. E. Joynes. On Good Friday an enthusiastic meeting of converts, workers, and friends was held, preceded by a social gathering. R. A. G.

Mr. Henry Thorne.—April 13-22, Twickenham. Mr. Thorne has a few open dates in May. His address is 31, Beverley Road, Anerley.
Mr. E. P. Telford.—April 14-25, Prestatyn.
Mr. John Weedon.—April 13-25, Chipping Norton.

Requests for Prayer.

For blessing on the Mission at the April Fair, Lincoln, April 22-28.

For the Ipswich monthly meeting for the deepening of spiritual life on April 18. Speaker, Mr. Thos. A. Bailey, of the Mission to Lepers.

For a Mission to Children at the Lordship Road Presbyterian Church, Stoke Newington, April 14 to 21, to be conducted by Mr. C. Dudley Smith.

That the members of both Houses of Parliament may be guided to a right conclusion in the consideration of the suggested changes in the King's Declaration.

Personalia.

Dr. G. A. Macnutt (21, Leinster Square, Bayswater, W.), purposes going shortly to Johannesburg to preach the Gospel, hoping to support himself by his practice, and intending to start a medical dispensary as a means of reaching the natives and others.

Deacon Abraham, in a letter to friends in England, says that, on arriving home in Urumiah, he found his orphanage household all well. He says:—"Not one had died in the space of nearly two years, except my second son Stephen, who had left a widow and two sons. I found Esther in good health, and my daughter Miriam well grown."

Rev. Isaac F. Row, who has had such a wide and varied experience of Christian work in India, during a period of over twenty years, has been engaged by the Zenana, Bible, and Medical Mission to assist for some time in the home work of that Society. It is believed that Mr. Row, with his large experience, will be able to render valuable assistance as deputation agent in organizing and addressing meetings, and thus endeavouring to promote a wider interest in the blessed work of sending the Gospel to the poor women and girls of India. Mr. Row can be communicated with at the offices of the Society, 2, Adelphi Terrace, London, W.C.

Bilbao Harbour Mission.—In spite of various difficulties and numerous changes, the work of the Sailors' Institute at Bilbao has been continued with earnestness and many cheering signs of growing appreciation. The Institute is connected with the British and Foreign Sailors' Society, Mr. W. J. E. Mansfield being the port missionary. The services held are unsectarian in character, and are attended by residents in addition to seamen, as this is the only entirely Nonconformist English service in Bilbao. During the winter months Dr. Beattie delivered weekly lectures on "First Aid to the Injured." The opportunity of being instructed in ambulance work has been taken advantage of by the seamen with much heartiness. The Shelter of the Institute is appreciated by men in all circumstances. Passengers of vessels have also availed themselves of the comfortable surroundings and accommodation of the Institute. Distressed sailors who, through some cause or other, have lost their ships seek shelter among Christian friends, by whom they are cordially welcomed and aided in their time of difficulty. Not the least important branch of the work is the distribution of literature. These gifts are warmly appreciated. The secretary is Mr. A. George Bayard, Sailors' Institute, Bilbao.

Among the Churches.

The executive of the Wesleyan Twentieth Century Fund report that the payments from the circuits up to date amount to £661,540 15s. 11d. This amount will be considerably increased by the time the district synods meet in May.

Arrangements are being made for the engagement by the London Congregational Union of two ministers who have done conspicuously good evangelistic mission work in the provinces, to take charge of the "Mission Centre" at Claremont Chapel, N.

At the Congregational Church Northam (Rev. J. Thompson), anniversary services were held last week, and the report which was presented was of a satisfactory character. Much-needed renovations have been carried out, and the building now presents a neat and cheerful appearance.

The Birmingham Gazette states that it is the intention of the Bishop of Worcester (Dr. Perowne) to resign the bishopric on account of the condition of his health. Dr. Perowne is now staying in the Isle of Wight, and his resignation will be deferred until some time after his return home.

Bishopsgate Chapel reports a membership of 249, the unusually heavy losses of the year having been balanced by the new accessions. The report of the Mission Band, whose work lies in Duke Street, Spitalfields, and Montague Court, Bishopsgate, shows how varied a work is carried on in addition to the usual church operations.

The arrangements for the Methodist Œcumenical Council are being pressed forward. Wednesday, September 4, has been fixed as the day on which Bishop Galloway, of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, will preach the inaugural sermon in Wesley's Chapel, City Road, London, and the meetings will continue until Tuesday, September 17.

Some of the reports of the Wesleyan quarterly meetings tell of fruitful work. In some of the Yorkshire circuits large numbers have been ingathered. At the little village of Ingrow, Keighley circuit, a revival has broken out, resulting in the addition of 100 young persons to the church. At Leicester the number on trial is nearly 500 in one of the circuits.

The annual report of Surrey Chapel Central P.M. Mission, S.E., is a record of good work, religious and philanthropic, carried on in a needy district of the metropolis. Rev. J. Tolefree Parr is desirous before leaving "Surrey" to undertake his new duties as a missioner for the Free Churches, to complete the Renovation Fund for which purpose, and to meet ordinary demands, the sum of £600 is required.

The year book of Woodberry Down Baptist Church, N., shows that the present membership is 520, with a Sunday school of 530 scholars and fifty-eight teachers. A branch of the International Bible Reading Society numbers 210. The contributions to the Baptist Missionary and Zenana Mission amounted to £167, and to the Twentieth Century Fund £466 19s. 8d. The total receipts for the year are £2,513 7s. 3d., this being the largest of any year in the Church history.

The year book of Brockley Road Baptist Chapel, New Cross, S.E., gives particulars of a variety of agencies, evangelistic and educational, in promotion of spiritual worship and practical philanthropy. In a pastoral letter, Rev. John Lewis says: "Many men have of late been expressing their opinion as to the need and the danger of the times. I believe that the need is a fuller acceptance of the great truths which centre in the Cross, and the danger that we should forget them."

The Primitive Methodist General Committee have sanctioned the sale of the Victoria Terrace Chapel, Edinburgh, which will be superseded by the Literary Institute, recently purchased for connexional purposes for £10,500. This fine central block of buildings, which is to be called the "Livingstone Hall," contains two halls seating 1,000 and 250 hearers respectively, together with numerous other rooms suitable for church work. The proceeds of the sale will be given to the purchase fund.

The Wesleyan services held at Hengler's Circus, Liverpool throughout the winter have been concluded. Rev. H. Howard May reports that the attendances throughout have been well maintained, and occasionally even the top galleries have been requisitioned in order to accommodate the large audiences. Most gratifying of all, however, have been the spiritual results. As a direct result of these services, ninety names have been entered on the class books; and on meeting these for tickets on trial last week, Mr. May found seventy persons present. Others are joining week by week.

The rebuilding of Christ Church, North Brixton (Rev. W. R. Mowll, vicar), is an important undertaking. It was necessary to erect a large hall for use as a temporary church; this has been effected, and is an integral part of the operations. When the new church is completed this building will be devoted in part for a parochial hall, and the remaining portion for a new infant school. Towards the entire plan a sum of £15,000 has been raised by the congregation, but to complete the undertaking a further sum of £8,300 will be needed. Mr. Mowll points out that the Trust deed provides stringently for the continuance of Protestant work and teaching.

At the annual meeting of the Yorkshire Congregational Union, Rev. Bryan Dale submitted the report on the special missions. It gave an encouraging account of the work of the missioner, Rev. John Jameson, but added that, owing to financial reasons, the committee felt compelled to dispense with the services of Mr. Jameson, after three years of fruitful work. The adoption of the report having been proposed, first one and then another minister or delegate rose and promised financial aid, until sufficient was promised for each of the next three years. Mr. Jameson's services, therefore, will be retained.

Fallen Asleep.

Rev. Thomas Brown, of Collace, Perthshire, in his seventy, third year.—Chatham Bible Christian Circuit has lost its oldest member by the death of Mrs. Brown, a member for sixty-five years.

About Books.

Words of the King, by L. L. (Marshall Brothers), gives a month's daily meditations on Scriptural topics, a week each being devoted to Commands, Warnings, Beatitudes, and Promises, while the three remaining days are given to Example.

The latest volume in the "Minerva" library is Sartor Resartus, along with "Heroes and Hero Worship," and "Past and Present," by Thomas Carlyle. There is a portrait of the author, and a brief introduction. (2s. Ward, Lock, & Co.)

The History of Maze Pond Sunday School: 1801-1901, by B. Reeve (1s. net. Archer Printing Co., 57, Shoe Lane, E.C.) A deeply interesting record, telling the story of work in connection with one of the historic Baptist churches of London. There are portraits and other illustrations.

In David Livingstone (1s. 6d. net. Oliphant), by Mr. T. Banks Maclachlan, a concise and interesting narrative of the life of the missionary explorer has been added to the "Famous Scots" series. The volume will be deservedly welcomed by those in search of profitable and inspiring reading for young people of both sexes.

The Ideal Publishing Union has issued a valuable platform help for temperance workers, in the form of outlines of addresses, neatly printed on cards, done up in packets of twelve. They have been prepared by W. N. Edwards, F.C.S., and are called The A1 Series of Outlines. The packets already issued (6d. each) deal with—1. Sunday Closing; 2. Simple Temperance Science.

Those who find pleasure in legendary lore will be glad to read The Magic Mist: and Other Dartmoor Legends, by Eva C. Rogers, a handsome volume, tastefully illustrated by C. E. Eldred and P. B. Hickling. (5s. Melrose.) The pages will have a special charm for those who know the wild region of Dartmoor, and have given attention to the romantic stories of Devonshire and the West of England.

The "Quiet Hour" Series has been enriched by the inclusion of The All-Sufficient Saviour, by the late Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor. (1s. nett. Marshall Bros.). The chapters are eight in number, and show that the Lord is Deliverer and Saviour from sin and care, in temptation and doubt; also that He is sufficient for us amid the crosses, bereavements and perplexities of life. The pages will minister comfort to many.

Until the Day Break, by William Landels, D.D. (2s. 6d. Religious Tract Society), is a welcome little volume. It consists of selections from a series of homilies by the well-known preacher, which were designed to cheer drooping Christians, and to encourage them on their heavenward journey. Mourners and those in sorrow will prize these pages, which are at once precious in their teaching and chaste in literary expression.

Messrs. Sceley are issuing popular editions of some of their most attractive books for young people. There lie before us already—To the Lions: A Tale of the Early Christians, by Rev. A. J. Church; The Two Swords: A Story of Old Bristol, by Emma Marshall; and The Old Looking Glass and the Broken Looking Glass; or, Mrs. Dorothy Cope's Recollections of Service, by M. L. Charlesworth. (1s. 6d. each.) These are all illustrated and neatly bound.

Rev. Charles Bullock's volume on Queen Victoria has had a large circulation in its various editions. In its latest form—entitled, The Queen's Resolve, and Her "Doubly Royal" Reign: with England's Welcome to Our King—it is sure to have many new readers. It is a budget of good things about the Good Queen, and is very fully illustrated. It would be difficult to select a more attractive volume for the homes of the people at the present time. (1s. 6d. "Home Words" Office, 11, Ludgate Square, E.C.)

Counsels for Churchpeople is a volume of selections from the writings of the late Bishop of London (Dr. Mandell Creighton). The various extracts have been collected and arranged by Rev. J. H. Burn, B.D., and they include many mighty thoughts expressed in noble language. Whether or not one agrees with the sentiment, one is compelled to admire the courage and courtesy that pervade the writings of the lamented prelate. The pages present many counsels to which all Christians will gladly yield assent. (5s. Stock.)

Mr. Jesse Page has written, for the "New Century Leaders" series, issued by Partridge & Co., a sketch of the life and work of his friend, General Booth. The development of the Salvation Army, and the career of its energetic leader, are described with vigour and sympathy. The account of the up-building of the Army seems incomplete, however, without some reference to the contributory labours of Mr. Railton. Another volume of the series is Joseph Parker, D.D.: His Life and Ministry, by Albert Dawson, which supplies a popular account of the great London preacher, written by "an insider." The volume will be welcomed by a wide constituency. The true greatness of the man is brought out in vivid fashion. Specially interesting are the chapters "Early Days" and "Anecdotes and Incidents." (1s. 6d. each).

Triglot Dictionary of Scriptural Representative Words, in Hebrew, Greek, and English, by Henry Brown, M.D. (Lond.), Consulting Physician to the Manchester Royal Infirmary. (21s. Bagster.) The compiler of this handsome book aims to present Scripture word-equivalents — English, Greek, and Hebrew—in parallel columns. He has apparently gone down English word lists, and finding words that in one or more instances represent certain vocables in the original Scriptures, he has proceeded upon such a basis to construct his dictionary. He takes little care to distinguish between true equivalents and words that are not properly such; hence a volume that can neither be employed in linguistic study nor be trusted for purposes of reference. We could wish the compiler had first taken counsel as to the reliableness or otherwise of his peculiar plan of procedure. It would not have been difficult to set out, on a useful model, "Scriptural Representative Words" the comparative study of which would have been attended with manifest profit. As it is, the volume is an example of "how not to do it." Frequently one meets an indifferent English rendering, set forth without qualification as the equivalent of Greek and Hebrew words which, to the expert, easily suggest other familiar and more absolute equivalents. Much confusion is created also by a failure to distinguish idiomatic applications from primary meanings of words. The inequalities and deficiencies of the book make it sadly disappointing. It is called a dictionary, but it performs no such service. We have hardly found a page in which the compiler's unfortunate method has not led to fallacious results.

Jesus Christ, To-day, is the title of a new book by Rev. F. C. Spurr (Missioner to the Baptist Union), being studies in the work of redemption, and the action of the Saviour upon the life and thought of our time. The volume will be issued by Mr. Arthur H. Stockwell.

A Few Words on the Sabbath, God's Own Day, and Attendance at the Sanctuary gives a timely statement of the Scriptural position; A Few Words on Temperance contains an appeal to Christians who are not active on the question. (Two pamphlets. Helfmann, Valparaiso.)

Notes & Comments

THE coming of Spring has been greatly delayed by the very rough winds and bitterly cold weather of March and early April. The leaves are still wrapped in their swaddling-bands, and even the adventurous chestnut-buds are slow to unfold. There is something impressive in the patient air of waiting which marks the trees and plants, which are overcharged with hidden vitality. But we know that no adverse conditions can affect the issue. Spring is coming, and in a few weeks the whole land will be a brilliant picture of beauty and life and song. So in human life there are times of adverse winds and frosts which keep the soul back, and seem to make its growth impossible. But if the "new life" is there, the issue is certain. Sooner or later the adverse conditions will give way, and the soul shall see of its travail, and be satisfied. The season thus preaches to us these two principles—readiness and patience. These two qualities always in the end spell victory.

In the first of a new series of articles on "The Church's One Foundation," Dr. Robertson Nicoll boldly faces the latest onslaught upon the Gospels. He says: "It is of no avail to lift up hands in horror. The critics have to be met. If they are not frankly encountered, the door of faith will be closed on multitudes." It is remarkable how the ground of attack has gradually shifted. Fifty years ago the focal point of the battle was the Fourth Gospel and the Person of Christ revealed therein. Then the Old Testament had its turn, and now, as Dr. Nicoll phrases it, "the storm has moved round the whole horizon, but it is rapidly concentrating its strength and fury above one Sacred Head." The latest criticism—popularized in this country by an Anglican canon—does not longer beat about the bush; its aim is admittedly to obliterate Jesus Christ from history. And it is there that the whole Church will gladly accept battle.

Friends who recall the account we published some months ago of the experiences of Mr. and Mrs. C. H. S. Green, their children, and Miss J. Gregg, on the journey from Hwai-lu to Pao-ting-fu, or who have read the chapter of "Martyred Missionaries of the China Inland Mission" dealing with the Province of Chih-li, will be interested to learn that the narrative has been published in a fuller form under the title In Deaths Oft (6d. Morgan & Scott). The story is one of the gracious dealing of the Lord in the midst of troubles such as have fallen to the lot of few in this generation. Three photographic illustrations add much to the interest and value of the book.

Next week there will be the unique spectacle of the combined Sessions of the Baptist and Congregational Unions held in London. Those two very old personal friends and veterans, Doctors Maclaren and Parker, will preside in turn over the united gatherings. It should be a remarkable object-lesson to the striplings who are for ever informing the public that Evangelicalism is played out, to behold two of the most influential religious bodies of the time guided by old men who have happily retained their intellectual brilliance and their intense devotion to the old doctrines of grace. The twin Missionary Societies will also hold combined meetings during the same week, mingling their joys and sorrows, for, alas! both societies have been heavily afflicted by losses in the Chinese tourbillon. This double event will have great interest, not only for the two bodies concerned, but also for all the Churches, since they have plentifully shared in the blessings which God has granted through his two honoured servants.

The recent Simultaneous Mission, while productive of untold good in the Churches and between the Churches, was confessedly only a very partial success as regards drawing in the outsiders, in whose interests it was mainly held. This fact, so far from being a discouragement, ought to prove an incentive. The ministers and members of our Churches should carefully examine themselves, and overhaul their methods of work, to find the secret of the dislike evidently felt by non-church-goers to what is called "organized Christianity." Perhaps, if they frankly face the facts, they will realize that the fault largely lies in the exclusiveness and the deadness of their services, in the cold and formal welcome so often shown to strangers, and in the comparatively low level of Christian character attained by the majority of the members. There is clearly something wrong with the Church as well as the world. If so, the Church should set about putting its own house in order, that it may become an attraction instead of a hindrance to the Gospel.

A well-known French pastor who is in London this week for the meetings of the Pastors' College, and who is down upon the programme to read a paper upon "France and Catholicism," has been giving his views upon the present situation in France. He says that there is an unmistakable revival of church-going and external Catholicism in France just now, and that this is due, not to any serious belief in the Catholic creed, but to the sheer despair which has seized many parents in view of the results upon their children of a Godless education. The average Frenchman confounds Christianity with Romanism, and he has been taught from infancy that Protestantism is synonymous with rationalism and the negation of Christianity. He sees that the negation of Christianity has produced disastrous results upon morals, and to save these he imagines he must do homage to Catholicism, and invite the priest to exercise his functions. There is in France at present a fruitful soil for the truth, if only the sowers could be confederated. Single-handed work is too slow; a combined movement is needed.

At length there are outward signs of the unrest and anxiety which for some time have been felt at the Vatican. Alarmed by the campaign against the Orders which has been opened almost simultaneously in France, Spain, Portugal, and Belgium, and by the passing of the Bill against the Associations in France, the Pope has appointed a committee of cardinals to consider the present position, and to suggest means of putting a stop to the widespread movement. The "general" of each Order has also been instructed to direct the members to exercise the greatest prudence in their dealings with the laity, so as to avoid giving offence. The antagonism to Rome, however, is deeper than all this, and its depths have not yet been sounded by the Vatican.

A very significant fact has been communicated from China. It is stated that, without any pressure having been put upon them by Foreign Powers, the Government officials in Chekiang have indemnified all the native converts for their losses in the anti-Christian disturbances. This action is all the more remarkable, as the claims for indemnity presented to the Chinese Government by the Powers make no mention of such a demand. The payments, therefore, can only be regarded as an open recognition of the right of the Christian converts to equal citizenship and to protection at the hands of the State.

Under the title, "The Shame of Europe," the St. James's Gazette quotes from the Niroku Shinpo, of Tokio, some appalling side-lights on the actions of the European troops during the recent campaign in China. That the war had been accompanied by outrage and lust we knew, but now the Gazette tells us that some of the details given by our Japanese contemporary are too horrible for reproduction in this country. If we admit that we were practically prepared for such things as a necessary accompaniment of the war, ought not the very admission to bring a blush to the cheek of every honest man and woman? If war cannot be carried on without the sacrifice of women and children on the altar of lust, dare we ever again speak of a war as "necessary" or "justifiable" on the part of aggressors? We do not speak now of what may be termed wars of defence; but at what price do we value the honour and lives of our own daughters, if we put those of their sisters, with the lives of fathers and brothers and so much more, into the scale against our "commercial interests," and allow the latter at once to weigh the balance down?

The vice of gambling has become so alarmingly prevalent in America, that the ministers of leading churches in New York have been holding a conference as to the best means of combating the evil. One leading pastor said he knew of two Yale students who played "bridge" during the Easter holidays with their hostess, and lost £180 and £60 respectively to her. The present mania, according to another minister, has not been equalled since the days of Sheridan in England. It was even suggested that the exceptionally heavy collections contributed at Easter in the churches (as much as £20,000 having been given in one fashionable church) were really swelled by "conscience-money" contributions from Society gamblers. A resolution was adopted, to carry on a preaching crusade against gambling, as one of the means of calling public attention to the prevalence and seriousness of the evil.

What is known as the "Manchester Magisterial Scandal" entered upon its final phase last week, when the Home Secretary approved of the retirement of the two offending Justices who had been guilty of trying to tamper with the police in the affair of a licensing prosecution. The Chief Constable of Manchester is, happily, a good and a firm man, and he bravely set himself against the iniquity, openly exposing the attempt to set aside the action of justice. The Home Secretary expresses his entire approval of the manner in which the Chief Constable acted, and "trusts that the Committee will do all in its power to support the police in the strict enforcement of the Licensing Law." The whole case confirms our oft-reiterated contention that if the legal powers already possessed by authorities were put into execution, and attempts to suppress these were instantly brought to light, many moral scandals such as unhappily at present pass unreproved, would never arise. The other side will stoop to anything; we must make their attempts abortive. Above all things, we must see to it that they who sit to administer justice have clean hands.

Now that it is of the utmost importance that all sections of the temperance party should stand together in one solid phalanx, it is to be hoped that the Scotch Permissive Bill Association will avoid breaking with other reformers, who are agreed in essential matters, by insisting on nothing short of prohibition as their programme. The policy of "all or nothing" which prevailed till recently only succeeded in alienating large sections of the public, and in wrecking the only Government of modern times that ventured to appeal to the country on the basis of temperance reform. It has been clearly proved that "piecemeal legislation" is the only practical principle in this country, and those who still persist in demanding more than Parliament can possibly be brought to grant, are defeating the very purpose dearest to their hearts. Lord Peel's report seems to be uniting the majority of reformers all over the country, and the zealous minority would be wise to throw in their lot with it.

The great housing scheme which has been adopted by the London County Council must necessarily have the effect of lessening the congestion in some of the Metropolitan areas, and the consequent evils which follow so closely upon overcrowding. The plan is, in many respects, a noble endeavour to grapple with a problem of sufficient national importance to have received attention long before now at the hands of the Government. At the same time, it will require careful safeguarding to prevent the sub-letting of single rooms to families, otherwise there will simply be a change of area. The chairman's utterance respecting the rentals at "a little over 2s. per room" certainly gives ground for some anxiety.

It is a well-recognised law of national well-being that the birth-rate should show a substantial lead over the death-rate. Nations whose birth-rate is stationary are decadent. This being so, the recent report of the Registrar-General for 1899 is reassuring. The average of deaths during that year was 18·3 per 1,000, while the birth-rate was 29·3 per 1,000. Of late years this substantial difference had not been maintained. The marriage-rate was also the highest known since 1875. These vital statistics are of special significance in view of the steady expansion of our Empire, and the growing importance of our vast colonies in the Southern hemisphere. Territory without population is of no value, and the more we increase as a nation the better the outlook for the race. There is an ethical aspect to these facts, which is of supreme meaning. Pure social morals and a high birth-rate, are vitally related.

Mr. J. F. Blacker, in his presidential address to the National Union of Teachers at Yarmouth, made a serious charge against some working-class parents in the treatment of their children. "Those," he said, "who spoke glibly of the child being taught 'at a mother's knee' had, to say the least, a very imperfect knowledge of the actual lack of responsibility accepted as a duty by not the submerged tenth only, but another tenth above that." This forms the strongest possible plea (1) for simple religious instruction in our day schools, though the Church Times argument that it calls for "denominational" instruction is a gratuitous and ex parte inference; and (2) for a vigorous prosecution of Sunday-school work by all the denominations; (3) for some method of reaching this class of parents, so that their responsibilities towards the training of their children may be brought home to them. We fear that the last-mentioned is by no means an easy task.

The Shop Assistants' Union at their recent meeting made out a strong case for the practical support of the Christian public in their crusade against the living-in system, as well as against other conditions of their existence. The overcrowding of the bedrooms, into which, in many houses, the assistants are not allowed to enter from the time they get up till midnight (thus forcing them into the streets or elsewhere); the absence of privacy; the contaminating effects of the enforced company of those who may have nothing in common with each other; the system of espionage against dishonesty, and the barring out of married men from employment, constitute a set of grievances that ought to command far wider and more practical sympathy than is usually shown to this large and growing class. Only as this sympathy is shown by the public, can the grievances be redressed. The well-being of many hundreds of thousands of deserving young people is involved, and through them of the community in general.

A thoroughly secular contemporary raises its warning against the recent spread of spiritualism, upon the ground of the mental evils which follow in the train of these forbidden investigations. We, of course, endorse all that our contemporary says in this direction, adding to it, however, the protest which Holy Scripture firmly enters against "seeking to the dead." It is a remarkable thing that, in the West End of London, there is such a recrudescence of superstition and black magic. The advertisement columns reveal the existence of an ever-growing number of "mediums" and fortune tellers, who seem to thrive upon the credulity of their fellows. They manage somehow to evade the law by cloaking their nefarious business under an innocent name. The whole thing is a question of demand and supply. History clearly shows that when God becomes vague in the estimation of a people, charlatans spring up who pretend to unveil the future, and to these the people repair. The very consultation of these "oracles" is a witness to a perverted instinct.

The excommunication of Count Tolstoi by the Greek Church adds another item to the argument against persecution. Excommunication in Russia is a very serious matter if effectively carried out. In this instance, a widespread revulsion has been caused by the action of the Synod, and the result is likely to prove very much more serious to the Church than to the "heretic," whose opinions, whether they be right or wrong, have received a dangerous advertisement through the ban under which they have been placed. Error can never be combated by such methods; its only effective antidote is "truth spoken in love." The ferment created in Russian society by this incident is eloquent of the awakening that is going on among the laity of that country. The mind of the nation is clearly awakening; but one strong as Luther is wanted to voice the general revolution against the superstitions and extravagances of the Greek Church.

A well-qualified writer, who spent a portion of his life in a monastery, recently asserted that the monastic life is doomed to decay, and that it contains within itself the seeds of its own downfall. He alleges that the number of applicants has rapidly decreased, notwithstanding the fact that the Pope years ago was compelled to sanction the admission of boys of fifteen to the Orders. He further alleges that to-day nearly four-fifths of "those who kneel at the altar, in solemn abjuration of the world and the flesh, are boys of that age." That the whole history of monasticism is "a story of fitful gleams of idealism, and long periods of sensualism" all students know, for rarely does a mature mind turn to the monastery.

"The Children's Bill."

DEAR SIR,—Surely there can be no thoughtful Christian who does not rejoice in the enormous majority of 318 by which this Bill passed its second reading in the Commons on March 20. Unless, however, great care is taken, this very majority may prove one of the greatest dangers to the Bill—

(1) Because it will tend to make its less earnest supporters relax their efforts, thinking that the Bill is now sure to pass into law.

(2) Because it is extremely notable that the majority itself is deceptive. Probably many members who voted for the second reading to please their temperance constituents, will either vote against some essential clause in committee, or be absent, in order to please "the trade."

Beyond the above, what are the chief dangers the Bill has to face? (a) The apathy of the Government towards temperance legislation, which results in part from— (b) Their dependence for power on the liquor interest. (c) The enormously increased power of the liquor interest since the conversion of the largest breweries into limited companies.

Last year the Bill was read a second time without a division; but in consequence of pressure Mr. Balfour refused to give facilities for the Bill to go into Committee, and so strangled it. What the "trade" did last year, they will repeat this year, raising the old Ephesian cry, "Our craft is in danger."

Lord Rosebery has said, "If the State does not soon control the liquor traffic, the liquor traffic will control the State."

Lord Peel has said, "The time has fully come for the decision of the question, 'Who is to be master, the State or a trade?'"

How can we ensure success? I would answer, "By a much greater and more definite acknowledgement of God in the matter."

I know that very many earnest praying men and women have been working in the Temperance movement for years. But it does not appear to me that the movement as a whole has been conducted—

(1) With a clear and definite acknowledgment of God—as the one only source of strength. (See 1 Sam. xvii. 45-47).

(2) With a definite surrender to the leadership and to the commands of God. (See Joshua v. 13, 14; Judges vi. 25-27.)

May I suggest this?—Make the "Children's Bill," as it were a test; definitely acknowledge God all through in the matter, holding throughout the country prayer meetings about it, and of course at the same time taking all needful care and thought in parliamentary matters—but all distinctly under God's leadership (Joshua v. 14).

Africa and Native Races.—II.

THE three watchwords of the native question are—land, labour, and education.

At the root of these lies LAND TENURE. In South Africa, as in every other country, it lies behind every other social problem, and determines the lines on which they must be settled. Two lines of policy have been shaping out recently. One is the Imperial policy, which has favoured the principle of "reservations" similar to that which has been so successful in Basutoland, in which large tracts of country are "reserved" for the use of the native races, under their own system of land tenure, and their own social laws and customs.

Under this policy, the communal or tribal system of ownership is followed. The individual has no absolute ownership of land, but he has a right to possess sufficient ground to live upon, and to individual ownership of all he can and does cultivate, but only while he cultivates it.

Under this system no native tribe can be oppressed by the whites, and, further, the existence of these "reservations" forms a strong motive to the native servants in the colonies to be thrifty.

The second land policy referred to, however, is to break up this communal system, with a view to establishing individual ownership; it may be called the Colonial policy, as opposed to the Imperial, and is growingly popular among the white population, who have done their best of recent years to introduce legislation

OPPOSED TO THE COMMUNAL PRINCIPLE.

To understand this, we must say a word about the LABOUR QUESTION. The chief trend of recent colonial legislation is towards facilitating means whereby the natives may be utilized as labourers, whether on the farms, in the mines, or in the towns. Settlers desire native servants in their homes and on their fields; mining capitalists depend very largely on the supply of native labour for the heavy manual work of the mines; there are many other directions in which the energies of the natives can be utilized by the white man.

Such legislation as makes the supply of native labour abundant and cheap will be favoured by the white people, whose interests lie in that direction. This fact provides the key to the burning questions of the hour in South Africa. It accounts for the set-back in the legislative movement as regards the conditions of native life, and especially for the growing dislike of colonists to the "reservation" system favoured by Government. The "South African Attitude," as it has been called, is the logical result of the ever-increasing pressure of the Labour problem; and its tendency is directly towards restricting the liberties and increasing the social

DISABILITIES OF THE ABORIGINAL RACES.

Under the pressure of this motive such legislation as the "Strop" Bill has been attempted, which would have given power to Field Cornets (who are a kind of temporary or subordinate justices of the peace) to make such minor offences as impudence, coming late to work, &c., indictable offences punishable by flogging; but fortunately this never became law. The "Curfew" Act was passed in 1895, forbidding the presence of natives in the streets after 9 p.m.; the Raised Franchise Act was made law, the qualification now being £75, instead of £25 per annum; and the Glen Grey Act instituted a labour tax for the first time, providing that every man capable of work, and not owning an individual allotment, should be forced to pay an annual tax, or go into service for at least three months in the year. So long as the tribe has to be dealt with as a unit, it can hold its own against capitalist or other aggression, and make an appeal to Government that must have weight from the sheer force of numbers; but once the native as an individual has to make his terms with the white man, he is at an immediate and trying disadvantage both from the legal and the social point of view.

It is thus clear that the interests of colonists, combined with the attitude of superiority which the white man instinctively, and everywhere, takes towards native races, form a powerful motive to oppression. We can readily see why the native tribes prefer, in these circumstances, to be under Imperial control, and why the huge capitalist combinations that control the mines are a perilous factor in the case.

The EDUCATION QUESTION is, in a sense, a subordinate matter, and as such is receiving better attention from the authorities. Ultimately, however, it will be the question, and, as such, needs to be watched with careful persistence.

On the whole, it is clear that when the time of settlement comes, there will be a great problem to face. Not in the Cape Parliament, nor even in a Federated Parliament of the South African States, must the ultimate settlement be made, but in our Imperial Legislature, where alone a fair and dispassionate treatment of these conflicting claims can be secured. To every Christian elector, therefore, we would say, "Watch the interests of your dusky brethren of the Bantu tribes of South Africa. You cannot watch too closely."

From Rev. F. B. Meyer.

GOD'S hand has been graciously upon us for good, and I want to thank many friends for their prayers. I have had a very remarkable series of meetings—remarkable not only for dense crowds, but for the awakening of deep spiritual interest. At Chattanooga the last meetings of the series were held in a great auditorium holding 3,500 people, which was crowded. And at Louisville, on the Sunday evening, we must have had 4,000 to 4,500 gathered in an audience-room used only for great political gatherings.

It seems as though the people in the Southern States are smitten with a hunger for a deeper life, and listen eagerly to the simplest exposition of spiritual truth, especially on the lines of consecration and the filling of the Holy Spirit. I only wish that instead of the four days allotted to each place it was possible to spend three or four weeks.

I write these words at Cincinnati, which, on the whole, is a hard soil for religious work, a result which may be due to the large number of foreigners which have settled here. But even here our meetings have been crowded, and full of blessing. The mischief is that the standard of admission to the churches has been rather lax, and that many have become members of the professing church who are not truly regenerate. But the pastors, in this city, are now a set of very godly, earnest men, keenly in earnest to raise the standard of religious profession and character; they are giving themselves to concentrated prayer and effort for a revival of religion. I am very thankful to have been brought into association with them just at this time. A meeting of the pastors of the city yesterday morning, at the famous Lane Seminary, will always live in my memory.

Mr. W. R. Moody is acting as conductor and guide of the tour, and it is very pleasant to note his maturing character, conjoined with so many of the prompt, practical, business-like ways that were so valuable a factor in his father's success. F. B. MEYER.

Christians and Theatre-Going.

TO my mind one sad evidence of the decline of Christian spirituality in the present age is the tendency of professed Christians to visit theatres.

Many ask, What is the harm? I answer, What is the good? Is it not a waste of much precious time—that might have been used in a far better way? Does it not give young people a fascinating taste for worldly frivolities, which often leads to a downward road? Does not the presence of professed Christians encourage others thus to squander God's mercies in worse than useless folly? Do not the inuendoes used in such places, also the sensuous spectacles witnessed there, tend to defile the mind, and to blunt the taste for more solid and serious exercises?

Has not the theatre often been the first downward step to destruction? Does not the theatre de facto belong to the people of this world, who have no desire for God or his Word? Let me give your readers an incident to show what a genuine Christian thinks of such a place. Some years ago there was a noted retired General in Mussoorie hills, who had been converted to God in his old age, by reading some of Mr. Spurgeon's sermons. His delight was to scatter copies of these to all the officers of the army whom he knew through India. One day a lady called at his house, and said, "General, I suppose you will be at the theatre to-night." He said, "No, madam, I am now a Christian, and have given up the devil's house for the house of God." The great lady was shocked, and said, "What, am not I a Christian?" "Madam," was the reply, "What is a true Christian? I take a true Christian to be one who follows Christ, and I ask you, do you think if Christ were here He would go to the theatre?" The lady said, "Oh, no, He would not go." "Then, if He would not, should his people go where Christ would not go? If they dare go where He is not, they go into danger. So better not go, for it is the devil's ground. I ask you again, 'Would you like to die in a theatre?" This touched the conscience, and the answer was, "God forbid!" After all she went, hoping she would not die in such a place!

Another excuse is, "People must get some enjoyment." I would ask are there no other and better enjoyments to the true Christian? Carrion may be relished by vultures, but the dove will flee from it; and the people who can relish theatricals remind one of him who would fain have filled himself with "the husks which the swine did eat." I was glad to see your remarks about the sad declension in family worship, another certain sign of the down-grade tendency of the age.

It deeply pained me when I was in Wales, some two years ago, to see the fire of the family altar nearly gone out, while football, concerts, &c., were in full swing. Are the people of Britain losing their relish for the Bible and the means of grace? It looks like it. What will be the results? Worldliness and Popery swamping the land. What urgent need there is for a wave of earnest and united prayer all over the land by God's own people.

Mussoorie, India. THOMAS EVANS.

Archæological Discoveries illustrating and supporting Bible statements and records, have been made in the past year. Probably one of the most striking was the discovery of a dried corpse at Gobelein, in Upper Egypt. It was in a shallow grave, cut out of the rock, the knees drawn up to the chin, and the hands placed before the face; and near the body there were two clay pots, and some weapons of polished stone. The scientists assert there can be no doubt that the man belonged to a native race, conquered by "foreign invaders," with weapons of iron, and that he was of a period earlier than that of the first dynasty. What is most noteworthy, however, is the fact that the attitude in which the body was found, its careful preservation, and the accompaniments in the grave, show conclusively that even at that early period there existed a belief in the future state, afterwards so clearly proclaimed in the Egyptian Book of the Dead.

FOUNDATION TRUTHS OF THE GOSPEL.—XIV.

THE BIBLE: Its Origin and Contents, and How to Use It.—2.

By Rev. CANON GIRDLESTONE.

LET us take a bird's-eye view of the Bible as a whole. It contains four leading elements which may be ranked as Historical, Legislative, Predictive, Doctrinal. The first half of the Old and New Testaments respectively is Historical. Considering that the Bible is a religious Book, this is not a little remarkable. After an exceedingly brief outline of the history of the earth, and of the system to which it belongs, the writers touch upon the origin and early history of the human race, but speedily concentrate their attention on the fortunes of one man, Abraham, his family, and the nation which springs from that family. The chronology of the whole is secured by means of the genealogies. It may safely be said that there is nothing like this in the whole range of ancient history. If only the Egyptians and the Chaldeans had adopted genealogies as the basis of their records, how much of the chronology of ancient times would have been cleared up. It is to be noticed, however, that our books do not give us annals or chronicles properly so called; they only give us characteristic glimpses of notable periods and events, sometimes passing over hundreds of years without a remark. Moreover, they are not written with a view of exalting Israel; quite the contrary. They are unsparing in their delineation of the waywardness and hardness of this extraordinary people.

Turning to the legislative element in the books, we find them compressed into a comparatively short period, which is set forth in three books, and entwined with the history of a few years; the salient points being reproduced in a series of farewell addresses delivered by Moses at the end of his long life, and taken down, no doubt, by the scribes of the period. The laws are not the result of long Parliamentary debates. They are for Israel, but not from Israel. Both the social and ceremonial regulations thus issued have to be considered and judged in view of the existing circumstances of the nation and the surrounding peoples. They are not ideal, and they are not final; but even now for they have in them the elements of wisdom and righteousness, and are based on the purest and most powerful principles in human nature.

The predictive element occupies a large portion of the sacred books, and is interspersed with the history all the way through. The promises contained in Scripture are not couched in vague oracular language, but are exceedingly definite. See, for example, the words spoken to Abraham in Genesis xii., or those spoken to David in 2 Sam. vii. Some of them are personal, some national, and some international. Succeeding writers build their hopes on words spoken long ages before, and add something further, usually in highly pictorial language, and yet capable of a strikingly definite accomplishment. This accomplishment we can frequently trace, for prophecy and Providence have always gone together—one preparing the mind, and the other preparing the way, for the carrying out of the counsels of God.

This thought leads us to the last element in the books, the doctrinal or the theological. God is named in the first verse of the Bible as the Creator of All. The fall of man through disobedience to the Creator opens the way for another and distinct manifestation of the Divine attributes, and the rest of the Bible is the history of Redemption. We see it in the history of Noah, in the narrative of the exodus, and in the interventions on behalf of sinful Israel all through their history. At length we turn to the New Testament. It is with a view to the events recorded here that this historic and national platform was prepared through the previous ages; accordingly we read it in the light of the history, legislation, and predictions of the older Scriptures.

The Lord Jesus arrives on the scene at a pre-appointed time in a pre-appointed place. He lives a Divine life within the compass and capacities of human nature, and thus proceeds to fulfil the programme given, here a little and there a little, in the Old Testament. He came to do his Father's will, and He did it. The four Gospel writers tell their tale, keeping themselves carefully in the background. Christ is everything in their pages. The story is a brief but characteristic selection. It is over all too soon. Then we see its fruits in the founding and building up of the primitive Church by the Holy Ghost, recorded in the Acts and the Letters, and the Apocalypse prepares us for the end, and closes with the traces of a new cosmogony—a new heaven and earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness. Such is

A BIRD'S-EYE VIEW OF THE BOOKS.

They set forth God in nature, God ruling and over-ruling in history, God unfolding his mind in legislation and his counsels in prophecy, and then in the fulness of time revealing his nature and his heart in Christ.

When we look at the Bible as a whole, it is easy to understand why it is so honoured and studied by the most advanced and civilized nations in the world; but it is at first sight difficult to account for the incessant opposition which it awakens in some quarters Is it because it abounds in narratives which bring God directly on the scene, and which savour of the supernatural? or because it protests against sin, humbles men's pride, exposes their self-righteousness, strikes at the root of their animal nature? Or is it because the book points out men's responsibility for the use of life, and the inevitable fact that they must give an account to the Judge of quick and dead?

These and other reasons throw light on a great deal of the hostile criticism to which the Scriptures have been subjected. They account for the neglect of the Bible by some, and for the hostility to its teaching on the part of others. But it cannot be denied that the most persistent and bitter attacks on Bible reading come from within the professing Church, from that community whose head claims to be the successor of St. Peter, but whose teaching is notoriously out of harmony with the plain teaching of the book. If we take the trouble to analyze carefully the reasons which led the heads of the Jewish Church to crucify Christ, we shall have no difficulty in recognising the motives which lead the heads of the Roman Church to reduce the reading of the New Testament to a minimum.

A few words may be permitted in closing with reference to the study of this wonderful book. We need to study it more prayerfully and carefully. Many of the words are old-fashioned and ambiguous. Many of the sentences may be INTERPRETED IN TWO WAYS.

Many of the allusions are unintelligible to the modern English reader. Sometimes we fail to understand the drift of one of St. Paul's arguments, or the practical bearing of one of our Lord's utterances, or the exact object of one of the outlying books, e.g., Ecclesiastes. We often neglect the context, and forget to compare Scripture with Scripture. I venture to believe that we read the Bible too much and study it too little. We ought to search its pages for hidden treasures—but that involves time.

Our various Bible-reading Unions have a good deal to answer for. Certain parts of the Bible are vital to the Christian, and should be returned to and thought over far more frequently and searchingly than others. The Four Gospels ought to be made the basis of systematic reading; and if we resolved before God to follow Christ through one Gospel in each quarter of a year, we should do well. Let us make Christ in this way the Sun of our system, and let us thus be constantly living in his sunshine.

But some reader will say, What of the rest? I think it would be far better, both for study and devotional purposes, to spread the rest of the Bible over two or even three years. Speaking roughly, we might take the Gospels and the Pentateuch one year, the Gospels and the historical books a second year, and the Gospels and the prophetical books a third year. The Epistles could readily be subdivided, and provision might be made for the Psalms, Proverbs, Job, and the Revelation at special times and seasons.

If this suggestion sounds revolutionary, is there not a cause? It is not proposed lightly, but after much consideration, whether it be followed up or not; at any rate, let Christ be the Alpha and Omega of our daily spiritual food.

LET ALL BIBLE ROADS LEAD US TO HIM.

The 600 quotations from the Old Testament in the New will help us in this matter; and the Eternal Spirit, who has breathed in the writers all the way through, is still at the door of our hearts, to convict, enlighten, direct, cheer, and stimulate, so that whilst drinking in the unadulterated milk of the Word "we may grow thereby;" and, after all, growth is the essential end of study. In proportion as we know, we ought to grow.

There will remain many perplexities in Scripture—as there are in nature—questions of Old Testament chronology, identification of certain persons and places (e.g., Darius the Mede), points in the harmony of the Gospels, and in the meaning of the Apocalypse; but if we are receptive and yielding to the voice of God in Christ, then the centre of our life is inspired by his vital energy, and as Christ is to us a walking Gospel, so we become to Him living epistles.

Slackness.

"WHAT time is your week-night service, my dear? I should like to go with you." I had only a day or two before returned home from service in India, and was staying with a nephew in Berks, and I had just come into the drawing-room, where afternoon tea was being brought.

My question, innocent enough as it seemed to me, created quite a sensation. My niece, Dora, who first caught it, cannoned it against her mother, who was sitting at a writing-table at the other end of the pleasant apartment. "Mother, Uncle John is asking about the evening service; we can't go, can we? You know the Bowyers are coming for tennis."

"I am so sorry, Mr. Holroyd," Mrs. Hamilton said suavely, but with heightened colour, "I am afraid we had forgotten the service; there are so many things to think of in the present day that it is quite impossible to attend to everything, and the young people like to make the most of these fine summer evenings. I wonder if your father could take Uncle John, Dora?"

"Father said he would dine at his club this evening, and leave us free," Dora answered, adding, with a frank expression that well-suited her fair young face, "I think Uncle John ought to know that we do not profess any extra goodness in these matters. I wonder when we have been at a week-night service, mother?"

Mrs. Hamilton evidently did not care to prolong the discussion. She came forward to pour out tea, saying as she did so, "Oh, I am sure Uncle John will make allowance. Next week I hope we shall be more at liberty, and then some of us will be able to go with him." Her words set me thinking; "making allowance" seemed a sine quâ non in that household!

Perhaps, because of being an old army man, I am unduly strong in my idea of duty, and I flatter myself that I have a fairly logical mind; and, arguing from military life to Christian society, I cannot help wondering what would if the same slackness prevailed there that characterises the professed soldier of Christ.

Slackness; yes, that is just the word. There's my nephew John Hamilton, a fine business man, shrewd and alert and common sensible, and years ago, before I went to India, he had enlisted in the King's army, and from the earnestness of his outset I expected, on my return, to find him a general at least in the royal forces. But, whilst in every other department of his life his energies have had full scope, and he is now travelling rapidly on the road to millionairedom, has become a scientific expert, a patron of the arts, and a most popular man in society, religion is simply crowded out of his life. Concerning it there is slackness everywhere. His children, fine, bright young creatures, who would have made such splendid recruits for the King's service, never apparently give it a thought. They are too much occupied with the luxuries and enjoyments with which their life has been surrounded, and as to Mrs. John—well, I can't quite make her out, only I am sure she is not happy. I must have a talk with John. I don't want to be captious or fault-finding, God knows, but I had looked for so much from him and his family; and one of my first visits on coming back to England was to a home where I expected wealth and culture would supply the sinews of war for many a battle with the King's enemies. I wonder if it would have been different if his mother had lived? What a saint she was.

"He becometh poor that dealeth with a slack hand." That verse haunted me as I sat at the open window of my bedroom late that evening. I had been to the service after all, declining Mrs. Hamilton's kind offer of the carriage, and taking instead, to show me the way, the under-gardener, a young man with whom I had some talk that I think we both enjoyed.

The sermon was an excellent one, but preached to nearly empty seats, and the preacher seemed disheartened. And this is Christian England that sends missionaries to preach the Gospel to the heathen, and to make converts who many a lesson of earnestness in the use of spiritual privileges.

Suddenly I was addressed by an unfamiliar voice. "You have been witnessing," it said, "the slackness of the professed servants of God; come with me, and see how they would fare if He showed similar slackness towards them in Nature and in Providence." And without any feeling of surprise, and with no consciousness of volition, I found myself on the seashore at the side of the shrouded figure who had spoken. It was the time of high tide and vessels were awaiting it, but that day it had forgotten to flow; and, moreover, though it was the hour of noon on a summer's day, the sun was tired and had hasted to go down, and a total darkness quickly blotted from view the waiting vessels and stagnant sea. Then, with a sudden transition, I was in the heart of the country, and there it was autumn, and the sun was again shining; but the trees that should have been drooping under a weight of rosy, luscious fruit, stood bare and leafless, and in the fields, where a ripe harvest was due, there was only the blackness of mildew.

In every department of life there was failure. The brain of the thinker struck work, the hands of the toilers were nerveless, food did not nourish, the air of heaven did not refresh. Mothers sent out their children to play, but their limbs' movements had no buoyancy, their laughter no glee. Everywhere the lack of the vitalizing, controlling energy of God was making the people cry in despair, "Hath He forgotten to be gracious?"

The sharp voice of the stable clock, telling the hour of midnight, brought me back to a consciousness of chill and evening dew, but with glad exultation in my heart that, despite so much provocation, our "God is not slack concerning his promise." M. C. F.

Soul-Winners.

A Bible-Reading by Mrs. Penn Lewis.

1. Winning Souls.

"He that is wise winneth souls" (Prov. xi. 30, R.V.*).

(a) The love of Christ the winning power.

"I drew them . . . with bands of love" (Hosea xi. 4).

"With loving kindness have I drawn thee" (Jer. xxxi. 3).

(b) The heavenly wisdom, the tactful power.

"The wisdom that is from above is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality (Jas. iii. 17, M.).

"Given through the Spirit the word of wisdom" (1 Cor. xii. 8).

(c) The heavenly life, the confirming power.

"Won by the manner of life" (1 Pet. iii. 1, A.V. and R.V., M.)

(d) The word of the Cross, the drawing power.

"I, if I be lifted up . . . will draw" (John xii. 32).

2. Delivering Souls.

"A true witness delivereth souls" (Prov. xiv. 25).

"We speak that we do know, and bear witness of that we have seen" (John iii. 11).

(b) Power to witness.

"Ye shall receive power when the Holy Ghost is come upon you, and ye shall be my witnesses" (Acts i. 8, R.V.).

(c) The co-witness of God.

"God also bearing witness with them . . . by distributions of the Holy Ghost" (Heb. ii. 4, R.V., M.).

See Acts ii. 36-41, as a picture of a faithful witness and delivered souls.

3. Watching for Souls.

"They watch in behalf of your souls as they that shall give account" (Heb. xiii. 17, R.V.).

(a) The commission to watch.

"I have set thee a watchman . . . give . . . warning from Me" (Ezek. xxxiii. 7).

(b) Watching souls for God.

"I ceased not to warn every one night and day with tears" (Acts xx. 31).

"Warning every man . . . that we may present every man perfect in Christ" (Col. i. 28).

(c) Watching God for souls.

"I have set watchmen . . . they shall never hold their peace day nor night" (Isa. lxii. 6).

"I watch, and am become like a sparrow that is alone upon the housetop" (Psa. cii. 7, R.V.).

4. Pleading for Souls.

"If any man shall see his brother sinning . . . he shall ask, and God will give him life for them" (see conditions 1 John v. 14, 15) 1 John v. 16.

"What things soever ye shall loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven . . . If two of you shall agree on earth as touching anything that they shall ask, it shall be done" (Matt. xviii. 18, 19).

5. Spending for Souls.

"We were well pleased to impart . . . not the Gospel of God only, but also our own souls" (1 Thes. ii. 8).

(a) Spent out with no return.

"I will very gladly spend and be spent out for your souls, though the more abundantly I love you the less I be loved" (2 Cor. xii. 15. A.V., M.)

(b) Spent out without reserve.

"If I am poured out upon the sacrifice . . . of your faith, I joy" (Phil. ii. 17 M.)

(c) Spent out of our own necessity.

"If thou bestow on the hungry that which thy soul desireth" (Isa. lviii. 10 M.)

(d) The Christ as the pattern.

"He poured out his soul unto death" (Isa. liii. 12). (See 1 John iii. 16; Rev. xii. 11.)

6. Selflessness for Souls.

"Not seeking mine own profit, but the profit of the many, that they may be saved" (1 Cor. x. 33).

(a) Selflessness for their present gain.

"Not that we may appear approved, but that ye may do that which is honourable, though we be as reprobate" (2 Cor. xiii. 7).

(b) Selflessness even as regards life.

"I hold not my life of any account" (Acts xx. 24).

(c) Selflessness for their future reward.

"I seek for the fruit that increaseth to your account" (Phil. iv. 17).

7. The Rendering Account of Souls.

"They watch in behalf of your souls, as they that shall give account" (Heb. xiii. 17).

1. Two accounts may be rendered.

"That they may do this (a) with joy, and not (b) with groaning" (Heb. xiii. 17, R.V.).

2. The two results to the souls.

(a) "With groaning; for this were unprofitable for you" (Heb. xiii. 17, R.V., M.).

(b) "That ye may suffer loss by us in nothing" (2 Cor. vii. 9).

3. The two results to the soul-winner.

(a) "Because thou hast not given him warning . . . his blood will I require at thy hand" (Ezek. iii. 20).

"If any man's work shall be burned, he shall suffer loss; but he himself shall be saved" (1 Cor. iii. 15).

(b) "If thou warn . . . thou hast delivered thy soul" (Ezek. iii. 21).

"Our hope . . . crown of glorying? Are not even ye?" (1 Thes. ii. 19, R.V.)

"They that turn many to righteousness shall shine as the stars" (Dan. xii. 3).

Summary.

To win souls, we must have Christ's love and heavenly wisdom.

To deliver souls, we must be true witnesses of what we have proved ourselves.

To watch for souls, we must faithfully watch with God to warn at his command.

To plead for souls, we must know how to prevail in prayer.

To spend for souls, we must have the Spirit of Jesus that led Him to Calvary.

To be selfless for souls, we must know the life of Jesus in abundant measure.

Then shall we render account with joy, and not with groaning.

An Interesting Discovery.—Of very great interest to students of the Bible is the discovery by Professor Robinson of what is believed to be the "High Place" of Edom. Other travellers, and notably Mr. Wilson, in 1882 had visited the ruins of Edom by the Dead Sea, but it was left for the Chicago professor to find in the large square court cut out of the hill summit, the principal "high place" of Edom. The altars, and the trenches, and the pool of water still remaining perfect, doubtless afford sufficient ground for the eminent explorer's claim that his discovery is a striking and incontrovertible testimony to the accuracy of the statements in the Books of the Kings and the Chronicles as to Edomites worshipping more than one deity.

The Blind of India.

FROM time to time it has been my privilege to tell of Christian work in your columns; and again and again, in consequence, help has come to me as a missionary of the London Missionary Society in India. Will you kindly allow me space for a most earnest appeal for some properly organised efforts to be made to give the Word of God and some Christian literature, in their own language, to the blind in India? As you know, something has already been done. Let me just state the bare facts.

While in India, with charge of a very large and successful mission (18,000 native Christians), I took also a deep interest in the lepers and the blind; for the blind, after years of study, inquiry, and conference, I drew up a code of raised Braille dots, equally applicable to the whole of the languages of India and the East. By this a simple blind alphabet of sixty-three symbols replaces, for the blind, the 10,000 complicated symbols of the Indian vernaculars, and has made it easier to teach a blind boy to read than to teach one who can see. With the aid of Mr. L. Garthwaite, F.M.U. (B.A., Lond.), translator to the Government of Madras, inspector of schools, and probably the best linguist and educationalist in South India, first readers for the blind in the principal languages of India, with full instructions to teachers, have been prepared, printed, and more or less distributed free to any willing to take up the now easy task of teaching the blind to read.

To help in this work, the Governments of Madras, Bangalore, Mysore, Travancore, and others, have given grants of money, about sufficient to pay the printers. The have adopted these books for use in schools, and sanctioned grants of double the usual rates in aid of teachers using them. Here and there the books are being used by missions and also Hindoos. The Bible Societies of Madras, Bangalore, and other places, have already printed Scripture portions, and are ready to print further books as demand may arise for them. The Missionary Conferences of Bangalore and Madras, comprising all the Evangelical Missions in South India, have adopted resolutions in favour of the work, even so far as asking the directors of the L.M.S. to set me free for five years, specially to carry out the work. At home, the British and Foreign Blind Association have approved of the code for India, and interest has been aroused in many ways.

All through, both Mr. Garthwaite and myself have endeavoured to carry out this work on a distinctively Christian basis. Had we been willing to sink that, and be content to irrespective of religion in any way, we might have had very substantial financial aid from many quarters. We feel, however, that such a work ought to be a Christian work.

Now God has blessed our labours; and a firm and lasting foundation has been laid; the way has been prepared for greater work. I want now to appeal for some properly organized efforts to be made to reach all the blind in the East. Mr. Garthwaite has spent time, labour, thought, and money most generously on this work. He, though over seventy, and having seen thirty years of Government service, has travelled up and down India, Ceylon, Burmah, and other places for this work. I also have done something, and would have done more if I could. But I appeal to Christians. Is it fair to us—is it fair to the blind—that the furtherance of this work should any longer remain with us? I think not.

I have appealed to several of the large societies to take it up. The reply in effect is: "We believe the work is most Christlike; we wish it every success; but we cannot take it up." They further say, that we know more, and are more able to carry on the work, and it is our duty to try. Hence this appeal. What I think should be done is this:—A strong committee of Christian men should be formed to carry on the work of arousing an interest in the blind, working through the various missions, placing teachers for the blind, providing and distributing literature for them, and generally doing similar work to that of the Leper Association on similar lines for the blind.

The committee should receive, and be responsible for all subscriptions, and for carrying out the wishes of the subscribers. But either in this way or some other I earnestly plead for something more to be done for the hundreds of thousands of blind in India and around. I specially request that no subscriptions be sent to me. I do not wish such responsibility; but if readers of The Christian are willing to help I shall be glad to meet them in conference to consider what further can be done. After a missionary career in India which an angel might have wished for, I am at home, having been retired by the L.M.S. with every expression of confidence and affection. I should dearly like to do another missionary work, but whether by me or by any, so that the blind are reached, I shall praise God.

From Miss Beatrice Hurditch.

IN the course of a recent letter to her parents, Miss Beatrice M. Hurditch writes from the plague-infected district of Magal Serai, India:—"We are having much prayer, as this plague is a terrible thing amid all the filth and unsanitary arrangements which are held in sacred neglect, and these being part of their religion; yet, should we attempt to interfere beyond certain bounds, there would be riots and foul play. Bear us all up at the Throne of Grace that we and our native Christians may be spared, and our station (the only one in the native quarter of the city) may be a centre of life and blessing to these poor, benighted, ignorant heathen all around us. The other evening, when taking a little walk round our compound, I saw outside our gate a company of women, headed by a priest, holding a torch on their way to 'Ram's Cup' (or Ram Katora) to invoke a blessing and to plead for their lives. Down they all went with their faces to the ground, crying out for mercy on account of the ravages the plague is making. I turned towards the house in prayer for them, not being able to follow them to see what they would do.

"The subtlety which is interlaced with all the forms of belief and social life of these vast communities dwelling in India must keep us on our knees for the 'Dayspring from on high.' Let us remember the people of India need real sympathy; they have very little of that. Their position now lays the most solemn claims on us as Christians, and the more they resent us the more should we go forward. And if it is to declare and join a vigorous crusade in Christ's name against idolatry, caste, condition of the widows, in which way is it to be accomplished? Surely, with infinite compassion, with broken-hearted sympathy and yearnings, the agonizing in birth for souls, for the advancement of the Gospel that proclaims a free pardon—the Gospel that promises not only forgiveness but sanctification."

The Bible in Brazil.—Mr. A. C. Wood, Bible Society Colporteur, at Porto Alegre, writes acknowledging receipt of Portuguese Cards of the International Bible Reading Association: "I thank you for sending them, and believe they will be a blessing to our people. I am glad of Gospel papers, but have a great difficulty in obtaining them (in English) here. In my work in the interior of this State I sold 502 volumes of Scriptures in two months and six days, and believe the Gospel is slowly but surely prospering."

The Balaghat Mission.

A RECENT letter informs us that Mr. and Mrs. John Lampard have safely returned to their work among the Gonds; another new missionary has also arrived on the field, making seven European workers.

Mr. Lampard reports a hopeful outlook, and a considerable extension of the work during his absence on furlough. All branches of the work are being developed; these include the Mission Orphanage and Industrial Farm, and pastoral and evangelistic work at three mission stations.

The number of children in the Mission Orphanage has been increased during the recent famine to 130, all of whom are receiving industrial training as well as school education; earnest effort is constantly made to bring each individual boy and girl to Christ.

The Mission Famine Fund has sufficed for the maintenance of the children hitherto, and for the erection of suitable housing accommodation. Some twenty-five of the children are provided for by friends of the Mission; for the remaining 105 no provision exists. The sum of £2 per annum pays for food, clothing and education of one child.

Cesarea Hospital.

THROUGHOUT the future history of the Cesarea Hospital the year 1900 will be remembered as the one in which the institution found its settled home. The cramped and unhealthy quarters which hitherto served the purpose of a hospital have been vacated, and the present needs are met by a substantial roomy building. The building stands within the Mission Compound, and will accommodate seventy beds.

The number of patients treated has been larger than in any other year, amounting to 7,829. For the first time more than half the number of new patients have been Mohammedan, indicating their increasing confidence, and willingness to go to the Protestants for treatment. With the exception of the two American workers, the physician, Dr. Dodd, who is a missionary of the American Board, and the superintendent, Miss Cushman, who is supported by a friend, the institution is self-supporting. The urgent need for clearing the debt on the new building will be evident to all who are interested in the work of the American Board of Foreign Missions in Asia Minor. The treasurer is Mr. James M. Speers, 14, West Twenty-third Street, New York.

The Gospel in Mexico.

THE work carried on by Messrs. Harris, Ingram, and Phelps in Orizaba continues to make good progress. In addition to much public preaching of the Gospel, house to house work in towns and villages, and visiting of hospitals, barracks, and prisons, the truth is being widely circulated by means of the press. A Gospel paper of eight pages has attained a circulation of some 30,000 copies per month, and this, with its supplements, is scattered throughout some twenty Spanish-speaking countries.

Bibles and Testaments are also distributed in large numbers. "The Pilgrim's Progress" and other excellent books have been translated into Spanish, and sold at cost price in great quantities. Periodicals for young believers and children are much needed, and it is hoped that they may be commenced at once.

Mr. J. Mercer, of "Harburg," Fallowfield, Manchester, will be glad to send an interesting occasional paper, free of charge, to any address. It gives information respecting the progress of this good work, which was commenced by James Pascoe some thirty years ago.

Lord's Day Rest Association.—In response to an appeal issued by the Working Men's Lord's Day Rest Association, 960 sermons on the duties and blessings of the Sabbath were preached on Sunday. Seventy-five thousand of the Association's publications were sent to ministers. No effort is spared by the Association to resist the encroachments on the Day of Rest by public bodies or private speculators. The secretary is Mr. Charles Hill, 12, John Street, Bedford Row, London, W.C.

Industrial Missions.

In a letter which deals with the question of the future careers of Indian famine orphans, Mr. H. W. Fry writes: This missionary problem is one of the most urgent of the present day. In the Industrial Missionary Conference held at Bombay last January, which was attended by missionaries from many parts of India, it was evident that the only course to follow was to adopt industrial work wherever possible, which might provide openings for these young people when they had to leave school and the temporary homes which have been provided for them, and in some form earn their living without being compelled to associate on the most disadvantageous terms possible with heathen colleagues.

In consequence of the urgency of the position, many missionaries are now experimenting in industrial work; but on this subject, and reviewing the work of the Conference, the Bombay Guardian says:—

"In the course of the Conference, three difficulties that have characterized, and must ever characterize, missionary industrial work were clearly expressed.

"Firstly, the hesitation missionaries feel in allowing their spiritual labours to be interfered with by heavy responsibilities of a commercial character.

"Secondly, the failure of missionaries adequately to impart what may be termed the commercial instinct to many of their enterprises—a continuance of which policy, on the scale now necessitated by the number of children involved, would be utterly disastrous.

"Thirdly, the need, now increasingly felt, of having experts to whom matters may be referred.

"At each of these three points the Industrial Missions' Aid Society stand specially equipped and ready to aid to the utmost extent of their power. They exist in order to organize and direct industrial work, and thus liberate missionaries for their more directly spiritual duties; they have the business instinct, and are more likely to avoid mistakes and develop successes than missionaries whose chief work lies in another direction; and they are already in some degree a body of experts, and would become increasingly so if adequately supported."

As a director of the Industrial Missions' Aid Society, I do urgently invite, on behalf of these severely tried missionary friends, the best co-operation of all who profess to approve missionary enterprise, and especially of any who are prepared to suffer something and to risk something to spread the knowledge of Jesus Christ amongst the heathen. Our Society is already providing work for nearly 200 people, and when we receive the means, we can put in operation schemes for the employment of many hundreds more, which we shall be most happy to submit to any of your readers who may apply for information to the secretary of the Industrial Missions' Aid Society, 17, Paternoster Row, London, E.C.

Missionary Tour in North Africa.

While itinerating among the Fellaheen of Lower Egypt, Mr. A. T. Upson, of the North Africa Mission, Shebin el-Kom, Egypt, visited some twenty towns and villages. His experiences were varied and interesting. "On one occasion," says Mr. Upson, "dining with a friendly Greek, a Copt came in, and was surprised at my refusing cognac; so I said, 'This is forbidden to both Moslems and Christians!' He immediately drew up his sleeve and showed the cross upon his right wrist (borne by all Copts), and said proudly, 'That cross shows that I am not a Moslem, and may therefore smoke, drink, or do anything I like!' I asked how long the sign of the cross had been a licence to its bearer, and showed him the necessity of regeneration. At Mehallet Menouf I found several men playing cards in a café. One of them, a Syrian gentleman, was so interested that he left the cards and accompanied me to the station, remarking, 'So you really believe the Lord Jesus is coming. Dear me! Then we must prepare to meet Him!'"

A halt was made at each place where opportunities arose for conversing on Scripture teaching, reading to groups of men, and selling and distributing gratuitously books and tracts.

"Erstwhile Heathen Plead."

Writing to the Southern Cross (Melbourne), Rev. Edward Isaac tells the following touching story:—

When the Highland Brigade was staying in Heilbron for a few weeks, the Boers surrounded the town. The Brigade encamped on a hill by the native church. Every night the soldiers would crowd in for the service. One night an old Basuto stood up, and said: "I am full of joy that I am allowed to speak to you. You are from across the seas, and I had the Word of God from you. I had great joy when I came to your first meeting, and it has grown every night as I have heard God's servants speak of Jesus."

Then a young man, a Basuto, rose and said: "I have joy, too, because I know Jesus. My people lived like wild animals until the Word of God came to us from you across the seas. I may be wrong, bnt surely you must all be Christians and love Jesus because you are from across the seas." Then another of the old men spoke: "I am so glad to speak to you children of the Queen. I am full of joy too. Oh, what love that we should be called children of God! I wonder if you are all children of God. 'What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?' Oh, if you get Jesus you get everything!"

Then, after having thus spoken to the soldiers through an interpreter, they sang a hymn in Basuto. All this is very touching. Here are erstwhile heathen pleading with some of our home heathen to accept that Saviour who had turned them from the darkness of gross superstition and cruel barbarism into the glorious light and liberty of the Gospel.

The Gospel in Korea.

The ancient city of Seoul is the centre of vigorous and extensive missionary activity. The Presbyterian Mission has ninety-eight out-stations, with sixty-three self-supporting churches or groups, and over 1,400 communicants. In one of the most thickly-populated parts of the city is the Government Hospital and Dr. Anison's home. Here the blind, lame, and sick gather daily. The physicians in charge labour with unremitting devotion in the interests—spiritual and temporal—of the suffering. Rev. J. S. Gale, in a report of the Seoul station, gives interesting particulars of the work of the missionaries, pastors, and doctors.

In spite of the prevalence of Confucianism and Buddhism, the Gospel is being preached with earnestness and power in many quarters, and is attended with encouraging results. The Korean women are ministered to by the devoted wives of the pastors and doctors. Into many a darkened soul a ray of hope has stolen, and many a life has been uplifted from ignorance and superstition into the liberty and joy of Christian discipleship. Prayer for Korea is thus being wonderfully answered, and the country is being awakened.

The Children of India.

Mr. W. H. Staines (10, Kyd Street, Calcutta) has been as children's missioner of the India Sunday School Union. Workers among the young augur well from his past experience in the United States, Canada, India, Ceylon, and Malaysia, as well as in Great Britain. He goes forth with a deep sense of the greatness of the field committed to his charge, and asks the prayers of God's people "for a time of very definite power and blessing with many souls for the Master's kingdom."

The last report of the Union shows that between 1891 and 1899 the number of schools rose from 4,608 to 6,846, the teachers from 8,910 to 10,573, and the scholars from 160,912 to 273,794. The increase of teachers and scholars in twelve months had been 16,587. No fewer than thirty-two vernacular tongues are used in the schools.

Among Telugu Lepers.

Among the 28,000,000 of Telugu-speaking people there are thousands of lepers, many of whom are houseless wanderers "without God and without hope." The total provision at present for their spiritual and bodily relief consists of two asylums—the Government institution at Madras, and the asylum now in course of erection by the Mission to Lepers at Ramachandrapuram, in the Godavari district.

I visited this latter asylum ten days ago, and was much interested in the story of its origin and of the marked spiritual blessing that has already resulted. Miss Hatch (of the Canadian Baptist Mission) was moved to do something for these stricken people by finding so many in the neighbouring villages, and by the fact that two bright girls in their boarding school had to be removed as lepers. She found that the milk came from a family whose father was in an advanced stage of the disease, and that he was only one of twelve lepers in one section of one village. But the subject came home to her still more painfully through the discovery that one of her own household servants was a leper!

Thanks to the spirit of Christ, manifested by his servants, a brighter day has dawned for these sufferers in this leprous district. It is only a few months since we were able to say to Miss Hatch, "Arise and build," and already I found forty-five lepers receiving food and shelter, with daily Christian teaching. They are mostly only sheltered in temporary huts at present, but suitable buildings are in course of erection, and will soon be more than filled. During the past six months seventy or eighty lepers have had to be turned away, with numbers of untainted children, because there is no separate Home for these little ones. Land and building would probably cost £150, for which amount provision could be made for many of these little ones.

The direct spiritual result of this work is its most cheering feature. The highest object of Christian missions, viz., to save the souls of men, is being achieved among these otherwise hopeless people. Fourteen baptisms during the first three months of this year, and nine others under instruction, show how spiritually fruitful is this Christlike work. It was a touching sight to look into the eager faces—often marred by disease—as they drank in the words of eternal life, and to know how earnest and spiritual were their prayers. It is hoped that a qualified medical worker (native) will shortly be ready to take up work; a dispensary and hospital ward might be started with £50.

During my tour, which is now drawing to its close, I have visited twenty-seven asylums, and have been privileged to speak at meetings of lepers with attendances of 4,000.

A Message from Kurdistan.

An American missionary, who has laboured for many years in Kurdistan, writes:—

"The Gospel and educational work, for which we have given nearly thirty-three years of our lives in this land, is not without encouraging features. Never have people been more needy of what we give than at the present time. Poverty has become so general that ordinary principles for self-support have to be winked at, both in educational and evangelistic lines; while security, in the villages especially, is so uncertain that few employees dare take up residence in the provinces. Everywhere there is a great number of pupils in the schools, and more importance is given to education in late years.

"Of our nineteen employees of all grades in the male department, two are licensed preachers, one of them in a near village, and ten others outside acting both as teachers and leaders in Sabbath service. We have over 500 under instruction for a time in the winter, including some 200 poor orphan children. We hope to secure a college graduate for our Boys' High School here in Bitlis for the new term beginning in September. The Girls' High School, under the efficient management of its American teachers, is doing excellent work; it has also been harbouring and caring for orphan girls these four years. We have two church organizations, one in this city, and one outside with branches, and about 150 members."

Charlotte Hanbury.*

IT seems but as yesterday that we read in these columns the obituary notice of Miss Charlotte Hanbury, whose death on October 22 of last year made so wide a gap.

These autobiographical pages were largely prepared during that fatal illness which, while contrasting sadly and strangely with her active, many-sided life of service, proved, nevertheless, a beautiful Selah to that Psalm-life of praise. Dictated by the sufferer herself, the recollections were penned and arranged by her devoted niece, Mrs. Albert Head; and three of the chapters were compiled from Miss Hanbury's diary; while the whole record is made more clear and connected by brief but luminous notes. The result is a volume of peculiar freshness and fascination. If it were only for the chapter, entitled "Men and Women," the book would have a charm all its own, for so many notable figures flit before us.

Born April 10, 1830, of good Quaker stock, her earliest associations were connected with such names as those of Elizabeth Fry (her father's "Cousin Betsy"), Thomas Clarkson, Sir Fowell Buxton, Sir William Hooker, the future Lord Shaftesbury, and Martin Tupper. There was also occasional friendly intercourse with members of our Royal Family, for Miss Hanbury's grandfather by marriage, Mr. William Allen, had been friend and executor to the Duke of Kent, Queen Victoria's father. Later on, we find interesting personal reminiscences of other dear friends, well known by name to the household of faith, these including the Earl of Cavan, Rev. W. Pennefather, George Müller, Denham Smith, D. L. Moody, and many others at home and on the Continent.

She had, moreover, a way of bringing before us familiar figures in new attitudes, and of remembering little incidents pleasant to know about. One saying of her friend, Mr. Robert C. Chapman, at once probably influenced her life, and was descriptive of it: "I do everything I can to please God, and He does everything He can to please me." One might read a great deal about George Müller without finding any reference to that latent love of humour—known to his intimate friends—which Miss Hanbury so sympathetically and appreciatively describes:—

> It was charming to amuse Mr. Müller. His daughter used to say truly, "You know, if my father begins laughing he does not stop; he is so extremely
> ENTERTAINED BY WHAT IS HUMOROUS."
> Intensity of feeling and thought and powers marked him in all our ordinary happy life (p. 109).

Strangers, it might naturally be supposed, would be apt to be overawed in the presence of a man so eminent and heavenly-minded; but that Charlotte Hanbury carried her naturalness and vivacity everywhere is abundantly evident. She had indeed been singularly happy in her surroundings, always growing up in the midst of healthful influences and abounding spiritual privileges.

Her honoured parents had regard to the double character of the Apostle's injunction to "bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord"; they did not, as is too often done, sever the two things, giving the admonition but withholding the nurture. The home soil was rich and was carefully cultivated, and the young plant developed into a noble, vigorous character. But the helpful environments of a holy, happy home would not alone have made Charlotte Hanbury what she was.

> "It was the greatest blessing of my life," she said, looking back, "that, when a child, God brought home to my heart his love, and power, and grace, leading me to trustfulness in our Heavenly Father, and to come to Him with all joys and sorrows. I had no qualification for the blessings He gave, not even a good temper or talents, gifts or powers; but let Him choose our inheritance and form our life, and He can enable the most inefficient to fulfil his purposes" (p. 10).

There is something unusual—some might say unchildlike—about the way in which she connects her conversion mainly with a deliberate choosing of God's will, but her account of this time bears internal evidence that, so early, she had drunk into the contemplative spirit of the friends, and had assimilated that which may be described as distinctive in their mode of expressing the truth. She says:—

> My twelfth birthday was a turning point as to decision whether to be willing for the will of God, whatever it be, or to refuse it. So much hung upon that time—probably it has influenced every day since—when through his goodness I was led to a deep decision for his will, cost what it might.

This choosing of God's will may be said to have been the pivot and mainspring of her whole life thereafter. It was the gauge by which all matters, great or small, were measured. The learning of music, the possession of a pony, the planning of a journey, everything was referred to the one test—Is it God's plan?

> I could wish for—yet ought I to wish? Is not all in a Father's hand? If given, may I meekly feel bound as his child to our Heavenly Father. If refused, may his peace fill my heart, and let cheerfulness prevail—a right spirit. Oh, either way, may a right spirit be in me, his Holy Spirit. . . . How precious that the heart's feelings He regards (p. 70).

There were, in her, heights and depths of strong feeling which precluded the possibility of perpetual calm; but amidst all the storms which swept her outwardly joyous life (and they were many), it is quite certain that the only thing she really dreaded was a swerving from God's will.

> OF PHYSICAL FEAR SHE KNEW NOTHING.

With dauntless courage she would, as a girl, ride an untried and untrained horse, and as an intrepid traveller would, on occasion in after years, order her little bed to be set "under the stars," even when within hearing of the shots of foreign marauders. "Do the gentlemen think me a goat, to spring over streams and rocks without limit?" She wandered among rocks and "mossy heights" in Spain long after. But she retained, to the end of her days, a childlike fear of taking her own choice instead of God's choice for her. Home ties were peculiarly strong and tender, and the picture of the dear saintly mother, who, at the age of 107 years, has been now left behind, is one of pathetic interest.

In her early Ragged-school work, in her labours on the Blackdown Hills, in her many travels by land and by sea, in her untiring efforts in foreign lands, and especially the Moorish prisoners, we find, from first to last, with what devotion Miss Hanbury sought to do, with all her might, whatsoever her hand found to do.

Deeply pathetic are the records of her work on behalf of the prisoners in particular, and no less than eight visits were paid to North Africa on behalf of those in Morocco alone. "Oh, Lord, for the poor Moors! Arise, we beseech Thee, look on these agonized creatures in prison. Make me something for Thyself unto them." Such was her prayer on the eve of her first departure for North Africa, and how abundantly it was answered!

Miss Hanbury never left the Society of Friends. To its members she was warmly attached; but there were evident signs that no one body of Christians sufficed to hold or mould her mind and spmpathies. In 1864 she was baptized by Rev. Baptist Noel, but continued to attend the Friends' meeting when possible. Mrs. Head writes, "Apparently she neither left nor joined any Christian body, content to belong to the 'blessed company of all faithful people.' . . . She had friends in every branch of the great family, none more dear than those belonging to the Church of England."

Irish Church Missions. — The itinerating evangelists of the Irish Church Missions have held a successful series of lantern missions in six counties of Ireland during the winter months. Ninety-two places were visited, where 273 meetings were held, with a carefully estimated attendance of 9,575 Roman Catholics, and 13,423 Protestants. Most appreciative testimonies have been received from several of the clergy whose parishes were visited.

The Late Mr. J. Van Sommer.

A DEEP sense of personal loss was felt by a wide circle of friends last week, when it became known that Mr. James Van Sommer had passed away at his residence, Cuffnells, Wimbledon Common. Born in the district of Hoxton (London) in 1823, he was trained for the legal profession, being admitted as a solicitor when twenty-two years of age. The firm of which he was a member—Coulthurst and Van Sommer—has carried on business for the last thirty years at New Inn, and he kept up a close connection with it to the last, having only ceased about six years ago his regular attendance at the office.

Since taking up their residence at Wimbledon twenty-six years ago Mr. Van Sommer and his family have endeared themselves to the community by their good works and zeal for the glory of God. Attached to the Church of England, father, sons, and daughters have manifested wide sympathies, joining freely with all other bodies of Evangelical Christians in worship and work. Mr. Van Sommer was especially devoted to children and the poor, and many a home in North Wimbledon has had cause to bless his name for kindly assistance as well as godly advice and consultation.

Among wider schemes for the spread of the Gospel, he took a special interest in the London City Mission, of which he was to the last a warm-hearted friend and supporter. In many ways he and his family tried to influence for good the working-classes. Mr. Van Sommer believed in the power of the press, many books and pamphlets on religious subjects having issued from his pen, of which the most recent was "Catholic Christianity as distinguished from Roman Catholicism." His works have had a circulation, crowned with tokens of > WIDE INFLUENCE FOR GOOD.

Articles from his pen have appeared from time to time in our columns, and these, as well as the part he has taken in various correspondences, have been highly appreciated by his readers.

Mr. Van Sommer's eldest son, James, initiated the movement which resulted in the passing of the Free Libraries Act. "The Welcome" temperance institute in Wimbledon mainly owes its origin and subsequent prosperity to the exertions of Miss Van Sommer, who died in 1880. Miss Bessie Van Sommer has made a name for herself in the writing of stories of a religious and temperance character, and is at present in Sierra Leone, helping the Bishop of that West African diocese; while another daughter, Miss A. Van Sommer, has spent many years of her life in the Egyptian Mission field.

All the family have devoted much attention to work among children and young people, Mr. Van Sommer's chief delight in recent years having been to meet the school children and present them with flowers and other gifts, never failing at the same time to drop the Gospel seed.

Having early laid to heart his duty as a steward for God of the means committed to him, Mr. Van Sommer's giving was regulated by a systematic plan. His donations were intelligently sent, most frequently to Christian workers whom he believed to be so engrossed in their own labours as to be hidden behind them, and so liable to be overlooked by others.

The end of this useful life came after an illness of only three days' duration. Recently he slipped, injuring the back of his head, but no ill-effects were observed at the time. A week before his death, however, he complained of heaviness in his head. On the Thursday he had another fall, and immediately lost consciousness, which he never regained, and passed away about nine o'clock on Lord's Day morning, death being attributed to congestion of the brain.

Many of the older people will greatly miss him, and he will be long held in affectionate remembrance for the kindly and generous acts he performed, and for the great interest he displayed in the religious and social welfare of the parish. The church was quite full at the funeral, some hundreds of working people and children being present.

Deputy Surgeon-General W. Peyton Partridge.

SURGEON-GENERAL PARTRIDGE is widely known in connection with his Gospel object-lessons. In them he has devoted inventive genius and mechanical ability to the will and work of God. Thousands have read their message, so simple that a child can grasp it, so apt and striking that none can easily forget it.

For many years the figure of Surgeon-General Partridge has been a familiar one at the annual Mildmay Conference, where he has ministered to others as a steward, and also edified assemblies of orphan children, deaconesses, waiters, and many others, as he set forth Divine truths in a new light with the aid of his models.

Entering the Bombay Army in 1854, the subject of this sketch served in the Indian Navy during the Persian War of 1857 (obtaining medal and clasp) on H.M.S. Semiramis, afterwards in Scinde and Guzerat. In 1867-8 he saw service again in the Abyssinian War (medal). His last years of active duty were spent in Bombay as a Presidency Surgeon. In 1885, having completed thirty years' service, he retired. For twenty-seven years he led a thoroughly worldly life, having been brought up nominally as a Unitarian. He knew little about the Bible, and nothing of the Gospel. It was in Persia that the Lord first met with him. Away from all Christian influences, without a truth-loving soul on board his ship, he was drawn to Jesus, and did not resist.

He began for the first time to read the Holy Scriptures, being helped also by the "Life of Hedley Vicars," and by James' "Anxious Inquirer," which an unconverted person had put among his books.

A diary that he kept of his daily sins brought home to him a conviction of his lost estate outside of Christ; and the impossibility of the Lord Jesus being a good MAN merely, and at the same time claiming equality with God, destroyed his Unitarianism. Taking his Divine Substitute as his own personal Saviour, he openly confessed Him with his mouth, in spite of the laughter of brother officers.

Relieved from the Navy in 1857 he began to seek to win souls. He joined a regiment that had been raised during the Indian Mutiny, the commanding officer of which had prayers morning and evening. Soon afterwards he was put in charge of the Ghizree Sanatorium for European soldiers, where he regularly held Divine worship, and had Bible readings. By teaching others he was himself taught.

When he became a Presidency Surgeon in Bombay, he had many souls given him for his hire, among officers and their families, among prisoners in the gaols, and also in "the Upper Room," a little hall where, for more than ten years, services were conducted on unsectarian lines. After his return to England God opened up fresh work for him. Beginning with the great object-lesson, the Tabernacle (of which he made two models), he was led, as he studied Divine truth, to design at different times twenty-three Gospel object-lessons, and on these he lectured. These have been greatly used for the conversion of sinners and the upbuilding of believers.

The teaching in these object-lessons was pure Gospel, every statement being founded on the word of God. Thus their testimony, which has been given in Great Britain, Jersey, Germany, Holland, Switzerland, at sea, and in Norway, also in India, China, and New Zealand, stands firm, and blessing has always accompanied them.

After forty-three years' work for the Master in public, he has been "promoted" to a much more difficult task, viz., that of witnessing to the power of God to keep his people in perfect peace, and even rejoicing, in the midst of great trials. About six months ago, it was discovered that he had cancer of a virulent kind in the lower jaw. He was operated upon three times in two-and-a-half months, the disease returning again and again. In answer to prayer, there has as yet been no return since the third operation. He says that he has found the grace of God quite sufficient; he has by that grace cheerfully given up all engagements; he has never for a moment repined, and is quite sure that the Lord makes no mistakes, and that He has a right to do what He likes with his "purchased possession."

This testimony has been blessed to the strengthening of the faith of some. There appears to be no probability of Surgeon-General Partridge being able to speak again in public, but he is quite content, as one has said, to "be an object-lesson used of God, instead of using object-lessons himself." His testimony of life and lip has from time to time been freely given against Popery and Ritualism, against the use of alcoholic drink and tobacco, also in denunciation of the opium traffic.

The Surgeon-General has just completed the "allotted span" of life, being seventy-one this year. While the Lord Himself tarries, may our beloved friend's testimony be more and more powerful, because of a deeper and more joyful experience of his beloved Master.

A Timely Vindication.

THE New York Independent has been sifting certain accusations made against an American missionary at Peking. Among other critics Mark Twain took up the matter in The North American Review. It appears that when collecting the value of damage done to the property of Chinese Christians, Dr. Ament added thereto a sum which was at first said to be thirteen times that amount, but is now admitted not to exceed one-third of it. It is held, however, that this is only a question of degree, leaving the dishonesty of the transaction unaffected; but The Independent points out that

> This argument has absolutely no application. If a Chinaman has had his house burned down, and his goods plundered, therefore he has the right to go to the city authorities, and take Dr. Ament with him as his advocate, and ask that the city refund the value of the house and goods, and then pay something extra for the support of his family while he is getting his house rebuilt. Is that extortion? Yes, if the amount is thirteen times the loss; no, if it is only one-third the loss. In the latter case the demand is an extremely reasonable one. We should demand much more in this country. We should demand "exemplary" damages. These Chinese Christians who have asked Dr. Ament's aid have asked no exemplary damages, at least have not got them.

It is contended in the second place that Dr. Ament requires the innocent to pay for the crime of the guilty; but, as our contemporary shows, this is surely nothing new in national or international polity.

> We knew that before he told us; for these Chinese Christians were precisely in that case suffering for the crime of others. Of all people, they were least to blame, and therefore should least suffer . . . Has a State, a city, no duty to prevent such damage? and when it is done by the connivance or neglect of the public authorities, must the public authorities make no restitution, just because they cannot assess it on the offenders? . . . The argument is too weak to deceive intelligent people. Those towns which harboured the Boxers were guilty. Their rulers were guilty for not suppressing the mobs. The Chinese, whose property was destroyed, have the right to demand redress, and the proper persons to go to are the constituted. In their own way, by their own system of taxation, and a fairly decent one, these payments are made; and the money doubtless, as here, comes principally out of the richer and more influential people, who ought to have prevented the riots.

The Independent does not enter, nor do we at present, into the question of the prudence of the action taken, if viewed from every standpoint; but as the accusations received considerable prominence in the daily press of this country, we believe our readers will be glad to learn, on such authority, that the demands made were no greater than would be regarded as just and reasonable in our own land, and for the obtaining of which many Christian people would not hesitate to set the machinery of the law in motion.

A Farewell.*

"Pray ye, therefore, the Lord of the harvest that He will send forth labourers into his harvest" (Matt. ix. 38).

I DARE not call you back. Have I not prayed
That lives like yours might bear love's sternest test,
And on the altar of their faith be laid?
What then? Shall I withhold my own—my best?

Nay, go! Shall I be free to pray aright
That other hearts may hear the Master's call
To labour where the harvest-fields are white,
Except as freely I surrender all?

God knows the weakness of the hands that cling
About these human idols, and the pain
That is the price of every gift we bring:
The loss through which we find eternal gain.

God knows; and He will make me strong to take
The task that He has given. So, to-day,
This is my sacrifice—for love's sweet sake
I bid you go—the King's command obey.

And oh, be true! Let your own light so shine,
That in earth's darkest places it may be
A bright reflection of the Light divine—
That in your life the world his life may see.

His peace be with you always, and the power
Of his own Spirit all your soul baptize
With holy, living fire, and hour by hour
Breathe through your lips the love that never dies.

And now, farewell! God grant that in the day
When you and I shall meet at his right hand,
Beyond the shadows of this earthly way,
Among his noblest heroes you may stand.

* From FROM HEART TO HEART, by Edith Hickman Divall, Southborough, Tunbridge Wells.

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, April 21. Haggai i.

HAGGAI returned from exile in Babylon, under Zerubbabel and Joshua, in the year 536 B.C., when Cyrus, moved by the striking prophecies about himself, which had probably been brought under his notice by Daniel, granted the Jews their liberty, and provided them with materials for restoring their Temple. This work of rebuilding went on under Cyrus and his successor, in spite of the opposition of the Samaritans; but, finally, these inveterate foes of the returned exiles obtained an edict from Artaxerxes (Ezra iv. 7-23) to stay the progress of the rebuilding of the Temple. The Jews gave up the work, and began to build splendid mansions for themselves, so that the operations on the Temple site were not recommenced, even when there was opportunity of their being so.

Haggai's first prophecy was delivered about the year 520 B.C. He remonstrates with the people for living in their cieled houses, whilst the Lord's House lay waste; and, in the name of God, he called them to consider their ways. It seems that they had been experiencing a succession of bad seasons. They had sown much, and reaped little; their money ran out of the bag as quickly as they put it in; a drought lay on all the land. The reason for it all was to be found in the neglected Temple. How frequently our disasters and losses in business arise from our failure to remember God's cause. We say that we have not the time, cannot afford the money, and see no necessity for setting apart the Lord's Day or the daily period for meditation and prayer. Did we see things as they really are, we should find that this is false economy, and wastes more than we save. There is that withholdeth, and it cometh to poverty. The mower does not waste time when he stops to whet his scythe.

MONDAY, April 22. Haggai ii.

Three prophecies occupy this chapter. In the first (1-9) the Jews are encouraged to persevere. Although there was no comparison between the glory of Solomon's Temple and the splendour of this, they must not be discouraged. Though they might deplore the absence of the sacred fire of the Shekinah, of the ark with its cherubim, of the Urim and Thummim, and of the spirit of prophecy, yet the Messiah's presence, which would be associated with the second Temple, would more than compensate for their deficiency, since He was the antitype of them all. If we lack many of the advantages and attractions in which others excel, let us be more than satisfied to possess Christ.

In the second prophecy (10-19) the prophet shows that if a garment has been used for carrying sacrificial offerings it cannot transmit holiness to the next thing it envelops. If, on the other hand, a person is rendered unclean by touching a dead body, he will render all things that he touches unclean. There is more contagion in evil than in good. One dirty ink-drop will pollute a gallon of pure water, but it will take many drops of water to dispose of one ink-spot. So the sin of the people was contaminating and befouling all their work. One sinner destroyeth much good. Beware of the contagion of the least microbe of evil.

The last prophecy (20-23). Convulsions preceded the Saviour's first advent, as they will the second; but amid them all the chosen people should be preserved as God's signet-ring. Oh that God would from this day take my heart and set it as a jewel in his signet-ring! It is not impossible, for diamonds are transfigured charcoal!

TUESDAY, April 23. Zechariah i.

The prophet's name means, One whom Jehovah remembers. Like Jeremiah and Ezekiel, he was a priest. He entered on his prophetic career two months after Haggai. These two witnesses wrought together to encourage their people in the work of rebuilding the Temple, in spite of all the discouragements which lay heavily upon them.

"Turn ye unto Me, and I will turn unto you"—blessed words, everlastingly true, let us, if needs be, act on them now. The prophets die, but the words they speak live for ever.

What a lovely vision is the one which follows—the first of nine! The myrtle trees in the valley are an apt emblem of God's people—their lot is often lowly, and their condition oppressed, but the Lord is amongst them. He rides—there is the swiftness of his ever-present help. He rides on a red horse, which may symbolize his vengeance on their foes. He is accompanied by others, who may be his bodyguard of elect angels, who do his will, hearkening unto the voice of his word. The phrase, the Lord of Hosts, is constantly employed by these two prophets, and is significant of the vast hosts of spirits that speed o'er land and sea to do his will, and minister to the heirs of salvation.

The second vision of the four carpenters, one to grasp each of the powers which had scattered God's people, tells its own story. For a little the oppressor may flourish as a green bay-tree, but his end is predetermined, and shall soon befall.

WEDNESDAY, April 24. Zechariah ii.

In this third vision God's care of his people is indicated by the care with which it is measured. Every square inch of Jerusalem is dear to Him, and shall be preserved by Him. But there can be no permanent limits to the city or people whom God loves. There will be an overleaping of all walls and bounds, so that Jerusalem must needs become as a town without walls for its multitudes of men and cattle. But if that be so, where will be her defence? God will be a wall of fire around her, and glory in the midst of her. Some people are always building walls around themselves preparing against any misfortune that may befall, or withdrawing within the contracted limits of their own thoughts and plans. Better let your life extend and open, as God may will and lead, being sure that, though invisible to mortal eye, He will certainly be your wall of fire.

Large numbers of Jews were still dwelling in Babylon. To these the invitation is addressed to deliver themselves and return. As to their safety in returning across the desert wastes, and settling again in Jerusalem, that was assured, because his people were as dear to God as the pupil of the eye, which is protected by the frontal bones, the eye-brow, the fringe of eye-lash, the lachrymal gland, and the swift raising of the hand to ward off every threatening blow. O child of God, do believe it. As the hand is raised to defend the eye, before any other part of the body is thought of, so does God think of us first, whom He has redeemed with precious blood.

Let Zion rejoice. However few and feeble the remnant of restored captives might be, under the leadership of Nehemiah and Ezra, yet God was in the midst of them, and He would inherit them as his portion.

THURSDAY, April 25. Zechariah iii.

As the Temple approached completion, the fear possessed many hearts lest the priesthood might not be worthy to occupy its place in the reconstituted service. Joshua, the high priest, representing all the priests, was clothed in filthy garments and stood before the angel; and this symbolic picture of their condition is borne out by Mal. i. 7, &c.

It may be that some who read these words are in the same position. They were intended to be priests unto God, but, alas! they are clothed in the filthy garments which we are expressly bidden to put off (Col. iii.). Inconsistences, evil habits, permitted failure and infirmity, are like polluted raiment, which are wholly unbecoming in the child of God.

Instead of casting his priests away, God sets Himself with tender love to put them right. The filthy garments are exchanged for the fair and beautiful robes of the Resurrection Life; and the fair mitre, which may be compared with the anointing of the Holy Spirit, is communicated. We are right in drawing such lessons from this story, because we are reminded that Joshua and his fellows were intended for a sign (8, R.V.); and then from them our attention is led off to the Saviour, described first as the Branch, and also as the sure Foundation-stone, which is living and instinct with intelligence. He is engraven as a precious jewel; He removed the transgression of the world on the day of the Cross; He will give uninterrupted peace (10).

FRIDAY, April 26. Zechariah iv.

The candlestick, all of gold, is obviously the newly-constituted Jewish state. In our own time it stands for the holy universal Church. Notice the distinction between this one candlestick and the seven candlesticks of Rev. i. This stands for the Church, and they for the churches. The central bowl, containing the oil, communicates by seven branches with the seven lamps, and with the two olive-trees by two pipes. The lesson is obvious. The wicks in the lamps are unable to maintain the flame by themselves, but send their wicks down through the pipes into the golden bowl, as a channel by which the oil may be drawn to burn on the edge of flame. So neither the Jewish people in the past, nor Christians to-day, could maintain their bright testimony for God in this dark world, if it were not perpetually fed from the oil of the Holy Spirit, which is held for us all in the person of our blessed Lord.

Thrice, vv. 4, 11, 12, the prophet asked what the two olive-trees stood for, which were situated right and left of the Lamp. It was explained to him that they represented Zerubbabel and Joshua, the prince and the priest. Each of these two offices was required for the maintenance of the Jewish polity in health and usefulness. For us they symbolize the royal and priestly offices of our Saviour. Our Christian life and power demand that we should make much of each of these, and that we should daily meditate on them, as a means of deriving from them all things that pertain unto life and godliness.

Nurtured by such supplies, there could be no doubt that mountains of difficulty would be cleft before the returned exiles, and the day of small things would be soon succeeded by brighter ones; but who shall compute the mighty results, that shall be secured and achieved through us, if only we will yield ourselves as channels that the oil and grace of God may pass through us into manifestation and glory?

SATURDAY, April 27. Zechariah v.

Here we have the fifth and sixth visions, of the Flying Roll and the Ephah respectively. They are duplicated, each supplying the other.

The Flying Roll is of immense size, and filled with curses against the sins that are often referred to by these post-exilic prophets as characterizing the returned Jews in their attitude towards the new Temple. The Roll enters into the house of the sinner, and abides there till the whole fabric is smitten by dry-rot and crumbles. Ah, how often have we seen the counterpart of this! Men have withheld time and money from God's House, or they have spoken against those who were devoted to its highest interests, and after a while the dry-rot has entered their homes. I heard of a prominent lawyer recently who, after the profession of Christianity, said that he found that religion interfered with business, and he therefore must abandon it; but shortly afterwards all his business left him, and my informant told me that he was working as a carpenter, whilst his wife was engaged as a teacher in a seminary.

The Ephah is large enough to hold the woman that represented wickedness; it was covered by a weight of lead. Oh, how blessed it is when the soul knows that its sin is covered, hidden even from the eye of Heaven! Then it was borne swiftly away by women with storks' wings, symbolizing swiftness. Look up, sinner, and see how God, on thy penitence and faith, is prepared to put away thy sins. They are borne away into the land of Shinar—a land of pits and wildernesses, where none lives, and whence they shall never be recovered. Jesus Christ bore our sins in his own body on the tree, and they shall not be brought against us in judgment.

Home Missions.

Lancing Homes of Rest.

SOME twelve years ago I had the privilege of assisting in the preparation of four cottage rooms in the then little-known seaside village of Lancing, Sussex, in joyful hope that the kind wishes of the owner might be abundantly fulfilled, and that by their means some weary and tired toilers, whose strength had failed them in the hour of need, might here again find the pulse grow strong and the step firm. It was truly "a day of small things;" but what was my joy when, upon recently visiting this small village, while making a brief stay in the South, to find as many as four distinct "Homes," with their lovely sea views, pretty gardens, and comfortable and ample accommodation, both for women and children, mothers and babies, men and youths, and, lastly, for a few aged and frail disciples, whose feet have reached the last milestone?

Two of the "Homes," those for women and children, and men and youths, may well nigh be called "mansions." They contain between them nearly sixty rooms, some of them as large as three ordinary apartments! Here I find the management can very well accommodate 160 patients, besides the ample staff. When we compare this with the half-dozen which the earlier effort contemplated we may well say, "What hath God wrought?" Even better than

and the almost "record" amount of sunshine enjoyed here, was the deeply spiritual tone pervading each "Home." The best traditions of our Evangelical faith, too, are found, without any taint of sacerdotalism.

I must say a few words about the temporal side of things. "Nine pounds weight gained in three weeks," said a poor labouring man from East London to me, as I stood by his side in the beautiful grounds of the men's Home. To tell his story, how he had lain two whole months on a sick bed, and how a fellow member of his Mission Hall, one of those attached to Harley College, had put him in communication with Mr. Chorley, the director of the Lancing Homes, and the really marvellous progress to health his sojourn at these Homes had witnessed, gave him evident delight. There was also another from perhaps the most crowded district in South London (Southwark), who told me that he was returning home practically another man. Such instances could be multiplied indefinitely. One case received lately, was that of whom the magistrate gave into the care of the missionary attached to the Court. The poor man was received at Lancing, and during his stay was brought to the Lord. He returned home a new man in Christ, to the whole-hearted joy of his distressed wife and family.

At the Women's Home similar stories of the marvellous recuperating power of the sea breezes and liberal dietary, which latter seemed to reach almost the incredible for amount, showing how expansive the fresh air, and plenty of it, makes the appetite. Mr. Chorley gives personal and untiring attention to the details of the management.

I must close by remarking how glad I was to see that Mr. Chorley and his committee had ventured to take up the task of rebuilding the older portion of the Women's and Children's "Mansion," and replace the low-ceiled, leaky rooms with bright apartments, from every one of whose windows lovely sea views, together with pastoral country, can be obtained. He will, I fear, find £1,500 no little task to raise, but the Lord is able. I commend Mr. Chorley, whom I have known for many years (his address is—6, Clephane Road, Canonbury, N.) to the prayerful sympathy of God's stewards, so that his hand may be strengthened in the hour of need. Manchester Refuges.

AT the annual meeting last Friday of the Manchester and Salford Boys' and Girls' Refuges and Homes and Children's Aid Society it was reported that the year just closed had "been filled, more than any previous year, with tokens of prosperity and blessing of the highest kind."

The Chairman (Mr. JOHN THOMSON) said they did not desire to send good lads and girls out of the country if they could help it, but at the same time it was easy to see that the surroundings of many of the children who came under their care were so degraded that if they were left to themselves they would become degraded also, and in a new country they had a chance which they would not get in the old land. Over 1,000 children had now been sent to Canada, and they constantly received from them letters of gratitude and thankfulness, many enclosing subscriptions to the Refuge funds.

Among the other speakers were Mr. W. H. Holland, M.P., and Rev. Prebendary Macdonald. The BISHOP OF HEREFORD bore testimony to the pleasure he had experienced when conducted over the institution at Strangeways. He claimed that work for poor children should have a first place in all philanthropic and beneficent effort. It should also take a first place in legislative work, and he was glad to see from a recent vote in the House of Commons that there seems to be a feeling amongst members of Parliament that there is an urgent call to do something to save the children from the tremendous evils that are brought into their lives through the influences of drink.

The year opened with a financial deficiency of £449 6s. 7d., and we find, with regret, that this has now grown to £1,197 2s. 6d. A sum of £12,500 is sufficient to provide for the requirements of a normal year. Mr. Leonard K. Shaw, at the Refuges, Strangeways, will be glad to communicate with friends.

London Public-Houses.

HAVING a desire to see the work of the London City Mission to Public Houses, I had the privilege recently of accompanying Mr. J. J. Browne, while visiting about a score of them in Camden Town and neighbourhood.

We began, taking with us a bag of "ammunition," about 7.30 p.m. One of the things that struck me was the willingness of the barmaids and men to accept religious literature, and, when not busy with customers, their readiness to listen to a plain word about salvation.

Only in one instance did anyone refuse to accept a booklet from me, and he was a would-be swell, drinking in a saloon bar.

Some made light of everything serious, scoffing at the Bible and finding fault with it, which had to be patiently listened to, and such replies given as God's Spirit prompted. In several of the larger houses, over 100 persons, more or less, were in at one time drinking, and customers were always coming and going, so that one might spend a whole night in one house.

In one public bar, where about ten men were standing, I read a few verses of Scripture, and Mr. Browne spoke about sowing and reaping. The men stopped drinking and listened with respect to my friend, and afterwards we each talked personally with some of them. There were all ages and classes in the various bars; and numbers of children kept coming, each with a jug and money for beer.

As the night grew later, toward ten o'clock, the numbers increased, especially of young girls and young men, with some of whom we had interesting talks. In a few instances there seemed to be an opening for the Lord's message, and the Spirit was convicting of the sin of unbelief.

Mr. Browne continues his visiting until 12.30 a.m., but every alternate week goes in the morning and afternoon, instead of night, in order to get a better opportunity of talks with the managers, potmen, and barmaids and barmen at the time when they are not so busy. Special meetings of a social kind are also held for them by Mr. Browne, to which they are invited by ticket. Very much seed is sown, of which nothing definite is heard; but Mr. Browne has had cases of wonderful conversions to God in connection with the work.

Will God's people pray much for a rich blessing on this interesting branch of service for the Master? S. G. MONTGOMERY.

The Story of a Success.

GOING back to 1859, the Special Religious Services in Theatres, &c., is an evangelistic organization that has fully justified the expectations of the noble men who founded it, and their successors who have guided its course to this day. In an explanatory booklet, "The Story of a Success," we read:—

"The men who began this great work discovered that the non-church-goers were not hostile to the message of Divine Love, but opposed to the method in which it had hitherto been placed before them. They found, also, that the trend of public opinion amongst large numbers of the working class was strongly against anything that appeared to them professionalism in religion. They would go to a theatre or music-hall to listen to the Gospel, when they would not go to church.

"In the year 1893, the London City Missionary who labours among the soldiers of the London garrison, being struck with the teeming population of Battersea, suggested that these special religious services should be held, if possible, in that neighbourhood. A hall belonging to Messrs. Munts was hired.

"Amongst those that listened to the first address was a young woman to whom the Spirit of God spoke. Three years afterwards, she confessed how she had fought against the Spirit striving in her soul. Gradually a choir was gathered together, now it numbers some sixty men and women, most of whom have received their spiritual good in the hall.

"A local dancing mistress came; she believed and was saved, gave up her profession, and now, as a member of the choir, takes part in our services. A father and two sons came; all three were brought to a knowledge of Christ as their Saviour. The father died rejoicing; the two sons are earnest helpers, one of them sings in the choir as our leading bass.

"A young Roman Catholic woman came into the hall from curiosity, she was convinced that 'there is none other Name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved.' An interesting work is being done amongst female servants by a lady belonging to our number, who most kindly welcomes to her house these girls, and by womanly sympathy and loving counsel strengthens them in their lives.

"Some who read these lines might like to come and see for themselves what is being done at the Sunday evening services held at the Shakespeare Theatre. In order to meet the heavy expenses of our work, many of our choir and helpers are taking collecting books and boxes. The rent of the Shakespeare Theatre is £6 6s. for each Sunday night, and as we hold these services all the year round we have to pay upwards of £300 a year. The choir, helpers, and preachers give their services free."

The deputation secretary of the Committee is Rev. T. C. Udall, 3, Bridewell Place, E.C.

Dock Labourers' Mission.—Visitors to the docks and wharves of London cannot fail to have been moved with pity by the appearance of the unemployed who flock to these centres of commercial activity in the hope of securing a few hours' work. To these crowds the Dock Labourers' Mission directs attention. During the winter months tickets for daily dinners and teas free of charge are distributed among the most needy. Two of the helpers visit the poor in their homes and read and pray with the sick and dying. During the year the home for sick and destitute children has been crowded. As the clothes of the children in many cases have to be destroyed, left-off garments are particularly acceptable. Communications may be sent to Mr. C. H. Coleman, 150, Boleyn Road, West Ham.

"Sand Pulpits and Caravan Homes."

WHAT a stir is caused in a village by the arrival of one of the "Gospel caravans" of the Children's Special Service Mission! The news of its coming soon spreads throughout the district, and the young people gather from far and near to hear the kind and wise preacher tell of the love of Jesus from the van, which forms his home and book store.

Meetings are arranged in a meadow or a farm kitchen or a tent, and the caravan preacher, besides speaking to the young folks, joins heartily with them in their games on the village green and enters into their joys and sorrows. A characteristic message from one of the villages says:—"Our ten days' mission was in many ways a time of great blessing, especially to a number of lads. Many of these would come to the caravan very early in the morning, and by singing our choruses awake us. One lad came in the morning. 'Sir, may I come and instead of going home, and then I can talk with you about Jesus?' 'Certainly, Hubert.' And along the dear boy came, and we had a very blessed chat together."

It is often a sad occasion when the time comes for the van to be moved away, for both children and "grown-ups" (for whom, also, meetings are held) have come to love the work and the worker. But the field is large, and there are many other village children to whom the Gospel story must be told. Friends of the Mission, however, keep up a correspondence with the children who have found the Saviour, and encourage them to "hold fast that which is good."

Most of our readers, perhaps, will connect the Mission with the seaside services which are held at the chief holiday resorts on the coast, but these constitute only a small part of the many-sided operations at home and abroad. For the greater portion of the year evangelistic missions are held among the Sunday schools, special efforts being made to and very many of the scholars have been brought to the Lord by this means. The seaside services, of course, chiefly attract young people who are holiday-making with their parents. Willing hearts and hands readily give sympathy and help; sand pulpits are rapidly erected, and decorated with Scripture texts in flowers and pebbles. For thirty-three years these services have been held, and among those who now rally to the missioners' aid are many who were led to the Saviour in the early days of the work, and who, in their turn, bring their own little ones to hear.

The fruit of the Mission is found, indeed, in all parts of the world. On one occasion, years ago, a lady sent two of her daughters to one of the meetings. These young persons were rebellious on the subject, and they determined to disturb the proceedings, but they were deeply impressed, and became converted. One of them is to-day doing a glorious work for the Lord in one of our great cities. A well-known minister, who formerly laboured in Woolwich, says:—"I had to work close by the Royal Military Academy, and I got to know a good many of the cadets. A remarkable work was going on among them. They had a Bible-reading, which went by the name of the 'Pi Squad.' Everything was a Squad there, and and that went on 'in the shop,' as the Academy was called, and also in the house of a very godly old Presbyterian minister. The leader of those Christian men, who went by the name of the 'Colonel of the Pi Squad,' was a young man who had been brought to the Lord Jesus Christ by means of 'special services' at Lausanne." Very many ministers, foreign missionaries, and Sunday-school teachers trace their first realization of the love of God towards them to the Mission.

Mr. Hankinson, who has been associated with the work for so long, thinks that such cases as these give a satisfactory answer to the question, "Do the child-converts stand?" He knows very many who sought the Lord when children, and who are now fighting the good fight for their Master. Among others, he tells of a girl who became a devoted lady missionary away in Moab, where she was quite alone in her work. One night she overheard the Bedouin so she disguised herself by wearing native dress, and set out by herself, on a donkey, travelling to claim the protection of the sheikh. So you see the Mission converts are not lacking in courage and resource. A sister of this lady, also a Mission convert, has laboured for some years for the Lord in India.

The Scripture Union, which has been a blessing to so many homes, grew, naturally enough, out of the Special Service Mission. It commenced in 1879, with a membership of 7,000, which rose during the same year to 40,000. Up till the present time 558,000 copies of the Union card have been issued at home, and 100,000 abroad. The latter number includes cards in thirty languages; the latest out are in Kaffir, Yoruba, and Armenian. Gospel leaflets, too, have been issued to the number of nearly nineteen millions. These few particulars will show you that the work goes on, wonderfully used to lead children to Jesus, and to instruct them in the knowledge of the Holy Scriptures; let us pray that God will bless it more and more.

To My Young Friends.

I EXPECT you will have wondered why there was no Bible Searcher set in last week's issue. Perhaps, however, after the extra strain of the competition you were glad of a little rest. The prize questions have been splendidly answered on the whole, and the results show very considerable care and study on the part of the competitors. I have come to the conclusion that it is much easier for me to set questions than for you to answer them, or indeed than for me to correct them, for I can assure you that my helpers and I have had a pretty heavy week. Of course you will say the remedy is in my own hands, so perhaps you will get an easier competition next time

In each division there are one or two papers which come so near to the maximum of marks as to deserve special recognition; but there has been excellent work throughout. Once more I notice that frequently the younger members in a division do better than the older ones; but am glad to find that the boys make quite a respectable appearance. More power to them!

Christian Endeavour Topic.

SUNDAY, APRIL 21.

Walking With Jesus (Col. ii. 6, 7; Gal. v. 16-26).

THE daily walk is so absolutely important because it is our witness to the world. Our character, as exemplified in our behaviour, is the world's only Bible, and it is our best sermon. Let us learn to walk so as to please God, and to bless mankind. To walk is at first a matter of considering every little step, but afterwards it becomes a habit (Col. i. 10).

We received Jesus into our hearts by faith. He entered through the open door of our hearts, and became our Lord and Master. In the same manner we should live always and everywhere, receiving from Him grace upon grace, and allowing what He works in to work out in all manner of godliness, tenderness, and Christlikeness. This practice of looking up to Jesus for grace in every circumstance of life tends to become more and more habitual—and this is what the Apostle means when he says, "rooted and built up in Him, and established in Him."

But such a walk is only possible when we have learned the lesson of the other passage in Galatians. There are two passages round which our life may revolve, of which the one is that of the flesh. The flesh stands for our self-life, "In me, that is, in my flesh." The flesh is the assertion of our self-life, whether in milder or grosser forms, and whenever that intrudes it exercises a baleful effect on our behaviour and conversation. Just as the iron of the steamer will deflect the needle of the compass, and perhaps lead to the noble vessel being wrecked, so the intrusion of our self-life, with its strong opinions and evil habits, may disturb and spoil our whole walk and behaviour.

There is only one antidote to the flesh—the Holy Spirit. The flesh is selfish, but the Holy Spirit is the Spirit of unselfish love; and He lusts against, or resists, the workings of the self-life. When the influenza epidemic was rife, some time ago, a friend of mine was wont to saturate his clothes with the oil of eucalyptus, because it was an antiseptic, and whenever an influenza microbe alighted on him and sought to infect him with the epidemic, the scent of the eucalyptus met and foiled it, so that it could not do what it otherwise would. So the Apostle says, the flesh or self antagonizes the Spirit, who is within the believer's heart; and the Spirit antagonizes back with overwhelming power, so that we are kept from yielding to an otherwise overwhelming power.

When we begin to live like this, allowing the Spirit to have supreme control, it is like crucifixion to the self-life, which has ruled us so long. But the Spirit makes the Cross every day dearer and more mighty. He conquers for us while we stand by as more than conquerors through his grace.

Let us then walk in the Spirit, live in the Spirit, and be led by the Spirit; and there will not only be deliverance from the self-life, but almost unconsciously there will form on our lives the sweet, ripe, and luscious fruit which He produces—so gently, so blessedly, so naturally. And it pleases God and refreshes men.

C.E. NOTES.

The following were the figures given by Mr. J. F. Hickman, Secretary of the London Council at the sixth annual London Convention, held at the Metropolitan Tabernacle on Good Friday:—Nineteen Unions, 600 Societies, and 23,217 members, comprising 16,794 active, 3,637 associate, 2,876 honorary.

The earnestness with which a Sailor Endeavourer will fulfil his obligations is shown in the following story. One of the members only recently had the misfortune to be shipwrecked off South Australia, and, although having lost nearly all his effects, one of his first acts upon landing was to forward 3s. 6d. to the secretary at Barry.

In connection with the forthcoming Convention, the names and addresses are desired of ministers who intend being in Sheffield on Whit-Sunday, and who are willing to give their services as preachers on that day. Volunteers—ministerial or lay—are also required to speak at children's services in the afternoon of the same day. Names and addresses should be sent by April 23 to Rev. T. Price Davies, Beeton Road, Meersbrook, Sheffield.

A Floating Society has just been started at Barry, Wales. Every ship in the famous docks is visited each Sunday, and opportunities are taken for tract distribution, and quiet talks with the sailors. As a result several men have been induced to attend a place of worship, and on Sunday evenings the sailors have a very warm welcome from C.E workers. Succeeding the usual service a special meeting is held in one of the classrooms, when the work and objects of the Floating Society are expounded. New members thus gained have faithfully sustained their connection with the Society by correspondence.

International S.S. Lesson.

April 28, 1901.

Subject: Jesus appears to the Apostles (John xx. 19-29).

Golden Text: Blessed are they that have not seen and yet have believed (29).

Key to Blackboard Plan.—The lesson is about faith and doubt, faithless and believing. To have Christ's blessing (Golden Text) we must "take up the shield of faith" (Eph. vi. 16).

I. Faith or Belief.

TO have faith is to have a fixed anchorage for the soul. See this in Psa. cxii. 7 and Heb. vi. 19. Faith brings many blessings with it:—Peace (Isa. xxvi. 3); salvation (Rom. i. 16; Acts xvi. 31); strength (Isa. xxx. 15); power (Matt. xxi. 21); joy (Rom. xv. 13); help in temptation (Eph. vi. 16); nerve for the good fight (1 Tim. vi. 12); victory (1 John v. 4).

It makes sons of God (John i. 12), and keeps them (1 Peter i. 5). It teaches the Christian to pray, trusting in God (James i. 6), urges him to continue (Col. i. 23), for he will be tested to see if his faith is genuine (1 Peter i. 7), while he learns that he cannot please God without faith (Heb. xi. 6; Mark xi. 22).

Christ many times said, "Thy faith hath saved thee," and He generally added, "Go in peace," or "Thy faith hath saved thee and made thee whole" (see Matt. ix. 22; Luke vii. 50; viii. 50; Matt. xv. 28; Luke vii. 9; xviii. 42). So we see how often faith brings with it another blessing, besides the joy of knowing we have put our trust in Him.

For illustrations of faith, tree roots in Jer. xvii. 8; and of faith practised, the brazen serpent (John iii. 14).

The ark and Noah.
Abraham going into another country.
His offering up Isaac.
Caleb advising to take the Promised Land.
The walls of Jericho falling.
Elijah and the prophets of Baal.
Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego, &c.

Definition of faith (Heb. xi. 1).

2. Faithless and Unbelieving.

To be faithless is to question God. It is to want to prove everything; to understand with a finite mind things that God never meant it should understand here on this earth.

Unbelief says, "Can God?" (Psa. lxxviii. 19).
It limits God (Psa. lxxviii. 41).
It says "If" to Jesus Christ (Mark ix. 22).
It asks "Why?" (Matt. xvii. 19-20), and "Where in?" (Mal. i. 2).

It was because of unbelief the Jews were cut off (Rom. xi, 20), but as soon as they give it up they will be joined again (23).

Unbelief makes hard hearts (Heb. iii. 12, 19), illustrated by the hard "wayside" in Luke viii. 12, and Mark xvi. 14.

Christ cannot use such for his work. See Matt. xiii. 58; Mark vi. 5, 6.

The "except I see" of Thomas keeps many a one to-day from blessings (John iv. 48; John xi. 40; Luke xxii. 67; xxiv. 11).

Look at the two contrasts in 2 Chron. xx. 20 and Isa. vii. 9.

The message comes down to us to-day in this twentieth century.

"Who hath believed our report" (Isa. liii. 1).

Shall we not pray—

"Lord, I believe, help Thou mine unbelief" (Mark ix. 24), and "Lord, increase our faith" (Luke xvii. 5).

Remembering that—

"Unto you which believe He is precious (1 Peter ii. 7).

Free Meals for Poor Children.—On a recent bitterly cold day, with a heavy snow falling, crowds of children were to be seen hurrying from the Board School to soup the kitchen connected with Vernon (Baptist) Chapel, King's Cross Road, W.C. A basin of warm soup and a hunch of bread awaited each of the hungry little ones, many of whom were scantily clad, and shivered in the biting wind. The pastor (Rev. D. H. Moore) in his white sleeves and apron is quite proud of his large family. In this way from 500 to 600 little ones are fed weekly.

London City Mission.—The seaside homes and holiday fund for the benefit of overworked agents of the London City Mission have been the means of providing rest and change for many toilers who have become wearied in their work for Christ. Few can appreciate a holiday more than a city missionary, who from day to day moves in and out among scenes often wearying to the flesh and depressing to the mind and spirits. The pages of the thirty-second annual report voice the gratitude of those who have been enabled to enjoy a much-needed respite from their labours. In the course of twelve months the Homes at Ventnor and Folkestone received 300 missionaries, 222 wives, 32 invalids, and 18 disabled veterans. Copies of the annual report may by had of the secretaries, 3, Bridewell Place, E.C.

Factory Helpers' Union.—The annual prize distribution of the Education Department of this Union was the occasion of a great gathering at Morley Hall of factory and laundry girls, representing many of the Society's centres. To these a hearty welcome was extended, refreshments provided, followed by singing, musical drills, &c. A glance at the girls, as they filed up to the platform to receive their prizes at the hands of the Countess of Rosslyn, was sufficient to convince one and all as so the influence of the Union upon those whom it seeks to befriend. Many gave evidence of a self-control and culture which were not always characteristic of their class. The numerous clubs and institutes in London and the Provinces provide opportunity for Bible teaching, the holding of continuation classes for improving the education of elementary schools, combined with pleasant recreation. Eighty-six missions are also affiliated, with the object of concentrating efforts to bring working girls to love and serve the Master. Particulars of the Union may be had from the hon. secretary, Miss Skirrow, 26, George Street, Hanover Square, London, W.

Bishop Hartzell in London.

THE story of the operations of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Africa is one of remarkable progress, and it was told by Bishop Hartzell at the Aldersgate Street Y.M.C.A., on Monday last with a pathos that brought tears to many eyes.

Bishop Hartzell's field includes evangelistic, educational, and industrial missions in Liberia, Angola, Portuguese East Africa, and Rhodesia, in which he is the successor of the venerable and much loved Bishop William Taylor. The latter is now in feeble health, but is still able to give a telling spiritual testimony.

The Bishop gave an interesting sketch of his career, first as evangelist and educationalist in the Southern States of America, and then proceeded to give, with a wealth of anecdote and reminiscence, a vivid recital of the development of Christian work in Liberia —the oldest mission of the M.E. Church. Many converts have been won, and there is now a large and highly creditable body of native, ministers and teachers.

The work at Angola, as well as that in the island of Madeira, which is included in the African bishopric, was described, and then the speaker referred to the hopeful outlook in Rhodesia and Southern Africa generally, under the British flag. "In Africa, the continent of contrast, northward the star of Christian empire takes its course." The Chartered Company has given Bishop Hartzell a beautiful tract of land at Umtali, watered by two rivers, and containing buildings suitable for mission uses. The conveyance was made by Earl Grey in a kindly letter addressed to the Bishop "as the representative of American Christianity."

Among other notable items, the Bishop told of the devotion of native workers to the task of Bible translation into a variety of tribal languages, and of a greatly improved outlook for the African races generally, some of whom have made great progress in education, and in all-round fitness to undertake ministerial, judicial, and legislative duties.

Personalia.

General Sir Alfred Gaselee has placed the name of Rev. Frederick Brown on the roll for a staff medal, in recognition of services rendered to the expedition on the march to Peking in August last.

The Bishop of Worcester has returned to Hartlebury Castle slightly improved in health. He has been suffering from an attack of gout in the eyes, and from prostration brought about by overwork.

The L.M.S. is making an appeal on behalf of the widow and children of the late Rev. Joseph Stonehouse, who was murdered by brigands near Peking on March 23, after seventeen years' devoted service.

Rev. Cav. Professor Geymonat, Florence, has celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of his entering the ministry of the Waldensian Church. The event was made the occasion for conferring the degree of D.D. from the University of Geneva.

Rev. Robert Wallace has sailed from Liverpool with a party of children for the Marchmont Home, Belleville, Ontario, from Mr. L. K. Shaw's Homes, Manchester; Mr. Galloway's Homes, Saltcoats; and the Royal Albert Orphanage, Worcester.

Mr. James Sharpless, who was for over thirty years in connection with the Spitalfield's Gospel Mission, founded by Mr. W. J. Lewis, is now open to undertake charge of mission, or other Christian work, in the suburbs. His address is 14, Sidney Square, Commercial Road, E.

We regret to hear that Rev. W. Cuff, president of the Baptist Union, has had another breakdown in health. He left London for South Wales, in company with Rev. J. H. Shakespeare, for a series of Twentieth Century Fund meetings, but after speaking at Swansea and Carmarthen he had to return home.

Mr. John Jackson, of the Mission to Lepers, hopes to reach London before the end of April. His travels in India will then be the subject of addresses, as opportunity may offer. He has secured many new pictures for limelight exhibition. Communications for his services may be addressed to the care of the Office of the Mission to Lepers, Exeter Hall, Strand.

Mothers' Meetings.—A lady will be glad if others who have experience of Mothers' Meetings will recommend her books that they have found useful for half-hour readings. Address the Editor of The Christian,

The King's Own Mission.

IN reviewing the work of the King's Own Mission during the year the superintendent (Mr. O. L. Heatley) writes:—"Nothing gives us more joy than to be able to report the deepening of the spiritual life of the members and the developing into active workers of many of them. Here is one instance: Our Sunday school now has a staff of nineteen officers and teachers, twelve of whom are the growth of the Mission, and whereas some twelve months ago we were praying that God would send us the teachers we so much needed, we are now praising Him for answered prayer and a complete staff, while on the other hand fifteen of our senior scholars have been drafted into our adult Bible class, thus filling up the gaps that have been made by the promotion of some of our Bible class members to the responsible work of teachers, &c."

In every branch of the Mission progress has been apparent. The self-denying efforts of the noble band of devoted workers have been continued with earnestness. These are for the most part men and women who from morning till night are occupied in gaining their livelihood, spending their spare time in bringing others to a knowledge of the joy with which their own hearts are filled. The greater part of the visiting from house to house is undertaken by the Sisters of the Mission, and the numerous entries in the visitation book indicate how sorely such a ministry is needed, and the which accrue when the work is carried on with the love and sympathy displayed by the King's Own Mission helpers. The efforts in the open air have been continued with many tokens of the Spirit's presence and power. Men and women have been constrained to listen to the Gospel while in the public-house or on the streets. Many have been arrested in their sin, have sought forgiveness, and are now to be found in the ranks of the workers.

The year's labour among the young has been particularly fruitful, and the workers have been cheered and encouraged by the intelligent interest taken by the children, and the increase of attendances. A new feature of the Mission is the work of the King's Own Sunbeams, so called on account of their desire to carry brightness into sick and lonely homes. They comprise the elder Sunday school scholars, and the band has already a long record of kind deeds accomplished, and from many quarters messages of appreciation are received from those who have been cheered and comforted by the visitors.

The superintendent, Mr. O. L. Heatley, will give particulars of the varied operations of the Mission to friends interested in the work. He may be addressed St. James' Hall, Royal Road, Kennington Park, S.E.

Welsh Notes.

THE various denominations are showing commendable zeal in raising money for the Twentieth Century Fund. The contribution of Congregationalists amounts to £53,000.

It is announced that Dr. Maclaren, of Manchester, has consented to preach the Union sermon at the meetings of the Welsh Baptist Union. These take place at Porth, Glamorganshire, in July.

A new mission hall in connection with the Welsh Forward Movement was opened on April 7 and 8 at Saltmead, Cardiff. This is the fifth large hall opened by the Movement in the town of Cardiff within the space of a few years.

The annual Preaching Association of the Welsh Calvinistic Methodist Churches of London took place on Good Friday and Easter Sunday. The first meeting took the form of a general fellowship meeting. Following that came preaching services in fourteen Welsh chapels, at which ministers of eminence from North and South Wales officiated.

Chinese Bible Woman's Mission.—Writing from the Native Hospital, Foo Chow, to Mrs. Elborough Woodcock, of the Chinese Bible Woman's Mission, Mrs. M. R. Barr says:—"You will be glad to hear that, in spite of the unsettled state of things in China, the work here in the hospital has gone on without any interruption, and at the present time nearly all the beds are occupied." Mrs. Margaret Dalziel writes from Shanghai:—"For four months we did no visiting among the heathen. We deemed it wise in the time of unrest and excitement. I am glad to say that Christian work is going on as usual in Shanghai. We have been visiting the people who knew us before the trouble of last summer." Correspondence telling of progress in many centres of activity in China will be found in the April number of The Lamp of China, as well as numerous articles and devotional reading. (1d. Morgan & Scott.)

Irish Notes.

IT is very satisfactory to note that work among the Jews is being earnestly and liberally supported at present in this country. As one proof of this, it may be mentioned that last year the total income of the Church of Ireland Jews' Society was £3,343, while this year it has been £5,366.

Ireland has contributed the goodly sum of £8,036 to the Church Missionary Society's Centenary Fund, and in proportion to the total amount subscribed, the Diocese of Dublin occupies the ninth place on the list among the dioceses of the United Kingdom. This manifestation of the missionary spirit is very gratifying to all who take an interest in the spread of Christianity.

The Standing Committee of the Belfast Methodist Council have asked the Committee of Privileges to request the Census Commissioners to count as Methodists all who have entered themselves in the recent census papers either as Wesleyans or Wesleyan Methodists, and they have also determined to ask the Lord Lieutenant to make the Royal Commission on University Education which he is about to appoint, as representative and impartial as possible.

A largely-attended meeting of the supporters of the Children's Bill was held on Thursday evening in Wellington Hall, Belfast. Among the speakers were the following Members of Parliament:—Messrs. William Johnston, Jeremiah Jordan, Sir James Haslett, and T. W. Russell. Mr. Johnston assured the audience that Mr. Balfour was anxious the Bill should become law, and was most sympathetic towards it. It may be stated that for the second reading of the Bill fifty-five Nationalists voted for and ten against, and fourteen Irish Unionists voted for and only one against.

Scottish Notes.

THE assistant-minister of a Glasgow congregation has tabulated the answers he received to certain inquiries made at 878 houses in the district. Every family save thirty-seven, or 4·21 per cent., claimed connection with one or other recognised religious organization, thirty-three professed no Church or other such connection, while in four cases no information whatever was forthcoming.

Mr. Robert L. Turner, M.A., who was ordained last week by the Glasgow United Free Presbytery as a missionary to New Guinea, is the son of Dr. George Alexander Turner and grandson of Dr. George Turner, both missionaries in the island of Samoa in connection with the London Missionary Society. Mr. Turner goes out to join the staff of the college for training native teachers and evangelists at Vatorata.

The Scottish Temperance League have put on record "their disapproval of any company pleading for licences to sell intoxicating liquor, however." They specially deprecate the attempt to secure licenses in districts hitherto free from licenses, under the intention to devote a proportion of their profits to "objects of public utility and well-being," as likely only to further debauch the public mind, and to hinder the spread of sobriety; and have put on record their earnest hope and prayer that the licensing authorities will not grant any new licenses, either to a company or to an individual.

At the annual meeting of the Scottish Women's Protestant Union, just held in Edinburgh, Mrs. Watson (Deas Cromarty), Dundee, moved—"That the existing detraction from the authority of the Word of God and the progress of Romanism and Ritualism furnish a loud call for the women of Scotland to defend the Bible and the Protestant religion for their families and their country." They were not, she said, opposing Romanism entirely as a religion, but as a polity, a system of government, and a claim on the spirit of man. They did not deny the right to go to mass, but they denied that Roman Catholics had the right to rule Protestant lives because they held a certain religious faith.

The prospectus and syllabus for next session of the Bible Training Institute, Glasgow, may now be obtained on application to the superintendent (Mr. John Anderson, 64, Bothwell Street). It is interesting to note that since the opening, 301 resident students have been enrolled, with 166 non-resident day students, and 2,453 in evening classes. The cost of board and tuition averages £55 per student per session, and towards this amount each student is required to contribute £20 per session. Any church or body of Christians can thus, at limited cost, provide a young man or woman of earnest spirit with special training for much future usefulness in Christian work at home or abroad. Missionaries on furlough, home missionaries, students, evangelists, or Bible-women who desire to take a partial course, may be received into the Institute for shorter periods by special arrangement.

Evangelistic.

Mr. Charles Cook's Work.

THE services at the Metropolitan Theatre closed on Easter Sunday, thus completing twenty-six years consecutively. A large and appreciative audience attended, and the after-meeting found workers of both sexes busy among those who had been convicted.

We regret to hear of the failing in health of Mr. Chas. Cook, who has all these years done most of the preaching, which, added to his thirty-three years of open-air and other work, twenty-nine of which have been in Hyde Park, has told upon his strength.

The continuity of the Park services, often four or five nights a week, has weakened his constitution, and he has been ordered to take complete rest for a time, and to attempt somewhat less in the future. The work in Hyde Park Hall enters upon its twenty-eighth year, and the work and workers continue as fresh and bright as ever.

The Campaign in Hyde Park will commence on Sunday, May 5, for the thirtieth year. Any efficient known workers in open-air services would be welcomed by Mr. Cook (address, 6, Frithville Gardens, Shepherd's Bush, W.) to help in the Park during his enforced rest. We trust those able to help financially will sustain this important work so long and successfully sustained by our indefatigable friend.

The Cotelingam Brothers.

These three evangelists have recently conducted meetings at various centres in Devon and Cornwall. In Bodmin a drawing-room meeting was held in the residence of Viscount Clifden, who wrote of the brothers' Indian work:—"We wish them every success in their endeavour to promote the spread of Christianity among their fellow-countrymen." At Redruth and Bodmin blessing was given, and large gatherings were held at Plymouth, where, among other services, Mr. J. E. Cotelingam spoke to a large body of working men in the Friends' Adult School. The brothers conducted a Sunday evening service in Mutley Baptist Chapel, where a large congregation listened with interest to their speaking and singing.

Mr. Ira D. Sankey at Detroit.

The meetings which Mr. Sankey takes from time to time in various cities of the United States are invariably a source of attraction and blessing. Describing services at Detroit, the Free Press of March 30, says:—"Mr. Ira D. Sankey spoke at the Jefferson Avenue Presbyterian Church yesterday afternoon before an audience that occupied every seat. For more than an hour before the doors were opened part of the crowd waited on the sidewalk so as to be sure to get a place in the church. Although Mr. Sankey has but recently been discharged from a sanatorium at Battle Creek, he gave no evidence of weakness and spoke for nearly two hours. His talk was partially reminiscent of his great associate, D. L. Moody. . . .

"When the ushers reached the Second Avenue Presbyterian church last night at a quarter past seven for the lecture on 'Memories of Moody,' they found the church crowded to its doors, and no use for their services. From that time until the hour for beginning the meeting hundreds were turned away, although the aisles were filled with chairs, the pulpit steps crowded with people, and every available bit of standing room occupied.

"Mr. Sankey was introduced by Rev. John McDowell, pastor of the church. He sang hymns which had been D. L. Moody's favourites, and the lecture contained numerous anecdotes of the dead evangelist with whom Mr. Sankey was associated for so many years."

Mr. Henry Varley in Aberdeen.

The campaign being carried on in this city is in every way remarkable. People of all names and conditions are being reached. Hundreds on week days come to the afternoon Bible readings and tell of increased and definite perception of truth.

Sundays are remarkable days. Nothing has given more surprise than the extraordinary hold obtained by the addresses given in the Institute of the fine new Y.M.C.A. building, which holds 1,000 persons. It has been crowded night after night with deeply-interested audiences. The young men of the city come in large numbers, and evidently profit by as well as enjoy the striking addresses. With burning words of reproof of sin in all its forms, intemperance, unbelief, pride of intellect, rationalism, and licentiousness have been assailed in unmistakable terms. The presentation of Christ has been of the most varied character. His uplifting has moved the city, and the power of the Gospel is seen far and near

Saturday night last saw the Institute packed to hear Mr. Varley's lecture on "God's Settling Day," with special reference to the war in South Africa. Bailie Maitland, the president of the Y.M.C.A., presided. It was in every way a remarkable meeting. On Sunday at eleven Mr. Varley preached to a great crowd in the fine hall of the Salvation Army. In the afternoon and evening he spoke in the Music Hall, addressing throughout the day 8,000 persons.

The meetings are to be continued through the week, perhaps longer, for the Mission has taken a hold upon thousands in the city, and it is not known whereunto it may grow. Mr. D. J. Findlay came from Glasgow, and has rendered most valuable help. Special prayer is asked for the work.—From a Correspondent.

Euston Theatre, N.W.

This new theatre, situate in Euston Road, N.W., has recently been opened for Sunday evening services by Rev. D. H. Moore, of Vernon Chapel, King's Cross, and with abundant success so far as numbers are concerned.

The first gathering was held on March 24, not without some misgiving as to securing a congregation; however, there had been much prayer beforehand, coupled with much endeavour on the part of the workers in advertising the services and visiting all the houses in the immediate vicinity. As a result the building was filled to overflowing before the time for service.

A strong choir was present, and Sankey's hymns were sung, and evidently enjoyed by the congregation, who joined in most heartily. In addition, the Vernon male choir and string band rendered good service. The preacher then gave a stirring address, interspersed with incidents from his own career as sailor, fireman, and city missionary, and listened to by all with rapt attention. The following Sunday being Easter, was not so good in point of numbers, but was still bright and cheerful.

On Sunday last a sea of eager faces was presented to the preacher as he took for his subject "The Ten Commandments," and convinced those present that they were under condemnation. An earnest appeal at the close induced some to rise as a testimony that they desired to be prayed for, and while the preacher adjourned to the inquiry room, Mr. Bob Johnson told the story of his conversion on Epsom Downs, when he was attending the Derby for the twenty-fifth time as a negro minstrel.

King's Cross is probably well known to many readers as a spot where vice is rampant, and it is a great pity that the services should be continued only for four weeks. The expenses, however (about £10 per week), preclude the possibility of further continuation unless outside help is forthcoming, as the Church at "Vernon" is composed of working-class people, who are pledged to the hilt to the work already being done. Will friends pray for the concluding service on Sunday next, that it may prove a reaping time for the many who have been convicted of sin? E. N. B.

Mr. Jas. Wharton has held a series of meetings in the Second Congregational Church, Memphis, Tenn. The members co-operated heartily. There were many cases of inquiry. Mr. Wharton had the joy of meeting some who began the Christian life during his former visit some twelve years since. F. W. S.

The special effort put forth by the London City Mission, by special services held for a week or ten days at a time in different parts of London, has been fruitful. The respective districts were well visited beforehand, and invitations to the meetings given both at the doors and in the streets. Numbers of "outsiders" have been reached, and many have sought the Lord.

About 100 of the young women engaged in London theatres accepted the invitation of Mr. William Forbes to tea on Thursday last at Orange Street Chapel, Leicester Square. After tea there were hymns and solos sang, and addresses by Rev. Silas K. Hocking and others. Many were present who had been at Mr. Forbes' recent meetings in provincial cities. Mr. Forbes is this week giving addresses in Manchester.

A fruitful mission has been held at the village of Clayton West, Yorks., by Mr. H. Bray, of the Evangelization Society, in connection with the Simultaneous Mission. Congregationalists, Wesleyan, Primitive and New Connexion Methodists, and other bodies united, and great blessing was given. Many sought the Saviour, and every church will gain in membership. The Bible readings and talks to the converts were highly appreciated.

Rev. W. H. and Mrs. Collins, of Wendover, have lately conducted a Mission at Ridgmount, Beds. The congregations were very good, although the weather was very unfavourable. The singing of the missioners was impressive, and the deepening interest of the people culminated on the Sunday, when the congregations were large, and a number of persons sought Christ. The young converts had a blessed meeting on the following day for thanksgiving and prayer.

A five weeks' campaign has been undertaken in Nebraska by Revs. E. P. Hammond and J. B. Currens. They have remained only two or three days in each place, yet in that short time over 100, on an average, in each locality have sought the Lord—in some places 200. The various denominations have united. The work has been largely among the young, yet many adults have been included. Mr. Hammond is still strong and vigorous, notwithstanding these strenuous labours. D. V. M.

At Easter, Mr. Henry Thorne conducted special services at the Wesleyan Methodist Church, Donington-on-Bain, Lincs., in connection with the Sunday school anniversary. Among other features Mr. Thorne gave a Bible reading, and a lecture on "The Bible, and how to read it." Large and appreciative congregations heard Mr. Thorne with profit. Mr. Thorne has also conducted a series of meetings in Herne Bay Baptist Chapel. Rev. John S. Geale writes: "It was a helpful privilege to have Mr. Thorne again in our midst."

Mr. Samuel Bradfield, evangelist in charge of the Bishop Hooper Protestant Van, has been conducting a fruitful mission in the parish of Ashleworth, near Gloucester. A farmer, lent a large room in the farmhouse for meetings; but that being too small, he fitted up his granary, and the villagers came out night after night in good numbers to hear the Gospel message and also warning words against Romanizing efforts. Lantern lectures were given on "The Life and Work of Martin Luther" and "The Martyrs in the Reign of Queen Mary." The villagers seemed deeply interested.

An impetus has been given to the work of the Reynolds Memorial Church, Hartford Heath, by the recent visit of Mr. R. S. Bradbrook, who was used not only to win souls for Christ, but also to stimulate Christian workers to greater activity and zeal in the Master's service. The audiences gradually increased so as to completely fill the building on the last night of the mission. The services have proved a great blessing to the people of the district. A pleasing feature of the campaign has been the generous help given by members of the Established Church and by the Nonconformists, who greatly facilitated the musical arrangements and were unsparing in their efforts to help forward the good cause. R. W. R.

Reply to "Lapsus."—Where sin has been committed against yourself and God alone, it is not possible to make reparation. But we may show the sincerity of our contrition by utterly repudiating all that in any way leads up to or suggests a repetition of the offence. Nothing is gained, but much harm may be done, by brooding over past sins. If sin is forgiven work may be continued, where sin has not been an open scandal to others. You had better have confidence in me and give your name if you feel the need of help. You may rely on my respecting your confidence. The cure for the inward uncleanness is to be filled with the Holy Spirit of purity.—W. H. M. H. A.

Obituary.

MR. R. FOULKES GRIFFITHS.

A WELL-KNOWN figure in Baptist circles is removed by the death of Mr. R. Foulkes Griffiths, who passed away on April 10 at Llandudno. Mr. Griffiths was formerly in the Baptist ministry, first at Tarporley, and then at Stoney Street Chapel, Nottingham. In 1887 he devoted himself to the work of the legal profession, and became conspicuous as an earnest representative of the temperance party at Brewster Sessions throughout the country. Mr. Griffiths was also a forcible and acceptable lecturer on temperance.

MR. EDWARD J. BUTLER, HOSHANGABAD,

The Indian Mission of the Society of Friends has suffered a severe loss in the decease of Edward J. Butler, of Hoshangabad, an earnest and devoted missionary, who found his greatest delight in winning souls. His familiarity with the home-life and customs of the natives and his sympathetic nature won general acceptance and esteem, and his labours yielded much spiritual fruit.

THE HON. JOHN WALDEGRAVE.

The household of Lord Radstock has been darkened by the death a few days ago, at Lichtenburg, of his youngest son, the Hon. John Waldegrave. The deceased gentleman was in his thirty-fourth year, and recently served for about twelve months in South Africa, as a member of the Imperial Yeomanry. Brought to the Lord at the age of six, his youthful testimony is still a bright memory to his friends. On leaving Trinity College, Cambridge, he entered the legal profession, and was called to the bar by the Inner Temple in 1893. In the Westminster Gazette, to which he was a contributor, he is described as an unusually thoughtful and conscientious writer, and as a man of singularly lovable disposition.

MRS. SHEWANTIBAI BAWA.

Intelligence from India informs us of the sudden decease of Mrs. Shewantibai Bawa, one of the quartette of Powar sisters, daughters of Rev. R. B. Powar, who have been so well known and esteemed in Christian circles in Western India. Mrs. Bawa was, with her husband, a devoted worker at Roha, near Bombay. "When they went to Roha," says the Bombay Guardian, "there were but four Christians; these have in the eight or nine years of their sojourn been increased a hundred-fold. Roha has now a church with four hundred members. There are also orphanages for boys and girls, with a hundred or more inmates; and (a work that was very dear to Mrs. Bawa's heart) two large leper asylums. Her loss will be keenly felt by the lepers, the Christian workers and the orphans."

MR. HENRY HOLME.

After nearly four years of great suffering and weakness, this well-known servant of God went home on the 3rd inst. at the age of sixty-nine. Converted when a lad of fourteen, he was intended for the ministry of the Church of England, and studied at St. Bees College; but his health broke down, and after a while he took up a business career. He devoted much time to Christian work, and was one of the early friends of the Salvation Army. In the Y.M.C.A. he did much good work, and also was for many years the hon. secretary of the Commercial Travellers' Christian Association. As Chairman of the Nestorian Mission he took much interest in Deacon Abraham's work at Urumiah, and was the author of a book entitled, "The Oldest Christian Church."

The Blind Poor of Belfast.—In connection with the Home for Blind, 30, Great Victoria Street, Belfast, the need arises for seeking more commodious and convenient premises. These have been secured in Cliftonville, where the infirm blind will be enabled to enjoy necessary comforts and Christian ministrations to a larger extent than has been possible hitherto. To meet the expenditure a sum of £3,000 is required. The president is Mrs. R. B. Pim, Ury, Knockbreda Park, Belfast.

About Books.

By Love Serve One Another (1s. Marshall Bros.), by Margaret Black and Irene H. Barnes, is "a memory" of Mrs. W. H. (Adelaide Maria) Patchell, B.A., fittingly inscribed to present and prospective members of the Y.W.C.A. It tells of a life truly lived unto the Lord by being freely given up to his little ones.

Mr. D. Wardlaw Scott has written Terra Firma: the Earth not a Planet (3s. 6d. Simpkin), "in order to expose the fallacies of modern astronomy." Many ancient and modern authorities are cited, numerous reference made to Scripture, and lengthy quotations given from such documents as the Accadian, Chaldean, and Babylonian accounts of the deluge.

Sunday-school teachers capable of reproducing blackboard diagrams in illustrating Scripture lessons will find in Rev. John Mitchell's How to Gain the Eye of the Young many helpful and suggestive outlines and sketches. The book is the work of one whose keen perception and fruitful imagination have been widely used in the instruction of the young. (1s. 6d. Partridge.)

Dr. W. Paterson Smyth's "Social Service Ideals," to which we called attention some weeks ago, has now been followed by The Social Service Handbook—First Series, Ireland. (1s. net. Sands & Co.) Papers by different writers deal in helpful fashion with Workhouses, Housing, Organization of Charity, Licensing, and kindred subjects. We question, however, whether Old Age Pensions is ripe for even such conclusions as are arrived at. A useful bibliography of each topic is given.

Workers among the young will welcome an addition to the helps already available for appealing to more than the ear in the presentation of Scripture truth. By the use of pictures or the blackboard, the eye has also been enlisted; but in Topical Teaching for Teachers and Scholars (1s. Morgan & Scott), by W. H. Stanes, simple hints are given for bringing into play the restless hands and often ingenious ideas of the little ones themselves in connection with a wide range of spiritual lessons.

Chaplains at the Front is another volume on the topic of the day. The sub-title describes it as "Incidents in the Life of a Chaplain during the Boer War, 1899-1900," and the writer is Rev. Owen Spencer Watkins, acting Wesleyan chaplain to the King's forces. There has been much written on the campaign; but from the point of view of a Christian worker among the troops, this is a volume of exceptional attractions. There are forty-seven illustrations from photographs and sketches, some of them as sadly pathetic as they are remarkably interesting. (2s. 6d. Partridge.)

A very natural addition to the "New Century Leaders" series of biographies is Frederick Temple, Archbishop of Canterbury, by W. Francis Aitken. The venerable Primate has won the esteem of men in every walk of life, by his earnest, unaffected piety, his ardent enthusiasm, and the transparent honesty of purpose which mark the administration of his office. His hearty and practical sympathy with religious and philanthropic activity will ensure for this sketch of his life many readers outside the State Church. His extraordinary buoyancy, indomitable spirit, and wide experience give force and authority to his utterances. Happily several extracts of notable and characteristic discourses are included in the book. (1s. 6d. Partridge.)

A work of distinct merit in Old Testament study is The Royal Houses of Israel and Judah: An Interwoven History with a Harmony of Parallel Passages. By Rev. George O. Little, D.D., Professor of Pastoral Theology and Old Testament Literature, Howard University, Washington, D.C. (10s. Funk & Wagnalls.) This compacted history, which comprises the whole of six consecutive books of Scripture, and parts of four others, does for the Old Testament what several consolidated editions of the Gospels have done for the New. The result is presented in modern literary form, chapter and verse divisions being set aside save for reference. In the words of the preface, we have here "a complete, comprehensive, and connected e pluribus unum story." The treatment is divided into four parts, consisting of the founding of the monarchy, the united kingdom, the divided kingdom, and the surviving southern kingdom. Facts and sidelights are given on the national existence, civil life, political revolutions, &c. The work meets in an adequate and thorough manner a want long felt by many a Bible student.

Christian Teachings arranged for the instruction of the young. By William James Mutch, Ph.D. (6d. James Clarke & Co.) Dr. Clifford writes a preface, in which he says, "It is an altogether admirable guide, as wise in what it omits as in what it asserts." We think it is generally, not always, true in what it asserts, but it omits the Fall, Satan, and the Atonement, and affirms nothing definite about Sin or Conversion. It says, under "Christian Nurture," "If the better life ever comes to any person, it must come by a process of growth, in which his life becomes more like the life of Christ. There may be sudden changes, such as conversion, or a supreme choice, from which a new epoch in the growth dates . . . but a Christlike character can come only by a continuous growth in the right way." We could not say that this is an altogether admirable guide for the young on the momentous subject of the soul's salvation. Salvation comes, not by a continuous growth in the right way, but by dying to the wrong way in which we were born from Adam, and being born again into the new way through the death and resurrection of our great God and Saviour Jesus Christ.

The "Messages of the Bible" series is growing apace. As already explained, the aim of the volumes is "to present to those interested in the New Testament the best-established results of careful yet fearless scholarship." So long as these results are beyond reasonable dispute and reverently adduced, they are welcome; when they take the form of immature criticism or rationalistic assumption, they are mischievous and to be reprehended. Under the general editorship of Professors F. K. Sanders (Yale University) and C. F. Kent (Brown University) the "Messages" receive varied treatment, according to the complexion of the worker upon each book. The latest volume is The Messages of Jesus According to the Synoptists, which, in the words of the sub-title sets forth "the Discourses of Jesus in the Gospels of Matthew, Mark, and Luke, arranged, as far as feasible, in the Order of Time, and freely rendered in Paraphrase." It is by Thomas Cuming Hall, D.D., Professor of Christian Ethics in Union Theological Seminary. (3s. 6d. J. Clarke & Co.) The free rendering is sometimes irritating, and the speculation open to objection; but there is much in the book that will prove helpful to careful students who are prepared to discriminate between the teaching of the Master and the impressions of the expositor.

Those who are looking about for a subject of varied interest and great human importance may be commended to a study of Church history. Whether regarded in general, as including ancient and modern times, and embracing all Christendom in its survey, or whether confined within comparatively narrow limits as to time and field, the subject should have great attractions for Christian people. Wherever we begin, and to whatever field we may give most attention, there is no leaving Scotland on one side. There the record of Christian life and work has been continuous and of supreme interest, whether the thought runs upon the early days of the Celtic Church or the Reformation and Covenanter periods. As an introduction to this study we earnestly recommend Rev. John Macpherson's new book, A History of the Church in Scotland: From the Earliest Times Down to the Present Day. (7s. 6d. Alexander Gardner.) It is a carefully executed work, comprehensive in the best sense, and bringing the story down to the great act of union which was celebrated in October last, when the United Presbyterian and the Free Churches became one United Free Church of Scotland. Mr. Macpherson has put much conscientious labour into the making of this volume, in which a large historical literature is admirably digested. The generous spirit of the writer should secure a wide acceptance of the book in all circles in Scotland and out.

The National Anti-Vivisection Society has published SOME ACCIDENTAL OMISSIONS IN MR. PAGET'S BOOK ON EXPERIMENTS ON ANIMALS, a review by the Hon. Stephen Coleridge.

MAY'S GUIDE TO MAY MEETINGS includes, in addition to the usual list, an excellent map of central London, and much useful information for visitors. (1d. 21, Bride Street, E.C.)

SONGS OF GOSPEL TRUTH, compiled by Ned Wright, will be found useful in the conducting of evangelistic and mission services. The tunes are particularly simple, and will be easily learnt and sung. (6d. Holness.)

Mr. J. S. Davidson, missionary to the Jews, has printed four familiar hymns in Hebrew-English. Alongside the English original he gives the hymn in Hebrew type. The various difficulties attending this operation seem to have been satisfactorily surmounted. (Specimen copies, one halfpenny each, from J. S. Davidson, 5, Aden Terrace, Stoke Newington, N.)

THE CHURCH OF GOD (3d.) brings out the lessons of the experience of the Ephesian Church; JEHOVAH-SHALOM (1d.), by J.H., is "a setting forth of the conditions under which God bestows the 'Peace which passeth all understanding;'" CHRIST OUR VINDICATOR (1d.), by Emily S. Osmaston, presents the work of Christ on behalf of the redeemed—booklets published by Marshall Brothers.

The latest issue of THE PHOTO-MINIATURE deals with Photographic Manipulations. It is a splendidly-executed piece of work, alike from a scientific and artistic point of view. The new publication in the "Useful Arts and Handicrafts" series is entitled GLUE, GUM, PASTE, AND OTHER ADHESIVES. It is sure to prove of service in many departments of industry. (6d. each. Dawbarn & Ward.)

The April issue of THE SCATTERED NATION, the quarterly record of the Hebrew Christian Testimony to Israel, will be of special interest to friends who have prayed and waited for the opening of the new mission premises. Full particulars of the dedicatory services are recorded, and the addresses which were given on the occasion are fully reported. There is also a portrait of the late Lord Blantyre, with appreciative notes by the editor. (3d. Morgan & Scott.

Full particulars on application to The Honorary Secretary.

The Y.M.C.A.

THE national portrait of Sir George Williams, founder and president of the Y.M.C.A., painted by Mr. H. S. Tuke, A.R.A., is to be exhibited in the Academy collection this year.

The Sunderland Association is engaged in a special effort to secure 100 additional members during the month of April.

Mr. Philo L. Mills, retiring president of the Nottingham Association, has presented to the Committee a cheque for over £500, to clear off the debt which has impeded the work.

In St. Petersburg successful efforts are being made by the first Young Men's Christian Association, which has obtained official permission to work among the young men of the orthodox Russian Church. Already over 350 members have been enrolled, of whom about 150 attend the religious meetings on Sundays. A German-speaking Association has for some years been doing good work in St. Petersburg, and has recently been enabled to carry out a long-cherished plan of establishing a lodging-house for young men.

A meeting of the Metropolitan Council was held at Exeter Hall on April 12, under the presidency of Mr. W. H. Seagram. Encouraging reports were presented of work in the various Metropolitan areas by the district and travelling secretaries; and consideration was given to plans whereby the Associations may combine in forwarding Association operations in foreign countries. Mr. R. D. Pringle, late general secretary of the Bombay Association, gave much interesting information in relation to this work.

The annual Conference of the North-Eastern District Union of Y.M.C.A.'s was recently held at Stockton-on-Tees. The vicar, Rev. Canon Martin, addressed an opening devotional meeting; and two conference sessions followed, under the chairmanship respectively of Mr. C. Stansfield Wilson, of Sunderland, and Mr. Fredk. Robson. Mr. Robt. McCann, travelling secretary for the North-Midland District, gave a useful address to the delegates, entitled, "Practical hints to Y.M.C.A. workers, from a Secretary's note-book."

The Spring Conference of the Midland District Union has been held at Lichfield. At the morning session, when Mr. Lewis Barber, J.P., of Burton-on-Trent, was in the chair, a report was presented which gave the enrolled strength of the twenty-eight Associations as 4,835. The subjects dealt with on the programme were chiefly of a devotional character, having reference to the spiritual work of the Associations. Mr. Robert Burn, of London; Dr. H. B. Wilson, of Birmingham, and others took part. The afternoon session was presided over by Mr. J. K. Starley, of Coventry.

The World's Y.W.C.A.

THE sixth annual report of the World's Y.W.C.A. represents a year of deepening and growing interest. The way in which the work meets the needs of to-day is attributed by the president to, among other causes, the increase of independence in women now that their spheres are widening. This freedom from restraint is attended by numerous dangers, for the same facilities which give opportunities for this advancement lead girls of every nationality into temptation and difficulty. Quiet, steady progress has marked the work in every land where the Association is established. One source, however, of deep disappointment and dismay exists—the absence of suitable and trained women to undertake positions as secretaries abroad and at home. The president (Mrs. J. H. Tritton) says: "It has been wellnigh heart-breaking month by month to have the appeals from various countries entreating for helpers, and to hear that no suitable ones are to be heard of. Surely the love of Christ will constrain some to offer themselves." Correspondence relating to the interests of the World's Y.W.C.A. should be addressed to Miss A. M. Reynolds, or Miss Ethel Stevenson, 26, George Street, Hanover Square, London, W.

The Home of Industry.—Miss Macpherson's seventy-seventh party of children is ready to start for Canada on May 2. At the farewell meeting (Children's Home, Hackney) on Friday, April 13, forty-four little ones entertained the assembled friends with singing and recitations. Mr. Merry, in putting the object of this work before the gathering, said that some people have been objecting to shutting out so many children from their own country. His own opinion was that it was a blessing for them to be shut out from the baneful influences of increasing drink and its resulting evils. In Canada, with its bright prospect of becoming entirely a prohibition country, less temptation awaits the young, and there is more scope for a sound development, as past experience had proved. It was much regretted that, owing to physical weakness, Miss Macpherson was not able to be present at the meeting.

Bilson, Ickworth, Whitehall Park, Hornsey Lane, London, N.; Miss M. A. Dalling, 52, Norfolk Street, Mount Pleasant, Swansea; Mr. Ernest M. Soames, 94, Grantham Road, Clapham Road, S.W.; Mr. William Grundy, 12, Brick Street, Broadbottom, near Manchester; Mr. Thomas R. Turnbull, 18, Blomers Street, Halifax, Nova Scotia.

Fallen Asleep.

Rev. A. Foster, a veteran Congregationalist minister. For several years he was chairman and secretary of the Lancashire Congregational Union, and for thirty-four years held the pastorate of Park Road Church, Blackburn.—Mr. R. T. Turnbull, for forty years an elder at Regent Square Presbyterian Church, aged seventy-one. Mr. Turnbull for a generation had been a prominent figure in the Synod. He was convener of the treasurership committee, of the committee on aged and infirm ministers, and of the college trustees.—Rev. Abraham Mills, of Derby. Until May last he was pastor of St. Mary's Gate Baptist Chapel, where he laboured for eleven years until obliged by failing health to relinquish his work.—Rev. George West, of Heneage Street Baptist Church, Birmingham, where he had been pastor for more than sixteen years, his ministry being very fruitful, especially among the young people.—Rev. G. H. Bennett, Baptist minister at Bourne and at Louth, Lincolnshire.—Aged seventy-five, Alderman Blake, of Ross, well known and esteemed as a devoted Christian worker, and a generous supporter of religious and philanthropic effort.—Rev. W. Goodman, an ex-president of the Primitive Methodist Conference. He had "travelled" thirty-eight years, and had long been one of the most prominent figures in Connexional life. One of the wisest administrators in the denomination, implicit confidence was placed in his judgment.—At Norwich, on April 13, Rev. W. A. Macallan, for many years Presbyterian minister in that city. During his pastorate the Presbyterian Church of Holy Trinity was built, and large sums raised mainly by his efforts have since been expended upon the property. Mr. Macallan was closely identified with many of the religious and charitable institutions of the city.—Aged eighty-three, Mr. Alexander Jefferson Buist, of Dundee. He was associated with many public movements, particularly of a philanthropic kind.

Gift to Sunday School Workers.—Through the liberality of a friend, the trustees of the Spurgeon Memorial Sermon Society are authorized to offer fifty copies of C. H. Spurgeon's sermons to any Sunday school worker willing to lend them round among senior scholars. Applicants should enclose six stamps for postage, giving name of school and address: The Secretary, S.M.S.S., Greenhithe, near London.

Finsbury Park Rescue and Preventive Association.—The annual meeting of the Alpha House Rescue Home, Hanley Road, was recently held at the Jubilee Hall, in the same road, Finsbury Park, Mr. R. C. Morgan presiding. Short and encouraging reports of the work were given. The interest of the meeting culminated in an address by Mrs. Penn Lewis to workers on "Soul Winning," of which the substance will be found in a Bible reading on Soul-winners, on page 13. The beneficent work of this excellent Association deserves unstinted praise and support.

Notes & Comments

WITH the promise of summer appearing on every hand, Highway Witnessing—Words to Open-Air Workers (1s. Morgan & Scott) is a well-timed publication. The author—Mr. Frank Cockrem, secretary of the Open-Air Mission—not only speaks from his wide and long experience, but adds the results of a careful study of such authorities on preaching as John Wesley, George Whitefield, Bishop Ryle, Charles H. Spurgeon, and Dr. Stalker. Every detail seems to be provided for, the advice is of the most practical nature, and through all there is the throb of that earnestness which marks the real worker. There are valuable hints for others besides those who hold meetings in the open air. Many a preacher whom we have heard within doors might well lay to heart what is said as to practical equipment, and few gatherings could not be improved by attention to the division dealing with "conduct" and "accessories."

The issue by the China Inland Mission of the annual "List of Missionaries and their Stations" has caused sorrowful concern among friends all over the country. One correspondent points out that, "speaking broadly, you might write over the whole of the north and west of your missionary map of China the word 'vacant;'" and goes on to ask, "What is the meaning of the word 'vacant' in this connection?" It may mean that the foreign missionary is absent; but, thank God, the Church is left. In many places the leading members have sealed their testimony with their blood—the rest are "scattered, having suffered the loss of all things, being destitute, afflicted, evil-entreated, wandering in deserts and mountains and caves of the earth." Are "the Lord's remembrancers" spending more time and energy than ever in prayer for these fellow-believers? Surely they ought! The writer asks:—

> Is not this oft-repeated "vacant" a message from God to you and me? Can we—dare we—turn to his appeal a deaf ear? Won't you get this prayer list, and, daily spreading it out before the Lord, you shall learn fresh depths of the joy of suffering with Him here and reigning with Him hereafter.

"Truly the light is sweet, and a pleasant thing it is to behold the sun." Spring-cleaning is a very necessary and healthy example, and the light is a wonderful revealer. Wesley advised his preachers—"Everywhere recommend decency and cleanliness, for cleanliness is next to godliness." Purity of heart has essential relations to purity of the home. They who loathe sin should loathe dirt also. "Make you clean; cease to do evil," said God. "If I wash thee not, thou hast no part with Me," said the Saviour.

It is not enough to desire this. Desire must develop into action. External reformation leaves the inner man of the heart untouched. There must be regeneration, and the renewing of the Holy Ghost. Nor can moral cleansing be realized by pursuing ever so diligently a mere round of religious observances. All the sacredness of sacred things has in itself no power to cleanse. "The blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from all sin.',

A missionary writes from India:

> The weather here is rapidly approaching its terrible culmination of heat. Hardly a green thing is to be seen, and people wander hither and thither in a mechanical way, the poorest having scarcely strength to beg their way along. Relief is indispensable to keep them alive, and our utmost resources are taxed to meet the need of the hour.

The Christian and charitable public have responded nobly to the call on behalf of their weaker brothers and sisters during the last two years. It may reasonably be urged upon the Government that more earnest endeavours should be put forward officially to mitigate the terrible condition of things in our large dependency.

The Bishop of Chichester has directed a reply to the memorialists of a certain notorious church in Brighton, which should do something to show the real value of the things for which rebellious Churchmen contend. These memorialists practically threatened the Bishop that, if his influence were directed against reservation and the use of incense, some of them would be compelled to seek another communion, while others would lapse into indifference. His lordship very neatly replies:—

> I am not at all moved by the fears expressed as to the results of obedience to my monition. To go off into schism because certain externals were suspended would be a peevish and unmanly act, while to lapse into indifference on that score would be a proof that the externals were the things valued, while the deep and eternal verities underlying those externals were but lightly held.

One of the hardest blows recently delivered at the pretensions of the extreme High Churchmen has come from Canon Gore, by the publication of his new book, "The Body of Christ." It is not too much to say that this book has produced a mild panic amongst Sacerdotalists, and already, through their literary organs, they are trying to disown their former friend and champion. The learned Canon has made it abundantly clear that the "Fathers" of the third and fourth centuries, in whom Sacerdotalists have been wont to trust, do not teach that "Christ is made present on the altar under the forms of bread and wine;" nor do the ancient Liturgies contain any notion of the Sacramental worship of Transubstantiated species. Further, the Canon repudiates any idea of a propitiatory sacrifice being attached to the Lord's Supper.

It is no wonder that these admissions have roused the alarmed opposition of the Sacerdotalists, and Canon Gore has thought fit to correct certain animadversions on his book, published in The Times, on the ground that he has been misunderstood. But nothing can alter the general impression made by the book, as sapping the very foundations of the doctrine of the Mass in any form. And it is clear that the only way to meet this book is by the same method as was followed by its writer—the reverent and scholarly treatment of the Scripture references, and of the customs of the Early Church. When a leader of the High Church party confesses that the first Christians looked at the Lord's Supper in the light rather of a meal than of a sacrifice, their contention must be considered to be given up.

Such scenes as the one that was enacted at Bow Church on Wednesday of last week, when the election of the new Bishop of London was confirmed, are calculated to do immense damage to the cause of Christ. But whose is the fault? Is it not a mockery for the herald to invite "all persons who object to the confirmation of ——— as Bishop of London, let them come forward and state their objections in due form of law and they shall be heard"—and then, when serious objections are offered, simply to smile at them, wave them aside, and proceed with the ceremony as if nothing had happened? Entirely apart from the character of the objections themselves, the whole ceremony of inviting objections, to which it is never proposed to reply, is a solemn farce. It is very painful to read the comments of the secular press upon the incident, and to notice how they sneer at this "meaningless ceremony." The ceremony ought not to be meaningless. And why were not representatives of the Protestant Societies present to make objection?

In the protest raised by Mr. John Kensit some serious charges were made. It was asserted that not only had the Bishop failed to fulfil the promises made when consecrated as Suffragan Bishop of Stepney, "to be ready with all faithful diligence to banish and drive away all erroneous and strange doctrines contrary to God's Word," but that he had personally co-operated with and encouraged those clergy in the diocese who set at defiance both the law of the land and the highest authorities of the Church. It was said that in the east of London Dr. Ingram had instituted to vacant livings clergymen holding the most advanced sacerdotal views, while on the other hand, as a member of the Chapter of St. Paul's Cathedral, he had refused to allow a clergyman to accept a certain living except on condition that he renounced his own convictions and adopted Ritualistic practices. If these are indeed the facts, Evangelical Christianity will assuredly be hindered by the recent appointment, and all who desire the spread of the Gospel in its purity and simplicity will need to be both watchful and active to maintain the true principles of Christ's holy religion.

The Pilot puts the question of ordination from the Romanist point of view in a way that ought to open the eyes of the country to the real bearings of the Anglican movement. Speaking of the ineffectiveness of Nonconformist credentials in the eyes of Anglicans, and their very different attitude towards those already in Roman orders, it says:—

> No imaginable height of wisdom, or learning, or sanctity on the part of a Nonconformist can avail anything. If James Martineau or Robertson Smith or Robert Dale had conformed to the Church of England, and desired to be admitted to her ministry, he must have been ordained by the same form as any raw undergraduate who scrapes through the bishop's examination by the help of a year at a theological college. But before a Roman Catholic priest, however ignorant or undistinguished, the doors fly open. No ordination is required.

Thus the Anglican repudiates the Nonconformist minister, but accepts the Romish priest; the Roman repudiates the Nonconformists and the Anglican equally. Here the Roman is consistent; we know where he is. There must be a large number of Church of England Protestants to whom this condition of things is a perplexity. Is it not time these spoke out more clearly on a matter so vital?

"I consider the Bible of the Protestant pastor more to be feared in Galicia than the ironclads." These are not the words of a Protestant believer but of a Roman Catholic writer, who thus expresses his apprehension of the spread of missionary effort in Northern Spain (see p. 14). It is a noteworthy tribute to the Word of God, the entrance of which giveth light.

The story of the literary evolution of our Bible of to-day forms a very interesting chapter of our national history, for undoubtedly the Word of God is inseparably bound up with the record of the growth and greatness of England. How that evolution began in the days of Wycliffe, Mr. Hoare shows in a recently published historical sketch of the various versions issued since 1382; and how Wycliffe became the leader of the revolt against the sacerdotal claim of the priests to be "the sole repositaries of revelation." The narrative of the tremendous influence exercised by Wycliffe's Bible and New Testament is an entrancing one. What we owe to Wycliffe and Tyndale it would be impossible to over-estimate, for to their devout and scholarly work the strength and majesty of the modern version is largely due; and it goes without saying that our secular as well as our spiritual liberties are based upon the Word of God.

The external microscopical examination of letters, phrases, and documents does not touch —nor even come within measurable distance of —the living personal experience of Jesus Christ which all true Christians hold as their inalienable birthright. Our faith and hope do not rest merely upon uncertain antique manuscripts; there are the marvellous phenomena of regenerated lives accomplished by faith in Jesus Christ to be accounted for. Meanwhile, it should help any disturbed minds to remember the former history of literary criticism—both Biblical and secular. It may suffice to recall the old controversy about Troy. German criticism once triumphantly demonstrated that that city had no real existence; there could be no doubt about it. Within a few months, however, the foundations of Troy were discovered, and criticism retired abashed. It has often happened so; it will happen so in the present attack upon Christ. We can all afford to wait; meanwhile, let us go on with our work.

There is a most suggestive sentence in the Book of Exodus which may prove to be a key to many Christians for the unlocking of divers difficulties.

And when the Lord saw that Moses turned aside to see (the burning bush), God called unto him.

The bush was aflame with the presence and glory of God, and it silently called to Moses to come forward and investigate its message. Humanly speaking, the destiny of an entire people hung upon the decision of one man—whether he would heed the Divine Voice or not; for on that day God announced to the willing listener his programme of redemption for Israel. When Moses responded to the silent voice of God in the bush, God spake to him by name, and declared his programme. It is always so. The higher revelation depends upon our obedience to the lower. "When the Lord saw that he turned aside to see, God called unto him." They who complain that the personal direction of God in life is unknown to them, may do well to ask if they have fulfilled the condition, of heeding the first calls of God to the soul.

It is often said that God deals with the believer as though he had never sinned. But this is far below the truth. If we were treated as though we had not sinned, we should be still in our old Adam nature. On the contrary, we have received the full penalty of our sin in the death of our Divine Substitute, the Son of God. And we have been raised together with Him, and made to sit together with Him in heavenly places. "We died, and our life is hid with Christ in God." "For the wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord."

The right spirit in which all public as well as private duty should be faced is well suggested in the following extract from a correspondent to a contemporary. The reforming party on the London County Council has gone through some chequered experiences of persecution and detraction; but its members are by no means discouraged. "I was told only last week," said this writer, "of two members who unfailingly make it a practice never to go to a meeting of the Council without first arranging a time for prayer. They are also strengthened by the fact that the real live London churches assisted in their election, and are now backing them." If all representatives on our public bodies, and in Parliament, faced their legislative and administrative work in this spirit of prayer, we should soon have a different Statute-book, and the laws would be carried out in a way that would strike terror into every evil-doer, and give encouragement to every true citizen.

Mr. Rider Haggard is rendering signal patriotic service by his articles in The Express on the Land Question. It is sincerely to be hoped that some practical measures will at once be taken to make agricultural life worth the living. We have repeatedly said in these columns that, if the vice and wretchedness of overcrowded towns and cities are to cease, men and women must go back to the land. But in the present condition of things there is no inducement for self-respecting people to remain in the country. Wages are too low, educational facilities are too limited, and life is too monotonous. All this must be altered in the interests of men's bodies and souls, so that people may live a natural life in quiet places.

It is startling to find that in the last week of March there were no fewer than 106,467 paupers in receipt of relief in the Metropolis, the figures showing an increase of nearly 2,000 above those of the corresponding week last year; 67,851 were indoor paupers. It is sad to reflect that within the wealthiest city in the world there exists a pauper population larger than that of many of our great towns, and that instead of decreasing with the growth of our national wealth, it is widening its boundaries. Only too often, alas, this poverty is accompanied by a spiritual destitution even more difficult to reach.

Dr. Clouston, one of the principal scientists in regard to alcoholism, has, in his recent report to the Board of the Royal Edinburgh Lunatic Asylum, testified strongly to the part played by alcohol in causing or favouring the development of insanity. In this report, as elsewhere for years back, Dr. Clouston urges that intoxicating drink is one of the most powerful factors in diminishing the will-power in regard to the proper conduct of life. He now goes further, however, and calls out for State interference, but it is noteworthy to find that he looks rather to the medical profession to teach men "what alcoholic abuse means and implies." And in this doubtless he is wise, for the Government has shown itself so manifestly unwilling to attempt to check an evil which is undermining the State that one cannot hope for any Ministerial action until the outside forces compel it.

In pleading for Sunday Morning Adult Schools, in The Examiner, Mr. Edward Smith, one of the presidents of that institution, claims that what the working-men of this country most need is to be made to think; and if they can be made to think about the highest things under the guidance of the highest Book, they are likely to be led to faith as well. He calls a working-man as witness to this fact, who says:—

Men often begin to open their eyes and think when they get into an adult school, and God opens their hearts as He did mine, when I began to pay attention to the Bible reading, and the good advice that is given; and common sense rules their lives in many things they never thought about before.

Here is another similar testimony:—

I never thought about saving a farthing till I came to school. A good deal went in beer and tomfoolery; now I have a nice little sum in the savings fund, have found friends, and, besides saving money, I hear something every Sunday about saving my soul.

"Godliness is profitable unto all things, having a promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come."

We are glad to find that our Government, together with that of the United States, is acting magnanimously in its demands for an indemnity from China. The other Powers seem determined to extract the last penny possible from that unhappy country, and if they insist on their present demands, some will make a "handsome profit" out of the Eastern trouble. It is a most undignified situation altogether. The Christian civilization of the West must appear a curious affair to the Confucian of the East, with its "land hunger," its punitive expeditions, and its extravagant "indemnity claims." Fortunately no voice has been raised demanding any political reparation for the murdered missionaries who have been added to the noble army of martyrs. Their blood will be fruitful in years to come in other ways than these national indemnities suggest. The reparation which the Churches seek from China is a larger harvest of souls for Christ.

The results of the Census in France once more show a diminution of the population. There are 13,000 less people than there were five years ago. The moral causes of this depletion constitute the most serious element in the situation. M. Piot, who is a true patriot doing his best to help his country, declares that the reasons for French decline in population are, the fearful spread of alcoholism; the debilitation of town and city life; and the refusal to accept the responsibility of parenthood. There is much food for reflection for ourselves in these statements; not that we are suffering, or are likely to suffer, from depopulation, but in the fact that degeneration always accompanies vice and overcrowding. Even a diminishing population is not worse than abundance of people of a low type and weak morals.

Home Nurture.

By Rev. E. GRIFFITH-JONES, B.A., Balham.

1. THE OSTRICH NURTURE.

THERE is no religious or social function at once more imperative, delicate, or difficult than the training of children. There are few on which many people so little desire instruction. Most parents seem to feel that they are quite competent to deal with the complicated problems of "child management" without any help from anyone, least of all from the theologian or the preacher. "Parental instinct," "intuition," and other phrases are made to cover a multitude of sins both of omission and commission in family training.

The possible methods of home nurture may be conveniently summed up under three heads, the third of which combines the merits and avoids the exaggeration of the other two. They are the Ostrich Nurture, the Hothouse Nurture, and the Nest Nurture.

The first is suggested by a well-known passage in Job xxxix. 13-17, where reference is made to the supposed habit of the ostrich of leaving her eggs in the sand to be hatched by what has been well called the "chance-motherhood of the sun." "For she leaveth her eggs in the earth, and warmeth them in the dust, and forgetteth that the foot may crush them, or that the wild beast may trample upon them; she is hardened against her young ones."

These words are not likely to meet the eye of those unnatural parents who wilfully or carelessly neglect the primary duty of physically nourishing and sheltering their little children. Even in our modern cities such human monsters do occasionally exist, but they are few and far between. It would be hasty indeed, however, to conclude from this that the phrase chosen to head this article is inapplicable to many of my readers in a subtler and less tangible, but no less culpable, sense.

1. For instance, are there not families in which the prevailing idea seems to be to let the children grow up without any real training at all? The great notion with some is to interfere as little as may be with the way in which the little ones develop; to give their "individuality," as it is called, as free a play as possible; to take up an towards the warfare of good and evil in the hearts of their boys and girls. This may arise from a too easy-going nature in the parents; or of a foolish fondness; or of a reaction from the memory of an over-disciplined childhood; or of a weak shrinking from the self-discipline which all true parental discipline involves. They take for granted that as they "worried through" somehow in the rush and turmoil of life, their children will do the same. And there are just enough cases in which this neglect of parental duty is counterbalanced by other influences, to give a certain plausibility to the plea. None the less it is the plea of the ostrich; it is an unnatural abdication of the highest function and dearest privilege of parenthood. If you take for granted that your children will grow up loving the truth which you never taught them, self-sacrificing as you never trained them to be, quick to distinguish and faithful to follow the highest alternatives of life, spiritually minded and gentle, God-fearing and pious—you will get a rude awakening by-and-by, and if you do not, you at least will have no hand in the process that has warmed your little ones' better nature into activity, and trained and cherished that nature into beauty and power.

2. There is another frequent form of this neglect. There are many religious parents who, while keenly sensible of their duty to give an all-round training to their children, fail grievously to keep a proper balance in regard to the factors of that training. They put a wrong emphasis on this to the utter neglect of that. And somehow the element that goes to the wall is generally the religious element.

They will venture for six days into the fog, and mud, and chill of the city, with a bad cold, and lie up on the Lord's Day for the slightest reason. They will toil terribly during the week at business, and excuse themselves with a clear conscience (of course) from doing any work for God on his Day, lest they should "break down through overstrain." But if the doctor tells them not to go to church, or to give up their Sunday School class, and their temperance pledge, for the sake of their health, they will obey him "religiously," and without question.

But we certainly must not expect our children to grow up religious if they see us neglecting "first things," and for the invisible things of God than for momentary interests and trivial objects. The ideal of "family wholeness," in observing the ordinances of religion—of happy, united, regular weekly worship, in which parents and children faithfully occupy the "family pew" in an unbroken band, is one of the most salutary religious customs that could be formed. And may I put in a plea here in favour of family attendance at the week-night service or prayer meeting? When those who have now reached middle age were children, they were in many cases expected to attend regularly at a prayer-meeting, or Band of Hope, or singing-class. Now, "home lessons," &c., are pleaded as reasons for neglecting all week-day religious observance on the part of children.

We may depend upon it that our children will naturally tend to put that comparative estimate on the duties of life which we put, and to lay the emphasis where we tend to lay it. And if we show a solicitous regard for their health, their manners, their mental culture, while we let their religious nature take care of itself, and develop or not as it may, we must not wonder if they grow up worldly or pleasure-loving or indifferent to the highest realities.

3. There is still another way of emulating the ostrich in family training. That is to delegate the religious training of our children as such to others. There are parents who hand over to the minister, to the S.S. teacher, or even to the day-school master or mistress, the spiritual as well as the secular education of their children. They will provide food, clothing, the comforts of life, the opportunity of education, the means of settling in business, with conscientious for their children. But they never speak of religion to their boys and girls, and never show a watchful care and solicitude for their conversion or growth in goodness. It is not that they are not anxious, even solicitous, about these matters. But they hide their solicitude and their anxiety from those they love so well; they hope some word the minister may say, or the Bible-class leader, or some good friend, will touch and reach them by-and-by; and in this mood they watch their children grow up, and become men and women, and pass out from under the home-roof, and into the world, without ever having had a single confidential talk with their boys and girls on the great question that settles time and eternity for us all. Is it not tragic?

There are certain duties that no fond mother will delegate to another for her babies. They are sacred to motherhood. It is only the mother's hand that can soothe the fevered brow, and ease the fretful spirit of a sick child; it is only she who can "kiss the place to make it well," and gently lull the tired invalid into peaceful sleep. And there are duties which no father would care to delegate to another man. It is our joy to provide the family living, and the means for education, and the harmless amusements of life. If anyone took away the privilege of working for our children, we should become jealous. Shall we feel like that about the comforts that perish with the using, and the pleasures that are of the moment, and not feel jealous for our proper function in the spiritual growth of our children?

In conclusion, I would earnestly put in a plea for that grand old habit of family prayer, morning or evening, as may be most convenient, which in many Christian families is so much neglected. There is no measuring the after-effects of such a custom. Some of the best elements in the social and spiritual life of this country and America are due to its wide-spread observance for several centuries. It is rapidly disappearing, we are told, and nothing is taking its place. Are we prepared to abide by the issue? Let young parents, in laying down their plans for family life, seriously consider the privilege, the impulse, the educative value of this time-honoured and truly Christian institution—the Family Altar.

"Behold, I Come Quickly."

"I WILL come and receive you unto myself." These words, so full of thoughtfulness and love, which Jesus addressed to his sorrowing disciples, have been a source of truest comfort and help to the followers of Jesus Christ in all ages.

Since then, after many years of longing expectation, that grand message rang down from heaven: "Behold, I come quickly." Are we all looking forward to this great event? Is it the inspiration of our lives? Perhaps a few practical thoughts, as to how this subject ought to affect our daily life, may prove helpful to some.

In the first place, we must be ever watchful, for "of that hour no man knoweth." "Blessed are those servants whom their Lord, when He cometh, shall find watching."

Watch! How often do we find this word in the Scriptures, and in connection with it, comes the beautiful word "prayer." The two go hand-in-hand. "Take heed, watch and pray, for ye know not when the time is;" "Watch and pray, lest ye enter into temptation;" "Let us watch and be sober .... pray without ceasing."

If this watchful, prayerful spirit were ours, the whole trend of our lives would be altered. All the troubles and worries which beset the lives of every one of us, and more especially those who are trying to be loyal to Christ, amidst the countless temptations of everyday life, will seem as nothing when viewed in the light of that grand prospect—the coming of the Lord Jesus for his own. The Apostle Paul has well said: "For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory."

Let us then be ever watchful and prayerful. "Blessed is that servant whom his Lord, when He cometh, shall find so doing." We must ever have on the whole armour of God, and be engaged in service for Him—trying to win some souls for his glory. If we have not the opportunity for active service in our lives, there is none to whom the privilege of prayer is denied. As Tennyson puts it, "There are more things wrought by prayer than this world dreams of."

Let us live with this bright hope ever before us, and when all seems dark and overwhelming remember these encouraging words, "Behold, I come quickly!" E. S. C. P.

FOUNDATION TRUTHS OF THE GOSPEL.—XV.

THE HOLY SPIRIT.

By PROFESSOR LAIDLAW, D.D.

OUR object is to present Him as the actual Divine Worker of personal salvation, the living Agent in all real Christianity. We take for granted his Personality, his place in the Trinity, his relation to the Divine Son, and other preliminary truths which were won at the cost of immense suffering and strife in the early centuries of the Christian Church (see "St. Basil the Great on the Holy Spirit," R.T.S., paragraphs 75-79). We take for granted even his share in the obtaining of Salvation through his action upon our Lord and Saviour Himself. To Him the N.T. Scripture expressly ascribes the formation of our Lord's Holy humanity at the Incarnation; to his descent at Jesus' Baptism, his full consecration for his Messianic work; to his Anointing, our Lord himself ascribes his own call and power to preach the Gospel (Luke iv. 14-18). The most difficult of his miracles—the casting out of devils—He Himself ascribes to the agency of the Spirit of God. His whole career of beneficence St. Peter thus describes, "God anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghost and with power" (Acts x. 38). The crown of all his work—his self-offering on the Cross—is put in the same kind of connection: He "through the Eternal Spirit offered Himself without spot to God" (Heb. ix. 14). His Resurrection took place according to the Spirit of Holiness (Rom. i. 4). Is it not significant of the profound order and connection of these Divine processes, that this agency and aid of the Holy Spirit to our Lord Himself in obtaining redemption for us comes to view in the Gospel history before there has been a word said about the action of the Holy Spirit in converting a sinner or sanctifying a saint?

Well, taking all this for granted, look now at the NAMES or TITLES given to the Spirit in connection with his special work or office in human salvation. His almost constant designation is THE HOLY SPIRIT. Besides its main reference to his supreme distinction from all other "spirits," it suggests that "Holiness" which is the end and outcome of all his work. The more special title, SPIRIT OF CHRIST, SPIRIT OF THE LORD, SPIRIT OF HIS SON, besides indicating his personal relation in the Godhead, which the early Church enshrined in her Filioque, "proceedeth from the Father and from the Son," reminds us also that He acts upon or along with the God-man in the whole work of Redemption, and that He acts for Christ and from Christ. The title denotes his "mission," his vicarious position, his immediate relation to the Redeemer in his work. He supplies the room and place of Jesus Christ. He works and effects whatever the Lord Christ has undertaken to work and effect towards his disciples. As the work of the Son was not his own, but rather as He loves to say, "the work of the Father who sent Him," so the work of the Holy Spirit is not his own, but rather the work of the Son by whom He is sent, and in whose name it is accomplished. The mode or manner in which He does it, is by presenting or exhibiting Christ to men, by uniting them spiritually to Christ, and by maintaining their union and communion with their Lord. Therefore is He emphatically called "The Spirit of Christ." Once more, there is that most special title, PARACLETE—COMFORTER, ADVOCATE, HELPER (Jno. xiv. 16, xv. 26, xvi. 7), which may be called his official name as the Vicar of Christ, the "other Comforter," whom Christ was to send from the Father.

The first outpouring of the Holy Spirit on the disciples collectively disclosed momentous facts in the plan of salvation. It proved the accomplishment and acceptance of the Saviour's offering on the Cross, and his reception into glory. This triumphal entry of the Spirit into the Church as a baptism of fire had the effect which Jesus foretold, of convincing many of the world around them. So began "the mission of the Comforter," the dispensation of the Holy Spirit. This public gift further demonstrated that the Gospel of Jesus was intended, not for Jews alone but—as given first at Samaria (Acts viii. 17), and afterwards to Gentiles in the house of Cornelius (Acts x. 11)—for mankind at large. St. Peter himself states the demonstration (Acts xv. 8, 9), "God, which knoweth the heart, bare them witness, giving them the Holy Ghost, even as He did unto us; and put no difference between us and them, purifying their hearts by faith."

In like manner, many gracious disclosures are made of the personality and agency of the Spirit, in the process of salvation as it is carried out personally and individually. In that initial change by which a man passes from the state of sin into the state of grace, the Holy Spirit is the Agent. But at that stage He does not obtrude Himself on the subject of his operations. He is dealing with a man whom He finds in the world, and of the world. He brings home conviction to him with a secret efficacy, in a private manner, working on the "hidden man" of the heart. Often the man is unaware at the time that he is under this Divine Worker. The Spirit is convincing the soul of sin against Christ, is bringing the man face to face with Christ, and, therefore, it is of Christ alone He testifies. Let any of us who may have access to such scenes be careful how we act. We have no right to drag aside the veil from these sacred operations; so far as we act at all, it must be in the same manner—holding forth Christ and pointing the man to Him, rather than hinting at any agency of God's Holy Spirit, until the great decision is accomplished, and Christ Himself is accepted.

In the further action of confirming or "stablishing," the regenerated and converted man, there is a change of method, a discovery of the Divine Agent. Whereas the former was secret, this is now open and patent. It is the witness of the Divine Spirit "with our spirit that we are the children of God." It is the bestowal of the robe, the ring, the credentials of returning prodigals. The subject has now a joyous consciousness of the Spirit's work. It is spoken of in Scripture, as Fire, Oil, a Seal, or an Earnest—all open and manifest signs of spiritual joy and power.

There is also a change of effect. The effect of initial or regenerating grace is to unite the soul to Christ. The effect of confirming or sealing grace is to maintain the communion of the soul with Christ, and to bring it into fulness. It is of moment to observe that all the figures used of this gift of the Holy Spirit imply that it is mutually shared by Christ and by his redeemed. The Unction flows down from the Head to the members. The Seal with which God the Father seals Him, also seals them. The Earnest is a pledge sent from Him to them; an Abiding or Indwelling of his Spirit in them, to attest that they are his property, and shall at last be wholly Christ's. Indeed, this is the crown and innermost essence of the Spirit's work of redemption in our souls. The previous or initial grace of the Spirit may be held to be external to the man, compared with this. The awakening of the dead conscience, the kindling of the spark of faith, the putting the soul right with God, once for all, by pardon and acceptance in Christ, the new birth, and baptism of repentance—these are works done by the Spirit of God upon the man, he being, as it were, the passive subject. But now, when the Spirit of Christ seals him, anoints him, dwells in him, works through him, Christ is realized. It is Christ who lives in him. He is led by the Spirit, walks in the Spirit, prays in the Spirit, brings forth the fruit of the Spirit; he not only is witnessed to, but in his turn becomes a witness for Christ by the power of the Holy Ghost. Thus is the circle completed. The inwardness of a strong, progressive life shows itself by consistent, bold, first-hand testimony for Christ to the world without, and so the Lord's purpose in sending his Spirit is fulfilled. Without the Holy Spirit we have practically no Christ.

Christ, with his infinite resources, with all his love and grace, is brought near to the individual believer, and made a part of his very being, by the gift of the indwelling Spirit. This is the centre-point of evangelical faith. The heart of personal piety is left out, if we think of the Spirit as only the esprit de corps of Christendom, if we make Him no distinct Divine Person, but only a metaphorical name for the indwelling Christ. It is by his person and agency that the Christ indwells in his children. In the words of Fletcher of Madeley, "the baptism of the Spirit is the quintessence of our holy religion."

The Simultaneous Mission.

THE sweet-toned Gospel bells have pealed
Thro' all our land;
God's "thoughts of peace" have been revealed
On every hand!

The bells of heaven have joyous rung
Their answering chime;
For earth and heaven one song have sung
The self-same time.

What countless sins are all forgiven
And hearts grown light;
What crimson stains—as snow-flakes driven—
Are made pure white!

What wedding garments have been donned!
What passions stirred!
In souls that hastened to respond To Jesus' Word!

What wand'rers have been welcomed back,
And kissed and blest;
What straying ones have found their track
And God's sweet rest!

Ah! how our hearts within us burn
At all we see;
And we, who prayed, O Lord, return
With thanks to Thee.

WINIFRED A. IVERSON.

A Missionary Farewell.

A LARGELY attended meeting, of an impressive character, was held on Tuesday of last week at Devonshire House, E.C., in connection with the forthcoming return of Mr. and Mrs. F. Lane to their field of labour in Ochilonda district, Bihé, Angola. Other members of the outgoing party were Mr. Phillips, a young man of colour from Demerara, and Miss Lindley, while interest was added to the occasion by the presence of a contingent of missionaries of the American M.E. Church, who are also bound for Angola.

After some introductory words from Mr. A. Garstin, part of 1 Kings xvii. was read by Mr. W. H. Bennet, who presented some suggestive thoughts on Elijah's trials of faith.

Dr. Norman Case, who formerly laboured in China, followed with an appealing address on some of the chief and added some appropriate and stimulating words from Paul's charge to Timothy.

NEEDS OF THE MISSION FIELD,

The next speaker was Mr. F. Lane, who commenced by reading a letter from Mr. Robert Chapman, of Barnstaple, in the course of which the venerable writer said: "Accept a word of love in Christ Jesus from one who is your helper at the Throne of Grace. How great the honour put on you and your beloved wife to be living witnesses among the inhabitants of the land of Ham. The meetings . . . are by the poor blind world thought little of, but how precious in God our Father's sight and of the holy angels." Mr. Lane, in the course of a review of the position and prospect of the work in Angola, told of some remarkable cases of conversion, particularly one of a native who has developed into an eloquent and attractive preacher, and who holds Gospel meetings nightly in his village, reading and expounding the Scriptures.

A deeply-spiritual note was struck by Mr. F. S. Arnot, who spoke at the outset on the need for spiritual discernment on the part of elder Christians, by which they may perceive, as Eli did, that "the Lord had called the child." Turning to the Angola field, Mr. Arnot said that it has many difficulties, not the least of which is the secret opposition of the Portuguese official world. A touching story was told of out of the possession of a dealer who, finding him to be on the verge of death through ill-treatment, offered to sell him. Mr. Arnot, in consideration of the lad's forlorn state, asked for him as a gift, but the dealer retorted that it was contrary to his "principles" to give anything away, and that he would prefer to "knock the boy on the head." The result was that Mr. Arnot bought the boy for a yard and a half of cloth, and carried him for many miles, day after day, strapped to his back. The rescued lad has now grown to young manhood, and is a pillar of the work.

After Mr. Phillips had given some account of the Lord's dealings in leading him out to missionary work, Mr. F. Schindler, who is familiar with Angola, gave some interesting reminiscences of his labours there. He illustrated the ignorance which prevails not only among the natives, but on the part of the Portuguese officials. "Who is this man who has come among you?" asked one of the latter, referring to Mr. Schindler. "He is one who with him," was a villager's reply. "But," objected the official, producing a crucifix, "has he this in his house?" "No," was the answer. "Then," urged the Romanist, with the force of one who concludes an argument triumphantly, "if he has not a God, how can he have a God's words?"

Speaking for mission workers in the northern part of the Continent, Mr. E. H. Glenny encouraged the missionaries with news of victories over Islam, and Dr. Nichols, of Dublin, voiced the sympathy of friends in Ireland. The party is to sail on April 26.

A New Missionary Steamer.

AN important addition was made last Saturday, April 20, to the world's fleet of missionary ships, by the launch at Chiswick of the stern-wheel steamer Livingstone, which has been built to the order of the Regions Beyond Missionary Union. A deeply interested company gathered in the yard of Messrs. Thornycroft (the builders), composed of representative missionaries, students, and the friends at home who "hold the ropes" that others may go down into the pit of heathenism to seek out the jewels for the Master's crown. Mr. T. A. Denny presided over the proceedings, and the hearts of all were deeply touched as he called on Dr. Harry Guinness to lead in prayer. To the thanksgivings for which Dr. Guinness found words there was generally added at least one more for his own re-appearance after his recent serious illness.

It fell to Dr. Grattan Guinness to give a brief narrative of the events which had led up to the occasion. He sketched the progress of the work of the Lord in the Congo region during the sixty years since David Livingstone began his active labours for the Dark Continent. Particulars were given of the establishment of the original mission now under the care of the American Baptist friends, and of that carried on under Swedish auspices. Then he stated that the Congo Balolo Mission was that day. For some years the sixty-feet steamer Pioneer had been most useful to the workers on the Upper Congo and its tributaries, but was now inadequate to meet the growing requirements. The Livingstone is 111 feet long, 19 feet 3 inches broad, draws only 2 feet 6 inches of water with 20 tons on board, while the tonnage is 84. The guaranteed speed is 10 miles an hour, or 9 miles when using wood—the only fuel at present obtainable on the Congo. The compound engines are supplied with steam from two boilers. Ample sitting, sleeping, and hospital accommodation are provided for missionaries on two decks, and steps have been taken to protect them as far as possible from mosquitos and malarial fever.

The contract price was £5,630, of which one-fourth remains to be paid. Transport and putting the parts together at Stanley Pool are estimated to bring the amount still required up to at least £4,000. The council will not incur debt in the matter. and it is hoped that it may be possible to despatch the boat, with all charges provided for, within two months.

Most fittingly other missions were represented by Rev. George Grenfell (Baptist Missionary Society), who has been the of territory in tropical Africa, and who testified to the large extent to which such an auxiliary will add to the usefulness of the missionaries scattered over the great horse-shoe bend of the Congo.

The slender ribbon which finally held the vessel in check was broken by Lady Hope, who named it the Livingstone, and wished it God-speed in the work of bearing the good seed of the Gospel into the interior of Africa.

Expansion, which has been long desired, will be possible as soon as the vessel arrives. Besides being the bearer of necessary stores, and the means of conveying missionaries to and from their stations, the Livingstone will be a moving sanitarium. It is believed that a trip down the river and back again will bring back health and strength to many a jaded worker who might otherwise require to be invalided home to England.

The Ladies' Protestant Van Mission.—Owing to the progress of Ritualism in rural districts, a few ladies have sent forth a van and an earnest Protestant evangelist to enlighten the people. Thousands of tracts have been distributed, and a number of lantern lectures and other addresses delivered on "The Reformation in England," "The Spanish Armada," and other topics. Classes for children are held in the van, and the sick and spiritually dead are visited and instructed in their homes. Further information may be had from the Hon. Secretary, Ladies' Committee, Church Association, 14, Buckingham Street, Strand. W.C.

Christian Police Association.

DELEGATES, secretaries and other workers rallied in large numbers from all parts of the country on Thursday in celebration of the eighteenth anniversary at Exeter Hall of the International Christian Police Association. An early morning prayer meeting was followed by a conference, at which Dr. A. B. Stoney presided, and an address was given by Rev. E. L. Hamilton.

The afternoon audience naturally consisted chiefly of policemen and their wives. The majority were men in the prime of life, and as one after another stalwart form arose, and with firm voice bore joyous testimony to the saving and keeping power of Christ, a deep sense of gratitude to God prompted many audible expressions of praise and thankfulness.

Mr. A. A. Head presided, and directed attention to the

which had grown out of the Association. He asked for special prayer to be offered that God would abundantly bless and sustain the labours of their missionaries in endeavouring to win the heathen to a knowledge of his love. Miss Tritton, in reviewing the history of the union, suggested that while its present position shows that considerable progress has been made, much more is waiting to be undertaken. She referred to the work in Japan, where the outlook is particularly promising. Miss Riddell, an experienced and devoted missionary, left England in December, and en route for Tokyo paid a visit to Singapore, where by the arrangement of the Commissioner a meeting of the men was held. Half of Miss Riddell's time is being spent in police work, and the Japanese evangelists are labouring earnestly with many tokens of Divine blessing. Of the evangelists in Ceylon their superintendent writes that a year of faithful work has been done, though much of it is and bristles with many discouragements.

VERY MONOTONOUS AND UPHILL,

Encouraging news comes from India concerning the Association's native agency. From Guzerat Mr. Paterson writes:—"We are deeply grateful to your Society for the work it has done in our midst. I do not know of another mission district in India where the Gospel is preached to the police as it is here. Allah Ditta is welcomed in every police station, partly for his singing and music, and partly for the sake of his tracts."

The Chairman pleaded for deeper enthusiasm in missionary effort, and this plea was further emphasized by Miss Nott, a worker of the Church Missionary Society. Miss Nott's energies have been principally devoted to ministering to the lepers. Many opportunities have been afforded, however, for witnessing the noble work which has been inaugurated among the police.

A few helpful words of encouragement were spoken by Rev. E. L. Hamilton, who closed the meeting with prayer.

Later in the evening two impressive gatherings were held in the great Hall, when there was again a large company of policemen and their friends. Those who took part included Mr. J. H. Tritton, Revs. F. Paynter, Canon Fleming, J. Gregory Mantle, Dr. Robert Anderson, and Major Treeby.

The scope of the Association's operations at home is well known, touching, as it does, the life of policemen on every side. To the institute in Adelphi Terrace many a weary constable has turned to spend his off-duty hours in the bright reading-room, and obtain a comfortable meal in the restaurant. During last year over 200 signed the pledge. In the Metropolitan and other city forces many break down under the strain, and are invalided out of the force without attaining a pension. To relieve this the Convalescent Homes at Hove and Harrogate receive ailing policemen, and the quiet life and Christian influence have proved a source of true comfort and blessing to many. The two orphanages at Redhill and Harrogate are now sheltering 122 children, and many of these are bereft of both father and mother.

Other Lands.

The Gospel in Northern Spain

By BUDGETT MEAKIN.

A WRITER in the newly-established Spanish review, Nuestro Tiempo, attempts to describe the work of English missionaries (whom he conceives to be political agents) in the province of Galicia, especially at Vigo, Marin, and Pontevedra. In doing so, he affords an interesting illustration of the way in which this work strikes an educated Spaniard who has not come personally under its influence. The ascription of political as well as religious motives is inevitable in a Roman Catholic country, where the Jesuits and others have taught that there can be no separation of Church and State.

Señor Rovira, the writer in question, first gives a picture of the state of the people among whom the work is maintained, proving, in his opinion, the hopelessness of the presumed religious object. He describes the district as "Catholic par excellence," continuing:—

If the number of sanctuaries, if the abundance of miraculous images, if the name of Compostella alone, do not indicate that Galicia is the privileged land of religion and faith, there would be evidence of it in the crucifixes, the images, and the little altars for souls which are seen by the roadsides, which adorn the gateways of estates, which consecrate the walls of many houses. A humble worship, but one welded by the innermost feelings of the soul, is sustained by these religious monuments. . . .

It is in this land of overflowing devotion, and of eminently punctilious worship, that Protestantism, with its inner piety, its frigid ceremonies, and its iconoclastic zeal, recruits its proselytes by unwearying toil. . . . The English missionaries could not have chosen a less suitable soil for the propagation of the dogmas of those great heresiarchs. The choice of the scene of their propaganda cannot, therefore, fail to be suspicious. I believe it was Macaulay who said that England had added more dominions to her empire by exporting Bibles than by mobilizing soldiers, but it is a certain fact that a colonizing expansion has been always tributary to the religious idea. To occupy a conscience is more important than to occupy a province. I consider the Bible of the Protestant pastor more to be feared in Galicia than the guns of the ironclads.

One of the principal centres of Protestantism is Marin. . . . There the English Protestants have built a house so large that it appears a palace, and so firm and solid that it appears a fortress. It is surrounded by humble dwellings with damp and cracked walls, with roofs on which moss flourishes. Beside such miserable shelters that edifice appears even haughty with its well polished stone-work; high, clean, closed, mysterious, seen from afar it strikes one at once as exotic. . . . "There lives a stranger," says the observer at once. . . . "There lives an enemy!" he might also have said.

Señor Rovira proceeds to describe his visit to the parish priest, who explained that the classes in authority had facilitated the establishment of this mission by their religious indifference, but that, fortunately, a reaction had now set in, the Catholic patron (of his living) having instituted a school for boys, while another parish had one for girls, and a wealthy "nabob" had promised to defray the cost of other defensive works.

In the town, he was informed, there existed about fifty disciples of the sect, who educated their children in such perverse dogmas. They were, as neophytes, severe observers of the doctrine. When anyone flagged in his convictions, and inclined towards the ancient faith, he was surrounded by his comrades, watched at all hours, admonished without ceasing, until he was seen to be enfervoured anew, and sincerely to have repented of his intentions. It was difficult to check their action, because they succoured the necessitous with prodigal hand; they cured and assisted the sick; they supplied them with medicine gratis. With them lived a woman who began to have among the people the repute of a miraculous quack.

Afterwards, he concludes, I ascertained that the magnificent house of Marin contained but two English pastors. They manage Spanish with difficulty, and are ignorant of the local dialect. For the propaganda they utilize the good offices of two artizans, a shoemaker and a blacksmith. Of the two, the son of Vulcan appears to me to possess in a certain degree a rude eloquence very suitable to make his apostleship fruitful.

The Protestants settled in Marin, as those scattered throughout the province, do not belong to the official Church of England. They are Methodists, as I think I have discovered from the information given me as to their agapés (love-feasts), which they celebrate at certain times of the year, and the practice of other rites similar to those of that sect. Their principal work on the doctrinal ground is reduced to lectures and comments on the Bible. I have been assured that there are villagers who accompany their agricultural tasks by singing the Psalms of the Scriptures adapted to the very sweet and melancholy rhythm of popular airs.

There is as much to encourage as to interest and to arouse pity in this account, which augurs well for the future of that little church of Marin. It is evident from this outside evidence that its simple members are zealous, devout, and rejoicing in Christ—two of them at least evangelists. May the Spirit, who has won them in so hard a field, abundantly bless the seed they shall themselves sow.

The Philippine Islands.

A PHILIPPINE politician remarked recently: "We are in an epoch in which all seems to be changed completely. The great among us desire to appear small, and the small desire to appear great. Yesterday we were in doubt, now to-day we are calm. Everything is strange! Incredible things appear. The very fact of my conversing freely over the political questions of our country is to me credible." The extraordinary change in events here through the change of masters cannot be grasped even by persons well-read in history who live in the midst of them. The native mind seems to be veritably startled by the great and vital change from bondage, religious and political, to liberty under a strong foreign influence. Many are taking the oath of allegiance to the American Government, as they foresee through it the assured prospect of liberty of conscience, education, and increased prosperity for themselves and their people.

Anything on the Government part which has a shadow of favouring the Romanist party is hailed by the natives, with the exception of the priests and their following, with opposition and fear. When some of the natives or missionaries are speaking freely about religious matters, it is not infrequent to have one or another of the hearers exclaim:—"A short time ago we could not have spoken in this way, nor listened to such speaking, without losing our liberty or our lives!"

Wherever the native languages of the people can be spoken, as it is by the native workers (and will be later by the missionaries), the people listen with a marked pleasure. Spanish has never become the language which appeals to the heart feelings of these people. It was merely the medium of intercourse between them and their masters. Yet so great is the desire of the people to hear the Gospel, though having to hear it from the missionaries in Spanish and through interpreters, it is most eagerly listened to, the natives often manifesting such interest that the missionaries are thrilled.

The high prices for rent, living, and in fact for everything, make missionary work a rather serious problem here in the islands at present. But, as the natives themselves say, "God has in his providence at length sent them what they sought," and we do not question that what He has begun He will surely carry through. So we press on, ever confident in God.

Box 437, Manila. E. M. White.

[We shall gladly receive any communications for this excellent and devoted missionary, Miss White, whose mother, A. E. W., has often been one of our valued contributors.—Ed.]

Mr. L. B. Armstrong (of Spain) writes that Miss White took part for three years in a mission in Madrid, where she learned Spanish and gained valuable experience. Later, she opened a mission at Caracas for the Christian Missionary Alliance of New York. When the Philippine Islands were opened to the Gospel, Miss White was appointed to labour there, and sailed for Manila in company with a native who had been sent to Switzerland for education. This companion is acquainted with two of the native languages in the Philippines, as well as Spanish, and to some extent with French and German. While in Switzerland she was converted in a remarkable way, and became deeply taught of God's Spirit. Hearing of Miss White's intentions, she offered herself as aid in the service of the house, and also in mission work, and she is proving herself very capable in both directions. The cost of this simple mission cannot amount to less than £200 a year.

The Distress in India.

ACCORDING to the latest intelligence from India, the condition of affairs in parts of our great Eastern Dependency is such as should evoke the earnest, prayerful sympathy of our readers in behalf of the starving people. While the missionaries are called to bear afresh the responsibility of caring for the famine-stricken, it must be remembered that, in addition to the demands of their regular work, they have undertaken the task of supporting, educating, and training no fewer than 25,000 orphans, as one outcome of last year's visitation.

Rev. Dennis Osborne writes from Poona: "The hot months have come suddenly and severely, and distress and suffering have rapidly increased. The pitiful wail of pinching hunger again curdles the blood, while starved and staggering forms once again shock the eye. Plague, too, stalks abroad like a death shadow, and altogether a weariness of heart creeps upon one, chilling hope, and filling the mind with sad foreboding. Oh, if only the dear British Christians could realize how much, in such seasons, sympathy, helpfulness, and prayer stand for to the weary and almost fainting toiler! Now, we seem to be left alone, but God is with us. I do hope that the interest of your generous Christian readers may be, to some extent, renewed."

In addition to the many testimonies which we have received as to the value of the food stuffs and clothing despatched to India through the help of our readers, Dr. Colin Valentine, of Agra, sends some scores of letters from workers in all parts of the affected districts, expressive of gratitude and appreciation. We append a selection:—

The Matron of Vanguard Faith Mission, Mahim: "Please accept heartfelt thanks. The goods come in a time of need, and are much appreciated."

Rev. R. Henderson, Borsad: "The foods are increasingly useful, the biscuits and milk especially so."

Lieut. S. M. Jacob, Nimbatera: "The foods will all be of the greatest use, and will be immensely appreciated."

Major C. Hutton Dawson, Kotra: "The consignment has been of the greatest use, and I would ask you to convey my thanks to the donors."

Miss Frances M. Beatty, Zenana Mission House, Borsad: "We have a large number of children who have come to us owing to the famine, and it has been a great boon to have the milk for the weaker ones. The 'Quaker Oats,' too, is a great boon for the sick ones."

Rev. A. Voss, Kurku and Central Indian Hill Mission: "All our missionaries write how great a help these things are, especially the milk."

Rev. E. F. Frease, Baroda: "The foods continue to give most excellent results. We should be glad to receive as much condensed milk as can be supplied."

Rev. G. W. Blair, Godhra, Panch Mahals: "The articles proved very useful in saving the lives of the famine orphans."

Rev. Thos. Francis, Jogdalpur, Bastar State: "For the good these articles have done I cannot thank you enough." Mr. Francis gives some instances, in which the foods proved of great use in saving life.

Mrs. L. W. Moore, Basim, Berar: "I wish you (Mr. M.T. Carroll, of Messrs. William Watson & Co., who generously undertook the work of receiving and forwarding) could send me a quantity of infants' food from the London Christian. I have a number of children here, under two years of age, who must have milk diet."

Pandita Ramabai, Kedgaon: "These nourishing foods have been most useful. The condensed milk was welcome for the children."

We may reiterate the earnest hope that Christians will not rest satisfied, however, with the fruitful results of past gifts, but will continue to aid the missionaries at this trying time, in view both of the continued need for relief which exists in a number of districts, and of the other heavy responsibilities which they have been called upon to undertake in the cause Christianity.

Roman Aggression in France.

I HAVE been surprised to hear the Associations Bill, just passed by the French Chamber of Deputies, and sent up to the Senate, described as a measure interfering with the religious liberty of Roman Catholics. May I be permitted to offer a few remarks to show that this feeling is based on a misconception of facts? The Bill in question has nothing to do with religious liberty, within the scope of the law as it stands in France.

The Concordat of 1801, agreed upon by Napoleon I. and Pius VII., fully provides all that is necessary to the full exercise of liberty of worship for all Roman Catholics. The State spends annually over £2,000,000 to support all the Roman Catholic fabric. Cardinals, archbishops, bishops, along with the 36,000 curés of the 36,000 communes of France, are paid by State money. This arrangement of things, however obnoxious it may seem to some people, is in no way touched by the Associations Bill.

It is against those religious communities which have come into existence without authorization from the State, and against some others which have no right to exist in France, having been formally banished by special laws never repealed, that the Bill in progress is directed. A Roman Catholic religious community imposes upon its adherents the renunciation of all that makes life useful to self and others. Civil responsibilities cease, family ties are broken off, natural duties and obligations are disregarded. Each member of a religious order, in becoming such, renounces everything he may possess; wealth of whatever kind, influence, personal liberty, liberty of judgment, are handed over to the Superior of the community, who from that moment has absolute right to use all as he thinks best for the good of his community.

THE MAN CEASES TO BE A MAN—

he becomes a cipher or a tool, as the case may be. When he dies, his property, however large, pays no transfer duty; the religious community inherits, and as it never dies, it goes on inheriting. In every case the State is defrauded of all duties imposed by law on the transfer of property. These communities are found everywhere in France; they may be likened to a huge cuttlefish, whose tentacles are extended over the whole land, sucking at the vitals of the people—and they suck to some purpose.

A Parliamentary document, published when the Bill was introduced by the Government, shows that the actual amount of visible property, lands and buildings, held by the various religious communities in France, is 1,100,000,000 francs, or £44,000,000, and the general conviction is that this represents only one-tenth of the real fortune in the hands of these congregations, which would thus amount to £440,000,000! All the Generals of the various communities are foreigners—most of them Italians, some Germans—residing in Rome, so that the enormous influence possessed by these religious communities in France is practically wielded by the Roman Curia. It is unnecessary to insist on the danger of such a position of affairs. All French Governments, from the very beginning, monarchies and republics, have been adverse to that state of things, and have passed laws to restrict the development of the religious congregations. It is most worthy of notice that it should be under the present Republican Government, so bitterly opposed by all Roman Catholic influence from the first, that the greatest development of the congregations has taken place in all directions. It is high time that this development should be checked.

There is another way in which the religious congregations exert

A DANGEROUS INFLUENCE.

This refers especially to the teaching congregations—Jesuits, Dominicans, &c., &c. They have almost exclusively in their hands the bringing up of the young men belonging to the old nobility, and to the rich bourgeoisie; and, beyond that, they pick up in their elementary schools and colleges all the cleverest boys belonging to poor families, and bring them up free of charge. All these young men, after passing the various stages of instruction, come into their preparatory schools, for the admission by competition into special Government schools—Polytechnique, Military School of St. Cyr, Naval School, Normal School for professors in the University, &c., &c. Nearly the whole of them pass successfully, and in due course they become officers in the army and navy, professors, engineers, &c.

After thirty years and more of this steady and persevering action, they have come to have a considerable proportion of the officers of the army under their complete control. The individuality of these young men has been so moulded, that their whole influence, however high and great it may become, is, first of all, bound to be given in favour of the congregation's interests. They are not French first of all, having first at heart the interest of the Fatherland; they are Romanists first, their Fatherland is Rome, and they do all in their power to establish the supremacy of Rome and the Roman Curia over French civil authority and national sentiments. They try to make believe that Protestants are not Frenchmen, but foreigners, representing and serving England and Germany; they themselves are the real foreigners, who try their best to make a foreign rule, that of the Roman Curia, supreme in France, and blindly obey the orders of a foreign potentate, the Pope.

I think I have said enough to show that the Government is amply justified in trying to put a stop to the inroads of its bitterest enemies.

Florence Industrial Home.

IT is gratifying to learn of the continued success of the Boys' Protestant Industrial Home at Florence, and the numerous Christian agencies of which it is the centre. The thirteenth biennial report bears testimony to the marvellous manner prayer has been answered, and help given at the right moment. True, there have been times of anxious waiting, but the lack of visible human aid has helped to maintain and stimulate communion with God.

No alteration has been made in the curriculum of the schools and workshops during the year. In the infant school the number of scholars has averaged from seventy to seventy-five, and real progress has been noticed among the little ones in their acquiring a knowledge of God's Word. From the upper classes several have entered the higher public institutes, and are now working with the aim of becoming teachers, missionaries, or business men. In the workshops the boys are taught blacksmithing, veneering, wood-turning, carpentering, wood-carving, tailoring, mosaic work, and other trades. All the orphans who have left the Home after serving their apprenticeship, are now earning their living. For the young people who have served their apprenticeship in the Home, and are in their first year, and consequently earning but moderate wages, a boarding-house is provided, where a cordial welcome is extended to the boys on returning from work. Under the influence of family life they are kept from seeking questionable company and amusements. The boarding-house gives every promise of attaining the end for which it was founded, and, moreover, now succeeds in meeting entirely its own expense.

None of the scholars during the two years could be received at St. Chrischona for training as missionary evangelists owing to their youth; but several are now preparing to enter that house of God, where they are maintained free of charge. All the evangelist scholars continue to be a blessing in the various positions to which God has called them.

The "Trebbiolo" School of Agriculture has two important branches in central and southern Italy. Pupils are trained in agriculture and gardening and domestic duties. The school enables pupils not only to take positions as stewards, but especially to become good farmers, capable of cultivating land on their own account.

The direct work of evangelization is continued by means of the Sunday-school for adults. As the majority of these poor people do not know how to read, the teachers insist on their learning by heart a number of verses of Scripture. A touching sight is often witnessed when the teacher is stopped on the road by aged women anxious to recite their verses, so as to be sure of knowing them perfectly. Only those who know the absolutely destitute condition of these poor creatures can realize the extent of the sacrifice which they are willing to make in their eagerness to possess a copy of the precious volume for themselves. Dr. Comandi may be addressed—8A Via Aretina, Florence.

The Anti-Saloon Crusade in America.

THE anti-saloon crusade, led by Mrs. Nation, has passed from the somewhat spectacular to the plainly practical, for last week in municipal elections all over the State of Kansas the opponents of saloons and their attendant evils were victorious, and in at least twenty towns and cities mayors were elected who stand pledged to shut down the saloons and joints. Topeka, the capital of the State, was, perhaps, the most conspicuous scene of victory. On election day over 4,000 women turned out in a heavy snowstorm to vote for Colonel Hughes, who had promised Mrs. Nation and her "home defenders" to enforce the prohibition laws, if elected. The wives of prominent citizens and capitalists took working girls and the wives of labouring men to the polls in carriages, at all of which committees of women remained all day to instruct their sisters in the mysteries of casting their votes. The battle-cry of the Nationites was, "Down with saloons and gambling-houses!" and, although the Democratic candidate in Topeka was the heaviest property owner in the city, and had behind him the power of the big distilleries and breweries of Missouri and other States, his fight was quite a hopeless one. Mrs. Nation's candidates carried four-fifths of the State—a result that will doubtless afford her and all good people no little satisfaction.

The Work at Port Said, Egypt.

AFTER seventeen years' residence at Port Said, a large part of which has been spent in arduous service for the Lord, Mr. Eoll has been obliged to leave Egypt, partly on account of increasing age and broken health, and partly from the desire to be permanently with his family at Stuttgart, Germany.

Mr. Eoll has received from time to time from the Christian public various gifts for his projected Sailors' Rest. These were used for purchase of ground and materials, to lay a deep and solid foundation, necessary by reason of the sandy soil, and to raise a few feet of the building. All this was costly, and the funds were then exhausted. He has now handed over the ground and materials to the Stewards' Company, Limited, whose offices are at 16, Paternoster Row, either to be turned to suitable account, or to be disposed of so that the proceeds may be applied to some other branch of the Lord's work.

This company, consisting chiefly of business Christian men, exercises a trusteeship over land, buildings, &c., used for the Lord's work in several foreign countries. No suitable person to continue the work has yet presented himself. H. W. Case.

World's Y.W.C.A.

AN interesting letter from a Cape Town correspondent has been received by the Hon. Emily Kinnaird at the Word's Y.W.C.A. office, 26, George Street, Hanover Square, W. The writer says:—"God is truly blessing the work in and around Cape Town. In many ways He has set his seal upon our being here. On January 14 a lady came to see me who was staying for a time in Cape Town, and who was interested in women's work. She had a long talk, and on her return to her hotel she wrote me a most kind note, enclosing a cheque for £200 towards our rebuilding fund, saying at the same time she did not wish her name to be known publicly. The following day another lady sent £10 towards the same object, and she, too, wished to keep her name unknown. The classes are all increasing, and God is speaking to hearts. The suburban Bible readings are being much blessed, some young ladies, whom I did not know, coming to tell me how God had met with them, and so on.

"Yesterday afternoon we had a drawing-room meeting at the Attorney-General's house, by the invitation of his wife (Mrs. J. Rose Innes), to tell some of the ladies of Cape Town what the objects and working of the Y.W.C.A. are. Lady Gill (the Astronomer Royal's wife) presided admirably. Miss Clarke, of Wellington, told something of the work from an American point of view, as there were several American ladies present, and she had been for some time connected with the Harlem Association. Then I followed, and one has seldom spoken to a more interested or sympathetic audience. Twenty ladies became honorary associates. I hear frequently from Port Elizabeth, and am told of blessing there too."

THE LATE

Rev. James Chalmers,

OF NEW GUINEA.

A TELEGRAM from Sydney on Sunday last brought the sorrowful news that Revs. James Chalmers and Oliver Tomkins had been murdered by natives on the Fly River, New Guinea. Further intelligence is, of course, awaited with anxious interest. Meantime, we cannot but mourn the cruel injury thus inflicted upon one of the best-worked fields of the London Missionary Society. Mr. Tomkins only joined the Mission about two years ago. Mr. Chalmers is one of the best-known missionaries in the Southern Hemisphere, receiving his first appointment as long ago as 1866.

Mr. Chalmers was born at Ardrishaig, Argyllshire, and became a member of the United Presbyterian Church in 1860. After a course of study at Cheshunt College and Highgate, he was appointed to Rarotonga. Having married Miss J. R. Hercus, he sailed from London in the John Williams in January, 1866. When off Aneityum the ship struck on a reef, and returned to Sydney for repairs. After visiting several of the stations she was wrecked on the island of Niue, with some of the missionary party on board. They ultimately arrived at Rarotonga in May, 1867—sixteen months after leaving England! In the same year Rev. E. R. W. Krause returned to England, leaving the Mission in Mr. Chalmers' charge. Here he conducted the pastoral work in the native churches, also the Theological Institution for training native preachers, and the various schools on the island. Having been appointed to New Guinea he left Rarotonga in May, 1878.

After some preliminary labours, Mr. Chalmers (accompanied by his brave young wife) began his now famous journeys among the hostile tribes of the great island. He travelled unarmed, trusting to Him in whose work he was engaged. Many years afterwards he was able to say: "Only once in New Guinea have I carried a weapon, and then we had spears thrown at us." Mrs. Chalmers had the happy art of drawing the savages to her, and thus inspiring confidence and personal regard. As the months passed, native lips, failing to pronounce the missionary's name, called him Tamate—"Teacher;" and as they came to love and trust him, they spoke of Maino ("peace") as following his steps. At length he was called in to settle native quarrels, and to arbitrate in matters of difference between contending tribes. Hence an English naval officer was able to testify:—"Everywhere 'Tamate's' influence is supreme;" and the conceptions of Teacher and Peacemaker were combined in the native ideas of the missionary and his message.

In the course of years the life of the missionary was frequently in grave danger. At the close of 1880 reports were received that the Elema natives purposed making a raid to kill Mr. Chalmers and Ruatoka, the native teacher, and then to attack right and left, and "pay off all accounts." Under these circumstances Mr. Chalmers resolved to visit Motu-motu, and "beard the lion in his den." It was a bad season for travelling; the natives said it was too late, but he resolved to try. Before setting out, he opened the new church at Port Moresby, and baptized the first three New Guinea converts. The church was crowded, and all seemed interested. On January 10, 1881, he started. The boat's crew were considered fools, rushing into the arms of death. Wives, children, and friends gathered round weeping. One of the converts who accompanied him said: "We know it is all right; the Spirit that has watched over you in the past—naming the various journeys—will do so now, and if we return safe, won't the people be ashamed?"

The visit proved successful. Semese, the old chief of Lese, was pacified; both chief and people were charmed, and quite willing to make peace, and pay a return visit. This incident was turned to good account, as Semese was taken on to Motu-motu, where Rahe, his son, was chief. Semese spoke nearly all night, exhorting to peace, saying that now "Tamate" and the Port Moresby people had visited them, they ought no more to go about exalting themselves, fighting with their neighbours, and speaking evil of their friends. Soon after his return, Mr. Chalmers baptized the first two women of New Guinea converted to Christianity.

Some time afterwards, going to Delena, the devoted missionary, after his usual friendly methods, selected a site for a mission house. He found favour with the chiefs, Kone and Lavao, the former giving as much land as was required. His teaching had gone before him, and the people were waiting for the Gospel. Just at this time, however, another attack on his life was proposed by the natives. It found the missionary prepared. In what came to be called "the Delena Fray," there was a call for the missionary to present himself with his gun. Mr. Chalmers went, but unarmed. Rushing into the disturbed quarter, he shouted

"Maino!" (peace); and soon there was a hush in the terrible storm. Walking through the village, he disarmed some of the combatants. Then Kone pointed out Arua, the chief, or sorcerer, of the attacking party. He recognised in him a man who, on a former visit, had left his presence in great wrath. Taking his weapons from him, Mr. Chalmers linked his arm, and walked him up the hill; talking kindly, he showed him the mission flag, and said that was "Maino," at the same time warning him that on no account must he descend the hill. All right; Arua would stop fighting. Soon afterwards, Mr. Chalmers was again brought out by the report that Kone was about to be killed. More warriors had arrived. The attacking chiefs assured him they would not come near the Mission premises, but he replied, "Right, friends, but you must stop fighting, and on no account injure my friend Kone." Then he called a meeting, and they all agreed to peace. The sequel was sad. In the absence of the missionary, Kone was killed while protecting a defenceless man. He placed the man behind him, receiving the spear into his own breast!

In a volume issued a few years ago, entitled Pioneer Life and Work in New Guinea (3s. 6d. Religious Tract Society), Mr. Chalmers gave us very readable sketches of his travels and labours during the years 1878 to 1894. His great work of recent years was to open up the great Fly River region to Gospel light and civilizing influences. It was his privilege to see great changes in the ways of the people. From time to time he had the joy of baptizing new converts. He also witnessed a decided docility among many of the village communities.

Mr. Chalmers had reached the age of fifty. The ministry of the Gospel of Peace cost him his life. The official telegram, received early in the week by the London Missionary Society, makes this clear. The mission agent at Sydney says: "Wired Thursday Island. Received following: News from Daru states Chalmers and Tomkins, twelve students, murdered Aird River. Tribal fight at time. Chalmers landed, tried to make peace." In this case, as in others, may the saying prove true: "The blood of the martyrs is the seed of the Church."

A Poet's Memorial.

JAMES MONTGOMERY, unlike so many other men of genius, did not lack honour in his own lifetime, and his fellow-townsmen in Sheffield still keep his memory green. But there is another, and, we would fain believe, a more beneficent, memorial than any erected to his memory in the old country. This is to be found far away, across the ocean of which he so often sang.

It is a far cry from Riseland, Tobago, to Sheffield, Yorkshire, but the connecting link is interesting. The parents of James Montgomery, John and Mary, were the first missionaries to the negro slaves in Tobago. They settled at Signal Hill, in a disused French guard-house, in 1790. There Mary Montgomery, the poet's mother, died, worn out with exposure and fever. The missionary work commenced by them was twice abandoned, mainly on account of the struggles between the French and the English, who successively took and re-took the Island. In 1826, after twenty-three years' interval, steps were taken to resume the work, and on July 13, 1828, a large church was dedicated on Riseland Estate, the mission station receiving the name of Montgomery. The building of this church was materially facilitated by the desire manifested about that time by the friends and admirers of James Montgomery in Sheffield and its neighbourhood to give him some token of their affection and esteem on his retirement from public life. A subscription was set on foot, which in a short time realized the sum of £200, and this amount was remitted in August, 1827, "as a contribution from several friends in Sheffield and elsewhere towards the re-establishment of the Moravian Brethren's Mission in the Island of Tobago."

Since 1828, until the present time, the work has been maintained and developed. Many thousands of Negroes—bond and free—have been taught, and brought up in, the Christian faith, and untold good to soul and body effected through the instrumentality of the many missionaries who have served at Montgomery. The church was enlarged in 1839, and again in 1850, after its destruction by the hurricane of 1847. The Jubilee of the structure erected in 1850, was celebrated on March 25, 1900. The congregation now numbers 1,381. In the four day-schools there are 266 boys and 268 girls, while the Sunday-school roll bears 658 names.

At Montgomery, Tobago, then, there is a lasting memorial of one whose name cannot, indeed, die while Christian hymns continue to be sung; and at the last, in the "great multitude that no man can number," there will be many who will point to the poet, James Montgomery, as the instrument of their being brought from the darkness of African savagery, and the miseries of West Indian slavery, to the glorious liberty of the children of God.

Nonconformists in Conference.

THE opening of the twentieth century has been marked by many striking events, and it is matter for congratulation that an important step should have been taken in the drawing together of the Nonconformist Churches of England. It is at once significant and pleasing that the principal gatherings of the Baptist and Congregational Spring Assemblies are being held this week as joint sessions. These two denominations occupy so much common ground in doctrine and polity that when the emphasis is put on the points of agreement rather than on those of difference, it is at once found that the latter need never stand in the way of harmonious fellowship or combined effort in aggressive work.

Business sessions of the two bodies were held on Monday; the first of the joint sessions on Tuesday morning. Rev. Dr. Maclaren, of Manchester, succeeded Rev. William Cuff, of Shoreditch, as president of the Baptist Union, and Rev. J. R. Wood, of Holloway, was elected vice-president. The opening meeting of the Congregational Union was presided over by Rev. Dr. Parker, of the City Temple, at which Rev. Principal Scott, of Lancashire College, was elected chairman for next year.

The scene at the City Temple on Tuesday was one worthy of the occasion. Long before the time had arrived for the opening devotional service, the building was crowded in every part. As one after another of the leaders of the denominations concerned made their appearance, they were greeted with great enthusiasm. Whatever might be the lines of cleavage before and after the meetings, it was evident that was complete at least for the time being. They had not come together as members of certain Churches, but as fellow-believers in the Risen Lord. Rarely have prayer meetings been known such as that over which Rev. Professor W. T. Adeney presided for the first half-hour. Profound gratitude was expressed for the oneness in Jesus Christ, which had brought two great divisions of his Church together, and by closing up the ranks was giving to the world an object-lesson of dwelling together in unity on the part of Christians who, at the same time, gave up none of their own individuality. The occasion was one long to be remembered by all who took part in it, as marking an important epoch in the history of English Nonconformity.

Dr. Joseph Parker was received by the whole audience standing, as he took the chair. It was evident that he spoke under deep emotion, as he bore testimony to the feelings with which he personally hailed this united assembly—"not to discuss our differences, but to verify and magnify our points of common belief and practice." He took as the best possible omen for the future the strong desire to know one another better, and to enter into the overwhelming urgency of the application for tickets for the gathering.

A deep hush fell on the audience as Dr. Parker produced a communication just received, which contained a confirmation of the sad news of the previous day that James Chalmers, of New Guinea, had been murdered by hostile natives on the Fly River. "There is a time when formality is superseded by holy passion. We all feel as if we had been present at the tragedy." Tender sympathy was expressed with those who had most nearly and keenly suffered; and a deep "Amen" was heard as the prayer was voiced that God might "so stir our hearts that we shall not relax our missionary efforts because of this disaster."

"AN OLD PREACHER ON PREACHING."

The opening address, by Rev. Dr. Alexander Maclaren, as President of the Baptist Union—"An Old Preacher on Preaching"—was a notable deliverance. He showed how truly these joint meetings are "the natural expression of a real and felt unity." From many burning questions, he had been led "to offer some considerations as to the preacher's office, its themes, its demands, its possibilities." After a brief review of the present position and influence of the preacher of the Gospel, the point was brought out that "he is the result of a process of evolution, starting with the simple New Testament arrangements; and while great authorities have told us that differentiation of functions is the mark of progressive evolution, we have in the preacher of to-day an apparent coalescence of three offices which are separate in the early Church—those of evangelist, teacher, and prophet.

"The preacher is (1) an Evangelist. The far-reaching pre-suppositions and implications of the fact, its force as the spring of transformed humanity, of individual and social progress, open out into a wide room where all speculative and practical intellects may expatiate, but the beginning of all these is a Person and the fact of his life and death.

"It is one thing to preach salvation by Christ; it is another to preach Christ as the Saviour. Hearts are more surely to be won by showing them Jesus crucified than by our comments on the sight. A Christ without a cross is a king without a throne.

"Has the fact of sin, its reality and its consequences, its due place in modern preaching? I for one very much doubt it. Modern theories of heredity and environment, modern laxity of moral fibre, have taken many shades of blackness out of the black thing. Men think less gravely of sin, and so they superficially diagnose the world's disease, and therefore they superficially prescribe the remedy. It is fatal to the earnestness, the pathos, and the power of the preacher's work. Unless we have our hearts and minds laden with the burden of men's sins, our voices will not ring out the vibrating notes of the good news of One who saves his people from their sins, because 'Himself bare our sins in his own body.'

"The preacher is further spoken of as a herald, and that title implies that his proclamation must be plain, clear, assured. He is not to speak timidly, he is not to bring an ambiguous message in cloudy words. The Evangelist needs to deliver his good news with urgency, as if it was of some moment that people should know and accept it. Is that note of urgency audible, as it should be, in our preaching? Our recent Mission has taught us that if we are to get at the outlying masses, whom the Church of to-day, thank God! is awakening to long to reach, we must not be afraid of flinging away some of our old appliances, and shaping new ways of getting at the dense crowds of English heathen.

"The preacher has to be (2) a Teacher as well as an evangelist; but the men and women of this generation, we are told, form their opinions from books, not from sermons. I should demur to the word 'form,' as expressing the process by which a large proportion of them arrive at what they call their opinions; I should consent to say 'get their opinions,' for it is not a process of reasoned formation, but of more or less accidental and unreasoned acquisition.

"The first thing that I desire to lay stress on is that the educational is never to be separated from the evangelistic office. There are 'diversities of operations,' but the truest teaching must be evangelistic and the truest evangelising must be educational. The true theologian ever brings his doctrines to bear on the emotions, and then on the will, and then on practice.

"For the most advanced instruction does not leave the most initial truths behind. It only unfolds them. The teacher's subject-matter is the same as the evangelist's. The difference lies in the mode of viewing it and the purpose for which it is considered. The last book of Euclid rests on the axioms and postulates that precede the first. No Christian thought can ever travel beyond the Incarnation, Sacrifice, and Ascension of Jesus Christ, the Indwelling Spirit, 'the forgiveness of sins and the life everlasting.' To leave these behind is

NOT PROGRESS, BUT DECADENCE.

Not to get past, but to get more deeply into these truths is the growth of the Christian life.

"As the theme is Christ, so the text-book is the Bible. Whatever the Higher Criticism has done, it has not touched the main substance of the Gospel we have to preach, nor do even its most advanced positions seem to me seriously to affect the homiletic worth of Scripture. The truths of the Bible remain, even if extreme theories as to date and manner of origination of its several parts were much more undeniably proven than they are. I appeal to my younger brethren especially, beseeching them not to be tempted by either the notion of increasing the attractiveness of their preaching, or the wish of youth to do something original. The habit of prefacing a sermon with a text is, no doubt, a survival, and it is sometimes unmeaning enough, but it is a witness that the sermon's true purpose is to explain, confirm, and enforce Scripture. Once the text was followed by a sermon dealing with it. Would that it were always so now! Better to put new life into the old form by making a text really what it is meant to be, than to break through it in a flight after 'something fresh and unconventional.'

"It does not follow from the Bible's being the text-book that preaching is to be expository in the technical sense of that word, though I confess to a belief that if we had more of that we should have a robuster type of Christian, with a firmer grip of his professed creed than is common to-day. The widest scope is to be given to varieties of mind and ways of assimilating Scripture, but that ministry only is true to its duties, and up to the height of its large possibilities, which makes its main purpose the drawing out into clear statement, and the supporting by forceful argument, and the impressing by emotional pleadings, what it has pleased God to say to men. If it was to give us the Book, it is worth our while to toil to fathom its depth, to saturate our thinking and feeling with its truths, and it is our highest function and office to interpret them to our brethren.

"How are we to discharge our teaching work? Mainly by the strong, sympathetic presentation of positive truth. Controversy is needful, but it is seldom efficacious. It convinces the already convinced. Better to abound in affirmations than in negations, though they will be branded as dogmatism. Speak the truth, as you know it and feel it, and let it work. There are two ways of getting rid of weeds—to grub them up, or to sow good seed, which will spring and clear the ground. And we must never forget that what we have to teach is no philosophy for the few, no system of doctrine for trained understandings, but the Gospel for the world.

"Besides being evangelistic and educational, the preacher's work is also (3) Ethical; and in that aspect especially may rightly be designated as prophetic. The form of inspiration belonging to the prophet in Israel is not claimed for the Christian prophet; but every true preacher should be able to say,

'THUS SAITH THE LORD.'

There are different forms of inspiration, and that which is secured by hours of communion, by earnest effort to stretch the narrow tablet of the mind that it shall be capacious enough to hold the amplitude of God's message.

"Nor does the lack of the predictive insight damage the claim to the name. It is a commonplace now that that element is not the sole, nor even the principal, one in the ideal of the prophet. If we rightly understand what he was to Israel, we shall rightly understand how he still survives, in modern garb indeed, but the same. It was his task to hold aloft the Divine ideal for Israel, to bring life to the test of the Divine law, to stand before king and people undismayed, with his face as iron against their faces, to denounce national and individual transgression, to set the trumpet to his 'mouth and declare to Israel its sin.'

"The more loftily we think of our work, the more lowly will be our estimate of ourselves, and the more earnest our efforts to reach up to the height of our possibilities, which are therefore our duties. The more we feel the burden of the Lord laid on us as evangelists, the more shall we have a passion for souls, which will fill our hearts with wistful tenderness, and soften our voices into prevalent entreaty. The more we rise to the requirements of our function as teachers, the more shall we labour to learn what we have to teach, and make all our culture however wide, all our acquirements however various, all our thinking however profound, subservient to the Master Truth, like mirrors set round a central light. And we shall feed the lambs as well as the sheep, the babes as well as the full-grown men, seeking to achieve the simplicity in which full comprehension of deep truths is ever garbed, and so will speak with the authority of the Truth itself and not as the scribes. The more we are constrained by the word of the Lord given to us as his prophets, the more bold shall we be to weigh popular habits and customary sins in the balances of the sanctuary, and the more shall we sometimes be honoured to help in stemming evil—but if not, we shall have delivered our souls, and 'whether men will hear or whether they will forbear, they shall know that there hath been a prophet among them.'"

A patriotic resolution, dealing with recent national events and the present position of affairs, was moved by Rev. Dr. J. Guinness Rogers, and seconded by Rev. Dr. Richard Glover, and adopted.

The enthusiasm of the gathering seemed to reach its highest point when Rev. Principal Rainy was introduced. In his opening words he paid a graceful tribute to the memory of his friend, James Chalmers. Drawing the lesson of the great loss, Dr. Rainy passed on to show that "there is no sign that the noble army of martyrs is ceasing from among us, and if Christ can make men die for Him, as not only missionaries but native converts also are doing, He is able to make men live for Him." Bringing respectfully and earnestly the prayerful congratulations and sympathy of the United Free Church of Scotland, Dr. Rainy greeted the assembly as "the embodied representation of the principle of liberty—liberty to hear Christ's Word and to do Christ's will according to your consciences." Speaking of the prospect for the future, he admitted that there are various elements in the aspect of affairs which strike thoughtful people with a certain sense of alarm; but at the same time pointed out that although we believe in the final and glorious victory of the Gospel and of the Saviour, we should not be cast down because appears to be very energetic, and even to be doing his work with great apparent success—so long as we do not lay down the battle upon our own side. What we believe we can claim is—that the Lord will enable us to fight the good fight of faith, and to encounter the enemy.

Speaking of the present position of Biblical criticism, his advice was that the people of God should not allow themselves to be shaken or disturbed with regard to the beliefs which have been held by them and their fathers for nineteen hundred years. He had heard enthusiastic people assert that no harm could possibly come from the freest and fullest criticism, but he was impressed with the harm which might be wrought by such means in the minds of simple and unlearned people who did not understand how little certainty had been attained by the critics regarding the positions which they advanced. Criticism is expressed in such a manner as to cause real though unnecessary trouble in the hearts of very many who hear it, and in any case he believed that it would be well for earnest critics to emphasize publicly the statement of their own positive faith in the sufficiency of the Bible as the message of God, and that it is a sufficiency which is of God Himself.

FROM HIS OWN EXPERIENCE

he was, he said, convinced that even if the right were conceded of such criticism as is troubling all sections of the Church, reasonable limits had long been overstepped. He looked to the future for the fixing of legitimate limits; but he did not expect an end of trouble on such questions, for during the entire time of its existence all the powers of the human mind had been brought to bear on the closest scrutiny of the Bible, and he did not see any prospect of this coming to an end.

Irish Notes.

DR. CHADWICK, Bishop of Derry, does not think that the status of ministerial candidates in the Irish Church has been lowered by disestablishment, but he sees financial troubles ahead of the Church, owing to the loss of rents by the landlords, and the impoverished condition of the tenants, and to the manner in which Protestants are being hunted out of the country.

A society in Dublin, called the Alexandra College Tenements Company, are trying to solve the problem of the housing of the working classes in a simple and inexpensive manner. They have taken some of the old solidly built city houses, put them into repair, and into a sanitary condition, and are teaching the tenants to whom they have let them the value of cleanliness and order. Several voluntary lady workers go amongst the tenants, collect the rents, and teach the people thrift. The work has been so successful that more houses are required, and a similar scheme has been projected by the Social Service Union of the Dublin University.

The General Synod of the Irish Church met in Dublin last week. An address on the Liturgy was delivered by Dr. Alexander, Archbishop of Armagh, and discussions took place with reference to ritualism, the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, and the Divinity School in Trinity College, Dublin. During the sittings of the Synod a brass was unveiled to Dr. Chas. Inglis, a native of West Donegal, who was the first Bishop of Nova Scotia; and a statue was unveiled by the Lord Lieutenant to the late Lord Plunket, Archbishop of Dublin. The Lord Mayor of Dublin and several members of the Dublin Corporation attended the unveiling of Lord Plunket's statue. The meetings were very successful.

The Mayor of Lyons has issued an order prohibiting the establishment of any shop, or other place for the sale of intoxicants, within 250 yards from any cemetery, church, hospital, or school.

Welsh Notes.

A MEMORIAL column has been erected, and has just been unveiled, over the grave of the late Rev. D. Roberts, D.D., of Wrexham. Dr. Roberts died only a few years ago, and left behind him the memory of a pure and holy character, and preaching and poetic gifts of high excellence.

One of the most valuable of the publications of the Book-Room of the Welsh Calvinistic Methodists is the recently published "Commentary on St. John's Gospel," by Rev. Cynddylan Jones, D.D. Dr. Jones is an uncompromising opponent of the Higher Criticism and the New Theology.

Free Church organizations in Wales are taking their part in opposing the abolition or modification of the Royal declaration regarding certain Romish doctrines. At the annual meeting of the Carnarvon Nonconformist Council held last week, an ex-president of the Welsh Baptist Union moved, and an ex-moderator of the Welsh Calvinistic Methodist General Assembly seconded, a resolution which declares it to be imperative "that effectual steps be taken to obtain from the Sovereign a clear and unmistakable pronouncement of his firm adherence to the Protestant faith."

Scottish Notes.

A CONVENTION of Wesleyan Methodist local preachers in the West of Scotland was held on Saturday, April 13, at Kilsyth, when a discussion took place on the non-success in aggressive work of Scottish local preachers as compared with their English brethren.

At a meeting last week of the Scottish National Sabbath School Union one of the speakers drew attention to the closing of mission schools in summer time, whereby the children were left to the teaching of the streets. He urged that these schools ought to be kept open, and the holiday attendances of teachers so adjusted as to meet the necessities of every case. Other directors also spoke on the subject, a strong desire being expressed that societies would take up this matter in earnest.

A church census was taken at Aberdeen last week on behalf of the Aberdeen Journal. The weather was very unfavourable, and no doubt that fact accounted for many absentees from the various places of worship. Out of a total estimated population of 153,161, the returns showed an aggregate attendance of 27,293 people at ninety-four churches and other religious services. This represents 18 per cent. of the population, compared with a percentage of 19·6 in Dundee, where the church census was taken a fortnight earlier. The total number of sittings in all places of worship in Aberdeen may be approximately stated at 57,187.

Rev. L. M. Isitt, who has been conducting a temperance campaign in Dundee, declared in the course of one of his addresses that one clause in the existing licensing laws was practically a dead letter—namely, the regulation which prevents a publican giving drink to a person already drunk. If the Lord Provost and Magistrates, and the men they put in to manage the affairs of the city, went round any Saturday night and made surprise visits at the public-houses they would put the fear of death on the publicans. If they were in real earnest, and meant business, they could, without any further law being placed on the Statute Book, shake the liquor traffic to its overthrow.

An instance of the extent to which dissension has split up communities is quoted by the Northern Weekly. The number of families in a certain hamlet is four; ten years ago three belonged to the Free Church, while one gave allegiance to the Established. When the Free Presbyterian Church was formed nearly eight years ago, a family threw in their lot with the new body, and the Union of last October resulted in a further division. At the present moment all the four Presbyterian Churches are represented in this township. In the sparsely populated parish of which it forms a part there no fewer than ten preachers, lay and clerical, constantly employed.

At the annual meeting of the National Bible Society of Scotland it appeared from the address of the secretary (Rev. James S. Nisbet) that the society's field of work stretches over four continents—ten countries in Europe, five in Asia, six in Africa, three in South America, with two islands in the South Seas and the colonies of Canada, Australia, New Zealand, and the Cape, an ample field of diverse races, tongues, colours, and creeds. The work itself includes translation as well as circulation. Copies of two new versions were laid on the table—the Gospel of St. Luke for the Torres islanders and the Gospel of St. John (to be followed by the entire New Testament) for a remnant of the ancient Paulicians in Hungary. A third version has been sanctioned for Lubaland, in Central Africa.

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, April 28. Zechariah vi.

THERE are two visions in this chapter. In the first, four chariots issue from between two mountains. The mountains may have been the Mount of Olives and Mount Moriah, between which lay the valley of Jehoshaphat; or they may, more generally, signify the secret purposes of God within which He hides his counsels. In either case, the chariots evidently symbolize Divine judgments on the Gentile nations, who had made havoc of his people, and especially against Babylon and Egypt, on the north and south of the Holy Land. The "bay," or as it might be rendered, "the fleet," are reserved for further developments of the Divine purpose, but are specially commissioned to go to and fro, counterworking any surprise that might be sprung on the chosen people, now returned to their own land (7). How good it is to know that God's sentry angels keep watch and ward about us, so that no ill befall! "He shall give his angels charge over thee, to keep thee."

In the second, there is a beautiful foreshadowing of the kingly priesthood of our Lord. Three Jews had come from Babylon, with an offering of gold and silver, which was made into a double crown, to be set on the head of the high priest, foreshadowing the time when Messiah, the Branch, should be a Priest upon his throne. For centuries these two offices had been kept jealously apart. When King Uzziah essayed to enter the Temple to burn incense, he was resisted by the high priest and all his brethren, and the dread brand of leprosy arose upon his forehead. But Jesus was to be after an earlier type, "the order of Melchizedek," who was king of Salem and priest of the Most High God. In Him the counsel of peace between the priestly and prophetic office was to be established. What a blessing there is in such a conception for us all! We need a Priest to deal with the penalty which is justly our due, and to intercede for us; but we need, equally, one who has the prerogative of a Master, and the mighty power of a King.

MONDAY, April 29. Zechariah vii.

A deputation had come from the captive Jews in Babylon, asking whether they should continue to observe the fasts, which had been instituted, by common consent, on the anniversaries of the fall of Jerusalem and the murder of Gedaliah.

Zechariah undertook to answer their inquiry, and the first part of his answer is given in this chapter. He says that these fasts were instituted by the Jews themselves, with no special reference to the will of God. They were regardless of the moral precepts which He did enjoin, but punctilious about fasts which He did not (5, 6, 7). How true this is still. Men will break nearly every command in the Decalogue, but will be most punctilious to maintain points of church-etiquette and ritual. The brigands in Sicily are very careful to attend to the admonitions and services of their church.

The prophet takes the opportunity of indicating the points in which the people had wandered from the God of their fathers, as a warning to their children. Let us be very careful in self-examination, lest, under the profession of ardent religiousness, we are neglecting the demands of pure morality. It is an awful thing for the soul when there is a divorce between religion and morals, when it has religiousness but not religion.

TUESDAY, April 30. Zechariah viii.

A message of love and peace. God had returned to Zion, to dwell in the midst of the beloved city, which would become the abode of holiness and truth. So if God will dwell in our hearts, the atmosphere of our lives will be changed. Yes, and in the case of Jerusalem, material prosperity would return also—the streets full of old and young, without fear of the approach or attack of the foe. It might seem "marvellous" to man, with his limited capacities, but it is as nothing to the Eternal God, before whom the universe lies open. Do not measure things by your own poor standards, but by his, who has meted out heaven with a span, and takes up the isles as a very little thing.

Such was to be the prosperity of the new era, that the fasts of former days, which commemorated the sad disasters that had befallen the Jews, would be turned to feasts of joy and gladness. Yes, dear soul, and so it shall be with thee. The days will come when thy sorrows shall be turned into joy, when the things which have filled thy heart with anguish shall be those that shall fill thee with rejoicing. Thou shalt see the Divine purpose in it all. It is said that the oyster's pearls grow where it has been injured. Be of good cheer: God will explain Himself ere long, and thy fasts shall turn to feasts.

WEDNESDAY, May 1. Zechariah ix.

From this chapter and onwards we have the distinctively prophetical portion of this book. The first paragraph (1-8) refers to the expedition of Alexander the Great, who marched through Palestine on his way to attack Damascus and Tyre. The land of Hadrach is evidently Syria, and these countries suffered terribly. In Tyre alone the conqueror slew 8,000 with the sword, crucified 2,000, and enslaved 80,000. But the Jews escaped, because, as is stated in the first verse, their eyes were toward the Lord. For this reason God encamped about his house (8). So God still encamps about them that fear Him, and delivers them.

The second paragraph (9-10) contrasts with the haughty Grecian monarch the lowly estate of the expected Messiah. These memorable words were, of course, literally fulfilled, as on Palm Sunday. Notice that the King brings salvation. It is only as you recognise the kingship of Jesus, and bow before it, that you experience his saving power; and where Jesus comes He brings joy. Remember this verse as your answer to any who suggest that religion is a gloomy thing, which kills joy, and murders merriment. The bells of Mansoul never rang so merrily as when the King re-entered it. From Jerusalem Immanuel speaks peace to the heathen. He made peace by the blood of his cross. He speaks peace from his throne. And in ever-widening circles his power shall spread, till the whole world has been brought under his sceptre.

In the closing paragraph (11-17), we get a prophetic glimpse of the great struggles of the Maccabees for liberty, which by the blessing of God were so largely successful. If we are prisoners, we may at least be prisoners of hope, and turn to our stronghold of salvation. Oh, how great is the goodness and beauty of our God!

THURSDAY, May 2. Zechariah x.

The early rain fell in October, the latter at the end of February (1). There are some indications that we are on the eve of a gracious reviving of the Church of Christ.

Throughout his life our Lord mourned over the common people, as sheep not having a shepherd, and He became such to them, and out of them came the Apostles and the founders of the primitive Church (4). Probably, however, the immediate reference of this chapter is to the marvellous uprising of the Maccabæan revolt, the last stand of the Jews against the conqueror's yoke (5, 6). What consolation is suggested by the sixth verse, "They shall be as though I had not cast them off!" We may have greatly sinned and been greatly punished; we may seem to have been cast out from the purposes of God: but God will accept us, on our true contrition, and we shall be as though we had never been cast off. Where sin has abounded, grace shall much more abound; where the Apostle has denied his Master with oaths and curses, there will be the promised Pentecost.

What a remarkable prediction the following one is of the present age, in which the scattered Jews are described as sown throughout the world (8, 9). It has been a terrible experience for them, of harrowing in with the soil, of pain and anguish unto death: but the harvest will repay all God's dealings with his chosen, when He gathers them again to their own land, through seas of affliction. Is God sowing thee, suffering believer, in the great agony of thy life, so that thou art falling into the ground to die? Be of good cheer, thou art not forgotten. He will bring thee again, and thou shalt walk up and down in the consciousness of acceptance and salvation.

FRIDAY, May 3. Zechariah xi.

This chapter probably describes the fall of Jerusalem, and the destruction of the second Temple, consequent on the rejection of the Messiah. The Temple was largely built of the cedars of Lebanon, the oaks of Bashan—hence the reference of the opening verses.

In the person of the prophet we are introduced to the Messiah himself, who undertakes for a short time to be the Shepherd of Israel, though He knows full well that their destruction is at hand. They are a flock for the slaughter; but they are nevertheless dear to the heart of God. The two staves represent the double reason of their preciousness. "Beauty," they were fair to Him, by the imputation of His ideal; "Bands," they were bound to Him by covenant. As for their shepherds, the priests and rulers, they were utterly abhorrent to the pure and holy Christ, and were cut off (8, 9).

How touchingly and graphically the rejection of the Lord Jesus is depicted! The price which was paid to Judas for the deed of treachery, the covered sarcasm of the words, "a goodly price," the casting down of the silver pieces in the temple, and their destination to purchase the potter's field; the breaking of the staves, for the flock had ceased to be beautiful, and the covenant was apparently suspended in its operation; the fact that our Lord's earliest adherents were the poor of the flock, for not many rich or mighty were chosen — all these items were so exactly verified. It is said by some that vv. 15, 16, 17 predict the uprising of Antichrist. This much is true, at least, that if men refuse Christ as their Shepherd they become the flock of death and despair. If they will not choose God, He gives them over to a corrupt and evil mind, to a terrible and inevitable destiny.

SATURDAY, May 4. Zechariah xii.

This prediction refers to the future. As the present age closes, the European nations will be found in the siege against the Holy City—to their own destruction; for it shall cut in pieces all who burden themselves with it. Then, as a torch of fire will set a flame to sheaves of corn, and woods of timber, so Jerusalem shall be the source of destruction to the whole of their adversaries. This deliverance shall not accrue from the prowess of the Jews themselves, but from the mighty saving power of God. Note the emphasis: "The Lord shall save the tents of Judah first; the Lord shall defend the inhabitants of Jerusalem; I will seek to destroy all the nations that come against Jerusalem."

Simultaneously with the destruction of their foes, God will pour out a spirit of grace and of supplications upon his people, and they shall look on Him whom they pierced, and mourn. It appears that as Saul of Tarsus was convicted of sin on the road to Damascus by the vision of Jesus whom he persecuted—he looked on Him whom he was piercing and mourned —so the Jews will suddenly see Jesus, their long-lost Joseph-Brother, and be stricken with contrition. Then from the whole land, suddenly delivered from the bloodthirsty vengeance of the foe by the interposition of Him whom their fathers crucified, there shall arise one long wail of sorrow and pain. The land shall mourn; but each individual and clan shall take home, as a personal matter, the guilt of Messiah's rejection. As the cry rent the heavens when Josiah was carried home dead from the field of Megiddo, so piercing and agonizing shall be the penitential wail of the convicted and converted Jews. The one source of penitential grief is in the wounds of the dying Lord. We may repent by an act of the will, but our hearts only break after we have looked on Him, and realized how much our sin has cost.

Primroses.

By GRACE WINTER.

WE all love primroses, do we not? When we see their bright faces we really feel that spring has come at last. I expect most boys and girls go out into the woods to pick primroses at least once during the springtime. Do you ever sit still in the midst of your picking, and let the flowers talk to you? They will, if you will listen. But you need to keep very still to be able to hear what they have to say to you.

The last time that I went to the woods to pick primroses, I heard them say many wise and true things. Here are some:—(1) "If you had come to look for us in the winter, you would have found neither yellow blossoms nor green leaves. And if you had dug right down to our roots, you would scarcely have known if we were alive or no. Our life was hidden away where you could not see it. But when spring came, we rose from the dead. Some day your winter will come to you. Your bodies will die, and will be buried, as our roots are buried in the earth. But if you trust in the same Lord who created us, you too shall rise again in the eternal spring-time. And when you rise, you shall be more beautiful than now, for you shall be like Jesus.

(2) "God cares for us. He sent the rain and the sunshine, and the warm air to coax our shoots out of their winter nest in the dull earth. He taught us how to grow and how to blossom. He gave us our colour and our scent. God cares for you, too. If He has done so much for us will He not do more for you? His love and kindness, his grace and mercy, are everywhere about you. He gave you life, and friends, and health. He sends us to-day to bring you a message of hope, and peace, and comfort, and to remind you that He loves you. God is love.

(3) "Our roots are fixed in the earth, but we keep our faces turned up to heaven. Some flowers hang their heads and look down to the ground, but we like to keep our faces turned to the sun. So, though you live on the earth, you too may keep your faces turned toward heaven. Instead of looking always at the darkness and the troubles of earth, you may look up the glory and the purity and the beauty of heaven, where you hope to be some day.

(4) "We are content to live just where God has placed us. If we can make but one corner of our native wood a little brighter and prettier; if we can rest any tired eyes; if we can be of any comfort to one who is ill and troubled, we are satisfied, because we are doing what God wanted us to do when He put us here. So, if you can make your little corner of the world brighter and sunnier by your presence in it, you will be doing what God wanted you to do when He placed you in your homes.

(5) "We just grow quietly every day, without making any fuss or noise about it. You cannot see us growing or hear us growing, but we do grow every day a little bit nearer the sky. That is what you should do, grow every day a little nearer heaven, a little more like Christ, a little sweeter, a little more loving, and more hopeful."

Now, boys and girls, are not these beautiful messages which the primroses bring to us? Shall we try to do as the primroses do, and live as they live, making our corner of the world bright, and so be helping to make others happy, and trying to grow every day nearer heaven?

The Primrose.

I love the early primrose
That lightens up the lane,
So radiant in the sunshine,
So cheerful after rain;
Goodbye to dreary winter,
How gladly doth it sing,
And tells of milder weather,
And hopeful, happy spring.

I wish that like the primrose
My life was always bright,
And shone in darkest pathways
With mild and constant light;
I wish that I reflected
Each sunray from above;
I wish that 'neath the storm-cloud
I always smiled with love.

I wish that in the valley,
As on the swelling hill,
Seen or unseen, with beauty
I did my task fulfil;
In life's secluded copses,
All in the garden gay,
Beside the forest foot-track,
As by the broad highway.

I would be ever showing
That winter's reign is o'er;
A happy pledge and promise
Of joys for evermore;
I would be like the primrose,
And sing in sun or shade
Of springtime everlasting,
Of flowers that never fade.

The Fence or the Ambulance?

'Twas a dangerous cliff, as they freely confessed,
Though to walk near its crest was so pleasant;
But over its terrible edge there had slipped
A duke, and full many a peasant;
So the people said something would have to be done,
But their projects did not at all tally.
Some said, "Put a fence round the edge of the cliff;"
Some, "An ambulance down in the valley."

But the cry for the ambulance carried the day,
For it spread through the neighbouring city;
A fence may be useful or not, it is true,
But each heart became brimful of pity
For those who slipped over that dangerous cliff;
And the dwellers in highway and valley
Gave pounds or gave pence, not to put up a fence,
But an ambulance down in the valley.

"For the cliff is all right if you're careful," they said,
"And if folks even slip and are dropping,
It isn't the slipping that hurts them so much
As the shock down below—when they're stopping;"
So day after day, as these mishaps occurred,
Quick forth would these rescuers sally,
To pick up the victims who fell off the cliff
With their ambulance down in the valley.

Then an old sage remarked, "It's a marvel to me
That people give far more attention
To repairing results than to stopping the cause,
When they'd much better aim at prevention.
Let us stop at its source all this mischief," cried he,
"Come, neighbours and friends, let us rally:
If the cliff we will fence we might almost dispense
With the ambulance down the valley."

"Oh, he's a fanatic!" the others rejoined;
"Dispense with the ambulance! Never!
He'd dispense with all charities, too, if he could;
But no! We'll support them for ever!
Aren't we picking folk up just as fast as they fall?
And shall this man dictate to us? Shall he?
Why should people of sense stop to put up a fence
While their ambulance works in the valley?"

But a sensible few, who are practical too,
Will not bear with such nonsense much longer;
They believe that prevention is better than cure,
And their party will soon be the stronger.
Encourage them, then, with your purse, voice, and pen,
And (while other philanthropists dally)
They will scorn all pretence, and put a stout fence
On the cliff that hangs over the valley.

. . . . .

Better guide well the young than reclaim them when old,
For the voice of true wisdom is calling:
"To rescue the fallen is good, but 'tis best
To prevent other people from falling."
Better close up the source of temptation and crime
Than deliver from dungeon or galley;
Better put a strong fence round the top of the cliff
Than an ambulance down in the valley!

SUNDAY, APRIL 28.

Fidelity to Pledges (Psa. lxv. 1-4; lxi. 1-8; cxvi. 12-14).
"I Promise."

We can only deal, in our limited space, with the last of these significant passages. The Psalmist had been brought very low by the sorrows of death and the pains of hell; but God had stepped in to deliver his soul from death, his eyes from tears, and his feet from falling, so that he was now walking before Him in the land of the living. It seemed as though the cup of salvation had been put into his hand, overflowing with blessing. In another verse, he says that God had loosed his bonds, as though he had been some wild creature of the woods, pinioned for death, who had been set free, and was now able to realize its former glad buoyancy of life.

Under such circumstances, we naturally ask ourselves, "What shall we render to the Lord for all his mercies?" and the first and most reasonable thing to do is to pay our vows, which we had vowed when we were in trouble. For it is better not to vow, than to vow and not pay. Nothing so deadens the heart as this.

We ought to fulfil our vows for many reasons, because—

1. It is dishonouring to God to play fast and loose with Him.

2. It deteriorates our character to resolve, and not to do; such failures render the next resolutions still more brittle.

3. It is a hindrance to those who may have heard us make our vows when we go back on them.

4. The vow which is not kept shows that we have not learnt, both in vowing and performing, to rely on the Holy Spirit.

All this is especially important in connection with our consecration pledge. It is not wise to press young people to take it on their lips without due consideration and prayer, and above all without so invoking the mighty power of the Holy Spirit that He shall become responsible. What a precious verse that is in John iii. 21, "Deeds made manifest that they are wrought in God." When a deed from the inception of the first thought to its performance is wrought in God there can be no fear of its becoming blessedly permanent.

The best way to give to God is to take from Him. The Psalmist felt that he must certainly pay his vows, but the question arose—how? "What shall I render unto the Lord for all his benefits towards me?" And the answer came back like a flash of light, "I will take this cup of salvation, which He has placed in my hands, and call upon his name." In other words, it seemed as though he would drink, or pour out as a libation, the blessing he had already received. This resolution is repeated in verse 18.

God is always putting cups of salvation into our hands. Salvation from the penalty and from the power of sin; salvation from perils to the body and soul; salvation for this world and the next. Let us reckon each of these as his gift, pour it out before Him as a libation. This Thou hast given me, blessed God; now receive it again at my hand (1 Cor. x. 16).

The mother of Samuel is an illustration of our meaning. The boy was given in answer to her prayer. The cup of salvation from the reproach of childlessness was placed in her hand, and she returned to dedicate her boy to the service of God. Perhaps in your case and mine, a saved soul, a soul as full of salvation as a glass is full of wine, a soul brimming with the Spirit of God is the best offering we can make to our Heavenly Father. If you have vowed to be his, see that you are as you have vowed. If you have promised service, money, amendment, or life-long devotion, be sure that your promise is kept.

What a glorious affirmation that is in the 16th verse: "O Lord, truly I am thy servant, I am thy servant." The reduplication of the sentence is very solemn and significant, especially when joined to Psa. cxviii. 27: "Bind the sacrifice with cords, even unto the horns of the altar." The picture is of the victim waiting at the altar for the sacrifice to be completed; and being so tightly bound as to be unable to get away. Do we not need to be tied by the cords of faith, and love, and hope of the mercies of God, and of the keeping grace of the Holy Spirit? Our own resolutions and pledges are too frail and uncertain, but God's grace is sufficient to make us what we long to be in our best hours (Rom. xii. 1, 2).

C.E. NOTES.

The girls of the Naniwa-Jo Gakko School, Osaka, have recently formed a Junior Society, as a result of Mrs. Clark's visit. At one meeting forty-three took part in sixty-three minutes, a brevity quite surprising in the Orient.

* * *

A committee has been appointed by the Sunderland Union to consider ways and means of forming a "flying column," consisting of cycling Endeavourers to visit neighbouring villages, conduct open-air services, and encourage the formation of new societies.

* * *

At a convention in Cleveland, U.S.A., Mr. Willis R. Hotchkiss spoke thus: "I was a missionary in Africa four years, and October next I expect to return, taking with me five Christian Endeavourers. We intend to establish a C.E. Society on the shore of Victoria Nyanza."

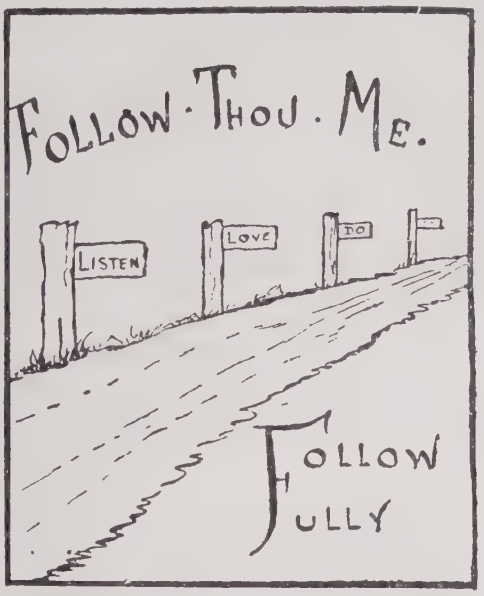
* * *

A most inspiring Convention was held at Newcastle on Easter Monday. The afternoon conference took place in the Town Hall, the subject being, "Our Pledge." Afterwards an open-air demonstration was held in the market, and Gospel addresses were given. In the evening the Town Hall was packed with upwards of 3,000 people, and addresses were given by Rev. J. D. Lamont and Rev. G. Campbell Morgan. At the close Mr. Morgan led the consecration service, which he made very personal, and before the close hundreds stood up and testified to their willingness to yield themselves utterly to God for his service.

International S.S. Lesson.

May 5, 1901.

Jesus and Peter (John xxi. 15-22).
Golden Text: "Lovest thou Me?" (John xxi. 17).



Key to Blackboard Plan.—If we follow Jesus we shall have various indications of how to follow, which may be illustrated by sign-posts along the way. To follow aright we must listen for his voice, we must love Him, we must do something for Him.

1. To follow Jesus we must listen to his voice. His voice will direct us. His voice will comfort us. How do we know his voice? By conscience, by circumstances, by prayer, by Bible study.

2. We must love Him, above everyone, with a deep, genuine love, with all the heart and mind and soul. Hos. vi. 3 seems to gather up these two thoughts into one sentence. See also Eph. v. 1.

3. If we listen and love Him we shall want to do something for Him. Love always serves (John xii. 26).

There is so much to be done in this world that the youngest child who loves Jesus can find work to do for Him.

There are many other ways in which the Christian must follow Jesus.

Don't go in front; let the Good Shepherd lead.

Don't lag behind; you will be sure to fall, as Peter did when he followed "afar off."

Follow fully; that is, with all your heart, not in a half-hearted sort of way. Think of Caleb, who gained the reward of entering the promised land because he followed fully. So did Joshua. Israel were punished because they did not follow fully (Num. xxxii. 11).

The disciples straightway left their nets to follow Jesus. Matthew rose up, left all, and followed Him.

All these ways are for our example.

Remember the excuses of some. "Master, I will follow Thee, but——" Is there a "but" keeping you back?

The following must not be only on Sunday: "Daily" take up the cross and follow Him.

Love and following will be willing to give up and deny self; (15) "more than these"—that is, the fish he had caught. Do we love Christ better than our pleasures, or even our legitimate duties? "Sell all that thou hast, and come, follow Me."

Above all, if we follow faithfully, we shall walk in the light, for Jesus Himself said, "He that followeth Me shall not walk in darkness," &c.

Psa. lxiii. 8 is a good verse to live up to. Have you tried it?

Look up instances in the Old Testament of people who "turned aside from following the Lord," and notice the result in each case.

Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland.

Last week in Dublin was known as "Synod Week," and on Friday afternoon a meeting of the above society was held in the Gregg Memorial Hall. The Bishop of Cashel and Waterford presided. Though subscriptions and donations had suffered, the work had been carried on, and in answer to prayer all needs had been met. The annual income had amounted to £3,157 2s. 2d.; but this included five legacies, one of which, £900, had been invested, and the expenditure having been £2,058 17s. 9d., left a balance in hand of £198 4s. 5d.

With sincere regret, the committee recorded the resignation of Capt. James Kearney White, the secretary, who for nearly thirty years had filled the office with great ability, zeal, and success. The President said he had enjoyed opportunities of observing the work of the society in the north and other parts of Ireland, and could bear testimony to the excellence and the power of the Scripture readers. They could go where the clergymen could not. In large, populous parishes, such as those in the North of Ireland, the assistance given by the agents of this Society was absolutely essential. He was more than ever convinced of the efficacy of the Society in carrying on God's work among the artizan classes in popular centres, especially in the Southern districts, where there were very few of what might be called the humbler class of Protestants, but a large class of poorer Roman Catholics whom they would like to influence for good.

The difficulty of getting access to these was so great that he was not enthusiastic in support of house-to-house visitation in the same way that he was among Protestants. At the same time, a great work could be done, and was being done, in the South of Ireland by the simple circulation of the Word of God among the people. Many who declined to receive the visits of an evangelist gladly bought copies of the Scriptures, especially if the purchase could be made from a person not known in the neighbourhood. The colportage part of the work was most useful, and deserved special attention. Arrangements with other societies engaged in similar work were most desirable.

Canon Day said the Readers were spiritually-minded and well-equipped men, likely, by God's blessing, to do faithfully the work committed to them. Rev. Dr. O. Loughlin believed that there lay before the Society in the future greater possibilities than it had yet experienced. Rev. C. Scott (Belfast) spoke of the work as essentially a home effort, which the Readers were doing splendidly. There was greater need for their services than ever in the city of Belfast, and he trusted the Society would prove equal to it.

A Timely Offer.—A booklet entitled "Popular Conversation on the Book of Books" was printed in Italian in 1899 to serve the purpose of a short and simple guide to Roman Catholics when they receive the Bible for the first time, and who are entirely ignorant of its contents. It has proved very acceptable to Italians, and also to Jews, who willingly accept it, and quite lately one was led through reading it to ask for a Hebrew Bible as well as one in Italian. It struck some friends in England that it might be helpful to Roman Catholics in other countries, and having now been published in Spanish, I venture to offer a free grant of it through The Christian to workers amongst Spaniards or Italians in South America and elsewhere. Applications may be addressed: Miss Carruthers, care of Miss McBryde Broun, 20, Brookside, Cambridge; or direct to me as below: S. H. Carruthers, Pisa, per Cisanello, Italy.

The Annual Charities Register and Digest, 1901.—In addition to the lists for which many turn to it, this volume contains a valuable introduction, in which are set forth the principles under which the work of the Charity Organization Society is carried on. The reader will learn the nature of the tests applied to institutions before they are stamped with approval. The relations between the working of the Poor Laws and charity are fully entered into, and the nature of the legal provisions for a number of special classes pointed out. A digest is also given of the law so far as it concerns the protection of women and children, endowed charities, aids to thrift, and other points of interest to the charitably disposed. A useful bibliography is added. The lists of societies and institutions appear with all their usual completeness, and each division is preceded by a useful summing-up. The whole work is indexed in such fashion as to make it easy of reference.

Pastors' College Conference.

In the middle of the Conference of 1898, the members were startled to hear that the great building in which C. H. Spurgeon had ministered for thirty years was on fire; and turning out, they stood and saw the hallowed place reduced to ashes in an hour. During the two Conferences which succeeded, the Tabernacle was in course of rebuilding, but being now completed, it was arranged for the opening gathering, which is commonly held at a distance, to assemble within its walls.

The first prayer-meeting took place at four o'clock in the Conference Hall of the College. Tea was served for the brotherhood at 5.30, and in the evening the the Tabernacle prayer-meeting was of a special character, bearing on the work of the College.

Rev. Chas. Spurgeon gave the chief address of the evening, showing that all was well with the College, that the students were devoted to their duties, and that the work in hand was as urgently necessary as ever. Addresses followed by Revs. H. O. Mackey (Liverpool), and T. Philpot (Ilfracombe).

In the annual report the President remarked: "Our staff has been preserved to us, and our students have had strength sufficient for their downright hard work. The good Spirit, moreover, has graciously helped both tutors and taught." Not more than one in ten of those who apply for admisssion to the College can be admitted. There were eighteen settlements of students during the year, while eighteen deaths of ministers were recorded, including Mr. S. F. Whitehouse, who, with his wife, was murdered soon after his arrival in China, and Professor Archibald Fergusson. The total number of those received into the college has now reached 1,019, and 654 are still in the ranks as pastors, missionaries, or evangelists. There are 109 without pastorates, but eighty of these are still engaged in Christian work. There have been 131 deaths, including ten students. The membership of the churches in the Association is now 79,407, and the deaths during the year 1900 were 881. The income for the year was £3,393, and the expenditure £3,847. The need for subscriptions is rather more urgent at the present time on account of the extra outlay in the renovation of the College building. The president and the tutors are able to give done by the students and of the general bearing of the men. In connection with the recent Simultaneous Mission, Principal McCaig says:—"We gladly acceded to the request of its promoters that we should set the students free from class work for the occasion, and the results have amply rewarded us. In the true evangelistic spirit the men entered upon the work, and in various ways rendered valuable service, while they themselves received great blessing."

On Tuesday morning the president, Mr. T. Spurgeon, took the chair at 10.45. The first hour was devoted to prayer and praise, after which came the presidential address, founded on the words "One Lord, one faith, one baptism." It was remarked that the churches had lately made common cause against the common foe. True Christians of every name were one, and their differences should sometimes be sunk in order to combination for special effort. But there must be no setting aside of doctrine to accommodate others. Christ was not divided, and he claimed an undivided love. As all had been subdued by love, so all must love one another. Love centred in a risen Saviour; faith is both objective and subjective. The doctrines of grace are dear, but we believe in good works and holy living as evidences of being saved. At the business meeting which followed, Messrs. Thomas and Charles Spurgeon were elected president and deputy-president.

The chief attractions of Wednesday morning were an address by Professor Hackney, who spoke to the assembly on the needs of the day, and the needs of preachers of the Gospel. Reference was also made to in the country. The speaker enlarged on the New Testament conception of the Church. The eternal Sonship of Christ, and the relation of the Son with the Father and the universe. The reign of law is the reign of Christ. Christ is the builder of his own Church on the foundation of his own life, and it is built out of the human lives of those who trusted Him.

Pasteur R. Saillens, of Paris, followed with some account of Roman Catholicism in France, a system which was described as being not only a religion but a political government. The question with Rome is always a political one, and the aim is to have all nations ruled by the Pope; the result shows the blasphemous character of Romish assumption. Still, France is the least Popish of all Roman Catholic countries. The Inquisition has never flourished there; the Jesuits are disliked, and the morals of the French clergy are better than they are elsewhere.

The Jesuits have seventy colleges, with over a hundred students in each, and their aim is to get hold of the democracy. While the country is getting tired of secularism, the hopes of education have not been realized: social

TROUBLES AND DRUNKENNESS INCREASE.

Disliking Rome, the people are coming to hate all religion. He believed that the Gospel would yet achieve great triumphs in France, but blood might flow, and there might even be martyrs. Reference was made to 200 Romish priests who had recently seceded from their Church and to three Protestant churches in Paris with which M. Saillens is connected, and which had altogether 700 members, the main part of whom had been converts from Romanism.

A large party of ministers visited the grave of C. H. Spurgeon, and they were entertained at tea by Rev. A. G. Brown, of Chatsworth Road Chapel, South Norwood. Mr. W. W. Thompson presided at the subscribers' meeting in the evening, at which the president and deputy-president, the chairman, Mr. T. A. Denny, and several ministers and students, gave addresses. The supper followed, and the collection amounted to over £1,334.

When the Conference reassembled on Thursday morning, it was requested that those who were sick should be remembered in prayer. An inspiriting discussion took place on

THE RECENT SIMULTANEOUS MISSION.

Rev. W. Y. Fullerton was of opinion that only the fringe of the masses outside of the Church had been reached. Missions never have reached the outside people, between whom and the Church there is an awful gap, and while that existed we must never be content. Rev. C. Joseph (Cambridge) spoke of methods. He would be glad to see those who are unsuccessful glad at the success of others, and welcome any sign that the Kingdom of God is spreading. Rev. W. Williams (Upton Chapel), who had been missioner at Liverpool, said that the mission had brought a personal blessing to himself. One of the converts at Liverpool was a lady who had attended three years at his own chapel without being converted.

The address of Dr. J. G. Paton, of the New Hebrides, produced such a deep impression that a spontaneous collection in aid of his work amounted to £26. In regard to the work of he had never doubted the power of the Gospel, but so many of their missionaries fell as martyrs that they thought it might be long before the islands were conquered by Christianity. There were now twenty-two Islands which had teachers; they had 18,000 converts, 3,000 church members, and 300 teachers. He spoke of the ruin which was wrought by traders selling rum and opium to the natives, but some had became teetotalers and refused the deadly curse. He had two sons and one daughter engaged in the work. There were still 60,000 savages in the islands as yet unreached by the Gospel.

The annual meeting attracted a large attendance in the Tabernacle on Thursday evening, when Mr. Thomas Spurgeon welcomed the supporters of the College, and thanked those who had helped to rebuild the new Tabernacle. Several addresses followed, one by Rev. Archibald Brown, giving some reminiscences of the College.

On Friday morning further business was done. June 17 was fixed for the annual day of prayer. Rev. Frank White was elected vice-president. During the service which preceded the Lord's Supper, Rev. A. G. Brown preached a forcible sermon on Deut. xi. 29. This ended a Conference which was well conducted throughout.

Telegraph Messengers' Rally.

Along the many lines of influence commanded by the junior sections of the Postal Telegraph Christian Association, the past year has witnessed continued progress, and abundant testimony to this fact was borne at the annual gatherings which were held on Wednesday of last week. Exeter Lower Hall was barely large enough to accommodate the congregation of messengers assembled from an area extending from Perth to Plymouth.

Lieutenant-Colonel F. Roberts had promised to preside at the afternoon "Parliament," but was prevented through indisposition. Consequently Mr. V. Young directed the meeting, which was of an informal and inspiring nature. Youthful delegates from numerous centres told of the operations of the Association in the metropolis and the provinces, and nothing could better commend its work than the fresh candid statements of the boys. At the meeting in the evening, Mr. T. A. Denny was in the chair, and timely addresses were delivered by Rev. W. R. Mowll, Mr. J. H. Putterill, Mr. Grey (an old boy, and now at the C.M.S. College), and several delegates.

Having the advantage of a certain degree of organization, discipline, and drill, can be gathered together and dealt with in various ways. Educational classes are held to help boys to prepare for Civil Service Examinations. Recreation, of course, has its place, and diversified amusements are provided to entertain and elevate the young minds. But it is to the spiritual side of the work that the closest attention is given. The Gospel meetings and Bible classes are a means by which many of the boys are brought into personal contact with Christ. As a result, several are preparing in training colleges for the mission field, while others are devoting their lives to Christian service at home.

THE MESSENGER COMMUNITY

At the headquarters in Ivy Lane, E.C., extension has had to be made in order to meet the requirements of the increasing number of messengers who are anxious to avail themselves of the opportunities for the cultivation of their religious life and the improvement of their general knowledge.

The Blackwood Holiday Home at Ramsgate serves a useful purpose. Through the summer months it is the happy home of ever-varying groups of messengers, whose appreciation is unbounded. As the accommodation is somewhat limited, every year there has been a long list of disappointed applicants.

The influence of the Association is by no means confined to the homeland. From India £27 was sent by messengers last year to the Bible Society for the purpose of supplying the Gospel of St. John to postal and telegraph employes in heathen hands, and these have been distributed in five languages. Branches have also been opened in New Zealand and Cape Town. The Association has from its inception sought the advancement of Christ's kingdom among the boys and the promotion of all that tends towards true, vigorous manliness.

Littlehampton Sailors' Rest.—At the meeting held recently to recognize the taking over of this institution by the British and Foreign Sailors' Society, over seventy seamen attended. Addresses were given by Captain Hills, R.N., the harbour master, Captain Sewell, Rev. E. W. Matthews, and others. It was reported that at this small seaport town a far-reaching work is done. Sick seamen have been received and cared for; the Selsey lifeboat crew on one occasion were welcomed at midnight after battling with the storm in the channel; and in numerous ways the Rest has rendered aid to seafarers of the coast, as well as foreign fishermen running in for shelter.

London Tent Campaign, 1901.

THE Tent Campaign of 1900, carried on in some of the most densely populated parts of the metropolis, proved so attractive to the masses and so fruitful of spiritual results, that Christian people will heartily welcome the announcement that the work is to be recommenced immediately.

A meeting of the secretaries of the district committees was held on Saturday last. Some twenty centres were represented; the proceedings were of an enthusiastic character, and the reports that were given were full of promise for a season of great blessing.

In many directions the deepest interest is being evinced, and the friends who are taking the leading part in organizing the work have arranged an all-night prayer meeting for the evangelists, secretaries, and chief supporters. We hope next week to announce the date of this gathering. Mr. Leonard Weaver and other well-known workers in connection with the tents are to be present.

The programme of the forthcoming campaign is practically complete. The first tent is to be opened on Saturday, May 11, and meetings will thereafter be commenced at new centres, week by week, until nine tents are in use. The smallest is to seat 1,800, and the largest 2,500 each, and will be removed to a new pitch at the expiration of a month.

As at present arranged, the centres that have been chosen will be worked in the following order:—Tent No. 1, Dartford, Woolwich, Greenwich, Deptford; No. 2, Stratford, Forest Gate, Bromley or Canning Town, Ilford; No. 3, Clapton, Hackney, Islington, King's Cross; No. 4, Brixton, Streatham, Clapham Junction, Clapham; No. 5, Fulham, Shepherd's Bush, Cricklewood, Wimbledon; No. 6, Enfield Lock, Edmonton, Walthamstow or Woodford, Leyton; No. 7, Kilburn, Hampstead, Kentish Town, Crouch End; No. 8, Bermondsey, Camberwell, Peckham; No. 9, Harlesden, Kensal Rise, Notting Hill, Richmond.

Mr. G. R. Williams, the secretary, computes that last year, when twenty-eight districts were worked, no fewer than 1,900 services for adults were held, in addition to very many meetings for children and other gatherings of a distinctive character. The attendances at the adult services were computed at 1,250,000. As will be seen from the list given above at least thirty-five districts are this year included in the plan of operations, so that the operations, it is prayerfully believed, will be in every way of a more extensive character. Among those who have recently become members of the Central Committee are Lord Radstock, Sir Frederick Howard, and Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P.

A breakfast was given by Mr. T. A. Denny at Exeter Hall on Tuesday morning, at which some very encouraging information was given, and contributions of £100 each and smaller sums were promised.

The offices of the Central Committee are at St. Paul's Buildings, Paternoster Row, E.C.

The Evangelical Alliance Quarterly for April contains three early photographs of Queen Victoria. A noteworthy contribution gives the terms in which the Bill of Rights provided for the Protestant Succession. Several interesting obituaries tell the stories of leaders who have recently fallen. (Morgan & Scott).

Flowers for Factory Girls.—Will those who are now feasting their eyes with delight on the flowers in fields and hedgerows remember the many hundreds of factory girls at their daily employment in London? Flowers sent up for their special benefit, made into dainty little bunches, are a source of real pleasure. Flowers are either given away in the Institute, where the girls assemble when work is over, or they are taken by the lady visitor to the factory or laundry workrooms, and distributed there. At the Institutes flowers are such an attraction that girls who would otherwise have remained outside have been drawn in, and many can look back and thank God they were ever led there. Boxes containing from twenty to hundred bunches will be gratefully received at any of the Institutes, of which there are fifty-one connected with the Factory Helpers' Union. The addresses of these, or of "visitors," may be had from Miss L. E. Tritton, 5, Cadogan Square, S.W.

From Rev. F. B. Meyer.

THE same wonderful blessing of which I have spoken has attended the meetings at Indianopolis, Chicago, and in this distant western city. At Indianapolis on Sunday we had afternoon and evening congregations of 3,500 people. At Chicago at noon on Monday 1,000 ministers and Christian workers, besides other crowded gatherings in Mr. Moody's old church. And at Omaha we are obliged to hold overflow meetings.

There is, on all sides, an eager hunger for the deepest truths, especially as to the Holy Spirit; and it is a great privilege to be permitted to open up the Word of God on these matters. At the same time, I am longing for the return journey, and hope to be in London on April 24. Again, I thank my friends for their prayers on my behalf. F. B. Meyer.

Omaha, April 10.

North London Homes for the Blind.

THE "Coming of Age" of these Homes was celebrated on Thursday, the 18th inst., in the Upper Holloway Baptist Chapel. In the afternoon a sermon was preached by Rev. W. L. Watkinson, and later a substantial tea was provided for the inmates and friends by the ladies of Upper Holloway Church. In the evening Mr. F. A. Bevan presided over the public meeting. Addresses were given by the chairman, Rev. J. R. Wood (pastor), Rev. J. F. Osborne, M.A., Messrs. J. Elliott Viney, A. Faulkner, and Henry J. Wilson. The treasurer, Mr. W. G. Wilkins, stated that 291 applications had been dealt with, 100 now being in the Homes. Of these, three are over ninety years of age, fifteen over eighty, and forty-one over seventy, representing twenty-seven counties. The special fund raised to commemorate this event reached £288, and promises of £82 were received. Mr. Faulkner undertook to be responsible for a further £25, in the hope that the £800 asked for might be completed by December 31 next. The inmates of the Homes contributed £2 2s. towards the special fund.

Cage Lane Mission, Plumstead.

AN interesting meeting was held in connection with this Mission, on Thursday, at the Hall in Lakedale Road. General Sir William Stirling, K.C.B., presided over a large attendance of friends and supporters.

The report of the past year's work, read by Colonel St. Quintin, was most satisfactory. The deficit of over £30 has been cleared off by a sale of work held since the printing of the report, and which left a small balance in hand toward the needs of the present year.

In the course of his remarks, the chairman said he was quite sure all that was said in that hall was based on the Word of God, the only sure foundation. We need only one chart, one pilot, one compass, on our way to heaven, and these needs are met by the Word of God, and the teaching of the Holy Spirit.

Colonel Sage next spoke, referring to personal experience in the Christian life. When here, eight years ago, he had absolutely refused to speak from the platform, but General Anderson told him "he would have to speak," and now he gladly took the opportunity of testifying to God's faithfulness. Not that God needed any such testimony, but there might be some listening to him who were still living in doubt. He left two words with his hearers as a motto: Win Christ. He is the only one who can satisfy, and He is found of them who seek Him with all their heart. Having won Christ the next point is to let Him possess us. The Christ life is an ascending life; obedient to Christ's voice, the Christian finds himself mounting higher and higher until he goes to be with Christ.

Mr. P. Mallinson spoke a few words to Christian teachers on 2 Kings vi., bringing out many helpful and suggestive points.

The singing of the hymn, "God be with you till we meet again," formed the conclusion of another anniversary meeting, in which the hearts of many were lifted in gratitude and thankfulness to God for having spared their beloved friend and benefactress, Mrs. Anderson, who founded the Mission, and prayer was united with praise that she might be enabled to carry on this noble work for many years to come.

Theatrical Women.—On Thursday last a large number of theatrical women accepted an invitation to tea at the Y.M.C.A., Peter Street, Manchester. Addresses were given by Revs. B. Bell and W. J. Jack and Mrs. Hamill. Mr. William Forbes, who had spent three days in visitation work, also spoke. A local committee of ladies and gentlemen has been formed to carry on this work in Manchester, a city which contains more actors and actresses than any other, except London.

Obituary.

THE BISHOP OF OXFORD.

DR. STUBBS, who passed away on Monday last at Cuddesdon, was, of course, chiefly distinguished for his contributions to historical literature. He was born in 1825, and in 1850 became vicar of Navestock. Appointed to the bishopric of Chester in 1884, he was transferred to Oxford four years later. His historical learning obtained him the Regius Professorship of Modern History at Oxford in 1866. Conspicuous among his writings is "The Constitutional History of England." Dr. Stubbs was a High Churchman, and the "Lincoln" judgment was drawn up mainly under his advice.

MRS. JAMES F. GOVAN.

The death of Mrs. James F. Govan, of Biggar, N.B., removes an active and devoted Christian lady. About ten years ago, along with her husband, she went to reside in Biggar. Both Mr. and Mrs. Govan soon began to make their presence and influence felt in the town and district in the carrying on a regular system of religious work, which, uninterruptedly continued, has been productive of lasting good. Some disused coach-building premises which were rented, and fitted up into a comfortable hall, became the centre of earnest Christian effort. Bright evangelistic services have been conducted from Sabbath to Sabbath, and on week days many other meetings have been held. Mrs. Govan passed away on April 7, at the early age of thirty-seven.

MR. JOHN PATON.

Presbyterianism in London has recently suffered the loss of several leading laymen, and to the list of these must now be added the name of Mr. John Paton. Mr. Paton was a much-esteemed elder of the Marylebone congregation, and was identified with many efforts for the spread of the truth. Leaving his native Scotland forty-seven years ago to represent one of the land companies in Canada, he found himself at Kingston, Ontario, surrounded by a Christian community, and in this circle he was soon found among the most active and aggressive workers. A Y.M.C.A. was formed in the town at that time, and into this effort he entered with particular energy and success. He showed the members the true path of Christian progress by setting them all actively to work. After leaving Ontario, Mr. Paton lived for a considerable period in New York, being for over twenty years an elder in Dr. John Hall's congregation. On coming to London, he found in Dr. Pentecost a pastor after his own heart. His sympathies were wider than any denominational limitations, as was shown by his keen interest in the Evangelical Alliance. But his true Christian earnestness lost nothing by this, for he was skilled in directing seekers to his own personal Saviour.

Personalia.

After April 26, communications for Rev. G. Campbell Morgan should be sent to the care of Rev. Albert Swift, 112, East Dulwich Grove, London, S.E.

Mr. Charles Reeve, of Poona, is expected to arrive in England shortly, and to conduct meetings at various centres. Communications respecting Mr. Reeve's arrangements should be addressed to Mr. Henry B. Bilbrough, South Bank, Linkfield Lane, Redhill.

Watford Y.W.C.A.—Miss Ella M. Smith, hon. sec., writes:—"The chief work among our members is spiritual, but we endeavour also to promote their moral, social, and intellectual well-being, and to afford protection to those who need it. Our membership has steadily grown, and the members show a fine spirit of helpfulness towards each other and to outsiders. The Prayer Union membership increased fifty per cent. in 1900. Our rooms are very small. We need a large room capable of holding 200, classrooms, &c. The town of Watford is increasing rapidly, and in so large a place, with so many temptations, we feel there is an ever-growing field for Y.W.C.A. work, preventive and otherwise.

Evangelistic.

At Lincoln Fair.

LAST Lord's Day at Lincoln, large crowds of people visited the fair ground, and to them the Gospel was preached from the stage of a show. Mr. B. Johnson, who sang and spoke with acceptance, writes: "It was a grand day. The open-air meeting in front of the Corn Exchange at 7.30 p.m. was attended by probably 2,000 people. The Exchange was well filled."

Mr. Ira D. Sankey at Ashtabula.

Describing Mr. Ira D. Sankey's recent visit to Ashtabula, U.S.A., the Beacon-Record of April 2 says:—"Yesterday afternoon Mr. Sankey stood for the first time on the brink of the chasm where his old friend and associate, Mr. P. P. Bliss, met an awful death in the disaster of 1876. Mr. Sankey drove to the bridge and also to Chestnut Grove Cemetery, where he viewed the tall shaft that marks the graves of the unknown dead of that disaster, among whom are presumably the bodies of those whom he loved."

"At the meeting in the First Presbyterian Church, Mr. Sankey addressed an eager, expectant audience—one familiar with the Gospel song-writer's compositions, but few of whose members had ever beheld the man whose name was linked with that of Moody's for over a quarter of a century. Mr. Sankey spoke on 'Memories of Moody,' and sang a number of solos."

Mr. Henry Varley in Scotland.

Some later particulars of Mr. Henry Varley's recent mission at St. George's Cross Tabernacle, Glasgow, have been forwarded by Pastor D. J. Findlay, who says;—"Some of the results have already been chronicled in your columns, but we may further say that the mission has probably been the most fruitful, as it certainly has been the largest, that we have ever been responsible for. For more than a month every week night found the Tabernacle crowded, and on the five Lord's Days it was quite insufficient to hold the crowds which thronged to the services. Five overflowing meetings were held in St. Andrew's Hall—the largest in the city—and the interest seemed to increase to the end.

"As to spiritual results, we are safe to say that hundreds of persons received help and blessing in one way or another, and since the mission closed we have daily been in receipt of letters from those who profess to have been definitely brought to decision for Christ. The mission concluded with an enthusiastic social meeting, which had to be limited to 1,000 persons for want of comfortable accommodation to seat more at the tea table. The Lord Provost, Mr. John Colville, M.P., and many other friends, took part."

Mr. Varley's mission at Aberdeen continues to arouse deep and general interest throughout the city. The two meetings held in the Music Hall on Sunday last were crowded. Up to Sunday evening fully 200 persons had confessed Christ, in addition to many who it is believed have found peace during the preaching. A correspondent writes: "The whole city is moved."

Mr. Bob Johnson has conducted a three days' mission in the Temperance Hall, Frome. The building was filled, and the missioner's speaking and singing aroused general interest.

Mr. Henry Thorne has conducted a fruitful mission at Twickenham. The Free Churches joined in a united meeting in the Town Hall, which was of spiritual profit to many of the audience. The names of a large number of inquirers have been taken.

Mr. H. Stafford Smith, Evangelization Society, has just completed a fruitful three weeks' mission at St. James' Mission Church, Lawley Street, Birmingham. Many of those who were present at the meetings had been unaccustomed to attend any place of worship, and not a few are believed to have accepted Christ.

Mr. Herbert R. Francis, of Gloucester, has just concluded a series of addresses on "The Tabernacle," illustrated by his very fine model, in St. Edmund's Mission Room, Gateshead. The addresses were well attended, and the wealth of spiritual teaching which the subject afforded was highly appreciated by those who were privileged to be present. C. S. W.

The fourth of the series of Gospel services at the Euston Theatre, N.W., was held on Sunday evening last. A large audience assembled, and a spirit of hearing was again manifest. Many were dealt with in the inquiry room, and Rev. D. H. Moore is encouraged to continue the meetings for the present, if the expenses, which are considerable, can be met. On Lord's Day next the service is to be conducted by Rev. Z. B. Woffendale.

Mr. Charles Galletly has concluded a three weeks' mission under the auspices of the Saltcoats Y.M.C.A. The meetings throughout were well attended, and on the last two Sabbath evenings had to be transferred from the Christian Institute to the North Church, where 700 to 800 people were present. The addresses were much appreciated, particularly those upon the Lord's second coming. God's people received great spiritual blessing, and a goodly number of the unsaved professed to accept Christ. The hearts of the workers have been cheered and the work has received great stimulus. Alex. S. Millar.

Services (Gaelic and English) in Dingwall United Free Church, begun recently by Rev. John Mackay, and continued by Rev. William Muir, of Blairgowrie, have been largely attended. The Gaelic services, held from seven till eight each evening, were under the direction of Rev. D. Macleod, and the numbers attending have been a source of much gratification to all concerned. The English services, from eight till nine, have been followed with the deepest interest by congregations which well filled the area of the church each evening. The attendances have been representative of all classes in the community, a feature being the unusually large proportion of young men present night after night, and among them a deep impression has been made by the quiet power of the earnest appeals addressed to all.

Evangelists' Engagements.

 This column is intended for Missions of some days' duration, not for engagements of a single day.

Mr. Henry Thorne.—April 25-May 6, Corsham, Wilts.

Mr. Leonard Weaver and Mr. William Grove.—Till May 5, Baptist Church, High Street, Gravesend.

After his fourth visit to Canada, Mr. J. Bennett Anderson, "Singing Evangelist," is now again settled in his English home "Blairgowrie," 26, Nadine Street, Old Charlton, S.E. He is prepared to undertake open-air and tent services, or indoor missions. Having been so long away from home, Mr. Anderson would prefer to labour in or near London.

Requests for Prayer.

For blessing upon a day of prayer at the Town Hall, Ipswich, May 1, 7 a.m. till 9 p.m.

Rev. J. D. Kilburn asks prayer in connection with a mission at Vienna, which he was about to commence on April 16, to be followed by meetings in other parts of Austria.

Pirbright, near Woking.—An aggressive work has been carried on during the past winter at Providence Chapel. Three special Gospel missions have been conducted by local preachers, C.E. members, and Mr. J. Brown (Evangelization Society). Many outsiders have been reached, and several won for Christ. Sunday school, Bible classes, and Band of Hope have also proved helpful and a blessing. During the summer months Pirbright will again be a centre for military operations. In former years open-air meetings have been held in the Guards' camp on Sunday afternoons, which it is proposed to repeat this year. Mr. R. Fifield (colporteur in charge), 5, North West View, Boundary Road, Woking, will welcome new supporters.

About Books.

A BOOK ON CHARACTER.

ALL who read Dr. A. T. Schofield's remarkable book, "The Unconscious Mind," will welcome another volume from his pen. When showing the bearings of his great subject upon education, the author left much unsaid. This he gives us, with important developments, in The Springs of Character. (3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.) The work of a scientist, the pages are nevertheless easy of comprehension; though unfolding profound theories, the chapters are eminently practical in their relation to life and conduct.

The subject-matter stands related to questions of wide interest and supreme moment—mind and personality, heredity, ethics, and habits. We are also led into the mysteries of conscience, the will, and destiny. Dr. Schofield has read widely, but he has likewise thought much; and accordingly his book is a substantial contribution to the literature of conscience and character as they affect or are influenced by education and religion.

Those who are charged with the training of the young, whether in the home or the school, should read this very suggestive book, which is at once true to advanced science and loyal to Holy Scripture. Dealing with the relation of character to destiny, Dr. Schofield says:—

> Our position, partly in this world (for there are the circumstances of birth, accident, &c., to be considered), and wholly in the next, is determined by character; but the character that can alone please God and dwell with Him must be inspired by faith, and energised by the Holy Spirit. "Sow a character, and reap a destiny!" Yes; but it is impossible to sow the right character, unless we have the moral force within, the sower as well as the seed; and this we cannot find in the elementary natural conscience alone, but in the possession and guiding of our wills by God's Spirit.

This is well said. We sincerely trust that the book will have many readers. It will disappoint no serious and intelligent expectation.

Along with a good deal that seems too slight to warrant inclusion in a volume, we find in Zephyrs (Partridge), by M. L. Dawson, poems which lift our thoughts to the higher and better things.

Young people will welcome Messrs. Nelson's reissues, in cheap form (6d. each), of R. M. Ballantyne's famous stories. There lie before us already: The Coral Island, a tale of the Pacific Ocean; The Dog Crusoe and His Master, a story of Adventure in the Western Prairies; and Ungava, a tale of Esquimau Land.

Many books have been published in connection with the death of Queen Victoria, but there seems to be still a place for The Afterglow of a Great Reign (1s. 6d. Wells Gardner), in which the new Bishop of London has published four addresses delivered in St. Paul's Cathedral. The true greatness of the woman is vividly brought out from the moral and spiritual standpoints.

Messrs. Headley Bros. have issued a cheap edition of the late William Jones' deeply interesting volume, Quaker Campaigns in Peace and War. (3s. 6d.) The pages present the reminiscences of a man of peace who saw a good deal of war. Mr. Jones was a practical philanthropist of wide experience, and tells us much about the consequences of war and the military spirit. A portrait of the lamented author, and other highly finished illustrations, enrich the volume.

A work which has proved of great service in recent evangelization in Ireland is: Questions and Answers to the One Hundred Texts taught in the Mission Schools of the Society for Irish Church Missions, with notes and comments. Edited by Rev. Henry Fishe, M.A., this new edition embodies quite recent facts and arguments in the notes. All who are in any degree engaged in the controvery with Rome will find this a useful book. (2s. Offices of Irish Church Missions: London: 11, Buckingham Street, W.C.; Dublin: 4, Great Brunswick Street.

Readers of the Methodist Times are already familiar with the series of papers which are now collected under the title, Another Pentecost (1s. Partridge), by Rev. I. E. Page. An ideal Free Church Council in a country town is pictured, as it prepares to take part in the Simultaneous Mission. The main purpose of the book is to emphasise the place of the Holy Spirit in every effort for the extension of Christ's Kingdom. Recent outbursts of liberality in the various denominations are pointed to as the bringing of "the tithes" into "the storehouse" of God, which has been followed by the opening of "the windows of heaven." The beginning of the revival is traced in the leading of the president himself into the joy of believing. There is much valuable teaching presented in a compact and attractive narrative form.

The Y.M.C.A.

SINCE relinquishing the general secretaryship at Adelaide to become travelling secretary for Australasia, Mr. J. J. Virgo has been busily at work in Tasmania. At Launceston he has found great encouragement in his endeavours to revive Association work in that city.

The Spring Conference of the Western District Union was held at Totterdown, Bristol, on April 18. New Associations at Clevedon and Fishponds were affiliated. Mr. J. Storrs Fry, who presided, introduced the subject of "The Spiritual Work of the Associations," and in subsequent addresses the questions were dealt with of the Young Man in relation to "Business," "Pleasure," and "the Y.M.C.A."

The twenty-eighth annual meeting of the Kingston and Surbiton Y.M.C.A. was held on April 17, in the new gymnasium recently presented to the Association by the President, Captain Cundy. The report showed that much excellent work had been done; the membership is now 260. A deficit of £100, owing chiefly on renovations, has been cleared off. Rev. H. Snowdon (Surbiton) and Mr. T. E. Alvarez (Sierra Leone) addressed the gathering.

The Jubilee Convention of the Associations of North America, to be held in Boston from June 11 to 16, will be a most important and interesting gathering. The President of the United States is expected, and many prominent visitors will represent the Associations in other parts of the world. One of the most conspicuous features of the Convention will be an historical exhibit. As there are over 1,400 Associations in North America, the delegation is expected to be a very large one.

The Missionary Parliament connected with Hackney Association organized on Saturday last a missionary conversazione. The large gymnasium was decorated with diagrams and charts illustrative of work already accomplished, and of the present needs of the heathen world. Mr. W. H. Seagram presided, and among those taking part were three missionary members of the Association now home on furlough—Messrs. Isaac Mason (China), B. J. Lomer (Congo), and A. N. Salmon (Niger). Two missionary meetings were also conducted on Sunday by Mr. Mason.

The announcement is made that the mortgage debt of £60,000 on the buildings of various Y.M.C.A.'s in New York has been paid by the munificent gifts of four gentlemen. Early in January, Mr. William E. Dodge, chairman of the Board of Trustees, subscribed £15,000, and his son, Mr. Cleveland H. Dodge, president of the city Associations, £5,000. Mr. John D. Rockefeller then promised £20,000, on condition that the balance was raised by June 1. When the matter was brought to the attention of Mr. J. Pierpoint Morgan, he promptly put down his name for the remaining £20,000 needed to close the subscription.

The first annual meeting of the Yarmouth Association, held in the Town Hall on April 16, brought together a large gathering of members and friends. Mr. H. E. Buxton occupied the chair, and an encouraging report was presented, both in regard to the Association effort proper, and the work of the seaside holiday home. Nearly 200 members and associates have been enrolled, and 157 young men were accommodated for rest and change in the boarding department. Dean Lefroy was the principal speaker, and offered the hearty congratulation to the Yarmouth friends. Addresses were also delivered by Rev. Andrew Leggatt and Mr. W. Hind Smith.

The Winnipeg Association opened its new building on January 17. Besides the offices, reading-room, parlours, &c., a gymnasium is provided with baths, a fine hall seating over 500, and rooms for boys. The membership is increasing rapidly. Young men are constantly coming from great Britain, and these find a homelike resort here. A series of Sunday afternoon addresses to men has been carried on since the opening. Among those who have addressed these meetings are the Archbishop of Rupert's Land, the Dean, Rev. Principal Patrick, late of Glasgow, and Rev. Dr. Kilpatrick, of Aberdeen. This Association building is becoming the rendezvous for most of the religious organizations in the city, and is made a centre of Christian activity. The directors would sincerely ask the prayers and interest of friends in the old land for this work. T. D. P.

Clothing for Colonial Emigrants.—May I appeal for cast-off clothing? Warm jackets and dresses or skirts of serge or cloth are invaluable for the voyage. A party of fifty young women (selected) sail May 14 for Western Australia (free passages), and we have arranged six Canadian parties for the season now opening. Each party is escorted by an experienced matron. Sending out girls of good character to our Colonies where women are in the minority is a work which may well commend itself to Christian philanthropy.—Adelaide Ross, Outfitting Department of the United British Women's Emigration Association, 18, Upper Westbourne Terrace, W.

Among the Churches.

In the Baptist churches Rev. J. R. Russell has accepted the pastorate of Highgate Park Church, Birmingham; Rev. F. G. Masters of the church at Gosberton, and Rev. E. J. Woodall of that at Workington.

Messrs. Gee, of Whitehaven, have made a conditional offer equal to £500 for the enlargement and alteration of the Whitehaven Presbyterian Church, the congregation having decided on that course in preference to a new church.

The Baptist Sunday school at Broadmead, Bristol, has thoroughly organized the Century Fund in all its classes, so that even the smallest children have contributed. It is expected that the school will raise about £250 for the Fund.

A memorial tablet has been erected to the late Bishop Ryle in the cathedral at Liverpool. The tablet, which is of Italian marble, bears an inscription recording the date of his birth and death, with the following words:—"He was a good soldier of Christ. By word and pen he preached to the people Jesus Christ and Him crucified."

The total revenue of the Presbyterian Church of England for the year 1900 will be reported to the Synod as being £293,710, compared with £306,849 in the previous year. The latter amount, however, included over £20,000 specially contributed for the new college at Cambridge, so that there is no real falling off, but an increase from ordinary sources.

Rev. W. H. Hewett, vicar of St. Paul's, Stratford, has been able to present a very satisfactory report of the work in his populous parish during the past year. Mr. Hewett has had the help of a loyal and effective band of workers, and the results of their labours have been most encouraging; progress is recorded in nearly every department.

At the Baptist Church, Willesden Green, the seventh anniversary of the settlement of Rev. William J. Sears has recently been celebrated. Among those taking part in the services were Revs. S. A. McCracken, J. R. Wood, and Mr. W. Willett. The church secretary reported that there are now 212 upon the church roll.

A digest of returns just issued shows that of the 814 Wesleyan circuits 465 this year report an increase, 318 a decrease, and 31 are stationary. The total number of fully accredited members is 455,012, an increase on the year of 2,511. The number of members on probation is 36,951, an increase of 8,391, and the largest number for nineteen years. 135 candidates for the ministry have this year offered themselves, and have been accepted by the quarterly meetings. This is the largest number for many years, and twenty-six above the number last year, when many circuits desiring additional ministers found their requests perforce refused by Conference.

The arrangements are rapidly being matured for the forthcoming Methodist Œcumenical Conference. It has been agreed that the 200 representatives allotted to the Eastern section shall be allocated as follows:—Wesleyan Methodist, eighty-six; Primitive Methodist, thirty-four; United Methodist Free Church, eighteen; Australia, twelve; South Africa, ten; Methodist New Connexion, ten; Ireland, ten; Bible Christian, eight; West Indian, six; Independent Methodist, two; Wesleyan Reform Union, two; French Methodist, two. The Conference will be opened in Wesley's Chapel, London, on Wednesday, September 4, by a sermon by Bishop Galloway, of the American Methodist Episcopal Church.

At a meeting of the Manchester and Salford Free Church Council held on Thursday last, some records of the recent Simultaneous Mission were presented and adopted with a view to preservation. In the course of one of these papers, Rev. J. H. Scott wrote: "There is the acknowledged fact that with all this output of energy we have only fringed the problem of the non-church-going class. How are we to solve the problem? For solved it must be for their sake, for our sake, for Christ's sake. Is not that obligation laid with weighty pressure upon the hearts and consciences of our churches by what we have experienced in this mission, and by the intelligence which has reached us from all other parts of this realm?"

Fallen Asleep.

Mrs. Horner, of Cradley Heath, for forty-five years a Wesleyan class leader.—Mr. Robert Ray, who had been identified with Dedham Congregational Church, Essex, for half a century, and was for many years treasurer and secretary, as well as superintendent of the Sunday school.—Rev. J. S. Alexander, formerly of Free St. David's Church, Edinburgh. He was ordained in Stockwell Free Church, Glasgow, and in 1857 removed to Edinburgh. He retired from the pastorate of St. David's two years ago. His evening lectures there were very popular, hundreds of people having to be turned from the doors on many occasions.—Aged ninety-four, Mr. Richard J. Bryant, of Besthorpe, near Attleboro, for many years superintendent of the Baptist Sunday school at Kenninghall. He had been a prominent temperance advocate, and was well known throughout East Anglia.—At Brussels, Mr. Thomas Spencer, formerly of Newburn Steel Works, near Newcastle-on-Tyne, who during his lifetime gave very large sums of money to religious objects, his gifts including £10,000 towards founding residentiary canonries for St. Nicholas Cathedral, Newcastle; £10 000 to the Bishopric Fund; and £15,000 towards the restoration of Hexham Abbey.—Rev. W. B. Hull, rector for thirty years of St. Peter's, Hungate, Norwich, aged fifty-seven. Mr. Hull was ordained in 1868, and had spent the whole of his ministerial life in Norwich.—Aged ninety, Miss Eliza Lusignan, of Lower Edmonton, who had been a collector for the C.M.S. since her girlhood.—At Carnalbana, Ballymena, Rev. Hamilton Martin, a native of Killyleagh, Co. Down, and a faithful and devoted Presbyterian minister, aged eighty-six years.

Notes & Comments

ONCE again we are in the midst of the May Meetings. From year to year these gatherings bring to London Christian people from all parts, and the influence of the words spoken is afterwards felt throughout the world. The great work of organization involves much anxiety, and doubtless evokes earnest prayer to God. May the gatherings this year be blest alike to those who speak and to those who listen! Necessarily we can only give our readers a limited idea of the principal lines of evangelical effort as represented at the meetings. We trust that the word printed will minister light and comfort to readers in many lands. The reports given this week have crowded out articles and intelligence that would otherwise have appeared. We hope next week to meet the expectations of our friends by giving insertion to many of the matters thus held over.

We desire to call the attention of our readers to the fact that a full list of forthcoming May Meetings appears in our pages week by week. In this issue it will be found on page 26.

As soon as our space is relieved from the pressure of the May Meeting reports, we hope to commence a series of brief and vivid papers expository of the Epistle of James, by Rev. T. A. Gurney, the writer of the article, "The Person of Christ," in our present issue. We also have in hand two important and luminous papers on the plan and purpose of the Book of Genesis, by Rev. John Urquhart.

Once more we remind our friends that communications for any of the correspondents whose names appear in our columns may be addressed to our care. Donations in aid of the various branches of work which we bring before our readers may also be sent on their behalf to our publishers, Messrs. Morgan & Scott.

Our readers will learn with great regret that Dr. Barnardo (who has recently been so seriously ill), although better in many ways, is still confined to the house and to his room. By order of his medical attendant, he has had to cancel afresh all his engagements. We hope that his many friends will realize the need of their special interest in his great work at this time, while it is deprived of his active endeavours on its behalf.

Of the very many good things uttered by Dr. Maclaren in his address last week, two stand out as worthy of special notice. The one referred to the great ignorance concerning religious subjects which unfortunately prevails in many congregations. The Doctor said:

> We have to do the work of Christian teachers under remarkable conditions. On the one hand there is great ignorance of Scripture and of systematized Christian truth among our congregations, and we are perpetually in danger of over-estimating the amount of knowledge on which we may reckon. Otherwise well-educated men and women have but the vaguest notions as to Scripture facts, and the most confused apprehensions of Christian ideas. I for one believe that a considerable percentage in every congregation in the land is unaffected by our sermons because it does not understand what we are saying.

These facts affect both preachers and people. There can be no doubt that Bible reading in modern homes is largely at a discount. Indeed for that matter, serious reading of any sort is rare enough. During the last few years the tendency has been all in the direction of light, scrappy reading, and the effect is seen in the prevalent loose thought and ignorance of deep subjects. The only knowledge many people have of religious subjects is that which they derive at second hand from snippings in papers and magazines. The pulpit, too, has often been to blame for catering to this depraved taste, and contenting itself with retailing disconnected scraps of truth. We must get back to exposition of the Divine Word, and to systematic Bible study.

The other point to which we would direct special attention was that in which the triple work of the preacher was defined and correlated. Evangelistic, educational, and ethical, this is the threefold work of the servant of God. Dr. Maclaren uttered a needful word upon their due proportion in oral presentation:—

> The ethical aspect of the preacher's work can never be rightly done, unless it is based upon the evangelistic and the educational. We shall rejoice that the pulpit and the Church have recognized more clearly than before the call to make their voice heard on Christ's side, in regard to drunkenness, gambling, impurity, and other national vices. But it will be no gain to the cause of Christian morality or of national righteousness if the ethical side of religion is presented exclusively or disproportionately to the other two, which are its foundation. Let us have applied Christianity by all means—the more the better, but let us make sure first that there is the Christianity to apply. Let us preach Christ as the Regenerator of society, but let us not omit to preach Him as the Saviour of the soul from sin.

We are thankful for this clear testimony from one who has for half a century maintained the true proportion of teaching. Unhappily there is too much one-sidedness with many. It is as fatal to divorce evangelism from morals as it is to sever morals from evangelism. The Gospel must be applied to the entire life, and so become a moral force; but without the Gospel, the preaching of morality is powerless.

The outcry against "theological sermons" is due to a misconception of both theology and sermons. In a true sermon, the personal element is necessarily a leading factor. Remembering that theology is another name for the knowledge of God, and that a sermon should contain the preacher's own experimental religion, it is easy to see that theology must form the substance of every real sermon, only it is theology passed through the furnace of a living conviction, and therefore itself vital and living. If preachers state only that which they have themselves heard, and seen, and handled of the Word of Life, their sermons will be none the less theological because the truth is put into concrete pictures and vivid experiences. The more theology of that kind that is preached, the better for both preacher, and congregations.

Our readers will notice that with the present issue our "Day by Day" readings reach the commencement of the New Testament. This will be a good opportunity for those who have not already done so to take up the systematic perusal of these suggestive and helpful Bible studies. Some of our readers declare that they value them more than almost any page of The Christian, which is as gratifying to their esteemed writer, Rev. F. B. Meyer, as it is to ourselves. In view of Dr. Maclaren's utterance mentioned above, our readers will do well to introduce the page to their friends. The Scripture portions upon which the notes are written are those selected by the Bible and Prayer Union, of which cards of membership may be obtained from its founder, Rev. Thos. Richardson, vicar of St. Benet's, Stepney, E.

A recent writer, in laying stress upon the fact that no Biblical criticism, however serious, can discover Christ, and that "to discover Christ is to wrestle in spirit with powers that no mere historical knowledge, still less a passing emotionalism, can overcome," has added that "discussions as to the Divinity of Christ rarely touch the matter. We must find God not beyond Christ, but in Him." Illustrating this there is a striking passage in Rev. P. Carnegie Simpson's volume, The Fact of Christ:—

> In the very human life and person of Jesus, we find not only a human life and person that direct us to a higher source of power; we find already there the presence and power of what declares itself to be not less than God Himself. When Jesus deals with us, and works within us, He does what only God can do. This is the really Christian meaning of the Divinity of Christ; the dogmatic definitions of the symbols are quite secondary. There is no reality in your assertion of the dogma of the Divinity of Jesus unless you mean that for you Jesus is that which only God Himself can be.

Another writer, in making a very clear definition of the nature of faith, has remarked that in the Bible faith is not once called in because the senses fail. It is, indeed, always the evidence of things unseen:—

> Not once is faith appealed to in order to supply the lack of evidence. Christ worked miracles as evidence of his power and mission. Accepting the evidence of the miracle, men might rise into faith in Him. But He never asked for faith in the miracle itself. There is first the miracle as demonstrable fact. Then faith stands on that, and rises into the region of the spirit. Faith is not faith that is not in touch with spirit.

The "Black Budget," as the fiscal proposals of the Chancellor of the Exchequer have been called, is bringing home to the sense of the country the costliness of war, and the great difficulty of apportioning the expenditure among the various classes of the community. The coal-tax and the sugar-tax are almost equally unpopular, and it is difficult to forecast the immediate issue. The national income has been so elastic for many years that a possible financial strain has seemed a contingency too far off to be seriously considered beforehand. Now that the elasticity has reached its limit, and we are threatened with fresh taxes, the nation is beginning to sober down. Sir Michael Hicks-Beach uttered some solemn words of warning, in his Budget speech, on our extravagance as a people of late years, and advised a more economical temper lest the future be mortgaged beyond control.

It is noteworthy that the Government has put the additional taxation on commodities that are necessities, and not on luxuries. Tobacco and intoxicants have escaped scot-free, while export coal and sugar have been burdened, and the income-tax has been raised. No doubt, an outcry would have been raised against "taxing the poor man's beer," but what about the rich man's cigars and champagne?

Both these sources of revenue might have fairly borne a share of the new imposts. The country is suffering for the way in which it has entrusted so many seats in the legislature into the hands of those who are more concerned in keeping things as they are, than in making strenuous efforts after the betterment of our national life from a high point of view.

A glance at the list of shareholders in almost any brewery company will reveal the painful fact that crowds of Christians and of Christian ministers do not hesitate to derive part of their income from the dread drink traffic. It is, therefore, satisfactory to find the Good Templars, at their recent annual meeting, arranging that their Grand Lodge should communicate with the various religious bodies with the view of deterring Christians, and especially Christian ministers, from acquiring and holding these shares. The responsibility in such cases may be indirect, but it is none the less real, and it is certainly one which no follower of the Lord Jesus Christ should incur.

We must remember that the Prevention of Sale of Drink to Children's Bill has not yet become law, and until that event occurs there must be no diminution of our interest in it, nor in our efforts to secure its passing. The publicans are exerting all their influence in urging their clients to petition against this measure. Striking bills are being exhibited appealing to the selfishness of parents by painting a dolorous picture of their discomfiture in case their children are forbidden by law to fetch their beer. We need to watch this subtle movement, and to oppose it everywhere. Unhappily, drinking parents of the lower classes are not always to be trusted in deciding what is good for their children, and it will not be difficult to persuade many of them to sign a petition against the Bill. In a question of this sort no false sentiment must be permitted. The country's weal takes precedence of parental idleness and indifference.

The new Factory Bills introduced by the Government are much more humane than the one which had to be withdrawn last year. Under these provisions, workers in what are called the "dangerous trades" are better protected, although all has not yet been done that ought to be done. Children, too, are more safeguarded, and the age limit has been modified. But the workers in connection with certain of the "perishable goods" trades are left to the mercy of their employers—the provisions of the Factory Act as to period of employment, hours of meals, and holidays, being inapplicable to the employés in these trades. Thus, during the four finest months of the year (June to September) such workers have all privileges withdrawn, if a master so wills it. It is a great weakness in the Bill, and it is certain to be resisted. There is a via media which ought to be resorted to; for if the preservation of perishable goods is necessary, still more necessary is it to guard the health and the happiness of the workers, especially in the bright summer time.

There is a very suggestive article in one of the monthly magazines concerning the effect upon actors and actresses of a theatrical life. The writer alleges—what upon the face of it is obvious—that the theatrical calling makes it extremely difficult for the performers to be really rational and natural beings:—

> The artificiality of his existence is a natural concomitant of the actor's calling, because it develops to the fullest extent a temperamental bent in that direction. He must have an emotional nature to succeed, and he becomes the creature of his emotions. It seems impossible for a player to dissociate himself from the theatre. He is always living in the stage atmosphere.

Of course, there are exceptions, but the tendency towards artificiality is there, more or less, in all. And, to a certain extent, the indictment holds good concerning habitués of the theatre. Apart from the question of the morality or immorality of particular plays, it must be a bad thing for people to continually resort to the artificial stimulus of their emotions which the theatre supplies. People who rely upon that sort of thing are always the most difficult to arouse to feeling on behalf of the real tragedies of life.

Another death at a so-called "boxing display"! We wonder how long the authorities will permit these exhibitions, which are often dangerous, and always revolting and brutal. The horrible details printed at length from time to time in the papers of the "sport" which takes place upon these occasions read like the accounts of the blackguardism of savages. To label this sort of thing "sport," and an exercise of "the manly art," is a prostitution of respectable words. The entire exhibitions are promoted in the interest of gamblers, who bet upon results, and who care no more for manhood and true sport than wild animals do. When a death occurs there is a momentary lull, but the horrible business soon goes on as as it did before.

A practical result of the principle of conscription is seen in the hatred with which military service is regarded among respectable families in Germany, and the subterfuges resorted to in order to evade it. Over fifty persons are on trial for having attempted to deceive the military authorities regarding the health of young men liable to service. The sons of wealthy people have been discovered paying large sums for "medicine" which, taken two or three days before the military doctor's examination, has had the effect of simulating heart disease or jaundice. The corruption has involved many medical men, and even some of the regimental examining doctors. A deep sensation has been created in Germany by these revelations. Forced patriotism is as insincere as a forced religion. Those who are endeavouring to bring about the principle of conscription in England would, if successful, become the enemies of the best elements of life and character in the country.

Ever and anon we receive from correspondents in different parts of the world letters bitterly deploring the influence on native races of English and American travellers who are numbered among professing Christians. The latest opens with the statement that "among the first impressions you receive on a journey towards and in the East is one of profound astonishment and disappointment at the general tone of the average English traveller, be it religious or social." There is lack of missionary labourers in every field; but how much might be accomplished if this other difficulty could be removed! The evil influence of some commercial communities in eastern and southern lands is already proverbial; but surely it might be possible to awaken to a sense of their duty Christian men and women. If such travellers were "alive unto God," no inquiry on the subject would have to be made. The "power of God" is self-manifesting.

For several successive years English Protestants tried in vain to induce Parliament to institute the inspection of convents. Is it worth while to renew that agitation? Would inspection be effective? We believe not. The only reasonable and effective remedy is to abolish and prohibit these houses of detention altogether. The English-speaking race is proud of her greatest modern poet, Tennyson, why will she not heed his word of wisdom? In one line he has expressed one of the saddest features of liberty-loving Anglo-Saxondom: FREEDOM FREE TO SLAY HERSELF, AND DYING WHILE THEY SHOUT HER NAME. In the prostituted name of religious liberty, Great Britain and America permit these prisons for women to exist and multiply, in spite of the appalling discoveries which have been made, and which are certain to be perpetrated where the opportunity is given. And Rome is always and everywhere the same.

There is one great danger before many of those who feel that it is their duty in the pulpit to undertake demonstrations of the harmony between Revelation and Science. It is that of imperfect acquaintance with science, and consequent inability to make a clear distinction between provisional hypotheses and the scientific truths, which have been admitted as incontrovertible. The latter are but comparatively few; the former are numberless, based as they are upon doubtful and tentative theories. For most preachers, therefore, it is better to leave science alone, and to be content to go down to the people with the simple and effectual message of man's sin, and of man's redemption through the Lord Jesus.

The collapse of organized Secularism in this country should be a revelation to its promoters of their incompetency to touch the popular conscience. The Bradlaugh interests died with their founder, and hitherto all attempts to resuscitate them have failed. Now, however, "An agnostic in his eightieth year," advertises his willingness to give £15,000 towards the establishing of a Freethought Institution in London, provided another £15,000 is subscribed by others. A committee has been formed, and the money has been nearly raised. Mr. Passmore Edwards being one of the prime movers in the matter. We are really not alarmed at the proposal. Its programme is full of the elements which doom themselves to decay. Thus:

> We shall have a Sunday-school for children, and the young mind will be taught the necessity of fulfilling all moral obligations apart from any expectations of reward in a future life. In fact the service will be very much of the same character as that held in the churches, only the supernatural will be eliminated. We want to urge the obligation to do right for right's sake.

All this has been tried before, and it has failed absolutely. The human heart will not be put off with fine and misleading phrases about doing right for right's sake. The sincere heart wants to know what is right and what is the standard of right, and it can never rest until it comes to GOD, the eternal rule of righteousness. This new scheme only confirms the famous words of Augustine: "Thou hast made us for Thyself, and our heart is restless till it rests in Thee."

The movement is to be further extended to attract women, though this the secretary candidly admits "will be no easy matter, but we hope to gain their allegiance by the means of concerts, dramatic entertainments, and social gatherings; and having got them we shall essay the even more arduous task" . . . &c. It is no compliment to the sex to assume that they can thus be beguiled by catch-penny methods. Still less do these methods accord with the professed aims set forth above—to "do right for right's sake."

FOUNDATION TRUTHS OF THE GOSPEL.—XVI.

THE PERSON OF CHRIST.

By Rev. T. A. GURNEY, M.A., LL.B., Swanage.

THE supreme significance of Christ is the one subject round which revolve all the minor controversies of Christianity. Questions of the inspiration of the Bible, criticisms which concern the authenticity and authority of the Old Testament, theories as to the development of Dogma, all find their centre here: "What think ye of Christ?" Let the issue be stated broadly and fairly: On the one side we have the view, either openly affirmed, or cleverly concealed, or unconsciously admitted: Christ was the Son of Man only—Prophet, indeed, of the Most High, Perfect Man, Highest Product of the ages, Man's noblest Ideal, but Man at the highest point of his "ascent," not Man "come down from heaven." On the other side, we have the Christian position:

> And so the Word had flesh, and wrought
> With human hands the creed of creeds,
> In loveliness of perfect deeds,
> More strong than all poetic thought.

Which is the true presentment of His Person? This question immediately suggests another: Which aspect of Christ's Person will preserve to us that marvellous Personality in its entirety? For a gift to mankind so precious all alike are interested in keeping in its full value.

Let us start, then, first with the conception of a purely human Jesus. And every fact in the history bears out the reality of that broad humanity. Jesus is certainly archetypal, universal Man. He belongs to no age, to no nation. He is, as a gifted thinker of the East described Him, "the inheritance of Europe and of Asia." He is in correspondence with man as such. But how are we to explain, by natural laws of development, this marvellous correspondence? Suddenly, without causes in his environment to account for the fact, there emerges upon the arena of history One transcendent Figure, who anticipates, realizes, fulfils the thoughts and desires and ideals of mankind. It is itself a fact so supernatural that all attempted natural explanations are mere evasions of the difficulty.

Again, with that broad humanity are associated certain exalted claims. To his own mind He is the Messiah to whom all the Scriptures bear witness (John v. 39), "the Son of the living God," especially commending his chief Apostle for a witness to that fact which "flesh and blood" could not reveal to him (Matt. xvi. 17), pre-existent and coming forth from God (John xvi. 28), revealing the Father and returning to the Father (John vii. 28, 34), after dying and rising again, "that repentance and remission of sins may be preached in his Name among all nations" (Luke xxiv. 47). This aspect of his Person, as Dorner shows ("Doctrine of the Person of Christ," vol. I., p. 50), is not peculiar to the later writings of the New Testament, but to all. It is impossible to separate this claim to Deity, from the true manhood of Christ. Paul and John, not less than the other writers, teach and emphasize that reality of manhood. (Dorner.) Thus the whole claim of Jesus to historic Personality, to self-correspondence, to prophethood, to credibility, stands or falls with an adequate answer to the question, "Whom makest Thou Thyself?" It is only a mythical Jesus who could be mere Son of Man.

Suppose for the moment, then, we assume that the Gospels are mere myth. Such an assumption belongs to a school of thought which utterly failed, last century, to prove its point. Still, treat it once again, as, what it can never again really be, an open question. I mark about this "mythical Figure" certain features:—

One is His Perfect Self-correspondence. From the moment in John's Gospel when He accepts in perfect calmness John the Baptist's pronouncement concerning Him as the Lamb of God (i. 26) to the closing chapter of the Gospel (if we regard chapter xxi. as an appendix added later), where He accepts the adoration of Thomas as he cries, "My Lord and my God!" (xx. 28), there is the same consistent attitude about his own Being.

A second feature is His Spiritual Uniqueness, manifested throughout all the Gospels, specially in John. He claims in a perfectly unique way to meet the deepest wants of mankind, and, what is much more wonderful, this spiritual uniqueness is never at variance with itself. There is always the same calm self-possession, the same absence of effort or effect, the same spiritual intensity.

A third feature is His Moral Majesty. The world has no other portrait like John's portrait of the loving and faithful Son coming to do the will of his Father, and finding his "meat and drink" (iv. 34) in the doing of it. The relationship of dependence (v. 19), obedience (ix. 4), submission (xii. 27), love (xvii. 25-6), trust (xvi. 32), is the most beautiful the human mind has ever dwelt upon.

Yet, throughout, the conception is no mere mystic idealism. It is clothed with flesh and blood. It is objective, real, living, human, self-correspondent; hence, also Divine. For such features are all perfectly natural to the supernatural presentment of the Person of Christ. Before any other view, they fail of adequate cause, and demand, in the very denial of the Supernatural, a stupendous miracle for their creation, even in the thought of man. Whereas, "the acknowledgment of God in Christ" solves all such questions, and thus, in Browning's words, "advances us to be wise." The Gospels are, then, at unity with themselves, with the needs of mankind, with the highest thought of the ages, with the revelation which goes before, with our deepest spiritual instincts, with the claims of Christ.

The revelation of Jesus Christ, thus brought home to the heart through the study of the Scriptures, has certain distinct features.

I. He is the Word of the Father, "begotten from everlasting of the Father, the very and eternal God, and of one substance with the Father" (Art. 2). "In the beginning," and "from the beginning," through all eternity and time we behold Him (John i. 1; 1 John i. 1) answering back (πρὸς, John i. 1) to the love of the Father, in living intercourse and communion, as face answereth to face. Thus "the Word was with God and the Word was God." Hence the first Bible picture of God's being is not of an awful, self-contained, and isolated being, but of a God of life and love. Thought and spirit are the two keynotes (Macleod) of the very title, "The Word," and this active personal Life is in closest fellowship with the Father of Lights.

II. He is the Immanent Word of God in Nature. The same Love which answered back to itself and found perfect realization in itself came forth from itself to project itself into a world of created being, that hereafter it might gather up its largess of Divine bounty in countless created beings into itself, and thu "God be all in all" (1 Cor. xv. 28). No cause save Divine goodness can explain why the Absolute thus found expression in the Relative, why the Son became "the First-begotten of all creation" (Col. i. 15), the "Image" in the visible and material world "of the Invisible God," "the Outshining of the Father's glory," and the Stamp and "Impress of his Person," the One "by whom all things were made" (John i. 3; 1 Cor. viii. 6; Col. i. 16; Heb. i. 2). "God had for end a nature whose end should be Himself." (Janet's "Final Causes," p. 425). The Incarnation of God and the Exaltation of human nature in its heavenly Representative to the throne of God, with their untold train of glorious consequences for nature, were the final cause of creation. "The Lamb slain before the foundation of the world" had this as his eternal birthright—to gather together all things in one in Himself in the stewardship of the fulness of the times (Eph. i. 10. See Greek, and compare Eph. iii. 2, 9, R.V. marg.)

Nor has the personal Word ever left the world which He created. "That which hath been made was life in Him" (John i. 3, 4, R.V., marg.). He became the Head over all things in God's house (Heb. iii. 6, R.V. marg.), the Eternal Energy, the Sustaining Life of Nature, "the mainspring of its activity, the centre of its unity, and the seat of its life" (Lightfoot on Col. i. 18). "In Him," cries Paul, "all things cohere." The New Testament picture of the world is not that of a dead machine, controlled from without, but, as science reveals it to-day, a living organism pulsating with a life which ever dwells within it, immanent and yet transcendent, for no view of God's transcendence is so true or so beautiful as that which realizes also his immanence.

> God is Law, say the wise, O soul, and let us rejoice,
> For if He thunder by Law, the thunder is yet his voice.

III. He is the Word made Flesh (John i. 14). By the Incarnation, the Only-Begotten of the Father was revealed in human nature, He who was in the form of God, "seeming divine because He was divine," as the very word implies (Moule, "Philippian Studies," p. 92), thus taking upon Him the form of a servant and being found in fashion as a man (Phil. ii. 6, 7). In this fact of the Incarnation of the Son of God, Christianity finds her central dogma. The very Cross and Resurrection, with their blessed and everlasting results, turn upon it. It is at once the revelation of man's redemption from sin and its effects, and the revelation of the nearness of God, of the dignity of man in Christ, of the brotherhood of races, of the future of the natural world, of the true sanctity of the homely and the earthly, of the hopefulness of missionary enterprise. It is the truth for which in all ages the Church has fought with the tenacity which springs from the conviction that in fighting for this she is contending for her very life. "The right faith"—(it is impossible to be indefinite on such a tremendous issue, it is irrational to stop short of this)—"the right faith is that we believe and confess that our Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of God, is God and Man; God of the substance of the Father, begotten before the worlds; and Man of the substance of his mother, born in the world; perfect God and perfect Man, of a reasonable soul and human flesh subsisting." (Athanasian Creed).

IV. He is the Word of Life dying upon the cross for man's sin.—The mystery of that passion, indeed, transcends all human explanation. The message of that Cross is a message to adoring faith alone. There Christ, the Second Adam, reversed the ruin wrought by the first and perpetuated by each successive age of men since. That sacrifice was "one sacrifice for sins for ever." It was propitiatory, representative, sufficient, exemplary, and carries with it the immediate offer of justification from the guilt of sin and present forgiveness to every child of man who accepts it as the ground of his pardon. While there is no view of human nature so hopeless as that which excludes the Fall, for it leaves unexplained the sad travesty of human ideals, there is no view of sin so pessimistic as that which minimizes the work upon the cross, for this gives the sole hope of restored fellowship with an offended God.

V. He is the Word returning to the Father.—He was "declared to be the Son of God with power, according to the Spirit of holiness, by the resurrection of the dead" (Rom. i. 4). The Resurrection is the vindication of Jesus in his claim to be "the Word of Life." It is his re-entry into the eternal world of being which He left for our sakes. It is the manifestation of Himself with a glorified Body and as a quickening Spirit. It is the answer of God to principalities, and powers, and evil men, who combined in nailing Jesus to the cross. It is "the incarnation of our justification" (Godet). It is the beginning of the glorification of Christ. It marks the completion of his Levitical priesthood unto death, and the inauguration of his office as the King-Priest of redeemed humanity offering Himself a living sacrifice unto the Father. "In that He died He died unto sin once (for all); in that He liveth He liveth unto God."

The Forty Days mark "the passage from sight to faith;" and on each occasion, now in the garden of Joseph, now on the Emmaus road, now in the upper room, now by the lake shore, the Lord of glory is leading up his followers to a new realization of his Person, his resurrection-life, his entry into his glory, his authority, his abiding presence with them "all the days," his coming in body again.

VI. Lastly, He is the Word shedding forth his Spirit upon the Church.—For the Church's life consists in the realization of the Pentecostal comings of her living Lord. "Being by the right hand of God exalted," the Holy Ghost is given, for Jesus is glorified. "Ascended up far above all heavens that He may fill all things," He receives of the Father gifts for men, the promised Comforter who shall assure to us his continued presence, "though parted from our sight." In that Ascension we are to behold our own. By the gift of his Spirit the fellowship of God with man has become an abiding reality, the access to God has become open and direct, the knowledge of God a privilege which all may share. Thus, as step by step we pass in review his Person in its relationship to man's need, the truth of his Deity is confirmed. "Call Christ, then, the illimitable God."

Home Training.

By Rev. E. Griffith Jones, B.A., Balham.

II. THE HOTHOUSE NURTURE.

THE analogy of hothouse culture serves as a striking contrast to that we called the "ostrich nurture" in our previous article. It is an essentially modern contrivance, and stands for many a fact in the moral as well as in the horticultural life. The main idea it suggests is that of forced growth, under unnatural conditions, which, in the case of children at least, is essentially injurious, and cannot possibly be maintained beyond a certain point, after which it brings a sure Nemesis.

I. It is wonderful what may be done in certain stages of organic and moral life by forced growth. Nature is provided with an overplus of vitality, which readily runs into any channel and form that may be open to it. If the laws of heredity and of environment be controlled and directed with due regard to their limitations, it is possible to do amazing things both with animals and plants in a very few generations. Man has surrounded himself with marvellous growths of bud and blossom, leaf and stem, all by artificial culture. Out of the commonest wayside flowers he has, by budding, forcing, urging, checking, stimulating, directing, filled his greenhouses with that have little or no likeness to the wild stock from which they sprang.

Now the same power is largely placed in our hands in regard to children. Within limits set by the individuality of the child, and the power of the parents' will over him, parents may direct, force, and check the growth of their little ones, bodily, mentally, and spiritually, to a wonderful extent. It is possible to crush the individuality of almost any child by severity of treatment; or to develop it abnormally by undue stimulus and excitement. According to early training the child tends to become a saint or a ruffian.

There are homes in which the children are put under a kind of forcing frame, and their nature is stimulated into a striking but perilous precocity. This may be done physically, by late hours, social excitements, highly seasoned food, and undue indulgence in adult pleasures, which make them men and women long before their time. Oftener still, boys and girls are taxed in brain and nerve through over-study, and in debilitated constitutions in after-life. Or they may anticipate the slow unfolding of the spiritual nature by the same forcing process, demanding of little children a programme of religious experience normal in a man, but utterly unnatural in a child. Hothouses are for flowers, not men.

We may at least be sure the unnatural precocity, premature smartness in a child, is an unnatural and perilous thing. If it lasts, it becomes a self-conscious superiority; if it does not, it becomes a humiliating regret. Children should be allowed to grow (like the Perfect Child) proportionately "in stature and in wisdom," body and soul keeping in happy balance of development. We must not expect them to be angels before their time. A child is a chrysalis, not a butterfly; its very faults are a part of the charm of childhood, and if these are pruned instead of being stifled, they will be transformed into virtues in good time. A child's religion is a lovely thing, but if we expect the fruit in the bud, the ripe experience in the promise of infancy, we may presently find that we are the parents of prigs instead of Christians—if indeed our perpetual interference with that most delicate entity in God's world—does not end in a revulsion against all religion.

II. Let us pass on to another point. "Hothouse nurture" stands for undue isolation from natural influences.

A wild flower has to take its chance in a world of storm and sunshine; a hothouse flower lives in a little world within the world, from which all but select influences are shut out. The sunshine is tempered, the rain and the drought regulated, the heat kept at carefully-graded levels; and so at last delicate results are brought to perfection, which in the outer world would fade and die in a few hours.

Now, children come into the world in a state of such absolute helplessness, that for some time they must be kept under in a thoroughly artificial environment, if they are to survive at all. A mother's love stands for the sum total of all those defensive, isolating ministries which guard the budding life from the myriad ills that lurk within reach of attack.

Now, just because the instinct to shield our little ones from harm is so beautifully strong in most parents, it often becomes a snare. Children may be over-shielded from the world; they may be isolated into weakness, pampered into helplessness, and petted into imbecility.

The home is not a lifelong refuge for weakness, but a training school for strength—not a hothouse for exotics, but a stimulating soil for qualities that must presently, as it were, be bedded in the open. Up to a certain time no parental watchfulness can possibly be too great. But there are parents who treat their children as though they were to be children for ever. They expect them to think as they do in all things, instead of training them gradually to think for themselves. They bring them up ignorant of all the evil around them, instead of opening their eyes to it by slow and wise degrees, and showing how it may be met and mastered. They make them the object of a self-sacrifice that is boundless and of a love that knows no limit, instead of developing their children's self-sacrifice and exercising them into the virtues of godliness and the

SWEET GRACES OF SELF-FORGETFULNESS.

What follows? The day comes when the children grow up physically, if not morally, and when they must go forth into the world to wrestle and fight with conditions of existence unknown to them beyond the doorstep and the garden wall. And the chances are that children brought up as I have been describing first receive a great shock, and then find themselves helpless before the new conditions. Sometimes, indeed, the young people whom their parents imagine to be as fresh and innocent as babes, are found to have been indoctrinated by precocious school companions, or by impure servants, or by secretly-read and questionable books, in all the love of vice from which they have been apparently guarded. The knowledge that should have been sifted and filtered through the wisdom and confidence of father and mother, so losing all its sting and poison, has thus come to them by illegitimate means; and, fed by heats of youthful imagination, with a perilous glow of attractiveness, it becomes an ideal indulgence long before it can be an actual vice. I do not know which is worse—the unnatural ignorance which leaves the child helpless to meet the facts of life, or that illicit familiarity with the idea of wrong which prepares for its committal when opportunity offers.

How sad is that complaint so often made by those who have at last been saved "as by fire" from the secret perils of life: "Why was I kept in ignorance of these things before I left home? Why was I not warned of the perils before me?" Some of in the great cities are the fruit of a wilful blindness on the part of parents and guardians, who have allowed innocent souls to stumble into disaster through an ignorance which their elders might have prevented. Ignorance is not innocence in the soul any more than darkness is safety for the body; and it may be but a surer chance for a fatal thrust. The pure of heart are not those who are ignorant of evil, but those who, knowing evil, reject it because they have chosen the good.

And so we come to this conclusion—that the Hothouse Nurture is a fatal mistake, first, because it is artificial; secondly, because it overstimulates, and then stunts true growth; thirdly, because it ignores the fact that the home is a training school, and not a monastic cell; and lastly, because it cannot possibly last. Therefore it stands condemned.

The May Meetings.

Protestant Alliance Jubilee.

IN celebration of the Jubilee of the Protestant Alliance two memorable demonstrations took place on Wednesday of last week at the Queen's Hall. Owing to the multiplicity of functions in the City, the afternoon gathering was somewhat thinly attended, but while the audience was not as large as the occasion merited, there is every reason to believe that loyal Churchmen and Nonconformists were never more united than now in one concerted endeavour to uphold the doctrines of the Reformation, and the principles of religious liberty, as the best security, under God, for the temporal and spiritual welfare of the empire. Two points which marked the gatherings were worthy of note—the large number of young people who attended, and the hearty response of the audience when the spiritual side of the work of the Alliance was emphasized.

Mr. S. Smith, M.P., presided at the first meeting, and in warmly congratulating the Alliance on attaining its Jubilee, alluded to the welcome revival of Protestant feeling in the country. A few years ago it seemed as if the people of England had almost forgotten the state of things which led up to the Reformation, but has been thrown upon the question, and men are giving their minds to the study of the position of the Church. The Lambeth decisions of the two Archbishops are strongly Protestant; and although they are being set aside by many clergy, it cannot be doubted that the tide has turned in the National Church, and the Romish movement has begun to wane. Touching upon the Declaration made by the King on his accession to the Throne, Mr. Smith ventured to suggest that the language employed strikes harshly on the ears of the twentieth century. There were loud cries of dissent from every part of the hall, as the speaker pleaded for some modification in the terms of the Oath and Declaration. While admitting that Rome has relaxed none of her claims, the Chairman maintained that Roman Catholics in many countries are establishing liberty of faith and are disregarding

THE POPE'S ANATHEMAS.

He believed the Oath could be modified without removing the safeguards which provide for a Protestant succession to the throne. The opinion of the Chairman on the subject was out of harmony with the sentiment of the audience, and expressions of strong disapproval were heard on every hand.

A vigorous address by Rev. H. Lindsay Young followed, who urged the need for convents to be opened to inspection. It was for Protestants to insist upon this, and set at liberty those who are imprisoned therein. Referring to the crusade which is carried on by the Alliance, he said no one knew the extent to which Rome would have gone in this country had not the brake been applied.

In the course of an impressive address, Rev. George Hanson, D.D., said the differences between Romanists and Protestants are more than a few ceremonies. Many well-meaning people argue that institutions engineered by monks and nuns accomplish much good; but it must be remembered that our forefathers drew a wide distinction between the Pope and Luther, incense and prayer, the monastery and home, the priest and pastor, the Bible obscured and the Bible accessible to all men. Passing to the chief duty of the Church, the speaker said its highest function was to point men to Christ.

NO COMPROMISE CAN BRIDGE THE CHASM

between Romanists and Protestants. Any man who ignores these fundamental and irreconcilable differences is either deplorably ignorant of the lessons of history, or still more deplorably indifferent to the Gospel of Christ. We stand upon the principles which are the only rule of faith. Rome endeavours to keep the Bible from the people, and the people from the Bible. The Romanists are not satisfied with supplementing the Bible by tradition, but supersede the Scripture by the elevation of tradition.

Rev. F. S. Webster pleaded fervently for a wholesome dread of Popery, and emphasized the importance of relying upon the Word of God as the only weapon with which the victory for Christ can be won. Mr. B. Nicholson and Dr. Kennedy Moore also delivered addresses.

At the evening gathering there was a much larger attendance, and the enthusiasm was correspondingly more intense. Mr. T. A. Denny presided, and in the course of a brief and fitting address asked how much longer the nation is going to tolerate

THE CLOSED DOORS OF CONVENTS.

England, he remarked, is the only country which does not visit its convents. Referring to the efforts which are being made with the object of bringing pressure to bear upon the Government to sanction a Roman Catholic University in Ireland, he believed the education of many Catholics was slender, and many a schoolboy could puzzle a Cardinal or Bishop on any simple Scripture question. Our nation is suffering because the Bible does not take the place to which it is entitled. The nation and country are handicapped by Popery.

Rev. W. R. Mowll, in an earnest and characteristic address, held that if ministers of God's Word had done their duty we should not now be face to face with the difficulties which confront us; and if the people had done their part, the ministers would have been compelled to do theirs.

It fell to the lot of Rev. W. Cuff to place on record the indignation of the Protestant Alliance at the recent action of the Duke of Norfolk while in Italy. He had every reason for saying that Nonconformists would deliberately choose to die rather than submit to the tyranny of the Pope. Addresses were also delivered by Revs. J. Wardle Stafford, G. Freeman, and R. Middleton, and by Mr. W. Johnston, M.P.

Homes for Little Boys.

THE annual gathering in connection with the Homes for Little Boys, Farningham and Swanley, was held on Friday last at the Hotel Métropole.

Mr. R. W. Perks, M.P., who presided, said that any charitable organization which has stood the test of thirty-seven years of public criticism and support is entitled to go forward in its noble work in the full conviction that the work is both necessary and good. It is hardly possible to doubt that the society is doing a work of great value to the public life of this country. The managers pride themselves on the fact that the percentage of lads, old inmates of the schools, who are occupying positions of honour and usefulness at the present time, is very large indeed. He earnestiy appealed for sustained and increased support for the homes.

Mr. E. S. Hanbury, (hon. treasurer) mentioned that the maintenance of the Homes involved an expenditure of between £14,000 and £15,000, and other addresses were given testifying, in hearty terms, to the great worth of the institutions.

Wilton House, St. Leonards-on-Sea.—Ministers and other Christian workers who have visited this Home of Rest are unanimous in testifying to the spiritual and temporal advantages which it affords. From May 8 to 18 the Home will be closed for cleaning and renovation. Prospectuses may be obtained from, and application made to, the Lady Superintendent, Wilton House, West Marina, St. Leonards-on-Sea.

Zenana Bible and Medical Mission.

THERE was a large gathering at the annual meeting of the Zenana Bible and Medical Mission, held in St. James' Hall on Wednesday of last week. The present year marks the Jubilee of the Mission, and a special effort is being made to make it the starting point for a period of usefulness wider than any yet attained. During 1900 the ordinary income at home amounted to £20,634, a sum of £4,024 was received on behalf of the Indian Famine Fund, and the receipts in India were Rs.56,000. From the report it appeared that the Mission has now 36 centres of work in India. The staff of 443 workers includes 154 European missionaries and assistants, 92 native Biblewomen, and 197 native teachers, nurses, &c. The pupils in 68 schools number 3,739, while the missionaries have access to 5,446 zenanas and houses, with 2,883 pupils under regular Christian instruction. In addition to these, the Biblewomen visit 1,035 villages. The patients at the hospitals numbered 20,047, and 62,681 attendances at the dispensaries were recorded.

The Chairman (Lord Kinnaird) spoke with gratitude of the great changes which had come over public opinion during the past fifty years—(1) the awakening to the possibilities of what ladies could do among the women of the world, proving the put forward by Mr. Venn and other friends; and (2) the recognition of the duty of carrying the Gospel to our Indian fellow-subjects.

It was reported by the secretary—Rev. A. R. Cavalier—that the office of president, vacant since the death of the late Duchess of Teck, had now been accepted by the Countess Roberts.

Rev. Principal Fairbairn (Mansfield College, Oxford) gave an account of his feelings on first coming into contact with the heathenism of the East, the blackness lightened only by the sight of the gold thread of Christian missions visible wherever he went. He was impressed by the fact that India is not held by the military, but by English justice and freedom; and because these are given, India demands the faith which has made England what it is. Written broad on the history and in the hearts of India is the difference between heathen and Christian conquerors. The wrongs done to women can alone be righted by Christian missions to them. What heroic men did in the beginnings of foreign mission work, women are doing to-day, with a thoroughness born of sympathy. Whether it have to do with education, the ministry of healing, or the ministry of famine relief, whether it have regard to body, soul, or mind—the mother, the sister, the friend who goes out to the zenana and the women's hospital, goes to and the women of India have responded. Dr. Fairbairn, in closing, paid a high tribute to the true spirit of catholicity which marks the operations of the Mission.

Though the dominant note of the report was one of thankfulness, the financial secretary (Mr. A. H. Habershon) called attention to the fact that successive deficits in the accounts had accumulated till the overdraft at the bank amounted to over £5,000. If a Jubilee Fund of £20,000 could be raised, the deficit would be wiped out, and expansion undertaken in different directions.

After congratulating the Mission on the good work it is doing, the Bishop of Bombay expressed the pleasure it gave him to co-operate with it and with many other societies constituted on the Christian rather than on the denominational basis.

The Children's Home.

THE warm place which the Children's Home Orphanage and Refuge (Bonner Road, N.E.), founded by Rev. Dr. T. B. Stephenson, occupies in the heart of Wesleyan Methodism was proved by the large and hearty audience which assembled in Wesley's Chapel, City Road, last Friday, for the annual meeting. The presence and singing of a number of the boys and girls themselves added materially to the attractions of the meeting.

Two handsome banners were presented by Lady Jeune (who has just accepted the presidency of the Young Leaguers' Union) to the Victoria Park and Doncaster branches, in recognition of their having raised the largest offerings to the funds of the Home during the first year of the existence of the Union. Her ladyship expressed the pleasure it gave her, as a Churchwoman, to be able to lend a helping hand to such a cause, which had also a wide dissenting interest; and pointed out in a few well-chosen words the importance of banding the children of congregations together in support of a particular institution with which they might be expected to have a special sympathy.

Speaking from fifty years' experience as a Sunday-school teacher, and thirty years as chairman of the visiting justices of Hull prison, the Chairman (Mr. T. B. Holmes) gave interesting particulars to show the progress which had been made in the spread of education, the diminution of crime, and in other directions during recent decades. Especially he pointed hopefully to the large and increasing proportion of the young people passing through trainingships and prisons who are afterwards reported as

TURNING OUT WELL.

The Children's Home itself he described as one of the bulwarks of the land; and declared that, looking at it only from the point of view of national pecuniary interest, it ought to be supported by citizens. But above all it is a fulfilment of the Saviour's command to seek out and save the lost. A warm greeting was extended to Rev. Arthur E. Gregory on his first appearance in the capacity of principal.

The annual statement, read by Mr. Francis Horner (honorary secretary), showed that the income continues to grow steadily, amounting to £25,469, being £2,035 in excess of that of the previous year, and an increase of £5,500 in three years, while this had been gained at a lower cost through economy secured in administration. The formation of the Young Leaguers' Union was referred to with gratitude, and the membership reported to be already 4,324. The roll of the institution showed 1,189 boys and girls resident, while during the year seventy-six had been sent to Canada, and 132 placed in situations in this country. Three additional houses had been gifted by friends, and it was the hope of the committee to provide in the future for at least one hundred children more than in the past.

As chairman of the Conference, Rev. Dr. Thomas Allen congratulated Dr. Stephenson on the work accomplished in the building up of the institution, and Mr. Gregory on the ability and energy he had shown in taking up the duties of the principalship. After interesting personal reminiscences of earlier days, he congratulated the supporters on the fact that the Home has now firmly established itself in the sentiment and affection of the Wesleyan Methodist Church; and declared his conviction that the Home had served the purpose for which it was established in

A MOST REMARKABLE DEGREE.

A hearty welcome was extended to another representative of the Church of England, Rev. Eric M. Farrar, who pleaded the cause of the Home (1) for the sake of the children, (2) for the sake of England, seeing that if one member suffer, all the members suffer with it, (3) for the sake of all mankind on account of the great possibilities of every life, (4) for the sake of the Church, using that word in the widest sense, seeing that it is in Christian homes that men like John Wesley are trained, (5) for the sake of the Father who has entrusted his little ones to our care, to save them from the unclean dogs of impurity and intemperance.

Addresses were also given by Dr. Stephenson, Mr. J. McDougall (Vice-Chairman of the London County Council) and Mr. James E. Vanner.

Barbican Mission to the Jews.

WITHIN the last few years the problem of evangelizing the Jews massed in the East End of London has exercised the minds of friends of Israel to a greater extent than ever before. Towards the solution of the difficulty a prominent part is being taken by the Barbican Mission, the twelfth anniversary of which took place on Tuesday of last week at St. Paul's Church Room, Onslow Square. In view of the developments which have taken place during the year by the erection of extensive and commodious premises at Whitechapel, to meet the growing needs of the work, the occasion was one of more than usual interest, and a spirit of deep thankfulness and enthusiasm pervaded the gathering.

PREBENDARY WEBB-PEPLOE,

president of the Mission, occupied the chair, and warmly commended the efforts which are being made to preach the Gospel to the scattered people of Israel. He was glad to think that these efforts were marked by no spirit of rivalry with other agencies, as there is room for much more work than has ever been undertaken by all the societies combined. The Rector of Whitechapel, whose work among the Jews is on parochial lines, has welcomed the Barbican Mission to his parish, and exercises a practical sympathy on its behalf. With regard to the past year, the Chairman said there was abundant cause for thankfulness to God. A few weeks ago it seemed inevitable that the year would close with a deficit, but God had graciously permitted them to receive funds, with the result that they had now a substantial balance in hand. Speaking of the prospects of the Mission, Mr. Webb-Peploe referred to which are now nearing completion, and are to be opened in May. Naturally there is a debt, towards the extinction of which a friend has offered £200 on condition that four others contribute a like sum. Two responses have been made, and the committee are now waiting for the two remaining offers in order that the £1,000 may be added to the fund. Another friend has offered £100 on condition that three others give a similar sum. Mr. Webb-Peploe went on to speak of the remarkable manner in which the work is opening up abroad. One who has been carrying on a mission at Haifa has come forward requesting the Barbican Society to take over the mission work and buildings. The committee do not feel justified in taking over the work without first deputing an agent to inspect the property and report to them before any steps are taken in the matter.

An abstract of the report, read by the secretary, Pred. C. T. Lipshytz, showed that during the year £2,500 had been received towards the erection of the Gordon Calthrop Memorial Mission House, while £1,269 had been subscribed to the general funds. The temporary headquarters in Commercial Road had been the scene of some who attend in greater numbers than ever, and it is a matter of deep thankfulness that a spirit of wider interest and earnest inquiry is being manifested. The reading room and night school have been extensively used, while the converts' and inquirers' home has afforded a safe retreat for those who are in danger of persecution, and providing a temporary home for them while seeking to earn their own livelihood. A share is also taken in foreign work, a grant being made annually to the West German Friends of Israel, which is devoted to missionary efforts in Alsace.

Dr C. H. H. Wright recalled his association with Jewish missionary work on the Continent, and spoke of the persecutions which had marked the earlier days of evangelistic effort among the sons of Israel. Rev. M. S. Bergmann spoke of the increase of agencies in the interests of the Jew in the metropolis. A deeply impressive address was given by Rev. F. S. Webster, who spoke of the debt which we owe to the Jews. Efforts for their evangelization were in the direction of the repayment of that debt. The closing address was that of Rev. S. J. Deutschberger, who bore testimony to the practical and spiritual results of the efforts which are being made by the Mission.

Medical Missionary Association.

AT the annual meeting of this Association, held at Exeter Hall on Friday, there were many manifestations of its continued success, under God, at home and abroad. Dr. George Saunders presided, and the speakers were missionaries who had had experience in the foreign field, and opportunities of witnessing the beneficent work which is maintained by medical missions.

Dr. J. L. Maxwell, the secretary, briefly referred to the scope and aims of the Society, and emphasized its inter-denominational character. During the winter nine men have been in residence in the Medical Mission House. Two of the students, having taken their diplomas at the Royal Colleges, are now working for the highest honours of the Royal College of Surgeons: while two others, who have also taken their diplomas, are occupying posts at the London Hospital. Believing that the Lord's service on the mission field claims men of the very highest training and experience, the Association encourages students to fit themselves as perfectly as possible for their work, and, above all, the necessity of seeking the presence and guidance of God.

Some interesting details of medical missions in Japan were given by Dr. D. Landsborough, of Formosa. While many advancements have been made in the national life of the people by the Japanese, it remained for England to take the Gospel. The whole of the country is open to the influence of Christianity, and the numerous obstacles which retarded its progress in years gone by have been largely removed by the Japanese themselves. He related touching instances of patients' gratitude, and how in numberless cases the higher aim of the medical missionary is being accomplished in winning souls to Christ.

Dr. G. P. Smith spoke of the work carried on at the hospital at Tien-tsin, which is not only a healing institution, but a means of distributing the Word of God. Singularly pathetic was the case of a blind patient who, on being told that nothing could be done for him, fell at the doctor's feet and wept. Every morning an evangelistic service is held in the hospital. In pleading for the prayers of friends at home, Dr. Smith said a lady in the South of England made it a rule to pray every night for the one who might be occupying the bed which she supports in a ward of their hospital at Tien-tsin. In answer to prayer, nearly every patient before leaving that bed had confessed faith in Christ. Another representative of missions in China was Dr. Leopold G. Hill, who related some of his experiences in Pakhoi, and testified to the remarkable way in which medical work is used of God to touch the hearts of the natives, and the opening of doors for the Gospel which have hitherto remained closed.

East-End Mothers' Home. — The usual number of distressingly poor cases have come before the workers at this beneficient institution, which is situated at 894 and 896, Commercial Road, E. Many who seek its shelter arrive in a semi-starved condition. One patient told the superintendent that for two days before coming in she had not tasted food. Her husband, being delicate, could do but little towards the maintenance of his wife and five children. It is felt that more women would take advantage of the Home if a neighbour could be paid to attend the remaining children, and a suggestion has been made to raise a fund for this purpose. The resident lady superintendent is Mrs. Sarah E. Blomfield.

The Open-Air Mission.

THE operations of the Open-Air Mission increase in diversity and usefulness as the days go by. By the racecourse and fair campaigns, on the beach at sea-side resorts, on village evangelization tours, among soldiers in camp and garrison, by special missions in crowded districts, and in many other organized ways the Gospel is preached to vast numbers of people who are outside the pale of church influences.

The annual gatherings of the Mission, held on Wednesday last in the lower Exeter Hall, were characterized, as usual, by a spirit of revival enthusiasm. In the afternoon Sir H. H. Bemrose, who presided, spoke warmly and sympathetically of the work, and brief talks on the missions in various parts of the country were given by eye-witnesses and participants. An interesting letter was read from Prof. Handley C. G. Moule, who described the work as "carried on in full fidelity to its first traditions of pure, simple, living, Gospel truth."

In the evening there was a large rally of members and friends. Mr. Frank Cockrem, the secretary, gave a brief review of the past year's efforts. The work has been prosecuted with diligence, and "open doors" have been many.

NEARLY A THOUSAND CAMPAIGNS

have been undertaken at feasts, markets, cattle-shows, regattas, and other popular resorts. Factory and dock-gate meetings have proved highly attractive to the working classes, while at places habitually visited by Sabbath desecrators crowds have been stirred by words of warning and entreaty from the Society's evangelists. The Gospel literature distributed amounted to nearly a million and a quarter copies. Mr. Cockrem's vivid report included a number of striking instances in which blessing had followed the preaching.

After Major Mackinlay had applied to religious work generally some lessons from South African warfare, on "getting into touch with the enemy," Mr. R. C. Morgan, the chairman, summed up some practical words to preachers in the sentence, "Preach Christ."

The world-wide value of open-air operations was brought out by Rev. Norman Bennet (lately returned from chaplain's work at the Cape), who described how, during some of the marches in pursuit of De Wet, many of the British soldiers were wont to gather in the moonlight and sing "some of those grand Moody and Sankey hymns, which there are none like unto in all the world." Mr. Bennet's reminiscences of the Mission's meetings at Chester Races were full of pathetic touches. "I saw hearts bowed at the Cross for pardon; I saw souls rejoicing

IN A NEW-FOUND SAVIOUR."

The speaker concluded with a vigorous account of the meetings on Epsom racecourse, in which he had taken part that day. The Gospel message had been accepted by several hearers, while on every hand the evangelists dealt with individual members of the crowd.

Mr. W. L. Tweedie, organizing missioner, reminded his hearers of the spiritual destitution of rural England, and pictured the interest aroused in the villages by an Open-Air Mission campaign, after which Mr. W. R. Lane spoke of the readiness of the people to listen to faithful preaching of Christ, as shown by an open-air meeting, during a recent Mission, attended by thousands of people, and by the crowds who gather at Mr. Charles Cook's services in Hyde Park.

The chief speaker was Rev. F. S. Webster, who addressed his audience as "Fellow open-air preachers," and gave some sound advice as to both manner and message, dwelling more especially on a grip of Bible truth and "a magnificent hopefulness for the very worst."

During the evening Madame Annie Ryall sang Gospel solos with remarkable effect, and the meeting, which was full of promise for the forthcoming summer campaign, concluded with prayer.

Christian Colportage Association.

THE annual gatherings of the Christian Colportage Association last Thursday, began with a conference of colporteurs, to which superintendents and secretaries had also been invited. In the afternoon the public were admitted to a meeting for prayer, praise, and testimony, when nearly 100 men were present, representing twenty-eight counties. None who were there will soon forget some of the words then spoken, by plain men from among the people, fired with a holy zeal, and with hearts overflowing with gratitude for the way in which God had honoured their words and blessed their work.

Sir George Williams took the chair at four o'clock, when the report submitted by Mr. H. D. Brown (secretary) brought home the truth that the true way to reach and influence people is to go to them and deal with them one by one, while the fitness of this instrument is shown in the variety of classes reached and the large sales made.

At the close of the year the staff of colporteurs numbered 128, and the sales had included 66,338 Bibles and Testaments, 420,200 books, 366,320 magazines, 320,780 Scripture text cards, of the value of £16,333 10s.; while over 800,000 Gospel tracts have been distributed. This brings the total sales during the past twenty-seven years to eighteen and a half millions of Bibles, Testaments, books, and magazines, with nearly four millions of Scripture text cards, of the value of £301,625. In addition thirteen and a quarter millions of Gospel tracts had been distributed in London and other large centres of population, in country towns and villages, among domestic servants, at the seaside, in market places, barracks, hopfields, and public-houses. About 2,000 villages are systematically visited every month.

The staff is larger than ever before; and a forward movement has been planned by which a small band of itinerating colporteurs shall be formed, who, instead of settling permanently, shall take charge of a group of villages for one year, and then move on to another district, so than would be possible on the present plan alone. Unfortunately the accounts show a deficit of £600. In supporting an appeal for £1,000, the Chairman said such a Society must go forward, because it deserves to do so, and is worthy of the support of the British public.

In a stirring and hopeful address, Rev. J. Carnegie Brown said: "We want more than a story with a text in it to save a man's soul. Thank God we have a Book with a great many texts, and that is the Bible which the Society sends forth. The outcome of this work is a great encouragement to believe in the power of God. The Society has taken men who knew a little about God, has taught them more about Him, and sends them to tell what they know."

The colporteurs were described by Rev. J. G. Train as soldiers engaged in hand-to-hand fighting, as compared with the long range firing of the preacher. Referring to the story of Gideon, a helpful lesson was drawn from the fact that the angel found him vigorously threshing wheat. The commission Gideon received was to go "in this thy might." What was his might? It was "the apprehension of the lights of God's countenance, the knowledge that of being reconciled to God and of enjoying his friendship. That gave might to Gideon and gives might to us."

An interesting item on the programme was the presentation of Bibles to two of the colporteurs who have have completed twenty-one years of valuable service. The Chain of Prayer now consists of 3,000 Christian friends, who are banded together to be the Lord's remembrancers on behalf of this work, and who have enrolled themselves as "links." The "loops" of the chain, or monthly district prayer meetings of the "links," have increased to thirty-eight.

Another meeting was held in the evening, under the presidency of Lord Kinnaird, when an address was given by Pastor Archibald Brown, and further testimonies were given by colporteurs.

C.E. Temperance Society.

THE annual meeting of the Church of England Temperance Society was held at Lambeth Palace on April 24, the Archbishop of Canterbury presiding. The past year was described as one of marked progress, notably in the additions to the rescue machinery. Ninety-seven missionaries and ten mission women are employed in the Police Court and Prison Gate Mission. The London, Croydon, and Portsmouth Shelter Homes continue their useful work, and an institution for male inebriates of the poorer classes has been opened. Good work has been accomplished by the Racecourse and Van Mission, and numerous agricultural shows have been visited. The Council regret, however, the Government's refusal to initiate any temperance legislation on the lines of the Royal Commission's reports, or to give any facilities for the Bill against serving children in public-houses, and the Bill for Sunday closing in Monmouthshire.

In the course of a forcible address, the Archbishop of Canterbury said they had a right to ask Parliament not to undo the Society's work as fast as it is accomplished. The effect of the present laws is to place temptation perpetually in the way of all manner of weak people, and, even on the showing of opponents of the temperance movement, that abundance of temptation is entirely unnecessary.

The speaker went on to specify several reasons for encouragement. The number of supporters of temperance has not at any time really diminished, and their position is better understood year by year. The great majority obtained by the Bill against the sale of liquor to children was most encouraging, and the Archbishop expressed the opinion that the Government will not next year be found exercising opposition to the measure.

City Police Mission.

THE second anniversary of the City of London Police Mission has been celebrated during the past week by a series of meetings which were full of interest and illustrative of the influence of Christian constables upon city life.

The following instance, related in the report, is a characteristic one:—"A half-starved lad was looking longingly into a confectioner's window. The father-heart of one of our policemen led him to question the boy, and discovered him to be a 'runaway.' He found, on making inquiries at the address given, that his widowed mother was at the point of death. Although in full uniform, the policeman asked for a Bible, and read to the woman his favourite chapter, John iii. After praying with her, she was led to accept Jesus by faith. The boy was sent to a Home, and his mother's parting words were: 'Now mind you read your Bible, pray to God, and meet me in heaven.'"

The testimonies and singing of the policemen were received with appreciation, and Pastor Fuller Gooch, Lady Hope, and Mr. J. W. C. Fegan made kindly reference to the blessings resultant upon the deputation work to churches and missions. Forty such visits have been paid during the year.

Many of the men, too, told how the Lord had used them to pass a word of hope and cheer to many an erring one.

Efforts are being put forth to influence the young constables, many of whom come from country homes and have Christian parents. Ex-P.C. Hemblen, who has finished twenty-five years' service, is undertaking the oversight of the Institute, and the visitation of the stations.

Home of Rest for Missionary Students.—For some time it has been felt that a Home of Rest out of London would be a valuable addition to the East London Institute of the Regions Beyond Missionary Union, and a suitable house has now been secured at Leigh-on-Sea. As furnishing is the primary difficulty, friends who have suitable articles to spare are asked to communicate with Miss Duff, Superintendent of the Young Women's Training College, Bow, E.

Central Y.M.C.A.

THE celebration last Monday of the fifty-seventh anniversary of the Central Y.M.C.A. opened at the Noon Prayer Meeting in Aldersgate Street, when Bishop Hartzell (Methodist Episcopal Church) gave an eloquent address, in the course of which he showed great enthusiasm regarding the outlook for Christian effort among young men, expressing the firm conviction that the Associations are just about to enter on their greatest victories for Christ. Rev. John Wilson (Woolwich) gave an address at the one o'clock meeting in Exeter Hall. Later in the afternoon a reception in honour of the occasion was held by the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress in the Egyptian Hall of the Mansion House. His lordship extended a warm and hearty greeting to his guests, and bright, helpful addresses were delivered by Prebendary Webb-Peploe and Rev. Dinsdale T. Young.

The widespread interest in the occasion was proved by the large audience which filled Exeter Hall in the evening. Another successful year of work fell to be reported, and a spirit of buoyant hopefulness pervaded the whole proceedings. Among other statistics submitted by the general secretary (Mr. J. H. Putterill), it appeared that the to 2,127, with 871 associates, while it was estimated that 12,000 visits are paid weekly to the rooms at the three centres. Young men to the number of 4,100 had been recommended to lodgings, situations had been secured for 258, temporary relief had been given to 515, and 807 had been accommodated at the Shaftesbury House Holiday Home, Margate. The financial statement unfortunately showed that the income of £7,040 5s. 7d. had fallen short of the expenditure by £774 15s. 3d; but a large number of subscriptions were intimated towards a special effort to raise £1,600.

A very affectionate greeting was given to Sir George Williams, who presided, on his restoration to health. Before proceeding with his address he asked the audience to give new evidence of the deep loyalty of the Association by singing a verse of the National Anthem. Thereafter he gave a sketch of the progress of the movement throughout the world, and referred with his accustomed enthusiasm to the privilege of being engaged in the effort to bring young men to God. Special importance was attached to the deputation—in the persons of Mr. and Mrs. William M. Oatts, of Glasgow—which has been visiting the British dependencies and colonies in the interests of Christian work among young men and women. From India of the work being done at Bombay (under the leadership of Mr. Frank Anderson) and other parts of India. A fraternal message of congratulation was sent by a deputation about to leave for Canada to be present at the Y.M.C.A. Conference there.

GOOD TIDINGS WERE RECEIVED

Weighty were the words that fell from the lips of the Bishop of Hereford, as he spoke of the sadness which sometimes fills him as he reflects on the great crowds of young men engaged in business in London, a sadness which is, however, relieved at the thought of such organizations for the winning of young men to Christ. As he goes from church to church he is often compelled to ask the question, "Where are the men?" and this gave him a special satisfaction with regard to the Associations. His lordship spoke with sympathetic words of the vast amount of daily work done in London, which must be, to those who take part in it, the merest drudgery; and awakened much interest by putting before his hearers for consideration the question, whether it was not possible so to organize that business that every hour of every day may be made interesting to those engaged in it. Above all his regret was that great numbers of men should live through their lives without ever having their highest faculties called into exercise.

The secret of interesting and successful work is the call to the personal service of Christ, which is sounding in the ears of all. He spoke with thankfulness of the great change which has come over church and chapel alike during the history of the Association, bringing into existence many other useful organizations which are really

ITS IMITATORS AND ALLIES.

The call which sounded in the ears of the peasants of Galilee is the same which sounds in all ears, and with the call comes the assurance also of the same uplifting and power. The same voice still calls, "Whom shall we send, and who will go for us?"

The meeting was roused to a high pitch of enthusiasm when Rev. Dr. John G. Paton stepped forward to speak, the close sympathy between the Y.M.C.A. and foreign missions being manifest all around. He declared that it was young men's work about which he had come to talk, the saving of young men from among the savages and cannibals of the South Seas. "Forty-two years ago there were no Christian Associations, no Christian Endeavour Societies, no Bibles, no books, and no schools in the New Hebrides Islands.

"We have to learn, to begin with, to speak to the people, and to understand them when they address us. We can do nothing till we give them the Word of God, and so the translation of portions of it is our first concern. This brings light regarding God and spiritual things.

DR. J. G. PATON.

We have no difficulty in translation when we have learned their languages. Only once was I stopped for a word, and that was to represent 'faith' or 'believe'; but thank God I found it. The natives commit these portions of Scripture to memory, and by the blessing of the Holy Spirit are influenced by them. Missionaries that the Bible is divine in its origin. They know that it is inspired, that it has the power of God to bring light and joy to the human heart."

ARE ALL CONVINCED

Dr. Paton told the wonderful story of the progress accomplished, till now there are in the islands 18,000 converts, with 300 native teachers and preachers. A deep impression was created as he showed the oneness of the work of God at home and abroad, and made a concluding application calling for personal consecration and service. He impressed on all the importance of making sure of their own standing in Christ, and of then answering the call to bring others to the same Lord.

A message from the Y.M.C.A. at Jerusalem was presented by Canon Kelk, who explained that the members were mainly Hebrew Christians, with a few trophies of grace from the Greek Church.

A much appreciated feature of the evening was the music provided by a select choir from the London Training School for Choristers. The short opening devotional service was conducted by Rev. W. H. Griffith Thomas (St. Paul's, Portman Square).

Rescue Workers in Conference.

ONE of the most useful annual gatherings held in connection with philanthropic work is the conference of workers among the fallen, particularly the managers of homes for girls and young women throughout the country, in response to the call of the Reformatory and Refuge Union.

The Conference met on Thursday last in the Union Council Room at Charing Cross. There was a large attendance of workers and many subjects connected with administration were discussed. Sir Henry Bemrose presided, and Mr. W. J. Taylor, Miss Totman, and other workers contributed from their rich store of experience much valuable counsel, well calculated both to encourage and instruct.

In the course of the discussion which took place, pathetic reference was made to the need of some further development of rescue work in the interests of feeble-minded girls. One lady, who comes into contact with girls who are received into a workhouse, mentioned a case in which an unhappy woman of feeble intellect had been received into the maternity ward for the seventh time.

Other instances of a similar character were given, and it was felt that in order to meet the difficulty some Government authorization for compulsory detention will be necessary, in order that those who, from weakness of mind, are unable to guard themselves, may be prevented from becoming the prey of wicked and designing men.

Marylebone Medical Mission.

FOR twenty-five years the Marylebone Medical Mission has maintained its beneficent operations in one of the darkest districts of the Metropolis. Since the day when Dr. R. Chambers commenced the work, a vast amount of good has been accomplished. The population, however, as in most slums, is largely of a floating character so that the need is ever present.

At the annual meeting of the Mission, held on Tuesday last at Stafford Rooms, W., Dr. Chambers gave an account of his stewardship. Up to December last he had paid 74,575 visits to the sick poor, and prescribed for over 296,966 patients. The dispensary is open thrice a week to all comers; each sufferer is personally attended to by Dr. Chambers, and medicine is supplied. In addition, a Gospel service is held. Perhaps the most difficult department of this many-sided effort is that of visitation, for disease and misery so abound in the Marylebone district that two lady doctors, who spent some time at the mission, described it as "the best place for seeing all forms of disease." Incurable patients discharged from the hospitals, decrepit people exposed to all weathers in the pursuit of their calling as "gutter merchants," such folks as refuse to take refuge in the workhouse infirmary, since that would mean the breaking-up of their one-roomed home; these, and many other sections of the very poor and wretched, are among those who are the daily care of Dr. Chambers. The fruit of the personal dealing, the tract distribution, and the Gospel meetings is seen in those who, in some cases after years have passed, write or call to tell of the great deliverance that has come to them. A feature of the work is the Sunday night service, which is largely attended by the poor.

In a few kindly words from the chair, Mr. T. A. Denny gave the work high commendation, and Rev. W. R. Mowll rejoiced in its prosperity, for the secret of its success is its reliance on the regenerating power of the Gospel of Christ.

Dr. Heywood Smith and other friends also took part in the meeting, which was full of interest, especially in its bearing on the great problem of "How to reach the outsiders."

Further May Meetings on page 18.

Foreigners in London.—Mrs. E. M. Cole (28, Kennington Park Road), who is seeking to bring the Gospel to French, Germans, and Italians in London, by means of Scripture and tract distribution, would like also to give away notices of Gospel services addressed in these languages, and to correspond with others interested in such work.

Rev. John Sharp, M.A.

TWENTY YEARS SECRETARY OF THE BRITISH AND FOREIGN BIBLE SOCIETY.

By Rev. CANON EDMONDS, Exeter.

THIS week we give a portrait of Rev. John Sharp, M.A., who for the past twenty years has been one of the secretaries of the British and Foreign Bible Society, and who now holds the post of Superintendent of the Translating and Editorial Department of that Society's work. An opportunity is thus afforded of giving, not only a portrait of the man, but a sketch also of his life.

The Bible Society, as, for brevity's sake, it will in this article be called, has been at work for ninety-seven years. Three years more, and the wheel of its great enterprise will have come full circle. It was on Wednesday, March 7, 1804, that, at a meeting of "about 300 persons," the British and Foreign Bible Society was launched. The chairman was the well-known scholar and philanthropist, Granville Sharp. He was grandson of John Sharp, the famous Archbishop of York, who in 1706 gave a hospitable welcome to a deputation of Armenian bishops, seeking means to procure the Bible in the Armenian language. To promote the circulation of the Bible in that very language, John Sharp of the present notice went, in the service of the Bible Society, to Etchmiadzin in 1894. It is an interesting thing to find the same family producing, at an interval of nearly two centuries, men of the same name and of the same sympathies, associating themselves with the movements of their time, as in the order of Divine providence opportunity in various ways was given, for the wider circulation of the Word of God.

Archbishop Sharp, Granville Sharp, John Sharp, these are not the only names of note in the family annals that illustrate continuity of religious interest. The subject of this sketch is on his mother's side a great-grandson of Thomas Scott, first secretary of the Church Missionary Society, who, of the many Thomas Scotts who find place in the records of our National Biography, including a noble-hearted Archbishop of York, is, after all, the Thomas Scott who least needs an introduction to Christian people who love truth and feel the force of it. The reading at family prayer of a portion of Holy Scripture, with Scott's "practical observations" upon it, is amongst the earliest recollections of the present writer when on visits to his own grandparents far back in the forties.

With such traditions on either side in his home life, and with parents to whom such traditions were an ever-present impulse to imitation as well as to appreciation, John Sharp came and went to Rugby school, and passed from it to Oxford. Born in 1837, he came too late for Dr. Arnold. But Arnold was still a living force to which Tait and Goulburn, and, under them, Cotton and Bradley and Benson, added other forces of their own. Below them all, and above them all, was that mightiest of all spiritual forces but one, the parental force, ever present, ever active, ever in touch with the details of opening life, solicitous always for the spiritual side of things, seeking first alike for parents and children the Kingdom of God and his righteousness. In honoured and advanced old age they completed their happy pilgrimage; both now rest in God.

With such influences at work in his childhood and youth, it is not wonderful that Mr. Sharp's thoughts were early drawn towards missionary work. It was one of the things in which, even in his Oxford days, he was keen; being a collector for the Church Missionary Society when such action was much less common than now. So, after graduating (in honours) in 1860, Mr. Sharp offered himself to the Church Missionary Society, and was accepted; and thus entered upon that half of his life-work which was spent in active missionary effort in the great Indian mission field.

Twenty years earlier, Robert Noble and Henry Fox, the latter the father of the present honorary secretary of the Church Missionary Society, had opened a mission in the town of Masulipatam, the earliest possession of the English on the eastern side of India. The work of one of these distinguished men became, in due time, the opportunity for a memorial of the other. Noble's was the teacher's mission. Fox was the preacher. Like the earlier work, in the second century, at Alexandria, which had so far-reaching an influence, the Catechetical School as it might be described, at Masulipatam, associated the truth of things in heaven with true views of the world.

From Photograph by Mr. J. H. Blomfield, Hastings.

"Foundations," as once we used to read, "must be laid in heaven." "If ye will not believe, ye shall not understand." So said a poet of yet higher authority, whose words have not always fallen upon willing ears. Anyhow, when Fox died, in 1848, a Rugby-Fox fund began in the school from which Fox had gone out, and, successive head masters being helpful to it, the purpose of the fund, as started by Gell, afterwards Bishop of Madras, has been steadily maintained. John Sharp was the first Rugbeian Rugby-Fox master who went to the aid of Robert Noble, in due time (in 1865) becoming his successor. So were filled the years from 1861 to 1878.

It is within the personal knowledge of the present writer that throughout the district of which Masulipatam is the centre there are to be found, in public as well as in private life, men of loftier character than their fellows, who have passed through this school. "Secretly, for fear," they cherish a regard for Christianity which is often on the edge of the confession of Christ. No condition of mind is more plainly existent. The living teacher, with his love and his life in every lesson, does not teach in vain. The noblest souls, indeed, take their decision, as many pupils in this school have done, come what may. Others admire and hope for courage to imitate, for resolution to renounce. But the great inward strife comes at last into play, and for the issue there must be patience and prayer. Three centuries and more after Christ, and with one parent a Christian, it was not till after he was thirty-three that St. Augustine was baptized. With those whose parents are both non-Christian, and where Christianity has been but a short time at work, there must be more patience and more prayer. No men in India are more "in their duty" than the teaching missionaries. Catechetical schools, where all studies lead up to the highest, are the chief wants of churches in their work of evangelizing the great centres of population.

In this work, following the steps of Robert Noble with fidelity and independence, the Bible Society's editorial superintendent spent, as has been said, the first half of his laborious life. The second began in 1880. Mr. Sharp had returned to England in 1878, after an accident of a severe character, and subsequent illnesses, induced by overwork, had begun to point to other kinds of Christian effort. But during all the years of Mr. Sharp's residence in India, one topic of missionary solicitude was seldom out of mind. The language of the Northern Sircars, in which Masulipatam is situated, is Telugu, one of the four great Dravidian vernaculars which divide South India between them. The translation of the Bible into this important language has not yet reached the level of excellence to which, in 1869, in the sister language, the Bible of the Tamil people had attained. The subject of revision was always in the air, and a missionary of the period was bound to be interested in it.

An intimate knowledge of the conditions under which missionary work is done is essential to the wise administration of a great society upon which the duty is laid of seeing to the provision and steady amendment of translations of the Word of God. And so it came about that when, in 1880, the late Mr. Jackson, of Bentley, after eighteen years of service, retired from the Bible Society's work, Mr. Sharp came under the Committee's notice, and was appointed to the vacant post. It was a happy choice. In the development of the Bible Society's operations, the mission field was assuming daily, increasing importance. At home, and on the Continent, experience had solved most of the problems involved in the work; machinery was in existence, and competent men were everywhere in charge of it. But in the mission field there was opening before the Society an almost boundless horizon, and the missionary interests which were in the foreground had behind them other interests of hardly less importance—historical, theological, literary. The Bible is a "divine library;" a secretary of the Bible Society must be something of a librarian.

In the economy of Bible Society work, there has always been one officer of the Society to whose special charge these great interests were committed, but the general secretaries of the Society were expected to be conversant with all branches of the work. It was, therefore, of the highest advantage to the Society that, at the moment at which fields were opening as never before, and translations were increasing by leaps and bounds, there should have come into the government and administration of the Society an adviser and servant of the Committee whose whole previous life had been an elaborate preparation for such a post as was vacant. A congenial colleague, too early cut off in the very height of promise, was already at work when Mr. Sharp took office in July, 1880.

In the Bible Society's reports there is a vivid record of advancing missionary enterprise. In 1880, the list of languages in which Holy Scripture had been and was circulated stood at 238. In 1900 it had risen to 373. In the alteration of these figures there lies, ready to reveal itself, the opening up of the Dark Continent to the Gospel, and the enormous extension of opportunity in lands in which access to the people had already been gained. With all these extensions Mr. Sharp has been in perfect sympathy. His own official visits have included—France, Spain, Germany, Austria, Turkey, Greece, Russia, Finland, Sweden, and Norway. All these are in the modern world. But the ancient world is living still, the Exarch of the Georgian, the Catholicos of the Armenian Church, to both of whom Mr. Sharp found his way, carry back thought, the latter at least does, to the days of the General Councils, to the earliest of National Churches, to the mountain on which the Ark rested, to the land into which the parricide sons of Sennacherib escaped.

Thus Mr. Sharp's life has been full as well as fruitful; and it is perhaps not unfitting that in ceasing this year to be responsible, as for twenty laborious years he has been, for the daily administration of the Society's work, in council as to the whole of it, in detail as to his own large allotted share of it, he should withdraw from what is general only to be more completely given to that which, by training, by Divine Providence, and by personal choice, is peculiarly his most proper field, the superintendence of the translation and revision of the books which are one Book, of the messages of Apostles and Prophets, which are together the one great message of God to men.

Scripture Texts in Tram Cars.

WITH the co-operation and sympathy of an ever-widening circle of friends the workers of the London Tram Car and Omnibus Scripture Text Mission carry on a useful and much needed branch of Christian service. The annual meeting was held on Thursday at Exeter Hall, and while the attendance suggested that the present is the day of small things so far as the society is concerned, there is every reason to believe its objects will in time be attained.

The chair was occupied by Prebendary Webb-Peploe, who warmly commended the efforts organized by the Mission for the dissemination of God's Word. He urged the necessity of Christians contending for the whole Bible as the Word of God, against the argument that it only contained the Word of God. The Chairman went on to expose numerous fabrications relating to the sources to which various Scripture narratives are being ascribed by higher critics. The Society must stand by the infallible truth of the written and inspired Word.

The hon. secretary, Mr. R. D. Stewart, reported that 500 public vehicles are furnished with Scripture texts, and it is the intention and hope of the Mission to place the Gospel before the ever-changing companies of travellers to and from the city and suburbs, by placing the Word of God in at least 3,000 trams and omnibuses.

A number of testimonies were given by friends who have been cheered and encouraged by the silent messengers displayed by the Mission in public conveyances.

Wesleyan Missionary Society.

METHODISTS from far and near wended their way to Exeter Hall on Monday morning to take part in the annual meeting of the Wesleyan Missionary Society. Nearly every part of the hall was crowded, while on the platform the chairman (Mr. James E. Vanner) was supported by the president of the conference (Dr. Allen), the venerable hon. secretary (Dr. Jenkins), and many other prominent Wesleyan leaders. From beginning to end the gathering was marked by a spirit of ardent enthusiasm in the giving of thanks to God for the abundant blessing which has been vouchsafed to the Society during a year of singular unrest among the nations of the earth. The opening hymn, "Rejoice, the Lord is King," was heartily sung, and struck the keynote of the meeting—joyous hopefulness and expectancy.

After the reading of a portion of Scripture and the offering of prayer, Rev. F. W. Macdonald graphically described the field of the Society's operations, spread in disjointed sections throughout Europe, Asia, Africa, the islands of the sea, and the isthmus which unites the two continents of America. Two things with regard to the irregularity of the field were emphasized. The missionaries of the Society have gone where they have felt themselves to be sent, and have followed where they have been obviously led. Often a pathetic, irresistible entreaty has been the occasion of new departures, and while the Society cannot claim for its field of operations in regularity of outline it claims a moral unity and spiritual symmetry which belong to providential guidance. In their mission field and not a month in the year passes without golden grain being gathered here and there. The agents of the Society do not take part in political movements in the lands in which they are engaged, but are content to busy themselves in the honest labour of preaching the Gospel and caring for the flocks they have gathered together. The committee have been enabled to organize the visitation of the stations with gratifying results. Mr. Macdonald's words concerning Africa were distinctly hopeful. The missionaries are returning to their stations as permission is given. Though their labours had been suspended, some compensation for this was to be found in the devoted service rendered by ministers as chaplains to troops—on the march, in camp, and in hospital. They have given hope and comfort to Britons and Colonials as well as the enemy. So far as China is concerned, the speaker voiced the gratitude to God of the Society that its missionaries have been preserved from the storm which has devastated many regions and laid low so much Christian effort. They share the sorrow of sister societies, whose devoted men and holy women have died as martyrs, and the hosts of Chinese Christians who have laid down their lives for Christ's sake. Touching reference was made by the speaker to the life devotion to missionary enterprises of Rev. William Arthur. To the younger generation he is only a name, but a name that will have an honoured place on the roll of Methodists.

One of the most interesting points of the statement of Rev. Marshall Hartley was the announcement of the fact that the income for the year shows an increase of £4,600. The Chairman, in a cordial address, referred to the danger lest the greed of gain and the facilities for pleasure should result in losing sight of the claims of the heathen.

Dr. Allen, in the course of an impressive address, said the nineteenth century will be known as

A MISSIONARY CENTURY.

There was a period when foreign evangelization hardly found a place in the thought and consciousness of Christian men. But the age of international communication dawned upon the world, and the Almighty led the mind and conscience of his Church to realize the full meaning of his commission to go into all the world. Many argue that the heathen should be left to his own religion so long as he is sincere in his forms of worship; but when did sincerity become a substitute for truth? A man must believe truly as well as sincerely. Christianity has proved itself to be the religion for the whole world, unique in its theory and fruit. It is not exhausted. Not one of its attributes has yet afforded all its results, not one of its germs sown in the earth has yielded its full fruit in the conduct and life of humanity.

The present conditions of missionary life in China were described by Rev. W. Arthur Cornaby, who said that the violent objections to foreigners on the part of Chinese was not so pronounced as is alleged. The Boxers only infested one-tenth of the country; and on leaving China he had been begged to state that the Government itself is not opposed to missionaries. The speaker confessed that he, with others, owed their lives to statesmen who, in the face of the edict demanding foreign property to be burned, had defended the buildings, and were killed for their fidelity.

Rev. W. West Holdsworth presented a picture of the Mysore district of India, which must have appealed to every heart. The missionaries had been enabled to relieve the distress of native Christians during the visitation of plague. The Government had come to their aid, and a settlement outside Mysore had been established, where they had been sheltered from pestilence and disease.

Trinitarian Bible Society.

THE seventieth annual meeting of the Trinitarian Bible Society was held on Tuesday evening of last week at Exeter Hall. The annual report, submitted by the secretary, Rev. Dr. E. W. Bullinger, showed that the income had amounted to £4,525 8s. and the expenditure to £4,063 0s. 11d., the balance carried forward being £1,340 0s. 10d. The circulation of English and foreign Scriptures accomplished had been 4,981 Bibles, 22,974 Testaments, 83,354 Portions, in all 111,209 copies. These included grants made to 136 missionary societies and individuals working in various parts of the world.

The chairman—Lieut.-General Sir William Stirling, K.C.B., R.A.—pointed out the encouragements to the people of God to persevere in his service, even though surrounded by increasing difficulties, giving as a motto the words of the Lord, "For it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." He pointed out the fact that the Society puts its great emphasis on the verbal inspiration of the Word of God. In regard to the use of the Word of God in dealing with others, he recalled a saying of the late Rev. Marcus Rainsford, to the effect that he had never known a person to be converted without a passage of Scripture being the means used.

On the motion of Pastor F. H. White the report was adopted, Mr. H. C. Nisbet was appointed president, and the committee for the year elected. He spoke with gratitude to God of his own forty-years' association with this work, which had been a time of continual experience of growing preciousness of the Word of God to his own soul. In his long ministry he had felt power for service only as he had himself experienced the power of the Word. We need in these days giants handling the Word of God aright, and if we are to handle it we must hold it fast. If we do this we shall be strong. He was first drawn to the Society by its insistence on the full inspiration of Scripture. The seconder—Rev. H. Lindsay Young (Portsea)—spoke of Christians as trustees of the Word of God, not improvers of it; they are responsible to be honest in delivering it as they receive it. A man has no right to argue about that of which he is ignorant, so to be faithful with Scripture we must treasure it ourselves. The great centre of attack by critics is now our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and we live in perilous times, for the nature of the attack on the Bible has been entirely changed. Never has a more exhaustive reply been given to criticism than is done by the results of recent research in Bible lands.

Other speakers were Rev. W. C. Minifie, Mr. F. L. Edwards, Rev. W. Sinden, and Lieut.-Col. M. A. Alves.

Nonconformists in Council.

If the opening united meeting of Baptists and Congregationalists, which we reported last week, was large and enthusiastic, the meeting on the evening of the same day in the Queen's Hall was even larger and more enthusiastic. The tide of good feeling had been flowing full all the day; for when the delegates left the morning meeting it was, in most instances, to proceed to the Holborn Restaurant, and enjoy together the hospitality of Mr. W. H. Brown, chairman of the London Congregational Union; altogether about 3,000 friends were entertained at luncheon. Thus some recognition, as Mr. Brown modestly expressed it, was made of the hospitality which the two Unions each receive every year from country towns. In the evening the meeting was presided over by Mr. George White, M.P., of Norwich, who spoke with much force on some of the features of present-day life—luxury, intemperance, and ignorance. He named, not for the first time, a suggestion that church members should go to church only once on Sunday—in the morning—and then spend the rest of the day in getting other people to go at night.

PRINCIPAL FAIRBAIRN

plunged at once into one of his great orations, in which he touched upon some of the dangers and sins of our national life, and afterwards, as he so frequently does, launched into history for examples of lofty principle and for warnings as to departure from the truth. Very impressive was his manner when he said: "New enemies face us, less easy to be overcome than ancient Nonconformist disabilities. Fashion, which by ostentation imposes on the weak; lust of gold, which throws its dust in eyes that cannot clearly see. Trade is noble when industrial; but trade that rigs the market, and speculation in stocks and shares with unearned money, is not noble. We are surrounded by interests innumerable. Legislation is promoted to prevent children from going to public-houses, but the pressure of a mighty interest paralyses the Government. London owns so much gold and so many mines in South Africa, that England, for London's sake, cannot see her way." These words were received with loud and prolonged cheers, showing that thousands of souls are alive to

SOME OF THE COUNTRY'S GRAVEST DANGERS.

The visit which Dr. Fairbairn has just paid to Italy, in company with Dr. Horton, suggested some eloquent sentences on the way in which Italian patriots had striven for Italian freedom and unity, while the Roman Church had refused all sympathy and help. That Church had always striven to get men to think first of her interests and last of the people's. His concluding appeal was to the Free Churches to build Christ's Kingdom in "England's green and fertile land."

Rev. J. G. Greenhough, M.A., followed with a witty and eloquent speech singularly optimistic in tone. "I have no fears," he said, "concerning the coming days for the Evangelical churches. God needs us, and England needs us. We are not a declining force, we have the strength of our fathers, and I trust something more. We have fairer prospects than they had, and we ought to have as full assurance of victory."

Dr. Horton dwelt upon the inward, the ethical, and the supernatural. He stated his belief that only by these can we overcome the three great dangers of our times—worldliness, ritualism, and rationalism. These evils have their antidotes in the things which he emphasised.

THE INWARD LIFE

is more to us in reality than things external, and ought to have our constant and devout attention. Dr. Horton seemed by "inward" to mean thought; his way of treating the "inward" was not at all like the Apostle Paul's, as shown in Rom. viii. It was remarkable to hear him deal with the ethical life after Dr. Maclaren's words spoken in the morning, and Dr. Fairbairn's, which still lingered in the meeting—three men in one day treating of the same theme! Dr. Horton remarked that the alarming decay of some nations across the Channel is due to ethical decay; some men in those countries refuse to attend church because such attendance is used by others for the purpose of cloaking sin, not getting rid of it. Is this nation to sink so low that clean men shall shrink from a church because it means the concealment of sin, not cleansing from it? Ethical living, not mere preaching, is what is wanted. As for it should be the outcome of the ethical. It begins with every living thing. In a lecture on botany to some Board School children, a professor was explaining, with the aid of the lantern, the development of plant life. He got on well until he came to the origin of life in the protoplasm, when he had to admit that it was a mystery; he did not know "what was behind that door." A tiny child then asked, "Please, sir, is God behind that door?" The supernatural is no farther away than our own nature. And what we want to know is that God is with us. We may mistake brilliant sermons for spiritual force and substitute great religious activity for the cultivation of the inner life. The mighty men of the past all had a firm grasp of the invisible, the supernatural. We can only gain the land of promise, which they reached, by dying to self, by crossing the Jordan and by passing the lowly mount called Calvary. On the whole the meeting touched some of the deepest feelings and principles in the Christian heart by appealing to the greatest truths, and will not soon be forgotten.

THE SUPERNATURAL,

MISSIONARY WORK.

Wednesday was devoted to missionary work. In the morning Dr. Glover had an audience in the City Temple almost, if not quite, as large as Dr. Maclaren addressed the day before. The Congregationalist ladies had enjoyed a good meeting on Tuesday afternoon, and on Wednesday morning early the Baptist Zenana Mission was held under the presidency of a Congregationalist. At 11.30 the two denominations joined forces. Dr. Glover's text was, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature." Christ, said Dr. Glover, bade his disciples to address themselves to the soul of man. It is easier to do the big thing of saving the soul than the smaller thing of reforming it. If we really save a man, we need do nothing else for him. For sobriety, self-denial, staying power, aspiration, education—all these virtues become natural to the saved man. Nothing could do for man what the Gospel does. Men are beginning to see that to give up the Christ of the Gospel is to give up a little more than they bargain for. They forget that to give up the God-like Christ of the New Testament was to give up the Christ-like God of the Old. We can impart this treasure of the Gospel to men by proclaiming it. The Church is dying of self-edification. Let it go outside itself; there is nothing more necessary to-day than this message.

The sermon was a proof that some people—a very large number—can do with a long sermon, provided theme and preacher are suited, as in this case they were.

UNITED MISSIONARY DEMONSTRATION.

It is a fact full of significance—it means volumes in these days of materialistic enjoyment—that the Albert Hall had an enormous audience—say not less than 8,000 persons—to hear just such missionary speeches as may be heard at any ordinary missionary meeting. But the place, the time, the audience, were unique; and by a strange coincidence the chief speaker was the life-long friend, the dear fellow-labourer of James Chalmers, the New Guinea martyr—Rev. W. G. Lawes, D.D.—just come home on furlough. After some tender, manly words about his martyred comrades, he gave a simple but impressive account of the work of God in New Guinea. He said that the people, as the missionaries found them, were degraded with a degradation inexpressible, yet similar heathenism had been conquered in Polynesia, island by island, until in 1871 the light reached this greatest island in the world. The beginning was a day of small things. A few South Sea Christian islanders had proceeded to Port Moresby, which was afterwards the centre of the mission—and one of that pioneer band was still at work in New Guinea to-day. There had been of Christian islanders from Polynesia, who were undaunted by the death of many from the malarial climate and other hardships. Last year they opened, at Vatorata, a church to the memory of the South Sea Island missionaries who had died at New Guinea, and there were eighty-two names on the memorial window; the total was about 200, including women and children. Six years they worked before they won a convert; but still they were steadfast. Others came in slowly. Conversions followed, and now on the first Sabbath of every month 3,000 gather round the Table of the Lord. Many whom he had known as savages, in feathers and paint, are now hardly recognisable. Many who to-day preside at the Lord's Table have on their breasts the tattoo marks which show that their spears had been imbued in human blood. There are now sixty-four New Guinea natives who are preachers and teachers to others. Their stability, earnestness, and general capacity are most encouraging. One has just volunteered for work in the interior, where Christianity is practically unheard of. The needs of the people are still very great, and Dr. Lawes inquired what the Christians of England are going to do. His beloved colleagues must be revenged, not with fire and sword, not by burning the homesteads of the natives and destroying their cocoa nuts, but, as the saintly Chalmers would have had it—by an army of Christian workers labouring to win the tribes for Christ, and so to make it for ever impossible that such crimes should be perpetrated in the future.

Dr. Clifford sketched the work and triumphs of Christianity, and drew from them lessons of hope and faith, though the situation is now more difficult and complicated than in the first century.

THE TROUBLES IN CHINA

were attributed by Rev. J. S. Whitewright to the almost inconceivable ignorance and pride of those in power in China. These were behind the immediate causes, which were European interference and wrong-doing. The missionaries of the L.M.S. and the B.M.S. (to which he belonged) had done much to remove the ignorance. Some of the officials of the empire who had been taught by the missionaries had risked their lives to save them. His strong wish was that there should be no partition of China, a view which the meeting warmly endorsed. He praised Chinese Christians, of whom there are now 100,000, as cultured Christians, liberal to other persons in trouble, and ready to suffer for their Saviour.

A brief, earnest address by Rev. Silvester Horne brought this remarkable demonstration to a close. It was well presided over by the Earl of Aberdeen, who manifested an enlightened and liberal interest in all its proceedings.

DR. PARKER'S ADDRESS.

On Thursday morning a vast congregation assembled in the City Temple to hear Dr. Parker's address; but before it was given two important resolutions were passed, the first dealing with education, and the second with temperance. Dr. Parker took for his theme a United Congregational Church, and as he was addressing Baptists as well as Congregationalists his suggestions and advice were no doubt intended for the consideration and adoption of both. They involved precisely the same things as were the next morning submitted in an "interim report" to the Assembly of the Congregational Union, and by that body ordered to be sent for consideration to the various county Unions. If adopted, these county Unions will exercise a kind of vetoing power over a Church's choice of a pastor, and will no doubt become Church courts, deciding matters affecting the ministry. There is also to be a body for the purpose of aiding the settlement and removal of ministers, and a Sustentation Fund. Some portions of Dr. Parker's address, which dealt more particularly with the spiritual aspects of ministerial work, were characterized by his accustomed brilliance of phrasing. Thus:—

A CRY FOR THE SPIRIT.

"It is but mockery, guilty with the guilt of blasphemy, if we have fine machinery but no fire from Heaven. We need the Holy Ghost. All our prayers must grow into one great cry for the Spirit of God. The Lord's ministry is not one of the 'arts and crafts' of men—it is the sorrow of the Divine heart; it is not one of the 'learned professions'—it is an experience of the altar, an offering of grateful and responsive blood; my Lord's ministry is no trick in shapely sermons 'graven of art and man's device,' no experiment in calculated stipendiary rhetoric—it is the whole life alive with love, the mind ablaze with a vision that extinguishes the sun, a will that is gladly lost in sacrificial obedience. Along that line—not mechanical, but spiritual—lies our ministry, if so be we love the Lord. That is our unfailing Sustentation Fund. Apart from such conceptions, and all that belongs to them, we shall be but verbal sorcerers, sordid hucksters trafficking in salaries, self-seekers coining God into gold. Heart of the Cross, save us from this sin of sins! Why am I so anxious thus to consolidate and unify all the best meanings and uses of true Congregationalism? For the one simple reason that I want to get rid of all problems, disquietudes, and agitations that weaken and embarrass us. We cannot afford to spend much more time in re-arranging and polishing our mere machinery. We want to get at the great work created for us by modern society. We must never neglect the ministry of witness-bearing. Our congregations, if faithful, must more and more stand for an open Bible, a Scriptural Church, a spiritual hierarchy, a house not made with hands. The poorest chapel on the bleakest hillside stands for a spiritual and most holy testimony. Looked at architecturally it may be mean enough, but looked at ideally and in the thrilling poetry of its significance it is none other than the house of God, and the very gate of heaven. They that have passed by may have wagged their heads and railed on it, but by so doing they have but established their kinship with the gang who made the cross a jest and spat on the Son of God. I call upon my brethren working in sunless places to take a high view of their functions and responsibilities."

If these gatherings of the two denominations have been exceptional, they have also had exceptional notice in the Press, the Daily News giving as much as a page daily to them. This has not been the treatment formerly, though, as Dr. Dunning of Boston (U.S.A.) reminded the Congregationalists, every paper in New York would have reported such meetings at length.

In the course of the week a number of meetings were held in connection with various denominational organizations.

The reports passed at the annual meeting of the Baptist Union showed increases all along the line of denominational statistics. The number of chapels had risen to 3,918, an increase of forty-eight within the year, the expenditure on new chapels being £109,888, providing 13,460 seats. The members numbered 365,678, Sunday school teachers 51,825, scholars 528,131, local preachers 5,564, pastors in charge 1992.

The laying of the foundation-stone of

was an event with a peculiar interest for the denomination. The business statement on the occasion was made by Rev. J. A. Shakespeare, after which Rev. Dr. Maclaren touched many hearts by the revival of old and fragrant memories connected with the Eagle Street and Kingsgate Street chapels, some of them going back to his own student days. He also struck the true note of the solemnity of the occasion by pointing out how truly they were providing for their children. It was cheering to reflect that they were coming to that spot because the growth of their denominational work necessitated special accommodation where they could concentrate, solidify, and then expand.

BAPTIST MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

At the gathering of the Baptist Missionary Society, recent and reassuring news was received from China. Tidings from the Congo were full of encouragement and cause for thanksgiving, recent developments pointing to a speedy prospect of the linking of the stations from the Western side with those stretching out from Uganda in the East of Africa. Mr. Edward Robinson (chairman), Rev. C. Spurgeon Medhurst, Rev. A. G. Sturrock, and Rev. Arthur Sowerby voiced anew the call of God as it has come from China mingled with tears of blood.

THE ZENANA MISSION.

The ladies of the Baptist Church held their Zenana meeting on the Tuesday morning, when the only cloud in the sky of a successful year was the announcement that the expenditure of £13,018 exceeded the income by £829. It was reported that the society has a brighter outlook in Bengal. The reinforcements from England, the increase in the staff of native workers, the opening of new schools at Khulna, Dacca, the Bheel district, and in the south villages, have all combined to cheer the hearts of the missionaries. It is represented by 64 missionaries, and 200 native workers. They have had 1,520 Zenana pupils, while 3,000 houses are open to them for regular Bible teaching, and 624 villages have been visited from the various centres of the Mission. In the 93 girls' schools there are 3,700 scholars, 317 being boarders. A pathetic note was inevitable in the references to Chinese affairs. One of the missionaries, Miss Renaut, had suffered martyrdom, and another had died on the way home, while two others had been obliged to forego all hope of returning. The staff is therefore reduced to seven, who are at present at home waiting the re-opening of the work.

LONDON MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

Coincident with the gathering in connection with the new Baptist Church House, the Watchers' Band of the London Missionary Society held a stirring meeting at the City Temple. The report showed a steady growth—sixty branches having been registered at home, making a total of 876 formed since 1892. Of these 786 were believed to be living branches, which was a net increase of forty-four in the year, including five branches which had been revived. Watchers had been enrolled to the number of 2,391, making a total of 37,000 since the formation of the Band. The colonial branches include ninety, in Victoria, New South Wales, South Australia, Queensland, New Zealand, and Tasmania; while there is also a large and growing number in India.

COLONIAL MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

The sixty-fifth anniversary of this Society was largely attended. Sir W. B. Gurdon, M.P., who presided, pointed out the extent to which the expansion of the British Empire brought with it increased responsibilities for the welfare of the peoples over whom the King ruled. From Johannesburg Mr. Rawling, one of the missionaries, recently wrote:—"If the Christian people in Johannesburg would unite in trying to help each other and forget old feuds, I am sure the time would soon come when the Boer would no longer hate the Briton, and the Briton not despise the Boer." Rev. Dr. Guinness Rogers pointed out the way in which that society sought to fulfil some of "the responsibilities of empire." Rev. J. D. Jones (Bournemouth) sounded a note of warning as to a false Imperialism. The true and sane Imperialism recognises that moral and spiritual forces were the greatest of all, that in the case of nations as well as of men destiny is settled by character, seeking to make Britain great by making the people of Britain clean, sober, and God-fearing. Other speakers who followed were Rev. R. G. Fairbairn and Rev. Dr. J. G. Paton.

Oxford Letter.

[BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

OXFORD has lost a striking figure in the death of Bishop Stubbs. In some respects, perhaps, not a successful bishop, a High Churchman, too, yet kind and genial to all who came in contact with him, he will be missed by many. We pray that his successor may come to us in the fulness of the blessing of the Gospel of Christ.

Mr. George Soltau is giving a "Twelve Weeks' Bible Study" in the Hannington Hall on the Fridays of this term. He commenced last Friday, and there was a fair attendance. We trust the numbers will increase. Mr. Soltau's subject in the afternoons is "The Four Portraits of the Lord Jesus": The King, St. Matthew's portrait; The Servant, St. Mark's portrait; The Man, St. Luke's portrait; and The Son of God, St. John's portrait. In the evening he is taking some Old Testament characters, who are types of our Lord.

On Monday afternoon and evening addresses were given in Hannington Hall by Madame Thoumaïan, the wife of Professor Thoumaïan, the Armenian who was sentenced to death by the Turkish Government, but was released through the British Government, and exiled from Turkey. The Hon. and Rev. W. T. Rice was in the chair, and the afternoon's subject was "Armenia's Sorrows." Two things were demonstrated at the meetings: That the most elementary rights are denied under Mohammedan rule, there is no light, no freedom; and that the only remedy is Christian rule. Madame Thoumaïan earnestly maintained this.

As an example of patient work, we have never read anything more striking than the following, from Dr. Murray, editor of the New English Dictionary. Up to the present time, he says, they have collected about 5,000,000 quotations and read 100,000 books. He calculated that if the slips on which the quotations were written were laid side by side, they would reach from Brighton to Inverness, while the writing in one continuous line would extend from London to Pekin. There is a lesson here for the Christian worker. There is a great tendency to count as work done only things that "take the eye and have the price," forgetting that the best work "the world's coarse thumb and finger often fail to plumb."

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, May 5. Zechariah xiii.

THE previous chapter ends with a national confession of sin, and seeking for forgiveness. This verse naturally belongs to it, and assures of cleansing from all sin. Wherever there is confession, there is also cleansing. The fountain stands for pardon and forgiveness.

The next paragraph (3-6) is very graphic. It is a scene in the life of a false prophet. These men had greatly thriven in Israel in the former days, but such a change would come over the spirit of the land, that they would be no longer tolerated. Even their nearest relations would threaten them with death, for speaking lies in the name of the Lord, and they would be ashamed of their visions and their vocation. The false prophet would pretend to be a husbandman, or a cattle herd, to escape detection and punishment (5, 6).

The words which follow were quoted by our Lord of Himself; there can be no doubt, therefore, as to their relevance (Matt. xxvi. 31). It is a very remarkable prophecy. Jehovah appeals to the sword of immaculate justice and righteousness. The Lord Jesus is described as "my" Shepherd, i.e., the Shepherd whom God has appointed. But the Shepherd is also his own Fellow, one who thinks it not robbery to be equal with God. In whom else could such a conjunction meet, save in Him, who, though He was in the form of God, became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross?

The remainder of the chapter describes the destruction of the Jewish nation in the Roman siege of Jerusalem, in their awful sorrows and sufferings through the ages, and in the last conflict with their foes; but there has always been, and will increasingly be, an election according to grace.

MONDAY, May 6. Zechariah xiv.

The events of which this chapter speaks are evidently still future. Let us wait for them to unfold, and they will entirely vindicate and explain the obscure passages. When the Gentile nations attack the chosen people in their own land, God will miraculously appear on their behalf. Then will be fulfilled that which was foretold by the angels, on the Ascension Mount (compare v. 4 and Acts i. 11). The presence of Jesus will be accompanied by the rending of the mountains before an earthquake, which shall make a pass for the fugitives through the mountains, and at evening time the light shall linger to facilitate their flight.

The configuration of the land shall be altered. The Dead Sea shall become connected with the Arabian Gulf, so that the Jordan shall be a great water-way of commerce, and Jerusalem a religious centre for the entire world. It is remarkable how exactly the conclusions of modern explorers tally with these prognostications. They say that the one thing needed to do away with the terrible wilderness south of the Dead Sea, is to cut a channel between it and Eziongeber, where Solomon had his port. Engineers have been consulted, and say that the work is practicable.

In those happy days, "Holiness to the Lord," which was formerly inscribed on the frontal golden plate of the High Priest, will be graven on the bells (or blinkers) of the horses, which had formerly been forbidden (Deut. xvii. 16); a parabolic method of saying that, instead of that exclusion of innocent and natural things, which is so typical of certain forms of religion, they should be brought into the circle of a consecrated life.

TUESDAY, May 7. Malachi i.

The name Malachi means "My Messenger," so that perhaps we do not know the name of the real author; but he hides himself in his office and message. Sixty years had passed since the first return of Israel from the land of captivity, under Joshua and Zerubbabel, and during this time the holy seed had become mingled with the people of the land. It was necessary, therefore, for Ezra and Nehemiah to exert stringent measures to purge and cleanse the priesthood and the people. In this they were strenuously supported by the author of this book. The state of Israel lay like "a burden" on his soul (i. 1).

The distinguishing love of God to Israel had been made abundantly manifest in the manner in which He interposed for the chosen people. The hand of Nebuchadnezzar had been so heavy on Edom that it never recovered, whereas Israel was already beginning to revive, and was to be finally, completely and gloriously restored. How often we have to ask ourselves why God has made us to differ from others! Whatever may be his real reason, we know that it is not an arbitrary one. Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?

The chief trouble was with the priests, who offered on the altar sacrifices which they would not think of presenting to their rulers. A cheap religion, which costs us nothing, is abhorrent to God. "God does not despise the widow's mite, but He does despise the miser's and the millionaire's." According to one translation of the tenth verse, Jehovah cries out for some one to be good enough to close the doors of the sanctuary that the services might be discontinued. Better no service at all than one so destitute of love and faith.

WEDNESDAY, May 8. Malachi ii.

These words to the priests are applicable to us also, who have been made priests unto God. Let us ponder them with devout reverence. Malachi recalls the ancient covenant into which God entered with Eleazar's son Phinehas (Num. xxv. 10-11), as representing the tribe of Levi. His prompt zeal for God was very precious. He could not stand still and see the Divine ordinance trodden under foot. Oh for more of this zeal for God! May we have the grace to evince it whenever an opportunity offers!

What a delightful picture this is of the true servant of God! In his mouth the law of truth; on his lips no iniquity; the walk, one of peace and rightcousness; the office that of being messenger to the Lord of hosts—and the outcome of it all, the turning of many from iniquity. We must fulfil those conditions, and possess those characteristics, if we would turn men away from their sins. They will laugh at us if we are inconsistent with our own exhortations; but they cannot ridicule or explain away the witness of a really holy life.

The main subject of controversy with the priests and the people was their intermarriage with the heathen around. They had profaned God's covenant by putting away their wives for the daughters of the heathen. Of what avail was it that they covered his altar with tears when this wrong was left unredressed? God had been witness of the wrongs done to these women, and would avenge them. As to possessing a plurality of wives, that question was for ever settled by the fact that, though He had the residue of the Spirit and could have given Adam more than one wife, yet He made but one man for one woman, and one woman for the one man. It was in the primæval code, also, that our Master found his answer to those who questioned Him on the law of marriage (Mark x. 6).

THURSDAY, May 9. Malachi iii.

The opening verses of this chapter stir one's heart as with the call of a trumpet. We remember how literally they were fulfilled. Up the temple-steps a poor couple came, in the days of the great Herod, to present their first-born child to the Lord, and offer according to the ancient precept. Unnoticed by the crowds, jostled amid the press, borne in the arms of poverty, the King suddenly came to his temple, even the Messenger of the covenant. Only two faithful retainers were there to welcome Him, the aged Simeon, and Anna the prophetess.

There is, however, another and more personal reference; let us keep the doors of our hearts wide open to the coming of the King. There may be no blare of trumpet, no flash of jewels, no cry of herald, but into your heart's secret shrine He will come. "Behold, He shall come, saith the Lord of Hosts." And his presence in the soul is purgative of evil. He is like refiner's fire, and like fuller's soap. Is not this just what we need? Oh, make haste, great Lord of all, and in our poor hearts do thy blessed work, that we may be as gold and silver, and offer to Thee an offering in righteousness, which shall be pleasant, a sweet savour of good.

Let us bring the tithes into the storehouse; a tenth is the very least we should give to God. Even Jacob gave so much, or promised to. This should be our minimum—never less than this, and as much more as we can. Let us also speak often one to another of our dear Lord, as the two did who walked to Emmaus; then to us also He shall draw near and talk, whose presence shall make our hearts burn.

FRIDAY, May 10. Malachi iv.

The day cometh! Either in the Fall of Jerusalem, or in some terrible catastrophe yet future. Indeed, it is always coming. Sorrow and disaster are perpetually befalling the proud, or those that do wickedly; while on those who fear God's Name the dawn of the Sun of righteousness is for ever breaking, and growing to the perfect day. The wings of the sun are the beams on which his light and heat are brought to us. Light is health and life. If you are spiritually out of health, take sun-baths, recline in all the gracious influences that emanate from the risen Lord. In the beams of the sun there are not only light and colour, but actinic rays which bear health and vitality to the world and to men; so in Jesus, there is power to salvation. See to it that you remain long enough in blessed fellowship with Him to receive all that He waits to bestow.

The deputation which visited John the Baptist in the Jordan valley manifestly had this promise in view when they questioned him (John i. 21), but he clearly did not feel that he exhausted its fulfilment. So it is held by many that the exhaustive fulfilment of this promise is still future, and that a mighty herald will precede the Second Advent, recalling the ministry of the Baptist (Matt. xvii. 11). Manifestly John's ministry in part realized Malachi's dream (compare v. 6 with Luke i. 16-17); but there is more to follow in the secret unfolding of God's purpose. Always in your heart and mine the Baptist precedes Christ—there must be a deeper repentance if there is to be a more radiant revelation. Notice how the Old Testament ends with the word Curse, while Christ's manifesto opens with Blessed.

SATURDAY, May 11. Matthew i.

With reverence and prayer we open the New Testament, asking that the Divine Spirit, who inspired, may Himself open to us these Scriptures, that we may be wise unto salvation.

The inscription of this book indicates that our Lord's life is to be specially considered from the Hebrew standpoint. He is the Messiah, because Son of David: He is the Seed of Abraham, and therefore fulfils the ancient covenant promise. The genealogy given here is that of his reputed father, thus putting his claim to Messiahship beyond dispute, even in the eyes of those who did not recognize his miraculous conception. The genealogy is divided into three divisions, of fourteen generations each. It should be noticed that the names of three women are mentioned which were not beyond reproach, as though Matthew, the publican, could never forget "the sinners" who were in the line of the Lord's descent.

On her return from her stay with Elizabeth, Mary must have told Joseph of her condition, which greatly troubled him; and what an agony must have been in her heart to be suspected and doubted even by him. He loved her too well to think of making her a public example, and was minded to give her a bill of divorcement, and to put her away privately, when the angel of the Lord interposed.

What names are these with which the newborn Babe is greeted! Emmanuel (God with us)! Jesus (Jehovah, my salvation)! Have you received Him thus to save you not only from your penalty, but from your sins? See that you accept from Him that deliverance from the dominion of sin, which is his mission on the behalf of his people, and let your fellowship be with Him.

Growing.

A WEEK or two ago we had a little talk about Sowing. Now, after the sowing, we look for the growing. What makes the seed grow? The soil and the sun, the air and water. Without either of these the plant will not be perfect. A little seed growing in the dark will be sickly and white; an acorn grown in water can never get to be a noble oak; shut up a small plant without air, and it will lie down and die.

Jesus said, "Consider the lilies, how they grow" (Matt. vi. 28). What makes you grow? Very much the same things as the plants—food, sunshine, air, and water. But you want one thing more, and that is exercise. With these your bodies should grow taller and stronger; you cannot be of much use in the world if you do not grow.

I once saw a little girl who had not grown since she was a wee baby; she ran about, and could walk under the chairs in her mother's kitchen, and she talked in such a squeaky little voice—it was very funny to see her. She was of no use, so her father took her about in a show-van to fairs, and she soon died.

But something else has to grow besides our bodies, that is our "Spirits;" they must grow better and stronger, and more like Jesus. In order to this, they need the soil—God's love in our hearts; the food—God's Word stored up in our minds; the water—God's Holy Spirit, influencing our whole being; and the Sun of righteousness—Jesus Christ our blessed Saviour.

You all know the story of Samuel—how his mother gave him up for God's service, and how every year, when she went to see him, she took him a new little coat. Each little coat had to be made larger than the last; the mother had to guess how much he would have grown in a year. I wonder whether he had grown more than his mother expected, and the coat was ever too small? Now turn to 1 Sam. ii. 21, and you will see that Samuel's spirit grew as well as his body, for it says he "grew before the Lord." Our Lord Jesus when a boy "grew in wisdom and stature, and in favour with God and man" (Luke ii. 52). This is exactly how we ought to grow—so much bigger and so much better that God will be more and more pleased with us, and our friends also will be delighted.

A little lad, named Willie, told me one day that he was a Christian, that Jesus had cleansed away his sins, and that he was so happy. So I went to see his mother, and she exclaimed, "I can't think what has come over my Willie; he is so changed; he grows better and kinder and more thoughtful every day."

There is a great difference between growing and swelling. Mary came down one morning, and said, "Oh, mother, I've grown so big in the night! Just look at my face and neck." But that was not growing. Her face was swollen with the mumps. After a while the swelling went down, and if anything Mary was thinner than before. We must all beware lest we swell instead of grow—get puffed out with pride and self-will, and think we are growing when we are not.

Peter in his second epistle gives a sad description of those who "utter great swelling words of vanity" (2 Peter ii. 10-18); and then, at the end of the same letter he says, "But grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ." It is only by his grace, and in his strength, that we can grow at all.

Let us, then, as we watch our plants growing day by day, see to it that we also grow like the seed, visibly and invisibly; like the grand building, little by little, one stone or one brick at a time; like the rising sun, shining more and more unto the perfect day.

Remember! we are always growing better or worse—Which shall it be? E. J. Banks.

Training Crippled Boys.—The thirty-fifth annual report of the National Industrial Home for Crippled Boys is a record of a pathetic and much-needed ministry among the afflicted. The number of inmates is still at the highest point yet reached. The industrial departments have been busily employed throughout the year, and the trades have been carried on with satisfactory results. Of the boys who left four went to situations as carpenters, five as harness-makers, eight as stampers, and four as tailors. From the educational inspector's report it is evident that the instruction given is of a high order, and the progress made by the boys is a source of satisfaction to the promoters. The resident secretary is Mr. F. J. Bovis, Woolsthorpe House, Wright's Lane, High Street, Kensington, W., who will give all information.

SUNDAY, MAY 5.

Decision of Character (Rev. iii. 14-16; Prov. iv. 23-27).

THERE was no indecision about our Lord. He was the Amen, the Yea. It was his frequent practice to commence his addresses with Verily, verily. He never swerved a hairbreadth from the narrow path of his Father's will, though it led Him to the cross. Instead of stepping back into the joy which, at any moment, might have been his, He set his face steadfastly to go up to Jerusalem, enduring the cross and despising the shame. One of the greatest pictures in history is that given in Luke ix. 51. For a vivid description of the decision of his character, let us turn to Isaiah l. 5, 6, 7. Oh, for faces set like a flint. See also 1 Chron. xii. 8.

This decision of character led our Lord to be the faithful witness, i.e., He was faithful in his witness-bearing to God's truth. "Before Pontius Pilate He witnessed the good confession." The word translated witness is martyr. Jesus was the faithful and unswerving martyr, though He was more, because his substitutionary death atoned for human sin.

What a contrast to this great example was the life of the Laodicean Church, so tepid as to excite the Lord's nausea. They were neither cold, nor hot, and He would therefore spew them out of his mouth. Lukewarm water will always excite sickness. He would rather have men cold than lukewarm. It is easier to make a saint out of a Saul of Tarsus, who is determined in his opposition, than out of a Felix, who trembles, but cannot make up his mind to put away his sin. The engine that travels in one direction will travel as fast in the opposite. The pendulum that swings this way, will swing as far in that. The reclaimed poacher will make the best gamekeeper. "Give Me," says Christ, "strong, determined, energetic characters; I can make something out of them; but with these molluscous, backboneless, and indecisive men I can do nothing." The cleverest carpenter on earth cannot make the nails, however hard he drives them, hold in rotten wood.

Whatever we fail to do, let us be decisive, out-and-out for God, fearing nothing but sin, hesitating at nothing which is calculated to bring glory to God. But for this purpose, as the wise man says, we must keep our heart beyond all that we keep. We keep our purses, our health, our dear ones, but above all we must keep our hearts, or at least surrender the keeping of our souls into the hands of our faithful God.

Too many leave the gateway of their souls open to every intruder. Thoughts come and go without scrutiny, and, amid the crowds that enter and depart, there are sure to be traitors with their bags of gunpowder and their fuses. We must put on detectives, lest there be a Guy Fawkes among them. What we think in our hearts, that we are. Thoughts lay down the lines on which the trams are obliged to run. By our thoughts we accustom ourselves to acts, and come to do the things which had been only a suggestion and a dream. Let the peace of God keep your thoughts, as a sentry keeps the gate of the castle.

The wise man also counsels us to directness of vision. "Let thine eyes look right on." In bicycling, we know that the beginner must not look on the ground or the machine, but at a given point in front, and almost insensibly the machine will reach the spot. What we admire we resemble. What attracts us will secure us. What runner will allow his eyes to wander right or left of the goal? What steersman of a University boat will for an instant look away from the goal to which the crew are straining every nerve? As Bunyan says, "Straightforward makes the best runner." "This one thing I do. Forgetting the things which are behind, and reaching forward to those which are before, I press toward the mark." "I therefore so run, not as uncertainly. So fight I, not as beating the air."

In every walk of life the man who has a purpose, and seeks it resolutely and decisively, is the successful man. Let us, therefore, be steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord. Let us speed as an arrow with unswerving course to its goal. Let us gird up the loins of our minds, and hope to the end. "Half-heartedness is serving God in such a way as not to offend the devil."

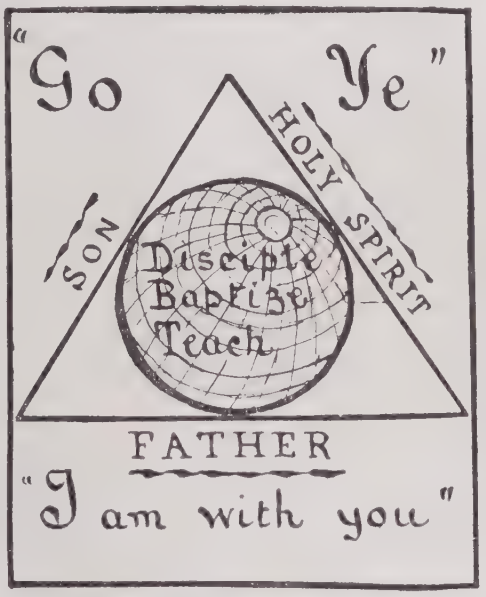
A splendid report of works comes from Newport and District Union (Wales). Over 1,100 free breakfasts had been given to poor children; "Christian Endeavour" had been supplied regularly to the chief borough Reading Room, and also to the Army Temperance Association's Reading Room at the barracks; and valuable assistance rendered at the Simultaneous F.C. Mission. During the year forty Associate members became active, and fifty-one active members joined the Church.

International S.S. Lesson.

May 12, 1901.

The Great Commission (Matt. xxviii. 16-20).

Golden Text: "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world" (Matt. xxviii. 20).



Key to Blackboard Plan.—The triangle represents the Trinity; Three in One, and One in Three (19). The whole world is to know this great truth in time; and they will only learn it by Christ's followers going, in his strength, to tell them.

"Teach all nations"—Disciple all nations (19). Tell them, teach them, so that they become my disciples. (17) There are always these two classes to deal with, and it will be so in all nations, those who worship and believe; those who doubt—the wheat and the tares, the sheep and the goats, the good fish and the bad, the wise and foolish, the children of the kingdom and the children of the devil. Those who "did it unto Me"; those who "did it not." But it is our duty to go and tell them, whether they will hear or whether they will reject.

"Baptize them" (19). That is by the outward sign of baptism; showing that they understand and know that it means to confess their faith in God, in Jesus the Saviour, and in the Holy Ghost (see Rom. x. 9-10), and that they repent of sin.

Matt. iii. 6, 8. What is this repentance? It is a change of mind leading to a change of conduct; a change of mind about God and Christ; a change of mind about sin; a change of mind about life.

"Teach them my commands" (20). And what are thy commands, Lord Jesus?

Let your light shine.	Watch.
Judge not.	Abide in Me.
Pray.	Keep my commands.
Search the Scriptures.	Bear fruit.
This do in remembrance of Me.	Suffer the children to come.

"In the Name of" (19). Compare Gen. i. 1, 2 with John i. 1, 2. Here we have the Trinity working together at the creation of the world. In heaven it is the same, for there are three that bear record in heaven—the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost, and these Three are One (1 John v. 7). "Emmanuel"—God with us, was one of Christ's names. "I and my Father are One," He said, and in Romans we read of the Spirit of Christ. At the baptism of Christ, God spoke, and the Holy Spirit descended in bodily shape. So could we multiply instances of the Trinity.

"Go ye," the command. "Go ye teach" (Matt.), "Go ye preach" (Mark), all nations, every creature. What is the result of this great command? See in Rev. v. 13 and vii. 9, and v. 11 says "thousands of thousands."

What share are we each taking in this glorious result?

"Lo, I am with you" (20). The promise which upholds all work done for the Master. Not alone, but having Him always. This was fulfilled in the Book of Acts, "the Lord working with them." See also Heb. xiii. 5. So also it may be with us, from the oldest to the youngest, who try to tell others of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Scottish Notes.

AN earnest effort is being made by the United Free Church of Scotland to work in harmony with the dissentients from the Union, in all parishes where the divided congregations have experienced difficulty in finding separate places of meeting. Perfect harmony has not been secured, but it is satisfactory to find the agents for the Church assuring those for the dissentients that in every case known to them in which real difficulty has arisen, "our friends in the locality have offered to arrange joint use at convenient hours, and our clients are willing in all such cases to use all the influence they possess to secure real convenience."

The near approach of the gathering of the fishing fleet at Stornoway brings to us a renewal of the request for Christian literature, to which our readers have generously responded in former years. Periodicals, tracts, and booklets suitable for the fishermen should be sent to Mr. J. F. Macfarlane, Parish Council Chambers, Stornoway, who will arrange for their being assorted and placed on board the boats. Donors are further asked to follow the distribution and reading with earnest prayer for a blessing on the effort.

At the annual meeting last Thursday of the Scottish National Sabbath School Union it was reported that it now comprises forty-two local unions, six having been formed during the year. There were 1,175 schools, with 21,018 teachers and 219,383 scholars on the rolls, being increases of 32,684 and 5,475 respectively as compared with the previous year. The directors had been deeply exercised during the year with regard to the recent falling off in Sabbath school attendance. To remedy this state of matters special efforts were put forth, and this had resulted in an increase in Glasgow and district of 2,397 scholars and 207 teachers.

The papers filled up for the recent census, in connection with Mr. Quarrier's work among orphans and consumptives, brought out the following figures:—In Orphan Homes, Bridge-of-Weir, 1,200 children and helpers; in Consumption Sanatoria, fifty-two patients and helpers; in the City Orphan Home, 123 working boys and girls and helpers—making a total of 1,375 who are daily dependent on God's bounty sent in answer to prayer. Over 100 new children have been admitted since the year began, and an equal number have been hived-off to situations, or otherwise provided for. Two new homes are about to be added, as the result of gifts just received.

The tenth annual conference of the Church of Scotland Women's Guild was held at Stirling last week. The number of branches was reported to be 553, with a membership of 38,240. In Edinburgh a coffee-house, called the Guild Pleasance Coffee-House, had been opened; at Paisley there was a coffee barrow; at Monimail a coffee-house; and at Aberdeen a coffee barrow. Two other efforts, although not entirely in connection with the Guild—a coffee-house at Gargunnock and the Steeple Club at Dumfries—were also the result of impetus received last May at Greenock; while ninety-one branches reported temperance members, many of whom were actively engaged in aggressive work, especially in connection with Bands of Hope. The gifts collected for various schemes amounted to £11,198 3s. 8½d., which included £504 for the Kalimpong Mission, and £478 12s. 11d. for the Deaconess Hospital.

At the recent meeting of the Inverness United Free Presbytery, Rev. D. Connell pointed out some ways in which the movement of the population, indicated by the recent census, would powerfully affect the work of the Church in time to come. It would make the work in rural charges in many respects discouraging, while that in the centres of population would become increasingly important and arduous. In another twenty years Gaelic preaching would hardly be required at all within the bounds of the Presbytery; and much as one regretted this—mainly on sentimental grounds—he was convinced it would be the solution of many difficulties and knotty problems. When the religious condition of the agricultural labourers was under discussion, Rev. L. Macpherson (Fearn) declared that non-church-going was not a characteristic of the class in Easter Ross, where they were found at the services with the utmost regularity, not a few taking the deepest interest in spiritual things.

Cardinal Vaughan, in presiding at the meeting of the "Catholic Truth Society" a few days ago, warned Roman Catholics that as the Gospels could be obtained for a penny, "there was now, therefore, no excuse for their not reading them." We sincerely hope that the suggestion will be widely followed, and that those who read them, without the qualifying interpretations and limitations of the priest, may find that there is indeed but One Mediator between God and man, the man Christ Jesus.

Obituary.

MISS ASHTON, CROUCH END.

THE announcement in the daily press that this earnest Christian worker had met a terrible death in the street owing to her bicycle colliding with an omnibus in Holloway Road, came with a great shock to her many friends and co-labourers. Among the friendless and fallen she had been much blessed in her efforts to turn her hapless sisters unto righteousness of life.

MRS. JOHN ELLIOT BINGHAM.

This devoted Christian lady fell asleep on April 18 at Tunbridge Wells. She took the keenest interest in all Gospel work, but more especially in that which was conducted upon undenominational principles. She was a great lover of Israel. Among her friends she had numbered many prominent Christian workers and writers of a past generation, and to her is due the foundation of the Bible Mission Halls of Tunbridge Wells. Her remains were followed to the grave by upwards of 600 working men and women to whom her ministry of love had been blessed, and a further large concourse of sorrowing people gathered at the graveside, included representatives of many classes of the community.

REV. J. N. HOARE.

Visitors to Keswick Convention will hear with regret of the death of Rev. J. Newenham Hoare, who passed away suddenly at Keswick on Sunday evening last. Mr. Hoare was appointed vicar of St. John's in succession to Canon Harford Battersby in 1883. In 1884 he married the eldest daughter of his former vicar, Rev. Gerald Blunt, of St. Luke's, Chelsea, and he leaves a widow and two children. On the previous Saturday he had presented his only daughter to the Bishop for confirmation at Crosthwaite Church, and he was leaving his parsonage on Sunday morning to conduct the Communion service, when he was seized with heart spasm, from which he never rallied.

REV. W. A. MACALLAN.

The death is announced of Rev. W. A. MacAllan, the esteemed minister of Trinity Presbyterian Church, Norwich. Mr. MacAllan was ordained at Norwich in 1867. A late deacon of the church, in speaking of his minister, said: "From the day of his entering in among us he was universally looked upon as the Lord's servant sent to do a great work here. Our souls have been built up and established in the faith, and our hands have been strengthened by his ministry." Mr. MacAllan ministered there for eleven years with much fruitfulness. In 1878 he removed to Swansea, but three years later accepted, for the second time, a call to Norwich. Under his painstaking guidance the cause continued to prosper, and Trinity Church has become an important factor in the Nonconformist life of the city.

Mr. MacAllan was a large-hearted man, many social, philanthropic, and political movements having had the advantage of his practical help, and he was a warm friend of the Bible Society, the Religious Tract Society, the Evangelical Alliance, the Y.M.C.A., and other important organizations of an evangelical character.

PASTOR FRITZ FLIEDNER, MADRID.

We learn with deep regret that this well-known worker has fallen asleep. In the words of his friend, Pastor Charles Faithfull:—"A great bereavement has befallen the evangelical work of this land. On Thursday, April 25, after a brief illness, Pastor Fritz Fliedner, so well known for over thirty years in connection with the evangelization of Spain, passed peacefully away. The ceaseless energy of our departed brother, and entire disregard of self, doubtless had much to do with this sudden collapse, strength being inadequate to cope with the enteric fever."

Born in 1845, Fritz Fliedner was the third son of Dr. Theodore Fliedner, the well-known founder of the Deaconess Institution at Kaiserswerth on the Rhine; and studied at the university of Halle from 1864 to 1866, where he enjoyed the instruction and personal friendship of Dr. Tholuck. In 1866 he went as field deacon in the war with Austria, after which more study followed, at Tübingen. Pastor Fliedner early took an interest in the work of God in other lands, and after several tours in Roman Catholic countries, his interest was aroused on behalf of Spain, settling in 1870 in Madrid.

Among other causes claiming attention the neglected children of the city laid hold of his heart in a peculiar degree, and the name of this German pastor will live long as that of the special friend of the outcast little ones of the Spanish capital. Like other workers in this field, he began with a few, and was led on step by step to accomplish great things for God. The publication of evangelical literature appealed to him also as a useful engine for the spread of the truth, so that this preacher had many audiences besides that to which he ministered week by week, and many whom he never saw in the flesh will yet rise up to call him blessed.

GOD IN CREATION.

"In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth" Gen. i. 1). "God created man in his own image" (Gen. i. 27). "His dear Son . . . who is the image of the invisible God . . . all things were created by Him and for Him" (Col. i. 13, 15, 16; Rev. iii. 14).

The splendour and miracle of Creation and its adaptation for man. "For thus saith the Lord, that . . . formed the earth . . . He created it not a waste, He formed it to be inhabited" (Is. xlv. 18.—R.V.; Job xxxviii.-xli.; Ps. xix. 1-6; Ps. cxlviii.; Acts xiv. 17).

The Crown of God's Creation on earth. "Man." "And God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness. . . . So God created man in his own image" (Gen. i. 26, 27).

The Crown of God's new Creation in Christ Jesus. "HIS BLOOD-BOUGHT CHURCH." "Wherefore if any man is in Christ, there is a new Creation" (2 Cor. v. 17.—R.V.). "A new Creation" (Gal. vi. 15; Eph. i., ii. and iii.; 1 Peter i. 18-19).

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 26.
GOD IN REVELATION.

"In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God" (John i. 1).

The Spoken Word. "Holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost" (2 Peter i. 19-21).

The Incarnate Word. "And the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us, ... full of grace and truth" (John i. 14; John xii. 49, 50; Matt. xvii. 5).

The Written Word. "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable," &c. (2 Tim. iii. 16; John xvii. 7, 8, 14; Matt. v. 17, 18).

THURSDAY, JUNE 27.
GOD IN MANIFESTATION.

"That which was from the beginning, which we have heard, which we have seen with our eyes, which we have looked upon, and our hands have handled, of the Word of Life" (1 John i. 1).

Christ's First Coming and its Purposes:—

(1) To keep the law in Holy living, and to be the Propitation for our sins. "I have glorified Thee on the earth; I have finished the work which Thou gavest me to do" (John xvii. 4; 1 John ii. 2; 2 Cor. v. 21; Mark x. 45).

(2) To reveal the Father. "His dear Son . . . who is the image of the invisible God" (Col. i. 13, 15). "He that hath seen Me hath seen the Father" (John xiv. 9).

Christ's Second Coming and its Purposes:—

(1) To gather his people—his Church. "I will come again and receive you unto myself" (John xiv. 1-3; 1 Thess. iv. 13-18).

(2) To restore his Nation—Israel, and Judge the Nations. "And I will plant them upon their land, and they shall no more be pulled up out of their land which I have given them, saith the Lord thy God" (Amos. ix. 15; Isa. xlii. 5-7; Eze. xxxvi. 24-28; Eze. xxxix. 28, 29). "Before Him shall be gathered all nations" (Matt. xxv. 31-46; Acts xvii. 31; Jude 14, 15).

(3) To govern the world in righteousness. "And the Lord shall give unto Him the throne of his father David" (Luke 1, 32). "He shall have dominion also from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth" (Psa. lxxii. 8; Jer. xxiii. 5; Isa. xxiv. 23; Zech. xiv. 9).

"The zeal of the Lord of Hosts will perform this."

Several railway companies have agreed to issue return tickets to London at reduced fares to those who purpose attending the Conference. A "Certificate" is necessary for each person; and these "Certificates" can only be obtained from the Secretary of the Mildmay Conference, at the Conference Hall, Mildmay Park, London, N.

Requests for Prayer.

For blessing on the work of the Open-Air Mission at Chester races.

Prayer is asked for the twentieth annual visit of the Ross Bible Carriage to the Hereford Pleasure Fair on May 8 and 9; also for the Gospel tent work commencing at Lydbrook in May.

The Need of the Age, Ecclesiastical and Otherwise, by Rev. David Mullan (3d. Dublin: Eason & Son; London: Morgan & Scott), is a stirring and timely pamphlet, worthy of close attention by all who desire the revival of spiritual religion, and of all who hold the principles of the Evangelical Alliance.

The Manger and the Cross.

THE centre of the Incarnation is where Christ placed the focus of his work—not at the beginning of his life, but at its end; not in the manger, but in the Cross. The key to the Incarnation is not in the cradle, but in the Cross. The light on Bethlehem falls from Calvary. The virtue lies in some act done by Christ; and He Himself did no act in his birth, but in his death He did the act of the universe. The soul of the Incarnation does not lie in his being born of a pure virgin; but it lies in the death of his pure soul, and the perfect obedience of his will as a propitiation for the sins of the world. God was in Christ as reconciler, not as prodigy. The key to the Incarnation lies, not in the miracle performed on his mother, but in the act of redemption performed by Himself. Christ's great work on our behalf was not in assuming our nature at birth, but in what He did with the nature we call assumed. Men were not redeemed by Christ being born as He was, but by his dying as He did. It is that which establishes his power over us sinners. It is that which makes his real value to our souls, because it is there that He atones, expiates, reconciles. It is that which gives chief value to his entrance into the world—not that He was miraculously born, but that He was born to die and redeem. The saving humiliation was not that of the manger, but of the Cross. It was a humiliation not inflicted or imposed, but achieved, and the self-emptying behind all was one to be explained, not by anything happening to Him in his humble birth, but by what happened through Him in his humiliating death.

From "The Taste of Death and the Life of Grace," by P. T Forsyth, M.A., D.D. (1s. 6d. (James Clark & Co.) Rarely do we find a book with so much good matter condensed into so small a compass. It contains two discourses on the vital truths of Heb. ii. 9 and Phil. ii. 5-8. In both Dr. Forsyth protests against the weak, sentimental, selfish gospelette, so common in the present shallow period; and affirms the uncompromising and eternal realities of the Gospel of God. There is not a wasted word. Each terse and graphic sentence hits the mark. Tenderness and pathos co-exist with firm vindication of righteousness and stern denunciations of the wickedness and doom of sin. The glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ is the ultimate subject of the whole.

Irish Notes.

THE quarterly meeting of the Belfast Methodist Council has been discussing "The Higher Criticism," and the general conclusion arrived at was that evangelical Christianity has not much to fear from the critics.

Much regret is felt by a wide circle of friends at the death of Rev. Wm. Quaile, Methodist minister, who has just passed away in Dublin, in the fifty-first year of his ministry. Deceased was an earnest, thoughtful preacher, a faithful pastor, and a kind friend. His appointments included such centres as Portadown, Banbridge, and Parsonstown.

The amount now given to foreign missions by the Church of Ireland is greatly in excess of what it was even a few years ago. For instance, in 1894, the sum raised from assessment under the various diocesan schemes was £108,364, and for foreign missions £24,694, but in 1899 the sum raised from assessment was only £99,168, while that contributed for foreign missions was £52,784. Thus, while the amount raised from assessment fell in five years £9,196, the sum raised for foreign missions increased £28,088.

The Lewes Martyrs' Memorial.—In honour of the seventeen martyrs who suffered in Queen Mary's reign in the county town of Lewes, a noble granite memorial has, at the cost of about £990, been erected on an eminence overlooking the town. It is to be unveiled by the Countess of Portsmouth on Wednesday, May 8, and in connection with the occasion several meetings will be held, including one for the children, when 1,000 children will receive a copy of the memorial volume that has been issued in connection with the unveiling. (TURN OR BURN. By Rev. Dr. F. J. Hamilton and W. Stanley Martin. 1s. Morgan & Scott). The obelisk will remain not only as a memorial to the Lewes Protestant Martyrs, but as a witness for Protestantism; also proving an encouragement to all who, in these days of constant concession to the ever-increasing demands of Popery, hold that any such yielding is dishonouring to the Lord, disloyal to the Sovereign, dangerous to the commonwealth, and detrimental to the individual.

Regions Beyond Missionary Union. — We are requested to state that friends who desire to inspect the new missionary steamer Livingstone, should address the Secretary, Harley House, Bow, E.

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individua members. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

Communications for The Christian should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C. All Advertisements should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for The Christian by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "The Christian" Postal Department, Bouverie House, Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address. (For Subscription rates, see Page 1 of Cover.) Postcard or stamped envelope should be enclosed if receipt is desired.

Notes & Comments

ONCE more we remind our friends that communications for any of the correspondents whose names appear in our columns may be addressed to our care. Donations in aid of the various branches of work which we bring before our readers may also be sent on their behalf to our publishers, Messrs. Morgan & Scott.

Those who revere the memory of D. L. Moody will find welcome echoes of his voice of tenderness and truth in a neat little volume: Daily Gems from D. L. Moody. Selected by His Daughter. (2s. 6d. Morgan & Scott.) We know no more attractive volume of the class to which it belongs. There is a text for every day in the year, and then a bright paragraph or point, expressed in the terse style so characteristic of the evangelist. There is an excellent portrait, and many other illustrations. On all hands the book will be valued as a memento of Mr. Moody. Christian workers will find it suggestive of thought as well as spiritually helpful.

Several of the leading ministers of this country have been moved, during the recent Spring meetings, to urge younger men to greater definiteness in their presentation of Christian truth. We referred in our last issue to the magnificent declaration of Dr. Maclaren. Following him came Dr. John Watson, who last week spoke very plainly upon the same subject. He declared that the great want in the preaching of the day was a strong convincing affirmation concerning the great Christian verities—

> Men come to church to be confirmed in the good news of God's salvation, and if preachers fail to convince them, or send them away doubting, it were better that the churches should be closed. The human heart longs for certainty.

There can be no doubt that the minds of thousands of churchgoers are really disturbed because of the destructive criticism which has so boisterously asserted itself of late: consequently mere affirmations from the pulpit are not received as once they were. The preaching must be convincing and positive. The evangelist St. Luke tells us that Apollos mightily convinced the Jews from the Scriptures. We know well that unless the Holy Spirit deals with the hearts of the hearers no real good will be done, no matter how clever and convincing is the preaching. At the same time, the preacher's duty is to present positive truth as absolute overwhelming fact, based upon the authority of the Divine Word.

A circular has been issued by the Free Church Council urging the churches all over the land to undertake united open-air services on Sunday evenings about 8.30. If this project is carried through (and no doubt it will be) there ought to be an immense amount of good accomplished. We should like to add, however, that every evening of the week must be employed if any considerable section of the community is to be reached. The tent season will also commence immediately, and workers are looking forward with great expectation to this work, since the happy experience of last year demonstrated what can be wrought by means of tent missions. The summer offers a special opportunity to the whole Church to engage in aggressive evangelism. Would it not be well if pastors devoted a whole Sunday in pressing the solemn responsibility of such work upon Christian people? At present a very large number of people consider it infra dig. to assist at open-air meetings; but if the outside crowd is ever to be reached, it can only be reached in this way. Very much depends upon how the opportunity is seized in the coming months.

All ministers will sympathize with the protest against the way in which the pulpit is turned into a "bulletin-board," from which all kinds of trivial notices are given out week by week. The difficulty arises mainly from the insistence shown by the officials of each minor society in connection with a church, that their particular meetings should be specially emphasized. Where the preacher gives out his own notices, it is an added burden to his proper duties which often seriously interferes with his peace of mind, and with his concentration on his work. It further distracts the mind of the congregation from the higher spiritual exercises of the hour. Some means ought to be found whereby this perpetual interference with worship would be prevented. There are several ways of doing this—a monthly leaflet of notices, or a weekly list, distributed in the pews, being the most convenient and effective. By a little loyalty on the part of the audience, and an occasional reminder from the pulpit, this increasing trouble might be greatly mitigated.

The "decadence of young men" is the theme of more than one allusion in the May Meetings that are now going on so vigorously. There is a widespread feeling among the older leaders that there is less interest in great ideas and principles among the young men of to-day than was the case a generation ago. Mr. Carvell Williams, M.P., emphatically deplored the way in which young men were being absorbed by the passing interests of the football and cricket fields, the golf links and cycle tracks. The appeals that stirred their fathers fall unheeded on the ears of those whose devotion to amusement threatens not only to retard the advance of the great moral and spiritual movements, but even to make it possible that some of their dearly-won rights may be taken from them.

The Scriptural doctrine of sin, as it is well put in The Rock by Dr. Porter, Vicar of All Saints, Southport, represents it as four-sided in its character. It is, first, a deadly injury to a man's own soul; secondly, often a deadly injury against some other individual or individuals; thirdly, a danger to the community at large; and, fourthly, a deep offence against God, an outrage on his majesty, a violation of his love. These four characteristics of wrong-doing must ever be borne in mind in considering our own sins, if we would feel towards them as we ought. The weak attitude of many public teachers on this subject is largely due to the ignoring of the last factor in Dr. Porter's analysis. Only as we realize the offence against God as a Divine and Holy Person, who has a right to demand holiness in us, shall we realize and be able to proclaim the teaching of the Bible on this matter.

The lecturers of the "Ethical Religion Society," rejecting all ideas of God and the supernatural, harp incessantly upon the word "duty":—

> We want a true conception of duty . . . a conception which does not crush out earth in order to bring in heaven. The religion of duty does not grasp at a shadow and neglect the substance.

The word "duty" seems to be a sort of charm, the utterance of which settles all questions. But what is "duty"? According to its etymology, the sum total of all that is due from us. And a man has performed but the smallest part of his duty when he has discharged his debts to his fellows. The greatest of all our dues is owing to God, upon whose Providence we absolutely depend, moment by moment.

Following up the inquiry set on foot by the Sunday School Chronicle, a determined "set" is being made by many influential employers against the boy smoker. Sir Thomas Lipton, Mr. W. H. Lever, of the Sunlight Soap, Mr. George Cadbury, Mr. Walter Hazell, and others, together with many head-masters of schools and medical men, all express their conviction that juvenile smoking is injurious to health and detrimental to character. The Editor himself has a serious word on the subject:—

> "When you think," he writes, "of the terrible craving for the cigarette which these boys feel, and the inadequacy of their weekly wage to meet the demands of this luxury, you can readily understand how they may easily fall under the temptation of petty pilfering."

In connection with the Sunday-School Union, an Anti-Cigarette League has been started, the members of which promise that they will abstain from smoking at least till they reach the age of twenty-one.

The necessity for protecting young children from being allowed to purchase intoxicants has been emphasised by a shocking case which came before the magistrates at the Birmingham Police Court on April 24. Evidence was given that young girls, of the respective ages of twelve, thirteen, fourteen, and fifteen, visited several public-houses in succession, obtaining rum at one house, whisky at another, beer at a third, where, on being refused more, "they went outside and fell down in the street." All the girls were under the influence of drink, and one was "so drunk that the constable locked her up."

The magistrate remarked that a good deal had been heard of slum-land, but now they had an opportunity of seeing how a great part of slum land was made. A fine of £5 and costs was the penalty imposed upon the beer-house keeper who supplied the beer, when it should have been seen that the girls were not fit to be served. But alas, for the parental training which permits, and the opportunities which exist for, children—and girls, moreover—of these tender years to be visitants of such terrible places of temptation, leading to loss of decency, of propriety, and of every moral and spiritual good.

Christian people are having it brought home to them that a serious danger to public morality lurks behind the apparently innocent penny-in-the-slot mutoscope machines, which are being rapidly multiplied in places of public resort. Mr. R. Rains, Hillside, Seabrook, Sandgate, has issued a circular letter calling attention to the mischievous pictures placed on view in this way, of which the very titles betray their debasing and corrupting nature. Workers in charge of children's excursion parties are strongly urged to make inquiries whether the places selected are free from such things on ground or in buildings belonging to the corporation or council—(1) of the caterer, (2) of the stationmasters at both ends of the journey, (3) of the local authorities, and (4) of friends in the locality. By this means children may be saved from contamination, and attention will be called to the evil.

One of the most forcible articles we have yet seen dealing with the curse of the military spirit, appears in the current number of the Young Man. It is addressed especially to young men, because "they are the coming force," but it deserves to be pondered by all who have the country's welfare at heart. The writer points out, inter alia, that the acceptance of the Darwinian doctrine of the survival of the fittest in the struggle for existence, seems to be employed as an excuse for the development of the war spirit. Perhaps few of the common people could tell precisely what that doctrine really is, but there can be no doubt of the fact that the blank materialism to which the conclusions of certain scientists directly lead, has been practically accepted by vast numbers of people who have no interest whatever in science. The mists of materialism created on the heights have descended into the valleys, and enveloped the popular mind.

A curious "endowment" case has been decided in South Wales. In 1702 a Presbyterian Church was endowed with £40 a year for its minister. In course of time the teaching became Socinian, as was the case during the eighteenth century with not a few Presbyterian causes. The congregation dwindled, till recently it was found impossible to keep up even the semblance of church life, except by importing a congregation from a neighbouring town to hold a Unitarian service once a year! It has now been legally decided that the endowment shall lapse, and be devoted to educational purposes. The case illustrates somewhat pointedly a fact which is more widespread than many people think, viz., that Unitarianism is incapable, not only of missionary effort, but even of maintaining itself from one generation to another with any show of vitality. It is fed by accessions from other denominations, not by its own propagating power; and where, as in South Wales, the secessions to Unitarianism are few, the cult threatens to die out as a separate community.

We had been hoping that the scandal of church lotteries was a thing of the past, but such evils die hard, and there are occasional attempts to keep up the immoral practice, under the impression, we suppose, that the end justifies the means. The latest of these attempts is a "grand prize drawing" in connection with a certain Welsh church in Glamorganshire, with forty-six prizes to be competed for by the sale of tickets. The curious thing is that the names of five J.P.'s and other public officials appear as patrons. Besides being most discreditable, as connected with a religious community, it is entirely illegal. Religion has suffered greatly in times gone by through association with this and kindred practices, and those who value the good name of the Christian Church will unite to bury such evils beyond resurrection.

The reply of Count Tolstoi to the decree of excommunication passed upon him by "the Holy Synod" will be read by Christian people with mingled feelings, since it presents such a mixture of noble protest against superstition and evident ignorance of the central truths of the Christian faith. The Greek Church in Russia is a hotbed of revolting superstition, and the excesses of idolatry go even beyond those of the Latin Church. Count Tolstoi's protest may, therefore, do something to awaken the more intelligent people to a sense of the folly of these things. Well may he indignantly protest against "the Sacraments, as a species of base common witchcraft, absolutely opposed to the idea of God and the teaching of Christ. Confession (he continues) is a dangerous illusion, encouraging immorality. Extreme unction, the use of icons and relics, are the outcome of ignorant sorcery. Canonization is the beginning of imposture.

These are strong words, but a severe disease needs a severe remedy. But, unfortunately, the Count mars his protest by advocating "free" marriage, and denying the Deity of our Lord. Because of this, the edge of his protest will be taken off for many of his countrymen, who might otherwise have hearkened to him.

The testimony of impartial onlookers is generally of more value than that of those who judge from a distance. In this respect it is interesting to turn from Lord Salisbury's criticism upon the hampering and hindering result of missions in the Far East to some other recent testimonies. The Governor of New Guinea has stated in public meeting that the Government owed much to the missions, and he added that if it were not for the little white houses of the missionaries the administration would have to double and redouble its controlling forces. Every penny given to the mission work was, therefore, a help to the Home Government, for the missionaries carried with them "peace, law, and order." Similarly Commander Tilley, the first American Governor of Samoa, has recently said:—

Many persons jest at mission work. I say without hesitation that the missionaries have done noble and marvellous work in the South Sea Islands, and that, with the help of God, they have effectually converted the whole of the Samoan archipelago. Owing to their faithful labours, those islands are now prepared to profit by good government, and to make stupendous progress in civilization.

Roman Catholic ecclesiastics are generally not favourable to the free dissemination of the Scriptures among the laity, because there can be no greater enemy of Sacerdotalism than the New Testament. Occasionally, however, they forget themselves, and speak not as officials but as men, as Cardinal Vaughan has just done in regard to the publication by the Catholic Truth Society of the penny edition of the Gospels in English. He even goes so far as to say that—

If the Society had done no more than issue the Gospels in this form it had done a good work, for it was infinitely better to read the life of our Lord in the Gospels themselves than to trust to the language of commentators.

If the Pope and all his cardinals took up this attitude generally, there would be little danger of the recrudescence of Roman Catholicism in this or any other country. A free Bible and the Vatican are sworn enemies.

The Times, in spite of its halting tone as regards the persistent demand for a State Catholic University in Ireland, is frankly sensible of the anomalous nature of the demand, and pertinently asks: "Why should the Roman Catholic Church in this country be given a position of influence and privilege in regard to University education which it does not possess in any Continental country?" It points out that the completely Roman Catholic Universities of the Continent, such as Louvain, receive no help whatever from the State, and are maintained entirely by voluntary contributions. In view of these and other facts, there is a strange weakness of attitude among our leading statesmen on both sides of the House of Commons on this question. The persistence and skill with which the reactionary party conducts its propaganda is a lesson in something more than tactics, to those who are lagging in their efforts after complete religious equality in this country. The enthusiasm just now is all on one side.

A striking phrase employed by the Rome correspondent of the Daily News reveals the real inwardness of Vatican policy. It is well known that the Pope and the Vatican Council are greatly disturbed because of the anti-clerical spirit which every day is gaining strength on the Continent. The correspondent referred to significantly says:—

The greatest grief is caused by the attitude of France, the Vatican having, for over ten years, done everything in its power to gain her political friendship. Cardinal Rampolla now sees slipping from his grasp the fruit of these long years of patient diplomacy. [Our italics.]

The whole question is there, and it will be well that people shall so understand it; for the reaction which is so strongly working in Latin countries is not a reaction against Christianity, but a resistance to political intrigues undertaken in the name of religion.

One of the signs of this time, pregnant with momentous possibilities, is the tendency to the union of the Latin races. The Daily Mail of Thursday contained a most interesting communication on this subject. The chief point of interest is that the prime motive of unity is the revolt against the pretensions of Romanism, and especially the evil machinations of Jesuitism. Is this one of the steps toward the fulfilment of Rev. xvii. 16:—"The beast shall hate the harlot, and shall make her desolate, and shall eat her flesh, and burn her with fire"?

The following story, told in a contemporary, is significant by the impression made by Roman Catholic Christianity on the mind of a Hindoo priest sent over recently to Europe to study the civilization and religion of the West. He was much impressed by the beauty and charm of the first church he attended, and with the words of the officiating minister; and after the service he went to pay his respects to the preacher.

"Your words," he said, "have deeply impressed me. You are surely one of the first servants of the Church?"

"Oh, no," replied the clergyman with humble mien, "the vicar is over me."

"And over the vicar?"

"The canons."

"And over the canons?"

"The bishop."

"And over the bishop?"

"The archbishop."

"And over the archbishop?"

"The cardinals."

"And over the cardinals?"

"The Holy Father."

The Hindoo priest shook his head and ceased his questions, saying: "What a long, long ladder you want to mount up to God."

The evil of priestly intermediaries between between man and his Maker could scarcely be more strikingly put.

Home Training.

By Rev. E. GRIFFITH JONES, B.A., Balham.

III. THE NEST NURTURE.

(Deut. xxxii., 11.)

THERE is perhaps no feature of the animal world more prophetic of the human, especially on its pathetic and affectional side, than the nesting habits of birds. Those who see nothing beyond physical attractions and sensibilities in the elaborate provisions made for the nurture of their young by the feathered tribes, forget that the first prophecy of the home-life, with all its ardours of feeling and joys of self-sacrifice, is to be found in the bird's nest. In many directions it symbolizes the highest principles and laws of the home, and it will fitly stand, in view of the opposite exaggerations we have been dealing with so far, for the ideal home training. The three ruling ideas of the nest nurture are embodied in the words—shelter, discipline, and emancipation.

I. The Home, like the nest, is for Shelter. It is a truism to say that we come into the world helpless and defenceless, especially as compared with some of the creatures beneath us. The higher the intelligence of the adult creature, so we are told by naturalists, the longer its infancy; and as man stands highest in the scale, his infancy is the longest and the severest of all earthly beings.

But in the human race infancy has not only a physiological, but a moral and spiritual function to fill. The sensitiveness of the child is so exceedingly finely wrought, and the possibilities of harm to it so perpetual, and often so fatal, that it makes unceasing demands on the care and attention, the thought and self-sacrifice of its parents; and they in their turn find that these demands, which absorb their thoughts, and drain their energies, day and night during the best years of their lives, tend to develop in them the highest qualities of which human nature is capable.

The home is the training school of virtue for parents as well as for children; and of the two, I think the parents are put through more profitable discipline than even the children.

And the first part of this discipline is the most thorough, to make the home a nest of warmth and safety, and cherishing love. Because our little ones are so helpless when first entrusted to our hands, God has put a great love of children in the hearts of most men and women, and this love prompts them to all the care and the watchfulness, and indeed not a little of the wisdom, that are needed for their up-bringing. A doctor told me once that he and mothers-in-law, and aunts, who are so fond of giving young and inexperienced mothers advice as to how and what to do with their babies. "Nature has given them an instinct," he said, "which will tell them more than volumes of advice; love will help them to understand without knowing how or why." Love means sympathy; sympathy breeds insight; insight brings wisdom. If we are but faithful to our love, and give it its proper place in our lives, it will teach us more secrets than much experience, and keep us true to our children's needs.

It is, indeed, not the tendency to neglect, but indulgence, that needs to be guarded against. It is a great mistake to say that undue fondness is due to a too great love. A great love is strong in self-restraint; it considers the true interests of the loved ones, not their whims; and is even prepared to run the risk of seeming unkind in order to fulfil its perfect work.

We must remember that we have to defend our boys and girls, not only from the world outside, but from themselves; from their hereditary tendencies; from faults, perhaps, that we have transmitted to them; from natural impulses to selfishness and untruth and evil tempers. No one is fit for this subtle but Divine stewardship who has not learnt the secret of conquering his own heart; and it is often because men and women fail as men and women that they fail as parents; and have to lament in later years that, with the best intentions they have utterly fallen behind their ideal in the up-bringing of their children.

II. The home, therefore, is not only for shelter, but for Discipline.

Because the child nature is so sensitive to evil influence, we have to shelter and guard it jealously from all that would hurt it in body or in soul; and because it is so sensitive to good influence, we are called upon to surround it with the best possible environment, physical and spiritual. But even in the early years, we must remember that by stimulating and spiritualizing their instinct for self-preservation, by disciplining them to good habits, by developing their powers of reacting on the outside world, we are doing more than would otherwise be possible, to preserve our children blameless afterwards, and to send them forth strong and vigorous for the life they have to live when they leave us.

The text above referred to illustrates this: "As an eagle stirreth up her nest, fluttereth over her young, spreadeth abroad her wings, taketh them, beareth them on her wings—" . . .

WHAT DOES THIS MEAN?

It means that even in bird life the parental instinct is not satisfied with the mere sheltering impulse. The mother bird knows that her little ones are not in the nest for ever, that presently they will have to see after themselves; and so, having fed and cherished them up to a certain point of strength, she sets about educating them to take care of themselves, and drills them in the art of flight. The nest is broken up, the young ones are borne aloft, tossed into the perilous air, caught and upborne, and tossed again; and so they find their wings little by little, and are at last able to fly alone.

I am afraid there has been in times past an idea that the principal function of parental authority is to repress the waywardness of children. That may be its lowest function; it is certainly not its highest. That is, not to repress, but to stimulate; not to check, but to develop, the latent strength and virtue of the little ones. This is true of education and of political life, as well as of the home life. It is tyranny that represses, and discourages, and stifles; righteously-directed authority only uses the negative element in order to awaken all that tells for order and self-government, and so secure the realisation of the best in man, woman, and child.

III. There is one more principle to be borne in mind—that of Preparation for the inevitable hour of Emancipation and Freedom.

As was pointed out in a preceding article, those parents who forget that their children will sometime be called to leave the home-shelter and discipline behind them, and go forth into the world to fight their own battle, who treat their children as though they were going to remain children for ever, are preparing sorrow both for themselves and offspring alike.

No doubt it must come home with a deep pang to the hearts of parents when at length they realize that their absolute reign is over, and that in future they can exercise only a divided, partial authority over their children. That is a touching scene in the Temple when Mary quietly remonstrates with her boy Jesus for having so long kept them in ignorance of his whereabouts. His answer is gentle, but it has in it a touch of loving reproof: "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business—in his house?" Mary must have realized with a shock that her sweet mother's day of unquestioning authority was over, and that she must in many things where hitherto she had been queen-mother. Her Son was beginning to realize outlooks in the vaster world beyond and above the home; the human relationship was being absorbed in the Divine, and the Virgin-mother must give way as final authority to the Heavenly Father. Happy, indeed, the mother that can reverence her child in this, and acknowledge that hard as it may be to be put back into the second place yet so it must, and so it ought to, be.

The hour must come to us all, when our children rise and leave us; and like Abraham leaving his native land, they go forth not knowing whither they are going. But if the "nest nurture" has done its work, our eaglets will have learnt to fly alone. By the gradual release of authority, the slow but educative habit of voluntary obedience to the Divine will and law in the home, they will be prepared to go forth in confidence to meet their destiny; and, by Divine grace, to mould their fate without fear of failure or disaster.

That home is a happy one in which the little ones are being so nurtured as to be equipped, ere they leave, with that highest of incentives, as it is the surest of defences, to a successful career here and hereafter—a true-hearted faith, a will already consecrated to the service of God. Thus, and not otherwise, will He fulfil his purpose for us and ours in the new generation, and so lead the world "to other heights in other lives."

[This article, with the two that have preceded it, will shortly be published in separate form, particulars of which will be duly announced.]

A Soldiers' Password.

AN interesting fact has been brought to our notice to the effect that when members of the Soldiers' Christian Association meet each other they use as a password "Four hundred and ninety-four," the response of the Christian comrade being "Six further on." The meaning is this: 494 is the number in Sacred Songs and Solos of the hymn "God be with you till we meet again;" and six further on (i.e., 500) is the number of "Blessed assurance, Jesus is mine."

We inquired of Mr. S. E. Burrow, the secretary of the Soldiers' Christian Association, as to the accuracy of the above, and he writes in these terms:—"Replying to your letter re '494' and 'six further on,' it is quite correct. They are constantly being used by our S.C.A. members as greeting and response. And I don't think an S.C.A. man ever writes a letter to a comrade or to me without putting 494 either under his signature or on the flap of the envelope outside. I have had dozens such from South Africa alone, and in my visits to the garrisons and Soldiers' Homes no meeting is considered closed until 494 is sung. And they do sing it!"

Attention!

EVERY Christian should know what this means. It is to be awake and attentive to all the commands of Christ. To have eyes, ears, hands, and feet ready for the next word or duty. It is the first lesson in the discipline and drill of the British soldier, and it is also the first duty of the Christian soldier—to hear, to heed, and to hasten at once both to learn and to do the will of the Lord. This command is perhaps best given to us in two short words, Take heed. If we turn to the Christian's Order Book, we shall see how complete this word of command is:—

1. Take heed and have the heart right, for God can read it (Heb. iii. 12).

2. Take heed and have the ears open, for the Word to enter (Matt. iv. 24).

3. Take heed and have the eyes right, for the enemy is near (Mark xiii. 33).

4. Take heed and have the hands busy, for the inspection is at hand (1 Cor. iii. 10).

5. Take heed and keep the feet firm, lest you slip (1 Cor. x. 12).

6. Take heed and keep close to Christ (Mark xiii. 9).

Take heed that your conversation is such as becometh the Gospel of Christ, and that your life and testimony glorify the Saviour as a "good soldier of Jesus Christ."

Remember, faithful vigilance is the price of everything good and great in this world. It was for this that the memory of the Pompeian Sentinel is embalmed in poetry and recorded in history. Nothing but unceasing watchfulness can keep the heart in harmony with God.

Watchfulness and prayer are inseparable. The one discerns dangers, the other arms against them.

Pins and Pivots, from which the above is extracted, is a neat 48pp. booklet, prepared by Mr. C. Edwards, of the Soldiers' Home, Winchester (6d., cloth 9d. H. R. Allenson). This should prove very acceptable to teachers and preachers. A similar volume, by the same author, entitled Pictures of Christian Life and Service (9d. and 1s.), will shortly be published by Messrs. Morgan and Scott.

FOUNDATION TRUTHS OF THE GOSPEL.—XVII.

THE SANCTIFICATION OF THE SPIRIT.

By Rev. T. G. SELBY.

"ELECT . . . in sanctification of the Spirit, unto obedience and sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ" (1 Peter i. 2). "God chose you from the beginning unto salvation in sanctification of the Spirit, and belief of the truth" (2 Thess. ii. 13). The Jew was distinguished from his neighbours by a rare inward illumination, and the providential intention of his history was to realize, in some imperfect ritual fashion, the idea expressed by this term, "the sanctification of the Spirit." He had a sense of spiritual realities shared but faintly by other races, and enjoyed priestly rights and privileges within a sanctuary to which, for the present, the Gentile had found no key of access.

His capacity for religion, though sometimes neglected or misused, has often been described as genius. Through seers and lawgivers, and within the sphere of his own conscience also, he heard Divine voices with a distinctness and continuity to which no parallel can be found elsewhere. God was the chief and absorbing interest of his life, and at the best epochs of his history he was surrendered to the will of the Eternal. The vocation of his race was to accomplish Divine purposes more directly than the rest of the world, and, in so doing, to bless at last all other races.

The irresistible influences at work upon the Jew took him out from the mass of men, and cultivated him into a distinct type, "a peculiar treasure" to the God whom he worshipped. The race itself was formally sanctified in its corporate life, separated from the common, conventional polities and services through which other races fulfilled their destinies. Even the Gentile felt that there was a mysterious dividing line running like a grim frontier between himself and the man who had received this great religious trust. And because this idea of sanctification was so imperfectly realized by the people at large, in their common avocations, a race within the race was consecrated to the ministry of the altar, and common things were consecrated to Divine uses by the symbolic touch of the altar.

This purpose, which had a partial and intermittent fulfilment in the letter through the chequered epochs of Jewish history, was to reach a complete spiritual realization in the life of the new Israel. By creating a richer inward illumination, and a tenderer and more willing subjection to the voice of God, by a ministration of solace, courage, sympathy, and inspiration, the Spirit, sent in harmony with God's counsels, must needs refine and exalt, cleanse and hallow the inward and outward life of those belonging to the new seed; and the Spirit is no less faithful to his vocation, in the economy which bears his name, than the Son.

St. Peter makes it clear that this sanctifying ministry entrusted to the Spirit is not formal or putative only. It issues in complete inward harmony with the holy will of God. "Elect in sanctification of the Spirit unto obedience." There can be no other sanctity than that which so demonstrates itself. In the beginnings of its manifestations, the grace which is in Christ Jesus gives us back our lost standing-ground before God; but the work entrusted to the Spirit, in continuation of the redeeming work of the Incarnate Saviour, changes the character in its inmost uprisings.

It is wrought out by one who condescends to become the soul of every believing soul, and puts this plain spiritual mark upon those who are of the new Israel. The Spirit may need to struggle with us, and to contend against our obstinate reserves for years; but his sanctifying work is not crowned till, with free and glad hearts, we accept God's mind concerning us. The sanctifying Spirit brings to pass the great purpose of our election when He makes us heedful, submissive, alert to run in the way of God's commandments. There can be no fitness for God's plans here or hereafter till the soul bows itself in reverent love to God and to all his calls. "Elect in sanctification of the Spirit unto obedience."

But to whatever degree the Spirit may be able to carry on his work within us, obedience never reaches a point at which it acquires the quality of a merit. "Unto obedience, and sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ." The work which sanctifies, far from leading to self-righteousness, only makes the dependence of the believing soul on the Covenant sacrifice more complete and unreserved.

The obedience to which "sanctification of the Spirit" inspires, is not such as either avails to amend past sin, or to put the soul beyond further need of the sacrifice through which sin is put away. It is strange that this preface to St. Peter's epistle should close with a reference to the sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ, as though the highest work of the Spirit were but a step towards that mystic goal. Paul often puts the justification of the soul first, and describes its sanctification as though it were the final purpose looked forward to in the processes of grace. This varying order may arise from varied experiences, from unspoken metaphors in the minds of the writers, or from thinking of the present experiences of grace, in relation to a present Throne of Grace, or a future throne of judgment. What is vital to the subject under notice is that this sanctification of the Spirit does not free men from the need to trust in Christ's sacrifice for salvation, but intensifies that sense of need. Till the hallowing Spirit has wrought effectually within the heart and the life, we are never completely willing to be saved by that sacrifice of love, of which "the sprinkling of the blood" is the symbolic seal. "Elect . . . unto obedience in sanctification of the Spirit and sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ."

The word "regeneration" obviously describes the dawn of the new life, and the word "sanctification" its disciplined and developed activity. The new birth incorporates us with a priestly house; and the Spirit's ministry, in making believers holy, fits them for the high life to which the birth from above has designated them. The word "sanctification" sometimes denotes a continued series of operations, and sometimes a consummated act. If the Temple associations of the word must be kept in view in all its uses, sanctification, as an extended process, will include the entire scheme of our preparation for the sacred service of separation to which we are called; whilst the sanctifying act will represent the gateway of a peculiar and impressive consecration, through which the believer passes into the higher service of his life, and into a more blessed experience of surrender to God's will.

The manifold forms in which the Spirit's work is presented to us all converge towards this great result. He is to "guide into all truth;" and, according to the words of the Master Himself, it is "in the truth" his disciples are to be sanctified. In the advent of the Spirit, the Master's prayer begins to finds its answer. God chooses us unto "salvation in sanctification of the Spirit, and belief of the truth." "Christ Jesus is of God made unto us sanctification." But there can be no absorption of his hallowing, immaculate life into our feeble blemished lives, apart from this sacred inward ministry. The first quickening of the conscience effected by the Spirit looks on to this far-off end. The Spirit glorifies Jesus, and in the same act sanctifies the soul of the disciple.

It is only in the cleansed shrine that his beauty and power can be made known. The Spirit brings home to us the power of Christ's redeeming sovereignty, and inwardly presents Him for our faith, and worship, and love. No true sanctification can effect itself where God's Son is inadequately honoured, and a limit put to the splendour of his Person, and the efficacy of his Sacrifice. It is by the Spirit that we are joined to our Head, and made partakers of his life.

The Spirit imparts the light, through obedience to which we become children of the light. Holiness means more than conformity to a set of outward precepts. It is through the intimations of the Spirit within us that we come to know all the mind of our Master concerning us. The rich young man who fell at the feet of Jesus, and claimed in all sincerity that he had kept the commandments from his youth up, was by no means holy. Perhaps, if even he had felt the inward significance and obligation of the law, he could scarcely claim that term as a true description of his own spirit and life. He was sensible of a lack, or he would never have come with such earnestness to Jesus. The Great Teacher intimated that he must set himself to important duties which were not covered by the detailed and concrete prescriptions of the Law; and that he could only come into the way of perfection by a great surrender. What God lays upon the man whom He is seeking to sanctify, cannot be put into an outward formula, or be expressed by a mere rule of thumb. The laws and usages of conventional religion may mislead, unless the soul is always open to the intimations of the Spirit. For some tasks a fine and delicate touch is required. The pianist, the engraver, the worker in silk or tapestry, could not achieve success with hands covered by the rubber gloves used by the man who repairs the electric mains. And if we are to accomplish all that God puts upon us, we must rid ourselves of conventional ideas of duty, forms of fashionable religion, sophisticated consciences, and surrender our most delicate sensibilities to the touch of the Spirit, who teaches that He may sanctify, and reveals our shortcomings when we fail to set ourselves toward the perfect life.

The Spirit imparts that power of loving God which is the deepest secret of sanctification. There are no temple slaves in God's service, and there is no priesthood which is not a priesthood of love. There can be little or no love to God which is not preceded by love to Jesus Christ, in whom the Divine mercy shows itself to us. The story of Jesus is so beautiful that, apart from the work of the Spirit, from which it can scarcely be separated, even in thought, it must win upon a young and unspoiled nature, and enlist more or less of enthusiasm and love. But affection so enlisted has the instability of romance about it, and cannot be turned into a life-long principle of action. The love of God must needs be shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Spirit given unto us if we are to be sanctified unto obedience. The romance of youth is chilled by the selfishness and struggle of the world; and the dissection of the Gospels by the unbelieving critic often leaves the heart of the man, who loathes whilst he watches the work, cynical and deadly cold. And so the story of Jesus, till it is reinforced by the work of the Spirit, fails to create great motives of sacrifice and service. On some of the bogs of Scotland it is impossible to make a tree grow, and yet deep down below the surface forests of oak are found which once flourished in strength and beauty. A scientific observer has suggested that they were destroyed by a prolific growth of moss in a wet and sunless season. The fronds of the moss retained the cold moisture like sponges, and, by overspreading the trunks and branches of the trees, chilled splendid stretches of forest into death. And so the coldness and clammy unbelief of the world are ever struggling to get into our hearts, and sometimes succeed in chilling out the noblest things that have been planted within us; and at last we are in danger of becoming as selfish and doubting as the dead world itself. We need the ever-kindling fervours of the Spirit, the fire baptism, the love of God shedding abroad its sacred glow through our hearts, so that we may possess that responsive love which is the secret of sanctification. It is conveyed, and conveyed only, by the Spirit, who reveals God in Christ.

The pains and chastisements of life, which we rightly speak of as sanctifying, derive whatever virtue they possess from the hallowing ministry of the Spirit within us. "The God of all grace, after ye have suffered a little while, shall Himself perfect you." The buffettings through which we pass, apart from the help of the Spirit are apt to exhaust our life and reduce us to weakness. The suffering of a resolutely evil man, makes him unbelieving and rebellious. The suffering of a man who is rich in natural virtues only, will in the end make him weak and unresisting. The suffering of the man in whom the Spirit of God dwells, creates new virtues. It is at the close of a long category of human ills that Paul brings in his reference to the Spirit, who sheds abroad the Divine love in our hearts, so sustaining our hope under every circumstance of vexation and distress, and keeping our hope from being put to shame.

To sum up these thoughts in one, the Spirit puts about us that atmosphere of inspiring suggestion which makes the life of sanctity possible. It is only by walking in the Spirit that we can keep ourselves from the defilement and spiritual death which insidiously lurk about our pathway. In his graphic story of travel, Abbé Huc tells of some curious mineral springs he passed on his journey from Tartary to Thibet. The fumes from these springs settled upon the mountain side, which was called "Buddha's kitchen." The carbonic acid lurking there was sometimes fatal to travellers and their beasts of burden. It was easier to cross on horse-back than on foot, for the mephitic vapours lay near the surface of the ground. It was always safer to cross the mountain after a windy than after a sultry day, for a strong breeze dispersed the deadly fumes. The world in which we live is a larger edition of "Buddha's kitchen." The passions that stifle our highest inspirations, and threaten us with faintness and death, are thick about our feet in the pathway of our pilgrimage. "The mind of the flesh is death, but the mind of the Spirit is life and peace." The rushing wind of the Pentecost comes to dispel all that threatens the health and well-being of the inner-man. The Spirit puts about us an environment of Divine leading and suggestion which makes our sanctification possible, and gives the hope that "spirit, soul, and body shall be preserved blameless to the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ." Let us seek the higher atmosphere, and walk by the Spirit, bringing forth his fruits of love, joy, peace, long-suffering, faithfulness, temperance. The Spirit is no less faithful than the Son in following out his work to the end, and makes the grace of sanctification as possible as the Son makes the grace of forgiveness.

Cardinal Vaughan's Lesson for Protestants.

WITHIN a few days after the opening of the King's first Parliament, on which occasion the usual Statutory Declaration was made by the Sovereign, of disbelief in Transubstantiation and the Sacrifice of the Mass, a circular letter on the subject, issued by Cardinal Vaughan, was read in the Roman Catholic Churches of Westminster and Southwark. In that letter it was stated that Catholics have been made unhappy, and their heart has been pierced in its most cherished convictions, by the Declaration made by the Sovereign. And that it is not so much a question of personal pain and of gratuitous insult received, as of deep and lasting grief for the outrage committed against our Lord Jesus Christ . . . and against that Blessed and Immaculate Mother who shares in the opprobrium and sorrows heaped upon her Son!

In an admirable pamphlet dealing with the subject, Mr. Andrew Simon Lamb, Scotch Advocate and Barrister-at-law of the Inner Temple, points out, at greater length than our space will permit, the opportuneness of the attention of English Protestants being aroused now. First of all, he mentions one great lesson which the Cardinal's letter contains. It is this: That the real ground on which we are called to oppose the abolition of the Declaration, or even the modification of its expression or the alteration of its character, is because failure on our part to do so would be an act of treason against the "King of kings," through disloyal negligence to maintain a formal national protest against the unscriptural, of Anti-Christ. Proceeding, he argues that spiritual, as distinct from political or even religious, Protestantism demands the practice of Christian charity, i.e., love to God and love to man. No lower standard should be adopted.

SOUL-ENSNARING, AND DAMNABLE DOCTRINES

The Protestants of England all profess to accept the Word of God as their supreme rule of faith and practice. Their forefathers under the Revolution Settlement of 1688 provided for the official constitutional repudiation on the part of the State, through the Sovereign as its representative, and that as a condition of his occupying the throne, of the idolatry of the Mass. We are now to be asked to acquiesce in a modification, if not abolition, of that repudiation, on the specious plea of charitable consideration for the feelings of a minority of our fellow-countrymen.

For over 200 years formal protest has been made before the world by the English nation, through its successive Sovereigns, against the superstitious and idolatrous nature of the Mass. To modify or abolish such a protest true Christian charity itself forbids. The success of the agitation, if achieved, would but advance the interests of Romanism, or, in other words, secure the complete subordination of Christendom to Papal supremacy, civil and religious. The Statutory Royal Declaration is the best vantage ground for the maintenance of such national Protestantism as is left to us. That any advantage would be derived, except for the Romanists, by a modification of the terms of the Declaration is a "fond delusion." The Council of Constance decreed that "by no law, natural or Divine, is it obligatory to keep faith with heretics to the prejudice of the Catholic faith." At the time when England's safeguard was provided by the Bill of Rights the nation had come forth successfully from a long and bitter conflict with the Church of Rome, and resolved to constitute itself a Protestant nation, with a Protestant throne and legislature. It fenced its institutions round with bulwarks, excluding those who by their own creed are subjects of a foreign power whose law to them is supreme.

For the nation to have acted in 1688 otherwise than it did, would have been to sell to the enemy the liberties it had so dearly won. The law of self-preservation on the part of the nation demanded then, and demands still, the adoption of this principle. The carrying out of that same principle necessitates the retention of the Royal Declaration unaltered in a single respect. If there was in 1688 good reason to employ expressions so strong as it contains, and to provide so carefully as its language does against possible contingencies, there is now in 1901 quite as much reason. Rome's principles are not changed. Her practices are not improved. Her methods are as unscrupulous. The Declaration was intended to be thorough in its character. It is thorough. We need it to be thorough.

THE MARCH OF EVENTS

ever since the passing of the Catholic Emancipation Act in 1829 has furnished proof upon proof of the absolute necessity for retaining the terms of the Declaration unaltered.

How the designs of Romanism have been revealed through its own actions! In 1851, the Romish Hierarchy was introduced into England, and in the words of Cardinal Manning, it might then well be said: "The Royal supremacy has perished, and the supremacy of the Vicar of Jesus Christ re-enters England full of life." In 1866, the Parliamentary Oaths Amendment Act was passed, and a simple oath of allegiance to "the Queen, her heirs, and successors by law established," took the place of that of the Protestant Succession. Now it is sought to deprive us of the guarantee which we possess under the Bill of Rights for the personal Protestantism of the Sovereign.

Not very consistent all this with loyalty to the undertaking on the part of the Romish ecclesiastics, sworn before a Parliamentary Committee, that if "R. C. Emancipation" were granted, and Romanists were admitted to the British Parliament, they would observe these three conditions:—

(a) They would never attempt to assail the Act of Settlement, or endeavour to upset the Protestant Succession to the Throne.

(b) They would never attack the Protestant Established Church.

(c) Nor interfere with the Settlement of Landed Property in Ireland.

But then of course it must always be borne in mind that an article of their religion is that "it is not necessary to keep faith with heretics."

A very special reason for guarding with jealous care the retention in its present form of the Declaration against the Mass exists in the fact that the King is recognized as the "Supreme Governor of the Church of England." Surely the imperative duty of every loyal member of that Church, and, it may be added, of every other Protestant in the land, is resolutely, and uncompromisingly, to use their utmost endeavour to maintain intact every one of those constitutional provisions for the personal Protestantism of the Royal Succession which, in the Providence of God, at present exist.

The responsibility of deciding on so serious a question ought not to be with a House of Commons not specially chosen for that avowed purpose. The voice of the nation should in justice have been taken through an appeal to the constituencies.

Other Lands.

An Interesting Country.

By Rev. G C. NEEDHAM.

THE State of Texas is an empire in dimensions. Larger than Great Britain, and capable of sustaining an immense population, it numbers as yet but 3,500,000 of people. It has greater area than United Germany, with its 54,000,000 of souls. But Texas is growing rapidly in population. Until recent years it was little known, and only now are its immense resources and possibilities beginning to be realized.

During the past six months Texas has been my field of evangelism. My first pioneering was in company with the late D. L. Moody, fourteen years ago. Since then hundreds of towns have sprung up on the prairies. For thirty years I have preached throughout these United States and Canada, at times witnessing some remarkable manifestations of the Holy Spirit in his sovereign ministry; but perhaps this recent campaign through Texas is about the most important of any mission in many particulars. A new religious life is coming to the birth. Many old things—the old impassioned style of oratory, old periodical revival spasms—are passing away. A new race of preachers and teachers are coming to the front, who make the Word of God paramount. The southern country has always been intensely denominational, and Texas was not behind in religious warfare. Now the weapons are not pointed at brethren, but

AGAINST THE COMMON FOE.

I have met hundreds of Texan preachers; they are large of bone and brain, and are among the most faithful champions of the Cross. For ten days I gave Bible lectures, three times daily, in the great Baylor University, now educating 500 students. There I found 100 young preachers, eager to finish their school course, and to enter the fields to win souls. Many of these are engaged in practical Christian work on each Lord's Day.

Both President and Professors gave me royal welcome, and seconded my efforts in seeking to lead the students into a full vigorous spiritual life. We also witnessed many conversions. Here, also, as elsewhere, a hearty response was given to each protest I raised against the destructive work of "the Higher Critics." I met fewer men infected with the deadly heresies of the day in this South-west land than in any other part of North America. Moreover, the former prejudice against prophetic and premillennial teaching is rapidly passing away, and in all the towns visited the people listened eagerly to lectures on our Lord's return, and

THE PLAN OF THE AGES.

During the past three months, my brother, Evangelist Thomas Needham, visited the Texan towns I could not reach. He found everywhere an open ear for the Word, and had great joy in welcoming young converts among God's people.

The above is written in order to awaken an interest among the Lord's remembrancers for this great State. My dear wife accompanies me, to assist in my next mission. Our first work of Bible conference and evangelism will be Concord, North Carolina, thence, giving a few addresses in cities and en route, to San Antonio, 2,500 miles from our home. During May, we co-operate with all the pastors in this notably wicked city. Its proximity to Mexico and its Spanish Romanism, have had their influence upon the moral condition of its people. A large auditorium is secured for our meetings.

June 1-10 we visit Manor, Tex., to occupy a Central Tabernacle, seating 3,000 persons, adjacent to several towns. June 10-26 we give our time to the great Summer Bible School, where, in addition to other visitors, 300 preachers are expected. I am booked for nearly forty Bible lectures on the vital doctrines of Scripture; on the spiritual life; on soul-winning, and on Mosaic types. In addition, efforts will be made in the city of Waco to reach the unsaved. Mrs. Needham will give addresses and expositions at the women's meetings.

Romanism in Poland.

POLAND, though geographically wiped out of existence, still preserves its national character of loyal subjects to the Pope and ardent worshippers of Mary. It was under the protection of the Queen of Heaven, who had been proclaimed Queen of Poland, that the poor country was torn to pieces; but in the hearts of Roman Catholics she is not dethroned yet. It is in the Polish-speaking countries where the Church of Rome tries with success her first experiments. Her newest enterprise is the selling of miniature pictures of the Virgin Mary in stamp size, at 1 kr. (a farthing) each, which, when swallowed at prayer times, secure special blessings to the believer!

The Bishop of Przemysle, Galicia, Lucas Solecki, says in a pamphlet bearing his seal and signature: "We have been informed of many marvellous effects of grace and blessing through the eating of the pictures of the Mother of God, Maria de Campo Cavallo. We recommend that it be done in the house and not in the church."

Such an outrage of common sense does not need to be commented upon. Among some people in the Carpathian Mountains, steeped in ignorance and superstition, a custom has survived which seems to point back to a time when the Gospel in its pureness was known in that pretty spot. It is to greet each other with, "Praised be the Lord Jesus," the response being, "In all eternity, Amen." W. M.

Difficulties in Barotsi Land.

WRITING in reference to the difficulties which confront missionaries labouring among the Barotsi, Rev. F. Coillard says:—"Just now we have serious anxieties, and I must say I never felt so much the need of God's grace. I have at heart the evangelization of Africa by her own children. Africans themselves have taken up this refrain, but not at all on our keynote. Their diapason is pitched much higher than ours, so that we really ask ourselves if it is possible in this cacophony for our Divine Master to distinguish any harmonies at all. It is one of our own evangelists from Basutoland who is bringing Ethiopianism to us." The writer proceeds to relate the story of a catechist who left for Basutoland to marry and "plead the cause of our beloved Mission;" but before leaving had laid his plans with King Lewanika to supplant the missionaries. After considerable correspondence with the King, he applied for permission to found a school and erect houses at the entrance to the village, offering the services of an interpreter and secretary. Permission was granted, and the Ethiopian missionaries were welcomed to Lealuyi by the king.

"Although these Ethiopians," writes Mr. Coillard, "have themselves chosen to take up an attitude of hostility towards us, and even before arriving have had recourse to calumny and slander, many are real Christians and capable men. They will 'preach Christ of contention,' it is true, but they will preach Him. The current will be very strong, perhaps irresistible for our Zambesian Christians and evangelists. On the other hand, we ourselves are ill-equipped for our big school, and this is to me a subject of daily sorrow and care. Even supposing Semoindji and Nyondo resist the temptation of a more independent and lucrative position, and remain faithful to us, at any rate for a time, they are not at all up to the requirements of their work from any point of view, whether teaching or discipline. If only we were better equipped for our schools! The task is overwhelming for us. But God will not ask more from us than we can accomplish."

Miss C. W. Mackintosh, Harley House, Bow, E., represents the Zambesi Mission of Pastor Coillard.

Chamberi Mission, Madrid.

THE tide of public opinion during the last two months has distinctly turned in favour of Evangelical truth; and Jesuitism has received a blow that cannot fail to open the eyes of the people to the unholy methods of its emissaries, who diligently seek to enslave both soul and body.

One of the means particularly instrumental to this has been a book, entitled "Electra," that has already passed through many editions, and is appearing as a play in the theatres all over the land. It is to be feared that in its main features the plot is only too true to life, revealing a sad condition of matters both amongst Romish ecclesiastics and the rich, who are usually their dupes to aid them in carrying out their designs.

Possibly the late course of events, both in political and religious spheres, has had something to do with the excellent meetings that, as in past years, we held nightly last week. These were not so much marked by numbers, though the chapel was usually full, as by the

and it was a great joy to see so many new faces, amongst whom we recognized many parents of our day scholars from the two districts of Chamberi and Pozas; then, too, to see many of these coming night after night, and still continuing to attend the services, gives us hope that we are about to reap fruit after many days. Doubtless the cause of the blessing was that during the week previous to the special services much prayer was offered.

One immediate outcome is that some who had grown cold seem to have been stirred, and several new homes are open for us; for at the two closing meetings, I invited any who wished to follow the truth, and would like to be visited, to hand in their names and addresses. One of these has already purchased a New Testament and hymn book.

We have lately lost three aged members by death; and an infant whose parents are Christians has gone to swell the already large number who have been taken ere the sins and sorrows of earth could stain their little lives; it is computed that at least 2,000 infants die annually in this city. A sadder experience, however, has been the sudden death of one who last year turned his back to the truth and compelling his wife to accompany him. She lies dangerously ill, and ignorant of her loss, in a neighbouring hospital.

At our monthly children's meeting a fortnight ago, the subject was "Looking-glasses," and the passage chosen, James i. 22 to end. Many intelligent answers were given, but I was particularly pleased with one by a girl who, we believe, has lately been converted. To my question, which was the second looking-glass alluded to in the passage, she promptly replied, "The perfect law of liberty." How few of those more favoured in our own land would have so readily seen the point.

The schools, with their devoted teachers, afford much interest for prayer and effort, and we know that several of the scholars are really interested in the truth, and quite a number of them belong to the Children's Scripture Union. D. Mariano Trancho, is actively engaged in a variety of ways, taking a daily Bible lesson in the schools, visiting, and sharing in the meeting, besides helping in a work not connected with us amongst young men.

MY FELLOW-HELPER,

He and I frequently meet for prayer, Scripture study, and conference, and I think I may say God has knit our hearts together so that we are of one mind in service in behalf of souls.

The church slowly increases in numbers, but I think grows otherwise more rapidly, and several are shortly to be received who we hope will prove an additional strength. The meetings are, generally speaking, well attended, that set apart weekly for prayer being a specially profitable time.—Yours in the Lord's service,

Chas. E. Faithfull.

Bishop Hartzell and his Work in Africa.

DURING his present visit to London a large circle of hearers has been interested in the personality of Bishop Hartzell, and the story he has to tell of the work in Africa over which he takes charge on behalf of the Methodist Episcopal Church of America. In many ways the Bishop embodies that missionary enthusiasm which characterizes so many men whom his Church has sent out all over the world. Born and brought up on a prairie farm, 1,200 miles west of New York, the religious atmosphere of his early religious life and training was free and vigorous as that of his physical surroundings.

At the age of sixteen the idea of becoming a preacher was suggested to him, and he recalls to-day the old tree under which he immediately knelt and spent an hour in prayer over the matter, after which the conviction was clearly borne in on his mind that God had called him to get ready for this as his life-work.

Eleven years of school and college training intervened before Dr. Hartzell received an appointment, but there has never been a doubt in his mind as to the clearness of his call, nor has he ever found himself in a place of difficulty or anxiety—at home in America or among the native races of the Dark Continent—in which he has not been able to look up into the face of God and realize the nearness of his Almighty Helper. The hopefulness, or we might call it optimism, of his outlook on life and the world has undoubtedly been one of the secrets of the Bishop's power over men, while his child-like trust in God has once and again been rewarded by the fulfilment of promises of which he had laid hold by simple faith.

Elected in May, 1896, to take up the work of Bishop William Taylor, Dr. Hartzell now superintends evangelical, educational, and industrial missions in Liberia and Angola, on the West Coast; as well as in Portuguese East Africa, Rhodesia, and South Central Africa. At our request, he gives the following interesting notes on the beginning and progress of his work

IN THE MADEIRA ISLANDS:—

In January, 1898, as the result of a number of distinctly providential indications, it was decided that the Methodist Episcopal Church should become a permanent factor in Protestant evangelical work in the Madeira Islands. Previous to this, on visiting the islands, I had not felt that it would be possible to take on this additional burden in administration and expense, but a few days' study of the situation on the spot made the duty clear.

The work among the sailors, begun by Mr. William G. Smart's father in 1878, had been continued by the son, who was the recognised chaplain of the seamen in the Funchal port; a Seamen's Rest had been maintained on shore, and as far as possible Christian work done on board the ships. There was a school for Portuguese children, and many youths and adults among the Portuguese had been taught English by Mrs. Smart and the three Misses Newton who co-operated with her. In San Antonio de Serra, a few miles from Funchal, the work among the Portuguese, begun in 1895, had grown. Land had been bought, and a building partly finished, at an expense of over £400. The school had, in 1897, been ordered to be closed by a Government process, based upon a rumour that one of the teachers had said that the Virgin Mary should not be adored. The officer who gave the information was accompanied by a priest dressed in the garb of a traveller. Mr. Smart had been threatened with physical violence, and on one occasion a great stone was hurled down the mountain side, and fell just in front of his pony.

At the Serra there were more than a score of earnest and faithful people who had left the superstitions of Rome, and with their children had formed a Protestant community. Their simple faith, and direct testimony to the saving power of Christ's blood, convinced me that the work was genuine, and also that it was the beginning of a movement which in the end would not only be a blessing to the people who might voluntarily become Protestants, but would have a modifying and beneficial influence for spiritual good among the Roman Catholics themselves. These people had been cast out and consigned to eternal wrath by their priests; their school had been closed, their pastor and teachers threatened with fine and imprisonment; still they met regularly, listened joyfully to the reading of God's Word, invited the teachers to their cottages to teach their children, heard the Word gladly from their pastor, and were praying earnestly that they might be organized into a regular church, so as to have full ministrations according to the Protestant faith.

On January 19 a permanent organization was effected in Funchal. Mr. Smart and his wife, the three Misses Newton, and several other English-speaking people, and nearly a score of converted Protestant Portuguese, were present or represented. Those who were members of Protestant churches were received on profession of faith, and the remainder as probationers or catechumens. Mr. Smart was commended to the church in Monrovia, Liberia, and the annual Conference soon to meet there, for reception into the ministry and for ordination, which request was granted. March 6 was another historic day in the work of Protestant evangelism. After a sermon in English and a brief address in Portuguese, spoken through an interpreter, the communion was administered. Following this, came the ordination of Mr. Smart. There were some Roman Catholics present, one of whom said on leaving the house, "This is truly the work of God."

Difficulties had to be faced at every step, but the progress made was steady and satisfactory. Bishop Hartzell recouped Mr. Smart for his outlay on the Serra property, and expended nearly £400 in the purchase of more land and in adding to the buildings, but £200 more will be necessary to put all into working order. An encouraging incident occurred when a Roman Catholic proprietor said: "I will rent you this building, because I believe there should be freedom of worship everywhere in all Portuguese territory." It need hardly be added the offer was accepted, and the "Methodist Episcopal Church House in Funchal" became an accomplished fact. The ground floor will be fitted up as a Sailors' Rest and reading-room, though £100 are still wanted for the purpose. Another large room will be set apart for Y.M.C.A. purposes.

Bishop Hartzell continues—

On March 24, at Serra, 28 adults were received into fellowship. The responses to questions as to doctrines held by Protestant churches, were made clearly and intelligently. I explained the Protestant views of responsibility to God in the use of money, and later in the day a voluntary thankoffering was made, amounting to nearly £7.

My heart was specially touched by the circumstances connected with the baptism of two children. Most of these people are land tenants. Some of them have lived on the same lands from childhood, and their fathers before them. The landlord of the two fathers wrote them, saying that he had heard of the proposed baptism; and directed his overseer to call these two men and communicate to them that if they had their children baptized outside Catholic principles, they would be immediately put off the land, as he did not wish any tenant of his to act contrary to Christian principles!

The following are quotations from the reply dictated by one of the men and taken down from his own lips:—"I have received an order by the hand of your overseer to say that I am to have my child baptized in the Roman Catholic Church. My intention is to register it in the Civil Record, as was done in the case of my little boy three years ago, which the law of my country permits. Some time ago, when the priest was saying mass in this parish church, he denounced me in the presence of the whole congregation, saying that my name had been struck from the Church roll, because I used to go to hear the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, which says, 'And this Gospel of the Kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations' (Matt. xxiv. 14). I give thanks to God that He has shown me his light, which I desire to follow according to my conscience. And I so love the Word of the Lord Jesus Christ that I have learned to read it in my native tongue; and great is the love I bear in my heart for my Saviour, Jesus Christ, to whom I pray morning and night and having Him constantly in my thoughts. I am very sorry to hear by the letter written by your Excellency's grandson that you have the intention of turning me off your lands, where I have all my life worked so hard for your Excellency. I beg of you not to do me the great injustice of turning me and my wife and children into the public road, only because of my love to God, and my wish to worship Him in spirit and in truth, and trust only in the precious blood of Jesus Christ, shed for me on the cross of Calvary. By this same blood I beg of your Excellency to have compassion on me, for on my conscience I cannot do what you ask me."

Since arriving in London, I learn that this landlord had all his tenants called together, and informed that they must adore the Virgin Mary, and take their children to the priests to be baptized. What the outcome will be I cannot tell, but for such heroic devotion to conscience and principle there can be but one sentiment. We dare not forsake these people. I ask prayer in their behalf, that God may give them comfort and strength in the trial of their faith, and that full religious liberty may soon come to all the people under Portuguese rule.

Through all Bishop Hartzell's utterances there runs the desire for more help. The educational work is not adequately provided for, and a Portuguese-speaking helper would be specially welcomed. The population of the island is over 120,000, of whom nearly 50,000 are in Funchal and surrounding villages. Over 1,200 vessels enter the harbour annually, carrying about 70,000 seafaring men. It is manifestly a point of strategic importance in the new contests with which the century opens between Protestant liberty and Jesuitism." Recent months have shown anew that the battle with Roman Catholicism must still be fought as vigorously as ever, at least in such islands of the sea as Cuba, the Philippines, and Madeira.

Mr. George Soltau's School of Bible Study.—Writing of the work at Gloucester and Cheltenham, Mr. H. R. Francis says:—"The lessons are very instructive and interesting. One of the charms of these studies is, that Mr. Soltau's great aim is to bring the student to the inspired Word of God, and away from fanciful and perverse interpretation. One wishes that every city and town in the land could have the privilege of such courses of studies."

The May Meetings.

Conquests of the Word.

A POPULAR anniversary with Christians of every name was the meeting of the British and Foreign Bible Society, held in Exeter Hall, on Wednesday of last week. The audience was large and representative, and on the platform were grouped clerical and lay representatives from all parts of the country, to hear the latest chapter in the record of the conquests of the Word of God.

Once more the report is that of a successful year. The circulation—4,914,359 copies or portions of Scripture—only falls short of that of the previously reported twelve months by 133,433 because the crisis in China has caused a falling off in that country to the extent of a quarter of a million copies. It is interesting to note that of every 100 volumes sent out seventeen were complete Bibles, twenty-seven New Testaments, and fifty-six smaller parts of the sacred writings. The total issues of the Society since its formation in 1804 are now brought up to 169,971,544.

Under the head of finance, a note of anxiety was observable. There has been, for the third time in succession, a serious deficiency on the year, amounting in this case to £15,006, and over the triennial period to £34,332, notwithstanding the fact that a special fund raised on this account last year amounted to £9,185. Urgent appeal is therefore made for an increase to the normal income of the Society of £15,000 a year, "if it is in its world-wide mission."

The new President, the Marquis of Northampton, was cordially welcomed by Rev. J. H. Ritson (secretary), on his first appearance in the chair, as successor to the late Earl of Harrowby; after which his lordship gave an able review of the methods of the Society's operations, laying special emphasis on the work of the 812 native colporteurs and 616 Bible-women in foreign lands; and expressed an earnest wish that during his presidency the sympathies of the Christian people of England may be more uniformly enlisted on behalf of this effort.

Deep regret was expressed that the Bishop of Calcutta had been prevented from being present through a continuance of the indisposition from which he suffered before leaving India. In taking the place thus left vacant, the Bishop of Ossory quoted from a sermon in which Dr. Welldon had recently spoken of the very existence and position of the Society as an attestation of the unique character and claims of Scripture. Taking a glance backward, he drew attention to the great difference between the opportunities now enjoyed for the propagation of the Gospel and those under which the Society set out; and declared that the doors then closed and locked were so "because the consciences of Christian men and women were closed," whereas the fact had been gradually recognized that the Gentiles must be fellow-heirs with us. The note of the future his lordship found in the words and added an enthusiastic tribute to the harmonious working together of the various foreign missionary agencies, showing that while no man can ever claim to have alone brought a soul to Christ, that assertion can be made on behalf of the Bible.

In touching terms Rev. Dr. W. G. Lawes described the state of degradation in which the greater part of New Guinea lies as compared with smaller islands of the South Pacific, testifying at the same time to the readiness with which the Bible Society had always supported the missionaries in their efforts to give the Word of God to the people. Three times he had come to the Society with such applications—at decennial intervals—and each time had been welcomed. In some of this translation work he had enjoyed the privilege of labouring jointly with his now martyred colleague, James Chalmers.

A vivid picture of the French agency of the Society was given by Pastor Theodore Monod, who gave reasons for believing that the present is a most favourable time for making a forward movement. He admitted that the people of France are at present much incensed against Protestants, which is, however, "not because we are losing influence, but because we are gaining it." The misrepresentation of evangelical pastors, which is being practised by clerics and journalists, was described as very serious, and an interesting account was given of the movement among priests who are leaving the Church of Rome.

On behalf of the Presbyterian Missions of India, Rev. Principal Mackichan (Wilson College, Bombay) declared that in their experience the Society had never hesitated to accept any properly authenticated version. He sketched in graphic words the greatness of the task which the Society had set before it in providing for the peoples of India. He also spoke in the most hopeful terms of the way in which the teaching of the Bible is laying hold of the minds of the educated young people.

The meeting closed with a few hearty words from the Earl of Northbrook.

A National Peril.

FAITHFUL testimony and effective action against the dangers that threaten the day of national rest for labour, have been maintained for forty-four years by the Working-Men's-Lord's-Day Rest Association, which held its social gathering and anniversary meeting in the Crown Room of the Holborn Restaurant on the evening of Wednesday week. Substantial fare was provided, and after the tables were cleared, Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., occupied the chair.

A statement read by the secretary, Mr. Charles Hill, covered many forms of useful activity, and, among other things, recorded the fact that Huddersfield tram employés prefer the day of rest to double pay for Sunday work. The expenditure of the Association in 1900 was £1,354, against an income of £1,149. The new office is at 12, John Street, Bedford Row.

The Chairman remarked that the Fourth Commandment is more necessary than ever amid the strain and stress of modern life; but misuse of the Sabbath for pleasure has enormously increased. We shall never see the Lord's Day restored to its former position among the people until there is a widespread and that can only come through national humiliation and repentance. Working men may be sure that Mammon will use the day to their injury unless they give it to God. Christianity largely depends upon observance of the Day of God, use of the Word of God, and attendance at the House of God; and individual influence should be exercised in abstention from all that tends to weaken regard for these things.

Adoption of the report and of the official appointments was moved by Sir Mark J. Stewart, M.P.

Lieut.-Col. Rotton, Deputy Chairman of the London County Council, referred to the downward tendency of that body in regard to the Sunday question; but he was hopeful that the minority who stand for righteousness will ultimately prevail.

Valuable testimony was borne by Mr. John Cockram, late cab proprietor and driver, as to the material and spiritual prosperity attendant upon his adherence to the principle of six-day labour. He also moved a resolution calling public attention to the illegal action of of the London County Council in sanctioning the opening of theatres and music halls for Sunday amusement; the unnecessary Sunday employment by the Post Office of 41,000 persons (Parliamentary Return, 1894); increase of Sunday trading in many towns; and Government employment of unnecessary Sunday labour at many public museums and galleries.

Mr. James Halford, treasurer of the Association, held that the declining attendance of senior Sunday-School scholars is due, in great measure, to a loosened hold upon Divine obligation regarding the Lord's Day. The protest of this meeting against compulsory Sunday work as a condition of employment in the Post Office, was voiced by Mr. E. Harvey, organizing secretary of the Fawcett Association; and Mr. Cheeseman. Other speakers followed.

The Servants' Mission.—The unpretentious yet valuable work of this Mission is being continued with many tokens of increased sympathy and interest. The efforts which are put forth include the free distribution of Gospel literature, personal conversations with the men while waiting for their employers at public functions; also indoor services and correspondence, &c. During last year the Homes of the Mission received 285 men and women, and 1,086 servants were registered for situations, while 1,140 applications for servants were received. The members of the Christian Servants' Association have borne good testimony for God in the houses where they serve, and have assisted at open-air services in Hyde Park during the summer, and at the mission room throughout the year. Copies of the twenty-fourth annual report may be obtained from Mr. J. Goodchild, 109, Eaton Terrace, London, S.W.

The Gospel Hall, Wells Road, Sydenham.—For thirty-four years past this work has been carried on under the superintendence of Mr. D. Burton. The report for 1900, while recording some financial trials and the urgent need for practical support, tells also of considerable activity in proclaiming to the poor the glad tidings of a Saviour's love, and of spiritual victories won for the Captain of our salvation. Mr. Robert S. Bradbrook will continue his special mission until May 13.

The Scattered People.

YEAR by year the annual meeting of the London Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews attracts a large number of clergymen and others interested in the evangelization of the scattered race of Israel. Friday's gathering was no exception, but was rather an evidence that the ministrations of the Society are being followed with keen and hearty sympathy. An abstract from the annual report, presented by Rev. F. L. Denman, was cordially received. "To the Jew first" was the watchword which to establish the Society in 1809—the first in the field in this department of missionary activity. The work was at first confined to London where the Jews numbered less than a tenth of their present community, now verging upon 120,000. The day of small things, however, was soon to pass away. Doors opened on the Continent, in Africa, and in the East; and the Society entered, and took possession. As year succeeded year, the number of open doors and missionaries increased until at the present time as many as 227 workers are in the field, dispersed throughout fifty stations in Europe, Asia, and Africa. Many items of the report afford great encouragement. The work among Jewesses and children is of great promise. The labours of the thirty-two lady missionaries and teachers have borne much fruit.

Both at home and abroad the Society has made marked progress. The completion of the hospital at Jerusalem by the erection of the "Cadbury" ward, and the building of the out-patients' dispensary at Safed, enable the committee to turn their attention to the hospital at Safed, and the rebuilding of the Girls' Day School at Jerusalem, both of which are greatly needed. Happily has been experienced, the income for the year being the highest ever received.

The Chairman (Sir John Kennaway), in his opening remarks, considered that the increase of the Society's income is not commensurate with the extension which has been made. It is a subject for gratitude to God that, after a year of exceptional calls, almost every society holding its "May" meeting is able to report advance.

The Bishop of Mombasa, in a stimulating address, emphasized the need for taking the Gospel to the Jew, without robbing him of his national heritage. The vast possibilities of the Society's work were dwelt upon by Rev. Prebendary Webb-Peploe in a powerful address. Side by side with the possibilities are its as the oldest Society. The fact that there are twenty or thirty organizations seeking the evangelization of Israel is a hopeful sign, for the speaker believed this would be accomplished by the efforts of small societies rather than by one aggregate movement. Persecution has solidified the Jew into patience, humility, and determination of character, and increased his sense of hostility to his oppressors. The development of ritual in the Church of England has added to his bitterness to the Gospel. The Rationalism of the present day is also a great hindrance to the Jew accepting the Gospel of Christ.

The Archdeacon of Warrington spoke of the efforts which are being made for the direct evangelization of Israelites in Liverpool. In common with other centres, many difficulties and much opposition have to be encountered; but from the number of inquirers and seekers after the truth it is evident that the energies of the workers in this locality have not been misspent.

Some interesting particulars of the Society's operations at Jerusalem were given by Rev. Canon Kelk, who, after twenty-two years' residence, has resigned the superintendence. He spoke in hopeful terms of the future of the mission and its various agencies. The hospital, schools, and house of industry, as well as the home for young men inquirers, continue to be the means, under the Divine blessing, of bringing the ancient people of God under the influence of the Gospel of his Son. While the Jewish population of Jerusalem has reached over 50,000, its poverty has not increased accordingly. The majority of those who take up their residence in the city are able to earn their livelihood, or bring with them money upon which they can live. A great change has taken place; and while formerly the Jew returned to his own country to die, he now returns thither to live.

A few closing words were spoken by Rev. Sydenham L. Dixon.

Christian Literature for China.

ON Thursday afternoon the annual meeting of this Society was held in Exeter Hall Council Chamber, with Colonel Williams, M.P., in the chair. Over twenty years ago missionaries in China, belonging to various Societies, became convinced that the opposition with which they had to contend arose from imperfect knowledge of their work, and the motives that actuated them, on the part of the people. This, they felt, could be overcome by use of the Press, especially in its influence upon the ruling and educated class; for it had been demonstrated that, where the mandarins are friendly to missionaries, the people generally are favourably affected. Thus the Society was established fifteen years ago, with its business centre at Shanghai. Its publications include two magazines, one of them for the non-Christian Chinese, relating to prominent movements throughout the world, the other for the instruction of native Christian teachers of all denominations. Much is done by the Society, in to bring influence to bear upon Chinese students attending triennial examination centres.

All this and more was made plain at the meeting by the London hon. sec. and treasurer, Rev. W. Fisher, whose official address is 146, Queen Victoria Street, E.C. His financial statement disclosed the very small balance of £41 in hand.

The Chairman cherished hope concerning beneficial issues from the present upheaval in China; and, considering the hold which the Society had already obtained upon the goodwill of viceroys and literati, it is desirable to make this work and its needs better known to people in this country. He trusted British Christians would take full advantage of the unique opportunities which lie before them for promoting the spiritual and other interests of China. He announced that a friend present at the meeting had promised a donation of £50 towards the funds of the Society.

A long address, full of encouraging facts from personal observation, was given by Rev. W. Arthur Cornaby, editor of the Chinese Missionary Review, Shanghai. He said that all missionary effort in China must be centred in the revealing of as the one source of supply for China's need. The chief missionary methods employed are preaching, healing, education, and literature; all are mutually helpful and mutually dependent. The output of the Society in 1900 was 13,628,410 pages; and for all that is being done, an income of £3,700 is very meagre. There is need for more suitable premises, printing-press and manager, books for translation, an income of at least £5,000; and lastly, but chiefly, constant prayer. The receptivity of the Chinese, as a whole, increases every year.

Mr. Stanley P. Smith, of the China Inland Mission, said that as in Christ are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge, a full Gospel touches man on all sides; and herein is the key to the supply of China's material, mental, social, and spiritual needs.

Winning the Young.

FROM every point of view the annual meeting of the Sunday School Union on Thursday evening at Exeter Hall must have been regarded as a gratifying success. Representatives of schools in all parts of the kingdom were present, and the gathering afforded lively evidence of the enthusiasm which characterizes the Union in its ever-widening scope and influence.

At the outset the secretary, Rev. Carey Bonner, apologised for the absence of Councillor F. F. Belsey on account of indisposition. Mr. Albert Spicer had also written to explain that the election at Newport (Mon.) rendered it impossible for him to be present.

The Chairman (Mr. George Cadbury), in a thoughtful and suggestive address, said that whatever were the motives with which the children were sent to Sunday-school, it was the teacher's one opportunity for winning them to Christ. A recent census taken at Birmingham showed that out of the population only 99,000 were in attendance at places of worship. Of the 350,000 who absented themselves, 300,000 had passed through Sunday-schools. The question to be faced at gatherings of teachers is, How is this leakage between the school and the church to be avoided? Less time must be spent in passing resolutions which are not worth the paper upon which they are written, and more consideration given to the means of after they have reached the age of sixteen. The teacher must manage his class, and yet not appear to do so. The interest of the elder scholars will be sustained by having some service to perform. Religion will become much more real to them as they have something to do for Christ. The Chairman referred in words of hearty appreciation to the Christian Endeavour Society, as a bridge over the gap which too frequently exists between the school and the church.

One of the most interesting items of the programme followed—the distribution of silver medals granted at the Teachers' College Examinations. A touching scene was witnessed when Miss Marianne Farningham made her way to receive at the hands of Mrs. Cadbury for long service in the Sunday-school, amid the cheers of the audience, which rose to its feet as an expression of esteem for one whose name and pen are honoured in many lands. Other honours were conferred on officers, among the recipients being a husband and wife who for fifty years have toiled side by side in the Sabbath school. Of two boys from Yorkshire, one had made 986 consecutive early attendances, while the other had been present 778 times in the same school. Forty-four junior members of metropolitan branches of the International Bible Reading Association then repeated from memory portions of Scripture, as illustrative of the purpose and aim of the Association.

Mr. Robert Cameron, M.P., who came next, addressed his hearers as fellow-teachers, and in the course of an impressive discourse, urged the necessity for the best talent being employed in the Sunday-school. The teacher who has love, tact, and sympathy will accomplish more than twenty perfunctory and ordinary teachers. Nothing must be allowed to take the place of preparation.

Rev. Dr. Glover, in an inspiring and vigorous address, pleaded for the deeper and more thorough cultivation of the spiritual life of teachers. Men and women are needed who will think, and train their scholars to think also. Our fathers read great books, but the reading of to-day is chiefly divided between the magazine and the newspaper. A saintliness of a higher type is needed. The surest way of getting our scholars to be what they should be, is to be such ourselves. If we allure them to the higher life, they will aspire to it, as heroes have done in days gone by, and the future glory and progress will be such as has had no equal in the past.

In its 103rd Year.

AN enthusiastic audience crowded Exeter Hall on Tuesday morning of last week, in celebration of the 102nd anniversary of the Church Missionary Society. The recent tides and currents of life in the mission field have called forth expressions of sympathy from every denomination, and Churchmen on this occasion indicated that they are fully alive to the duty of contributing, by labour and support, to the stability and development of their missions.

The general review of the year was presented by Rev. H. E. Fox. The retrospect was distinctly encouraging. Happily, the Society was spared the loss of European lives during the period of massacres in China, and in some cases its missionaries were able to remain at their posts throughout the troubles. In spite of hindrances and reverses, at one station alone—that of Fuh-Kien—

627 CONVERTS WERE BAPTISED.

In India, the terrible famine called forth the heroic labours of many of the missionaries, among others the late Charles Stewart Thompson, whose efforts for the relief of his beloved Bheels cost him his life. In Africa, Bishop Tugwell had led a party of missionaries to Hausaland, Northern Nigeria, which found a domicile at Loko on the Binué River. In East Africa, a remarkable outburst of interest in the Gospel has been witnessed in Usagara, Taita, and Taveta, while an extension has been made to Kikuyu on the Uganda Railway. Uganda continues its remarkable progress. No fewer than 3,180 adults were baptized during the year, and the adjacent kingdoms show signs of rivalling Uganda in readiness to accept Christianity. The leading event in North-West Canada was Archdeacon Lofthouse's journey of 5,000 miles to the "Barren Lands" of the Far North, with a view to the evangelization of the Eskimo.

The total number of converts (adult) baptized during the year was about 8,000, besides the baptism of 10,000 children of Christian parents. Seventy-eight new missionaries have been added to the roll, bringing up the total to 1,271. The native clergy number 375, and native lay teachers 7,515; mission schools 2,325, with 104,401 scholars. Turning to the home affairs of the Society, the secretary paid a passing tribute of grateful esteem to several adherents who had been called home. Among others, Bishops Creighton and Ryle were life long and much revered advocates and counsellors, as well as faithful upholders of the spiritual principles which are

THE LIFE OF THE SOCIETY.

Mr. Fox supplemented his statement, that the Society's income of £350,492 has been outstripped by the expenditure, with the announcement that an anonymous donor had that morning contributed £10,000 towards the deficit.

The Chairman, Sir JOHN KENNAWAY, in the course of a timely address, urged the necessity of keeping before the churches at home continually the claims of heathen lands. The neglect of mission work means the decay of spiritual life. He pointed out that during the period in which the Church Missionary Society had trebled its staff the expenditure was not doubled. While praising God that their own agents in China had been preserved, the Society desired to express its deep sympathy with Missions that have been called upon in God's mysterious providence to mourn the loss of so many devoted labourers.

The next speaker was the BISHOP OF RIPON, whose stirring and eloquent address was warmly received. There are many reasons why we should pause and consider the most suitable methods of advance, but as to there can be no doubt at all. A hundred years ago, the missionary problem seemed to be much simpler than it is now seen to be. People then lumped all heathen religions together, and painted them all black, without inquiring whether there were any degrees of blackness. The study of facts has given rise to greater intelligence in missionary work. The Christian world has now realised the enormous difference between, for instance, the belief of a cultured Hindu and the crude fetishism of an African tribe. One of the great ghosts that haunted our grandparents—the idea that there was something discoverable called "natural religion," getting rid of the necessity for "revealed religion"—had been laid low by the same determination to get at facts. Christianity has shown its vitality by surviving in all simplicity and potency, re-appearing age after age as clear as ever, in spite of men's efforts to confine it within Jewish or mediæval robes; drawing nourishment from all quarters, adjusting and adapting itself, but never destroying itself, still remaining the only power for man's

REGENERATION AND REJUVENATION.

Rev. W. HOOPER, D.D., spoke from twenty years' experience as a missionary in India. He had noticed that one minister seldom was the means alone of bringing a man to Christ, and the same fact was true in a wider sense—the evangelization of India will not be the result of the efforts of one agency, but of the multiplicity of societies. It was, however, to the Word of God circulated in India that more conversions were due than to human voices.

Missions in Mohammedan lands were represented by Rev. C. H. STILEMAN, Persia. He spoke with much hopefulness of the development of missionary agencies, not only in Persia, but in all these countries, particularly medical missions and women's work.

Mr. T. E. ALVAREZ (Sierra Leone) sounded a note of praise for the wonderful blessing which has resulted from the efforts which are being made in Uganda and Hausaland.

A few words were spoken by the BISHOP OF NORTH CHINA, who lamented that of four hundred millions of China's inhabitants only one million are Christians. God's hand is over all, and guiding all things. The falling of martyrs indicates that truth is spreading. The forces of evil are active, not because of failure, but success. Mr. CLEMENT F. R. ALLEN, formerly British Consul at Fuh-Chow, deprecated pessimistic arguments relating to the future of China. It was very doubtful whether the prophesied uprising fifty years hence of 20,000,000 armed Boxers would be possible; and if it did become possible, they would not want to rise, owing to the increase of Christian influence that may be expected. The moral and material regeneration of China has been committed to the Church of Christ.

The Church and the People.

THE anniversary gatherings of the Church Army included, as usual, numerous conferences and meetings at the headquarters in the Edgware Road.

On Wednesday, May 1, the annual sermon was preached at St. James' Church, Piccadilly, by Rev. MARCUS RAINSFORD, 500 officers marching to the church in procession from headquarters. In the afternoon the annual meeting was held in St. James' Hall, the Bishop of Kensington presiding.

Mr. E. CLIFFORD and Mr. COLIN CAMPBELL reported on the evangelistic and social work respectively, and Rev. W. CARLILE gave a general account of the year's operations.

More than 1,400 church workers have now been trained by the Society. Missions have been conducted during the year in most of the prisons of England and Wales, and in over 100 workhouses; while sixty-seven missions and colportage vans have been at work in a multitude of parishes. In the social department 26,000 cases were dealt with, and forty-six per cent. of the men, women, and boys received into the homes have obtained a fresh start in life. The work among discharged prisoners had been specially encouraging. A number of the evangelists were still helping the military chaplains in South Africa at the Society's expense. Mr. Carlile concluded with an appeal for public sympathy, especially in connection with extensions of the labour homes and midnight rescue work.

Among the Submerged.

A LARGE and influential company, including sheriffs, aldermen, and members of Parliament, assembled in the Mansion House on Tuesday afternoon of last week to hear from General Booth some account of the progress and claims of Christian work in Darkest England. Commissioner HOWARD prayed that gratitude for God's blessings in providence may move to active sympathy with efforts to raise the fallen and restore the wanderer.

Words of sincere and hearty welcome were spoken by the LORD MAYOR, who presided. It behoved all good men, he said, to assist a body which has long been doing a good and useful work for God and man at home and abroad. Much interest centres in some of the figures concerning this department of the Army's activities, with its 609 social institutions and 2,294 officers and workers connected therewith. Other "great figures" cover cheap meals for the hungry, cheap lodging for the homeless, employment found for numerous unfortunate but willing workers, ex-criminals brought under reforming influences, women and girls rescued from a life of shame, and helpful sympathetic visits to 59,718 families living in the slums. In the words of the late Earl Cairns, let all who think the Army is doing God's work, honestly and consistently give it all the assistance that lies in their power.

In the course of a long address to intensely interested hearers, traced the origin of the Army in his desire, years ago, to mitigate the misery, wretchedness, and crime seen while moving among the poor of London. He had no preconceived plan backed by large organization and means, but he felt that God was behind him, and he knew something of human nature. The Army had been largely made upon the battlefield, and was fashioned upon utilitarian principles. After giving some encouraging statistics as to the extent and results of the whole work to-day, he dealt more particularly with the Social Wing, as commonly distinguished from the spiritual aims.

The miseries of a large section of the community, including the starving and homeless, the vicious and the criminal, have a claim to the earnest attention of those who are better circumstanced and conditioned. In

THIS LAND OF CHURCHES,

Bibles, and philanthropic agencies, 2,000,000 men and women were last year incarcerated in prisons. Besides "respectable" rogues and vagabonds who manage to escape the clutches of the law, 90,000 criminals are known to the police; and unless something be done, their children will, in ordinary course, fill the places of the parents. It is not for those who, from childhood, have been hedged in from temptation, to contemn and neglect the human wreckage flowing around the wealth and luxury of this great city. If the ten millions that are spent every year upon of this country were expended after the effective, regenerative, and reclamatory fashion of the social operations of the Army, in twenty years the pauper class would have ceased out of the land. In like manner, the Army practically recognises the need for something beyond punishment in dealing with the criminal class.

After relating a striking instance of reformatory influence upon a man and his wife who had spent years in prison, the General proceeded to claim increased practical sympathy for the social work on the ground of its rational and practical methods; mentioning that it receives subsidies from twenty-three governments and municipal authorities. The workers labour to inspire hope, and to change evil habits; and their sheer love and devotion issues in a large measure of success. He felt sure that with larger means to overtake its opportunities, this scheme would be increasingly blessed of God. The meeting closed with thanks to the Lord Mayor for his invitation and presence.

Presbyterians in Force.

THE Synod of the English Presbyterian Church has this year been brought into touch with the "May Meetings" through the sessions being held at Regent Square Church, London; and it is noteworthy that both retiring and newly-elected Moderators hail from the North of England. When the announcement was made last November that Rev. James Christie, B.A., of Carlisle, had been nominated as Moderator for 1901, it was received with satisfaction throughout the Church. It was generally recognized that the election was a suitable public recognition of loyal and laborious service during a long period of years.

Born at Otterburn, Northumberland, where his father was first minister of the United Presbyterian Church, Mr. Christie studied at New College, St. John's Wood, and took his degree at the University of London. Thereafter he entered the Divinity Hall of the United Presbyterian Church, Edinburgh, for the theological course. In 1862 he was ordained as successor to his father at Otterburn, and entered on his ministry with much ardour. The opportunity then afforded for wide and varied reading was fully taken advantage of, though he was at the same time unceasing in his labours among the rural population; and the memory of that ministry is still fragrant in the district.

Accepting a call from Carlisle in 1870, Mr. Christie brought to his new charge a valuable combination of youthful vigour and comparatively ripe experience. He has ever been among the earnest evangelicals, and the fruitfulness of his ministry may be gauged from the fact that, despite the ebb and flow of population, the membership of the congregation has risen from 168 to over 500. His people have been well trained in the grace of liberality, and, like their pastor, are NOTED FOR CATHOLIC SYMPATHIES.

Mr. Christie has gained for himself a reputation for his efforts in the cause of education, and among the soldiers of Carlisle garrison, while the fruits of his pen have made his name known in a wider field. In 1899 he was elected an associate of the Institute of Journalists.

When the Synod met, Rev. Dr. John Watson (Liverpool) preached a valedictory sermon on "The Criticism of Respectability" (Luke vii. 40), in the course of which he pointed out the lessons of the Lord's ground of complaint against Simon the Pharisee. After asking the question, "Does it not occur to us sometimes that our respectability has isolated the church from the people?" he went on to show that the fault which most deeply wounds the heart of our Lord, and most distinctly separates us from our brethren, is coldness of heart. "Many things the Church possesses—silver and gold, learning and virtue—but one thing she needs above all, and only when she receives it from her Lord's hands and from her Lord's heart will she have access to the common people; and that is the uncalculating and self-forgetful compassion which moved God to give his beloved Son, and Jesus to give Himself, unto the bitter death of the cross for our salvation."

The address with which Mr. Christie followed, on contained solemn references to the death roll of the year. After a list of seven ministers, beginning with Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor and closing with Rev. W. A. Macallan, attention was called to the exceptional number of gaps left in the ranks of prominent elders. Dealing with the subject of Church Union, the conviction was expressed that even under present conditions such changes might be brought about in this respect as would in their outcome "turn society upside down."

After reviewing the present position of foreign mission work in China, the prospect was pointed out that political entanglement will be cleared away before long. "Then it will be for the home churches to send out their best men, and use their most consecrated efforts to bring the land of Sinim to the feet of Jesus. That this Church shall fail in doing her duty is not to be thought of. The past has proved that, according to her ability, and indeed beyond it, she has obeyed her marching orders, and as God in his providence summons her to greater endeavour, the faith that is gifted to her realizes that as her day is so shall her strength be. It is indeed time we were up and doing. Nineteen centuries have come and gone since Jesus said: 'And I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto Me,' and still the bulk of the human family is victimised by heathenism, cruel and debasing, or by gross and soul-destroying error. Generous and consecrated souls have framed the password—'The world for Christ in this century,' and if we only bend our wills to it, we see no reason why the end sought should not be attained. It is one of the laws of accumulated force that its

EFFECTS ARE SUDDEN AND OVERPOWERING.

Are we not to expect the same thing in the line of missionary effort? The morning yet shall break which shall see no decline from high noon. God will fulfil Himself in causing nations to be born in a day, and the light of the moon shall be as the light of the sun, and the light of the sun shall be as the light of seven days."

REV. J. CHRISTIE.

From a Photograph by Messrs. Elliott & Fry, 55, Baker Street, London, W.

On the subject of Sacerdotalism, the religious tendencies of the present day were spoken of as "sadly opposed to that virile Protestantism which has contributed so largely to our national pre-eminence, and in the succession of which it is our pride and determination to stand. The Sacramentarian spirit is permeating English society with its Romanising perversions of the simplicity of the faith and worship of God. The people of England are being distracted with an ever-growing distraction by the discussion of the details of ritual, by the minutiæ and significance of ceremonial, by the fashion and purport of ecclesiastical attire, by Jesuitical casuistry, by the mysteries of the confessional, so repugnant to the Anglo-Saxon race, by the rite of Communion observed without the presence of the people, by the occult doctrine of the Reservation of the Sacrament. What are we to say about these things, but that they subordinate the spiritual and eternal substance of grace and truth to the accidents of form, and the esoteric theories which have been conjured up by the mystified brains of priests? But come whence they may, and signify what they please, of this we are assured, that they imperil the Reformation which, well-nigh 400 years ago, rid our land of foreign superstitions, and cleansed and opened up again the channels along which Divine and saving grace flows to mankind sinners, through the High Priest of our profession, the one Mediator between God and man."

From the report of the Committee on the Instruction of Youth, it appeared that there was a diminution in the attendance at Sunday-schools of 1,400 in 1900 as compared with 1899, and in teachers of fifty-five.

After the presentation of the Home Mission report by Sir George Bruce—showing 331 congregations, with 76,101 members—a resolution was passed expressive of thankfulness at the accomplishment of the aim of raising the fund of £50,000 opened in 1895 for church extension and debt extinction; and a second, establishing a permanent fund with these objects in view. An overture had come up from Birmingham, urging "the need to call for a larger and more liberal effort to fulfil our part in furthering the Gospel throughout England;" and it was agreed that, "as it is evident that our ordinary methods of Church work are not fully suited to reach the poorer classes of the people," a special committee should give special consideration to the question whether there should not be provision made "for the undertaking of work on lines which have been found successful by other churches."

A stirring speech was delivered at the Total Abstinence Meeting by Mr. T. W. Russell, M.P., in the course of which he said the only way of carrying the Children's Bill this Session was to make, after Whitsuntide, the concession of private members' time conditional upon the Government affording facilities for the passing of this measure.

"Sisters of the Poor."

THE Christian Instruction Society, whose annual meeting was held a few days ago, aims at the extension of the Kingdom of Christ amongst the poor and neglected, more especially through the agency of devoted Christian women of education, tact, and sympathy, who are assigned to evangelical churches of various denominations. The deaconesses visit systematically, from house to house and from room to room in their appointed districts, seeking those who from various causes never attend a religious meeting, and speaking to them personally of their eternal welfare. They minister to the sick, watch by the dying, clothe the naked, and give food to the starving. Established some seventy-five years ago, the Society has worked quietly and faithfully through many vicissitudes. The staff at present numbers thirty-one sisters, working in connection with as many churches, while the demand from many quarters for the Society's deaconesses has convinced the committee that, as the work becomes more widely known, so will the scope and opportunity for such workers extend, until all over the country will spread a network of this invaluable agency.

The annual meeting, which was of a most hearty character, was presided over by Lord Radstock, whose words of Christian cheer and encouragement touched all hearts. Extracts from the annual report, read by the hon. sec. Mr. F. H. Searle, showed that nine new centres had been opened during the year, and seven deaconesses added to the staff. Mr. Thomas Dence, the treasurer, followed with a financial statement, reporting that £1,380 had been received during the year. Enjoyable addresses followed from Rev. J. G. Binney, of Camden Town; and Rev. W. Pierce, of West Hampstead.

Seed by the Way.

IN pursuance of its object—"To proclaim the Gospel of the grace of God by means of the press, at home and abroad"—the Religious Tract Society had once more striking figures of work accomplished to present to the annual meeting, held at Exeter Hall last Friday evening. The report presented at the opening by Rev. RICHARD LOVETT (secretary), showed that 682 new publications had been issued, of which 268 were tracts. The number of separate books, &c., sent out was 51,646,560—20,000,000 being in foreign countries—which brought the figures since the formation of the Society up to 3,438,565,420. Never has the pressure on the missionary funds been heavier, nor has the committee been more reluctantly compelled to decline to enter new doors of usefulness, and an urgent request was made for an addition of £10,000 to the annual income in order to meet the more pressing claims. The available income had fallen below that of the previous year by £1,849, and the work had only been maintained at its former level by a heavy draft on the reserve.

With a warm word of personal acknowledgment, the Chairman (Rev. F. B. MEYER) recalled his indebtedness in childhood to the publications of the Society. As President of the London Free Church Council, he also returned thanks for the grants of tracts, which added much to the usefulness of the recent Simultaneous Mission.

Speaking as one who "owes the greatest possession of his life

TO THE GIVING OF A TRACT,"

Rev. E. J. KENNEDY (Boscombe) suggested that there is still room for a series such as "we can place without hesitancy in the hands of the thoroughgoing man of the world;" and assured any person or body who will supply that lack of the gratitude of many. Referring to the preventive side of the work, he gave the advice, "See well to it what the children in your own houses are reading."

Certain misunderstandings regarding the province of the Society were explained by Rev. J. D. JONES (Bournemouth) as arising from (1) a limited conception of what a tract is, and (2) a too narrow limitation of the term "religious;" and he hailed with gratitude what had been done in providing literature that is good without being "goody goody," and full of the zest of life, yet clean, wholesome, and healthy. He spoke in burning words of the stream of unclean literature like an open sewer, affecting with its poison tens of thousands of our youth. The literature to be seen in the windows of newsagents, and exposed at railway bookstalls, he described as enough to make

THE HEART OF A SERIOUS MAN SICK.

This is an evil which the pulpit cannot put right; the impure Press must be counteracted by a pure one.

"It appears to me," said Mr. FRANK T. BULLEN, "that there is abroad in the country a widespread tendency towards pessimism;" and he called earnestly on Christian people to thank God and take courage. He would have all to remember that God has much yet for his people to do in carrying the Gospel through the world. His heart went out specially to the Society as one of the unifying forces among the Churches. "We have been wasting on friction that which we might have used in power." As to criticism of the Press, he said we must be careful to make clear what portion of the Press we mean; for the great daily Press of England he believed to be different from what it was in the way of incitements to gambling, and to be now truer at heart.

The foreign mission field was represented by Mr. STANLEY P. SMITH (China Inland Mission), who traced the secret of the rich blessing resting on the Society to—(1) the fact that by its principles it makes for unity; (2) the fact that it emphasises essentials. He had noticed that the Society, when dealing with the sacraments, drew a close distinction between the outward sign and the things signified; and he believed that among Christians there is practical unanimity as to the meaning of baptism and the Lord's Supper. Then he named the facts (3) that it supremely honours the Scriptures, putting them in the right place; (4) that there is a religious or spiritual basis for all the publications; (5) of its simplicity of aim; (6) of its greatness as a missionary agency.

Rome and the Protestants.

AT a time when the anti-clerical movement in Spain and Portugal is greatly developing, special interest attaches to the efforts of the Spanish and Portuguese Church Aid Society in the interests of the Reformed Churches.

At the annual meeting of the organization, held on Thursday last in Exeter Hall, Bishop INGHAM presided over a numerous audience. The past year has been one of steady work. In Spain, thirteen congregations, with ten schools, and in Portugal, eight congregations, with six schools, are being helped. Twelve mission stations, too, are aided by the churches. Over the schools, which are greatly appreciated, even by Romanists. The Spanish Church has now one bishop, ten ordained and three lay ministers, and thirteen school teachers, while good work is also done by a colporteur. Rev. Dr. NOYES was able to speak of a satisfactory financial condition; expenses have been met, and the debt on the previous year's work partially removed. Turning to review the operations of the Society, the speaker chronicled excellent progress made in spite of intense opposition, and referred in hearty terms to the sympathy with religious liberty evinced by King Carlos, of Portugal.

After congratulating the Society on securing Bishop Ingham as its president, Prebendary WEBB-PEPLOE described the attitude of Continental countries as one of negation. They are "anti" almost everything. They are fully justified in rebelling against the Jesuits (so well described by the late Mr. W. E. Gladstone as "the deadliest foes that mental and moral liberty have ever known"). There is, however, the obvious danger that, while overthrowing superstition, they may be left without the light of the Gospel in its place. In this matter a heavy responsibility rests upon England, rich as she is, and possessing the power to send forth the truth.

Bishop CABRERA, who has the oversight of the Spanish work, lamented the widespread darkness and ignorance that unhappily prevail in his country, with Romanism on the one hand and secularism on the other. Spain has suffered greatly as a result of the Cuban war, and the Bishop told how at the departure of the troops from Spain promised them victory. When, however, the armies returned defeated, not even a friar was to be seen at the ports to welcome them—a fact which has been duly noted by the Spanish people. The Papists are making strenuous efforts to maintain their grip of the nation, but there is widespread revolt against the Orders. The Bishop looked hopefully forward to the complete downfall of Papal power, and concluded with some particulars which brought out the sound character of the pastors' work, and the acceptance they are gaining among the people.

Other speakers were Revs. ALAN H. WATTS and T. J. PULVERTAFT, both of whom brought cheering views of crowded churches and schools in Lisbon and Oporto, of accessions to the ranks of adherents, and a friendly attitude on the part of the newspaper Press. Some vigorous words from the CHAIRMAN, descriptive of Roman degradation, and declaring that the future of the world lies with the Protestant peoples, closed a hopeful and profitable meeting.

Saving the Outcast.

THE annual demonstration in connection with the Reformatory and Refuge Union was held at St. James' Hall, a few days ago, under the presidency of Sir JOHN E. DORINGTON, M.P.

The annual report stated that the Union's agents had during the past year placed 401 children in homes and schools, while 1,429 women have been helped, and in most cases sheltered; 25 homes, containing 1,044 children have been examined by the educational inspector; 15 institutions and 759 children have been simultaneously examined in Holy Scripture; while £1,084 has been paid to institutions for children placed there by the Union's agents. The affiliated institutions now number over 1,000. There has seldom been a year since the Union was established in which the Council has not had to take some steps in promoting new legislation, or in urging the enforcement of laws for the benefit of poor and neglected women and children.

The Council is now seeking to obtain, among other things, an extension of the age of admission of young persons to reformatories, from sixteen to eighteen; power to send Protestant girls in Ireland to reformatories in England and Scotland; the extension of the Inebriates Act of 1898 to the Channel Islands; a scheme of old age pensions for the officers of certified reformatory and industrial schools; and provisions for the proper training of the children of tramps and vagrants, and other wandering children.

Addresses in support of the work were given by Sir T. FOWELL BUXTON and other friends.

The National Refuges.

EXETER HALL was densely crowded on the occasion of the annual meeting of the National Refuges for Homeless and Destitute Children.

The annual report told of a year attended with much blessing, and expressed thankfulness that no destitute child, coming within the rules, had been denied admission, either for want of room or funds. It emphasized the fact that no votes are needed to obtain the admission of children; therefore no time is lost in dealing with necessitous cases. When they are very urgent, admission is granted on the day of application. The work of the Refuges has been, from the commencement, a and it has been the aim only to appoint those officers and teachers who desire to influence the children under their care for time and for eternity. The children are carefully and systematically taught in the Holy Scriptures.

DEFINITELY RELIGIOUS ONE;

The institutions comprise a boys' refuge and technical home, and a home for working boys in Shaftesbury Avenue; Fortescue House, Twickenham, for 120 boys; the Shaftesbury School and a farm school at Bisley, each for 150 boys; schools at Wembley and Ealing, each for 106 girls; and the training ship Arethusa, for 200 boys, off Greenhithe, with the sailing ship Chichester. The boys in the homes on shore are trained in tailoring, carpentering, gardening, shoe-making, and other trades, and each home has its instrumental band.

Lord JERSEY, who presided, said, in the course of a brief speech, that the Duchess of Cornwall and York has promised a prize to the boy or girl in each home who best carries out the motto of Her Royal Highness' Mayflower Guild—"Be good and do good."

The BISHOP of LONDON said that no work is so hopeful as that carried on by such societies among the children. The work is based on religion, without which no permanent moral work can be done.

Rev. J. G. TRAIN, of Upper Norward, also addressed the meeting. During the afternoon a programme of action songs was performed by a large choir of children from the various Homes, accompanied by the band of the Shaftesbury School, Bisley. The boys also gave a display of musical and physical exercises.

"What Can we do?"

AMID a cosmopolitan population, in which representatives of many Continental nations, as well as vast numbers of our English poor are found, and in a district to whose palatial business establishments thousands of shop assistants flock by day, and whose splendid thoroughfares are made the hideous headquarters of vice by night, the West London Mission labours with manifest blessing to many classes of society.

The accounts of the year's work, which were presented at the annual gatherings held on Friday last at St. James' Hall, were full of encouragement. In the morning Rev. F. B. Meyer preached. The afternoon, as usual, was devoted to reports of the work of the band of sisters who labour among

THE SINFUL AND SUFFERING.

The chair was taken by the Countess of Aberdeen, who said that she came as the representative of a class who look upon the West-end of the metropolis as the centre of all that is bright and prosperous, oblivious of the fact that at their very doors are crowds who require uplifting as much as those in the more recognized abodes of misery in the East and South. Between these two classes, the leisured and comfortable and the poor, there is a great gulf fixed. The former class sometimes ask concerning the latter, "What can we do for them?" Well, the West London Mission tells them what to do and how to do it—how they may, in faith and by consecrated effort, satisfy the heart-hunger of the miserable and the spiritually destitute. Lady Aberdeen outlined in sympathetic terms the varied departments of work undertaken by this comprehensive Mission, with special reference to the agencies under the superintendence of the Sisters.

Mrs. Hugh Price Hughes followed with further interesting particulars. For the children of the district, whose only playground is the street, guilds have been established in order to win them from evil surroundings and habits, while for the young people clubs have been organized. As to the nurses visiting among they take with them not only the advantages of their medical training, but words of Christian consolation and instruction. Mrs. Hughes also described, with touches of pathos, the progress of the Guild of Brave Poor Things, while another important branch is that of relieving deserving cases of distress, in which three Sisters are continually engaged. They find situations, and start lads and young girls in life with a place and an outfit, while poor, hard-working people in failing health are sent for much-needed country holidays. All, however, that is done for the social benefit of the masses is with spiritual aims and purposes.

The next speaker was Sister Lily, who illustrated, by a series of sad stories of wrecked lives and unhappy homes, the need for personal missionary effort among both rich and poor.

With characteristic vigour, Rev. Hugh Price Hughes pleaded the cause of the "184,000 people than human beings in one-roomed tenements." Among other evils of the district, the speaker specified the presence of "the idle rich, dangerous to themselves and to everybody else," and drunkenness, convictions for which are more frequent here than in any other part of the metropolis. Mr. Hughes appealed for sympathy and support in the great task of the social and spiritual amelioration of the masses. The meeting closed with some hearty words from Rev. Mark Guy Pearse.

In the evening, a crowded and enthusiastic meeting, presided over by Mr. James E. Vanner, listened with keen interest to addresses in support of the work from the Bishop of Hereford and Mr. R. W. Perks, M.P. A comprehensive statement of the objects and position of the Mission was made by Mr. Price Hughes.

A Century of Missions.

IN 1801, when the present great missionary societies were in their infancy, the Moravians (dated from 1732) were at work in the West Indies, Greenland, North America, South Africa, South America, and Labrador, and could tell of twenty-nine stations, 161 missionaries, and some 32,000 baptized members and candidates. But to-day—in 1901—judging by the latest though not very recent statistics, there are in round figures some 190 stations in all, served by about 450 missionaries, and nearly 2,000 native helpers; while, including members and inquirers, those gathered out of heathenism in the various fields approach very nearly to 100,000 souls.

A spirit of grateful praise for God's abundant blessing upon the work prevailed throughout the annual meeting held in Exeter Hall last Friday evening. Rev. W. Wetton Cox, secretary, described the present position and of the work. Largely-increased regular help must be given if existing missions are to be maintained and deficiency averted. The Medical Missionary (Endowment) Fund is still £10,000 short of the needed sum. For the Leper Home at Jerusalem, £500 is needed at once to provide a new and larger water reservoir, which has become indispensable; and the patients have doubled in number. Labrador, hitherto self-supporting, but suddenly crippled in its resources, is in urgent need of £2,000 annually for a few years, until the Mission can be re-established; and for this an additional fund is being raised. Prayer will assuredly bring the needed supplies.

Lord Strathcona, who presided, spoke of his visit to the Labrador Mission some forty years ago. The devoted missionaries endure many hardships, including intense cold and poor fare. It is certainly a remarkable fact that their wives are not personally chosen, but are sent out by committee!

Interesting details of a visit to Genadendal, the principal Moravian Mission in South Africa, were given by Mr. R. C. Morgan. The name of the place means and it is delightful to see the people living in harmony, peace, and true brotherly union. They afford a striking object-lesson as to the power of the Gospel and the blessedness which it brings. Rev. J. A. Faithfull (Whitechapel) said that, morally and spiritually, the Moravian Church is the greatest missionary society in the world; and the three elements of that greatness are the visible results of its missionary operations, the wonderful self-surrender of its members unto God, and their apostolic simplicity in all things.

Another testimony from personal experience was that of Rev. Dr. C. H. H. Wright, who met with Moravians in Germany, Bohemia, and Saxony; men who boldly stood for the truth of God, amid persecution and tremendous difficulties. Mr. Willway, assistant superintendent of the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen, had seen much of Moravian work in Labrador; and he strongly commended it to the interest, prayer, and help of God's people in our own country.

The Training of Destitute Boys.—Among the numerous institutions which have for their object the reception, education, and training of destitute boys, the Essex Industrial School and Home has a record of twenty-nine years' useful and far-reaching service. The institution is for boys above six years of age, not incapacitated by mental or physical infirmity from being benefited by the ordinary routine of the School. The lads are educated and trained to industrial work. During 1900 thirty-two boys left the School, and the same number were admitted. Of those who left twenty-three were placed in situations, others returned to friends, and two sailed for Canada. Gratifying reports are being constantly received concerning "old boys." The hon. treasurer is Mr. W. M. Tufnell, J.P., Hatfield Peverel, Essex, and 30, Eaton Square, London, S.W.

Army Scripture Readers.

EACH year of effort by the Army Scripture Readers' Society bears the impress of some distinctive feature; and operations during the past twelve months have been largely concerned with the campaign in South Africa. Gen. R. Biddulph presided at the annual meeting in Exeter Hall last Friday afternoon.

From the statement made by the secretary, Colonel Philips, it appeared that at one time twelve Readers were at work in South Africa; but, owing to sickness, there are at present only five in that field. In other foreign stations, five Readers are employed, while England claims thirty-nine of these workers, and Ireland has nine. The General Fund shows a balance at the end of the year of £662. Another balance is that of the South African Fund, namely, £1,039; but charges due to the War Office, for field pay, messing, &c., amount to a large sum. In the Reserve Fund a balance of £101 remains, and pensions have been provided for five Readers. A scheme has been inaugurated for raising to form a Victoria Memorial Readers' Fund of £125,000, the interest accruing from which would provide the annual salary and expenses for at least thirty-five Readers, so to speak, in perpetuity. These men will be stationed at the largest military centres.

Commending the good and useful work revealed by the Report, the Chairman pointed out that such work has special value. Great religious activity is not always accompanied by increased use and knowledge of the Bible. The Readers are not only helpful in the matter of discipline, but they afford counsel and advice to the young soldiers whose confidence they gain. It would be well if every regiment had its Reader; but, money apart, it is difficult to find qualified men who will put their hearts into the work.

Rev. W. R. Mowll said that, in view of the astonishing discovery that our peace army of 150,000 men has only from eighty to ninety Chaplains, the funds of this organization should be doubled. Readers get into closer touch with the men than Chaplains do; their work honours the Word of God; and their influence supports the cause of temperance. As an instance of the need for more Readers, Colonel Yates mentioned his anxious experiences at Woolwich during a recent inrush of new hands, mostly mere boys.

Reader Wood, returned from South Africa, told of meetings held on a transport, personal dealing with souls, great gatherings of listeners to the Gospel in camp, a conversion on the battlefield, gambling companies broken up, and the restraining power of the Reader's presence. He would have, not only a Scripture Reader to every regiment, but a converted colonel at the head of it.

Bethnal Green Free Library.

IT may be taken as a noteworthy fact that the one institution of the East-end of London which has beaten the record in regard to its collection of books, as well as in attendances at lectures, &c., is founded on a Christian basis. A quarter of a century ago a company of philanthropists, several of whom have since entered into rest, subscribed the cost of the building.

The annual meeting at the Mansion House on April 24, at which the Lord Mayor presided, took the form of a "Silver Wedding" celebration. During the past year free lectures and evening classes have made a good record. "Every street, road, court, and alley in the borough" is said to send borrowers; and their occupations represent a large number of arts and crafts. Lady Pender has also given lectures on behalf of "Our Dumb Friends' League." The Chairman and Alderman Sir J. Whittaker Ellis strongly advocated the work, and addresses were also given by Sir M. M. Bhownaggree, M.P., the Archdeacon of London, Dr. J. H. Gladstone, and others.

In Alley and Slum.

IN view of the continued and prodigious growth of London, the necessity for extended evangelistic work among the careless and the ungodly is as great as ever, if not greater; and the largely attended annual meeting of the London City Mission, held in Exeter Hall last Thursday morning, is a healthful sign of abiding Christian interest in a work whose very development is, in itself, eloquent evidence of deep-seated need among the masses of a great city.

To the inspiring strains of "All hail the power of Jesu's name," succeeded reading of Scripture and a fervent prayer by Rev. Robert Dawson, secretary, for the penetration by Divine light of the darkest recesses of sin and sorrow. In his reading of passages from the report, Rev. T. S. Hutchinson, another secretary, touched upon much that calls for profound thankfulness to God; while, on the other hand, the condition of the Metropolis, as a whole, and especially of certain districts, leaves much to be desired.

THE MISSIONARY STAFF

now numbers 460, a slight advance on the previous year; and the receipts on behalf of the General Fund from all sources, during the past year, were £65,823. This seems to indicate an alarming falling off as compared with the previous year; but in the latter case a large legacy just met the deficiencies arising from excess of expenditure over income during the preceding ten years.

Speaking from the chair, Mr. F. A. Bevan gratefully reviewed the past century from the Mission point of view, and made a courageous outlook upon the future. He claimed that the hard-working, soul-saving missionaries go to those who would not otherwise come under religious influence, and that these devoted men make an appreciable impression upon the evils of drink, gambling, immorality, and indifference. Specialization is a marked feature of this Mission.

An inspiring address was delivered by Rev. Thos. Nicholson, of Bromley, Kent, who has had reason to value co-operation by the missionaries in his own work. He had much to say concerning the value of what he called the personal equation and in service for God among the masses. That Gospel will stand as the power of God unto salvation, when the Higher Criticism itself is criticised.

Mr. H. Crawford Smith, M.P., followed, declaring himself a representative of a work in Newcastle-on-Tyne, started through the influence of the London City Mission. It was good, he said, for M.P.'s occasionally to show that they are upon God's side, by visiting mission stations, speaking kindly words to the missionary and his people, and then inviting the missionary to the home.

Further commendation and counsel was given by Rev. F. S. Webster. The report, he said, was more interesting than most novels; and among the great variety of the work done, room-to-room visitation has been found a necessity. Speaking of the need for patience on the part of the missionaries, he said that this is distinct from the thing that is rooted in self-complacency, and it is quite compatible with

A DIVINE DISCONTENT.

Impatient desire for short cuts to our object will lead us off God's line; and the man who worships success must ultimately be disloyal to truth. Nothing short of the Gospel will regenerate London. Do not leave heaven out of your message, but teach men to bear suffering in hope; for nothing can be put quite right until Christ Himself comes. There will be ample compensation for all sorrow, but there is none for sin.

A missionary from Homerton, Mr. J. Newcombe Goad, told, in a lively way, how perseverance against abounding opposition often issues in good results. He had found the gentle picklock of human sympathy act like magic in opening the doors and the hearts of the people. God's Gospel is a glorious panacea for the thousand ills that men are heirs to. Closing words were spoken by Sir Chas. Gage Brown and Dr. Small.

Christian Commercial Travellers.

BUSINESS men, representing many branches of commercial enterprise, assembled at Exeter Hall on Saturday. week. The occasion was the annual meetings of the Commercial Travellers' Christian Association, a society which has rendered signal service in fostering the spiritual life of members of that community often defined as "knights of the road" throughout the country.

The delegates were heartily welcomed by Mr. H. J. Gibbs on behalf of the parent society. In doing so, he pointed out that the life, conversation, and general bearing of the individual members going from town to town must have the inevitable result of building up or deterring the progress of the Association.

The secretary's report was followed with keen interest. It indicated that during the year 330 new members have been enrolled. Libraries of useful books and copies of the Scriptures have been supplied to hotels. Through the Beneficent Fund £260 has been distributed. The popularity of the Society's periodical, Good Lines, has widely increased, and a profit of £100 from its sale was handed over to the funds.

As an experienced traveller, the Chairman (Mr. G. W. Dodds) gave some timely counsel to his younger brethren, in view of the increasing temptations to be encountered, consequent upon keener competition in all phases of commercial life. The scope for the Christian traveller is far wider than forty years ago, and, happily, many firms encourage their representatives to deal honourably at all costs.

Mr. D. L. Fullerton reported that at Bristol progress has been made in the work of the Association. The membership has increased 10 per cent., and the

have been sustained. Mr. Fullerton urged the necessity of members realizing the solemn fact of their stewardship—the possession and use of that which is not their own. To this must be added the privilege of fellowship. It is often a joy to meet with kindred spirits to talk over the disappointments and successes of the day, but this falls to insignificance compared with the privilege of having fellowship with Christ. Let no one shrink from any Christian duty because of any sacrifice which it may involve; the fact that a task costs so much, should be one of the chief reasons for its performance.

The Portsmouth and Southsea branch was represented by Mr. H. R. Hansell, whose helpful words on the necessity of reflecting Christ in the every life and conduct were particularly impressive.

Mr. W. C. Holland spoke of the branch at Leicester, which gives promise of becoming a strong and useful centre. Concerning the work of the Association at Birmingham, Mr. J. A. Gandon announced that the membership has reached 105; and Mr. R. Lumley reported encouraging progress which is being made at Manchester.

In the evening another meeting was held with Mr. Arnold Pye Smith as president. A review of the year's efforts of the Association was given by Mr. Leonard Courtney, and addresses followed by Revs. E. A. Stuart and W. Cuff.

Secretaries' Prayer Union.—It may not be generally known by the paid secretaries of the Metropolis that there is a Prayer Union, for which all of them are eligible, after nomination by a member. The meetings are held monthly at Exeter Hall from 5 to 6.15 p.m. Mr. Bristow Wallen, secretary of the National Refuges for Homeless and Destitute Children, is the president for the current year. Any secretary who would like to join, on payment of a nominal subscription of half-a-crown per annum, may communicate by letter to the secretary of the Union: Mr. Wilson M'Cree, at the Office of the Midnight Meeting Movement, 8a, Red Lion Square, W.C.

"Jack," Ashore and Afloat.

A GLOWING story of continued progress, told with characteristic spirit and warm-heartedness, was given by Miss Weston at the annual meeting in support of her many-sided work for British sailors, which was held on April 25 in the Lower Exeter Hall.

The audience was a crowded and enthusiastic one, and the proceedings gained in interest by the presence of a contingent of bluejackets, who sang and recited with delightful fervour.

Miss Weston's account of her year's stewardship was full of encouragement. She reminded her hearers that it is now twenty-five years since the commencement of the work, so that the gathering was in the nature of a "silver wedding" celebration. At the outset, Miss Weston made reference to the work of obtaining and despatching comforts to the "handy men" during the earlier days of the war. Friends sent such quantities of useful articles that the Devonport Rest was "like a great export office." Among the consignments sent out were large numbers of Bibles, Testaments, and prayer cards. During the year more than a million and a quarter copies of magazines and "monthly letters" have been despatched, and salvation. They have been gladly received, both in the British and American Navies, and by the crews of merchantmen. Nearly the whole of these liberal supplies were sent out, free of charge, by the Admiralty. Temperance work, always a noted factor in Miss Weston's operations, prospers wonderfully. In the home ports 5,743 pledges have been taken, 14,000 pledge cards have been sent to ships abroad, and the "Royal Naval Temperance Society" is being effectually taken up. A remarkable testimony to the progress of temperance is that, according to the official returns for the past year, there were but eleven cases of drunkenness inquired into by court-martial through the entire Navy.

CARRYING MESSAGES OF HOPE

The troubled condition of China, and the dispatch of a British squadron, has of necessity entailed much anxiety and effort, and it is interesting to note in this connection that Miss Weston recently received a cablegram from Admiral Sir E. Seymour, asking her, on behalf of himself and his men, to attend to the needs of the mothers, widows, and orphans of the British slain; and stating that the sum of £400, collected among themselves, would follow. With that amount Miss Weston has been able to afford timely succour to many in distress.

The Royal Naval Needlework Guild is a great help to sailors' wives, especially those who have large families to maintain. Lady members contribute two articles of clothing per year, or forward an order to the Guild work-room for a sovereign's worth or more of useful garments. H.R.H. the Duchess of Cornwall and York takes a cordial interest in this department particularly, and has regularly given garments of her own making.

Miss Weston referred to the many tokens of warm encouragement received

FROM QUEEN VICTORIA.

At Devonport Rest is a cabin which was one of her gifts to the work. Only six weeks prior to her decease she sent a hearty expression of goodwill; and King Edward, too, has expressed the desire that his name should be in some way publicly connected with the work, which he has long viewed with the greatest satisfaction. Miss Weston concluded with a short description of the large block of buildings adjoining the Devonport Institution, which has been purchased, but urgently requires repair and renovation. The premises will be a "Queen Victoria Memorial," and the fund by which the work is to be financed is Miss Weston's "silver wedding fund."

Some particulars of the "housekeeping" were next given, with originality and point, by Miss Wintz, Miss Weston's devoted co-worker, from which it appeared that at Portsmouth and Devonport Rests over £24,000 was taken over the counters for refreshments, while dormitory accommodation had been provided for over a quarter of a million sleepers.

The May Meetings.

Anglo-Indian Evangelization Society.

THE annual meeting of this helpful organization was held in the Lower Exeter Hall, on April 29.

Rev. John Forgan, hon. sec., gave an account of the operations of the Society during the past year. By the efforts of the evangelists spiritual life had been sustained, and not a few among our countrymen scattered over India have been brought under the power of the Gospel.

The visit of Mr. Reginald Studd to India has been accompanied by many tokens of blessing. Mr. McDowall, whose centre of labour is Podanur, on the Madras Railway, has been provided by Mr. R. Stanes, of Coimbatore, with a bungalow and mission hall, and he has had a cordial welcome. Mr. C. T. Studd, who went out last year as an honorary evangelist, found the climate suited to his health, and has undertaken the charge of the Union church at Ootacamund, from which place he also carries on a variety of evangelistic operations. Among other honorary workers, Mrs. Cumming, who went out to labour among the railway employées on the Southern Mahratta Railway, has done valuable work in conducting a Bible class and other meetings, and in visiting among the people in the different stations.

Mr. W. Stewart Thompson followed with the financial statement, which showed that, owing to the development of the work, the income has been largely exceeded.

Speaking from the chair, Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., said that he had travelled over a great part of India, and well knew how greatly such a work as this is needed by the on indigo and tea plantations, and along the railways. But for the visits of the Society's evangelists, practically no religious work is done among these people. The influence of the lives of Christians, especially unpaid Christians, on the natives is very great; and the permanence of our rule will depend very largely on whether the rulers of India maintain the high standard of thought and living which is the outcome of the Christian faith.

Words of hearty sympathy followed from Rev. H. C. Squires, of Holy Trinity Church, Richmond, and formerly of Bombay, who described the organization as "evangelical to its heart's core," and from Rev. P. Carmichael, of Highbury Presbyterian Church, who rejoiced in the provision which is made, both for those Englishmen in India who desire to cling to the Christian faith, and for those who merely add to the density of the heathen around.

The next speaker, Rev. F. W. Adams, a missionary of the Society lately returned from Rajputana, gave a graphic description of the Gospel work carried on by himself and his wife. Both among civilians and soldiers, in meetings or in visitation, souls have been won. Mr. Adams was wont to journey between 2,500 and 3,000 miles a month, and in spite of intense heat was able to preach Christ to many fellow-travellers.

An earnest appeal for a larger measure of public sympathy was made by Rev. Isaac Row, who dwelt on the greatness of the opportunity, and the directness and simple evangelical character of the work. After a telling testimony from Mr. T. Stanes, as to the spiritual influence exercised over several classes of the community by Mr. C. T. Studd, the meeting concluded with prayer.

In a booklet, entitled "Three Months in India Among Our Own Countrymen," Mr. Reginald Studd tells the story of a time of much blessing. "It is said in Hyderabad, that God has moved the needy place as never before. It is seldom visited by evangelists, for it is far off the beaten track, and many people came and continued to come to the meetings, who had never been to such gatherings before. The young men and women came, the ministers and missionaries came, the Church of England members and the Methodists came, and a spirit of love seemed to pervade the services."

The Bible League.

THE annual meeting of the Bible League, which has for its object the promotion of the reverential study of the Holy Scriptures, and to resist the varied attacks made upon their inspiration and infallibility as the Word of God, was held at Exeter Hall on Tuesday. A review of the year's labours of the League affords ample opportunity for realizing the need for the aggressive efforts which it maintains in defence of the Scriptures.

The destructive work of the Higher Criticism goes on apace, increasing in intensity and power for evil, and according to many theologians of to-day, Christians have no reliable basis for faith apart from the mutilated remnant of revealed truth which the critics grant. In view of this the Council of the Bible League are more determined than ever to use every opportunity of testifying to the plenary inspiration of the Word of God.

During the year the hand of God has been upon the efforts put forth, and the League has rejoiced in a widespread fellowship of friends and co-workers. The calls for their services increase year by year, indicating that there are multitudes among the rank and file of the Christian Church who desire whatever help can be given in resisting the conclusions of unsanctified and irreverent scholarship. Fifty-two meetings were held, and eighty-nine new members added to the register.

The Occasional Paper (five numbers of which have now been published) has been cordially received. It is proving a valuable means of bringing the most recent statements of the higher critics, as well as reports of the Bible League, before its friends.

South American Missionary Society.

AT the annual meeting of this society, held at Sion College on Thursday last, Lord Kinnaird presided. There was a large muster of supporters and friends of the work.

Rev. E. P. Cachemaille, secretary, stated that the past year had been marked by a signal development of the work and the opening of doors in all directions. In ten years the staff in the mission field has nearly trebled, yet is quite inadequate for the work. The recent tour of visitation undertaken by the secretary has shown that almost everywhere there is expansion and spiritual vitality. Besides the Suhin station opened last year two more posts have been occupied. The Argentine Government has offered to the Mission three concessions amongst the Indians of the Argentine Chaco, inviting them to come and occupy these. Substantial progress has been made with the language and translation. In connection with the Araucanian Mission an industrial school has been established for the Christian teaching and training of the Mapuche youths, with a view to their becoming missionaries and teachers amongst their own people in the near future. The Evangelistic work at Palermo and Buenos Ayres has been quite remarkable, and the schools which began in 1898, with a mere handful of children, now contain upwards of 1,000. An address has been presented to the Minister of Education, expressing warm approval of the proposal for introducing the Bible into the national schools of the Republic. A Government grant has been made towards an industrial school. The Home and schools at Alberdi, primarily intended for the benefit of destitute English-speaking people, are full, and work amongst seamen at Rio de Janeiro, Santos, Buenos Ayres, and Rosario has been attended by much blessing.

Among subsequent speakers were Revs. E. A. Stuart, S. A. Selwyn, who referred to the apathy shown by professing Christians in regard to foreign missions, and Rev. A. R. Buckland, who said that the work offered before an enormous Roman Catholic population, which is probably a Roman Catholic population at its worst, the witness of pure Christian life and enlightened Christian truth.

The Ragged School Movement.

ON Monday evening Queen's Hall was filled by an enormous gathering for the annual festival of the Ragged School Union. At the outset Mr. H. French led a choir of crippled children through a tuneful chorus in praise of the children's Friend.

Then came the President's address from the chair, by the Marquis of Northampton. His first point was the death of Queen Victoria, and the succession of the King as patron—an honour acknowledged by the singing of one verse of the National Anthem. Resuming his address, the Chairman spoke of hooliganism as the result of an evil which the Union has done, and is doing, much to remedy. The work of the society is direct and indirect. There are 6,790 cripples on the register; and the little afflicted ones are well taught to whom to look for consolation and help. The Barefoot Mission received parcels, containing 56,586 new and warm garments, with cards, books, and toys; and 7,636 boots and shoes were loaned to necessitous children. Numerous other helpful agencies were mentioned; and varied activities are embraced in the 153 affiliated schools and missions. The finance shows a decrease on the gross total, and the sources of income manifest a regrettable shrinkage, especially on the Holiday Home Fund, the total receipts being £19,308. The Chairman's eloquent speech closed with an earnest appeal that all who are interested in the Union will do their best during the next twelve months to secure more support for the work.

Speaking specially on behalf of crippled children, Rev. J. Morgan Gibbon said that human needs are scriptures of God. If, said he, you get into touch with real need, beware how you disregard it, for it is of the will of God and the newest table of his law. We must break the Bread of Life until the very hooliganism of the street shall cheer for righteousness, truth, and purity. There is plenty of money, and only a dearth of the giving what Christ requires.

Succeeding addresses were interspersed with song in solo and chorus form. After a special recitation by Mr. W. A. Eaton, sad pictures, from personal experience, of the material upon which the Union seeks to work, were given by Rev. Marcus Rainsford. Other speakers followed, also a long procession of children with banners representing numerous departments of work, and a distribution by the Countess of Shaftesbury of many prizes for faithful service.

International Bible Reading Association.

AT the annual meetings of this Association, held on Tuesday, April 30, encouraging reports and testimonies were received from London, the provinces, Ireland, Burma, and the United States. The Chairman (Mr. C. Waters) stated that the membership for the present year showed an increase of no fewer than 50,000 as compared with 1900; and an address to workers was given by Rev. H. Hewett, of Clayland's Chapel, Kennington. At the evening meeting Mr. G. A. Hutchison, editor of the Boys' Own Paper, very warmly advocated the object and plans of the Association. The report showed that 690,000 English membership cards had been issued—about 600,000 in the United Kingdom, and the remainder to other parts of the world, with 68,000 in twenty-nine other languages. The voluntary service of some 8,000 workers was acknowledged. The sum of £453 had been received for the Indian Sunday School Mission Fund, which supports Rev. R. Burges as secretary to the India Union; and £1,464 had been collected and sent to India for the relief of children suffering from the famine. Addresses were delivered by Rev. T. F. Touzeau, and Pastor B. Jorgensen, the representative of the work in Norway.

In Camp and Barracks.

FROM time to time opportunities have been given for friends to learn of the widespread influence and varied operations of the Soldiers' Christian Association. At its annual meeting in Exeter Hall on Monday there was a large attendance, presided over by Sir George Williams. The Association is the military branch of the Y.M.C.A., and its ministrations to the troops at home and abroad, on and off service, have been attended with far-reaching results.

The annual report, presented by the secretary, Mr. S. E. Burrow, was a survey of a comprehensive field of operations. Touching reference was naturally made to the decease of Mr. A. H. Wheeler, whose interest in the Association had never failed. A Wheeler Memorial Fund was opened, with the result that £1,015 has been raised and invested on behalf of the bereaved family. The principal features of the year's operations centre, of course, in the campaign in South Africa. Thirty workers have laboured and Durban. Their services have not only been appreciated by the men, but warmly recognized by the officers. Foremost of these was Earl Roberts, who on leaving South Africa for England had communicated expressions of his cordial sympathy with the work carried on by the Association and his earnest desire for its continued success. The efforts put forth, however, have not only received the approbation of men, but Divine favour has been vouchsafed. Night by night, in the tent on the open veldt, the power of God has prevailed while the Gospel has been preached, and men of all ranks have yielded themselves to Christ. The Council despatched eighteen tents to the front, and in addition four iron buildings were erected. Here the troops were welcomed and greeted with Christian sympathy. Every facility was afforded for profitably spending spare hours in reading, recreation, and correspondence; and many an anxious wife and mother owes to these facilities the letters which have so often brought tidings of their LOVED ONES AT THE FRONT.

FROM CAPE TOWN TO PRETORIA

A pathetic phase of the work is the visiting among the sick and wounded in the hospitals. For some time to come the continuance of such efforts will unfortunately be necessary. The Association's work at home has, of course, been somewhat disorganized, on account of the wholesale dispatch of troops, and the consequent depletion of garrisons.

In spite of this, however, there are now 457 branches scattered throughout the Empire, with a membership of over 4,000.

The Chairman, in a few words of warm commendation, expressed his heart-felt joy at the extent to which the workers had been enabled to minister to the needs of Britain's sons in times of sorrow and danger. Lord Chelmsford testified to the favourable conditions which prevail in military life for bringing men under the influence of the Gospel.

Mr. Alban A. Heath recounted his experiences at the Cape, and told, with much feeling, of remarkable gatherings which had been held in the tents. In response to the invitation for any who were anxious to join the service of the King to rise to their feet many would be seen standing; and scarcely a meeting was held without some souls being won for Christ.

Mr. John Davies, who went out in November, 1899, and only returned home a fortnight ago, recalled a memorable evening spent in the Pretoria tent. The men who were assembled had received orders to advance to the front on the morrow. At the close of the meeting the question was asked if any were willing to confess their Saviour. It was a solemn moment, never to be forgotten, when fifty-two signified their desire to follow Christ.

Brief testimonies to the influence of the Association in military life were given by Lieutenant-Colonel R. Phayre, Captain Cundy, Colonel G. Philips, Colonel Macgregor, and others.

Among Indian Lepers.

A COMBINED meeting of friends of the Missionary Pence Association and the Mission to Lepers was held in Exeter Hall on Saturday last, to welcome home from India Mr. John Jackson, who has been to India to visit the asylums of the Mission to Lepers, and who has distributed about £1,000 in famine relief from the M.P.A. funds. Sir George Williams presided, and Mr. W. Roger Jones presented a statement, showing the receipts of the M.P.A. for the past year to be £6,554, or treble those of the previous twelve months, the great increase being due to the Famine Fund.

Mr. Jackson said that he had travelled 20,000 miles since last November, 7,000 of them in India itself. In all he had called at some twenty-seven leper asylums or settlements, and had seen their inmates to the number of over 4,000. In April, 1897, the Mission had fifty-two stations, and now sixty-two. It was then entirely supporting nineteen asylums, now twenty-seven; while it gave aid to a considerably larger number. The inmates had increased from 1,500 to 4,300, and there were now upwards of 2,000 Christian lepers in the different stations.

Rev. John Wilkinson.

THIS well-known worker is about to complete his Jubilee of service in the cause of Jewish evangelization. In view of the deeply interesting occasion, a meeting of thanksgiving to God has been arranged, and will be held in the Mildmay Conference Hall on the afternoon of Friday, May 30. Rev. Samuel Wilkinson, who ministers with his father in the Mildmay Mission to the Jews, writes:—

"Fifty years ago, care for or interest in the chosen people of God was very small as compared with what it is to-day. There has been a great alteration from the indifference, sometimes even hostility, on the part of the Christian Church to this subject, so near to God's heart. And with the present widespread, intelligent, and prayerful interest in Israel that prevails in this and other countries, none can deny that my father's efforts, personality, and influence have had much to do. It is but fitting and right, therefore, that acknowledgment should be made to God."

A thankoffering has been suggested; in the view of some it should be towards the maintenance of the work, of others as a personal token of esteem. Copies of a circular letter, setting forth the facts, may be had from Rev. S. Wilkinson, Central Hall, Philpot Street, London, E.

Liverpool Strangers' Rest.

THE twenty-fourth annual meeting of the friends and subscribers of the Strangers' Rest was held a few days ago, when Mr. Charles J. Procter presided.

The annual report, read by Mr. Leigh, stated that four months had elapsed since they moved to their new quarters, at the north end of the Gordon Smith Institute. They were now working side by side with the Seamen's Friend Society. The attendance at the new reading room has been excellent, and the work has proceeded in a most satisfactory way. Altogether 792 meetings have been held during the year. The Ladies' Auxiliary Committee has rendered very efficient help during the last twelve months. The accounts showed that, with payments amounting to £242 5s. 4d., there remained a balance of £45 5s. 10d. due to the treasurer.

The Chairman remarked that they were met in one common interest to provide in Liverpool a quiet place where the stranger might come in, no matter of what nationality he might be. The kindly sympathy and loving thought shown by those interested in the institution towards the men who passed through the Rest in the course of a year would never be forgotten. He spoke of the excellent work done by the ladies, a band of Christian women, and expressed the hope that the new premises would prove as useful, and confer as much benefit, as the old rooms.

Revs. G. Howell and H. Crombie followed with appropriate addresses, and Rev. Canon Harrison, who, it was mentioned, had attended twenty-four annual meetings of the Rest, also spoke.

Dr. Harry Guinness.

A WELCOME AND A FAREWELL.

HEARTY and sympathetic was the greeting accorded to Dr. Harry Guinness at the thanksgiving gathering at Harley College on Monday afternoon last, and deep was the gratitude expressed that the Lord had restored his servant from the very gates of death. The large assembly included many well-known Christian workers from all quarters of the metropolis.

After Mr. Edward H. Glenny had led in prayer, Dr. H. Grattan Guinness, who presided, said that the threefold object of the occasion was to offer heartfelt thanks to the Almighty for the signal mercies He had vouchsafed, to bid farewell to Dr. and Mrs. Harry Guinness on their departure, under medical orders, on a voyage to Tasmania, and to welcome Rev. F. B. Meyer to the onerous duties of the directorship of the college. The speaker recalled, with many touches of pathos, how very near his beloved son had been to death, and asked for prayer that might be completed. Dr. Grattan Guinness added some interesting news of his other children. Dr. Whitfield Guinness, who is in Che-foo, is experiencing times of refreshing in connection with his medical and evangelistic labours. Mrs. Howard Taylor is, with her husband, visiting the women's colleges of the United States, stirring up interest in missionary work. The tour has already included between eighty and ninety colleges, and the Lord's blessing has been everywhere manifest. Mrs. Kumm, who is staying for a time in Germany, with her little son, sends good tidings of the mission work in Egypt, which she, with her husband, was instrumental in opening last year.

The welcome of the Harley College students was voiced in kindly terms by Principal Mead, and then, following prayer from Mr. C. R. Hurditch, Dr. Harry Guinness came forward to offer a few words of thanks. Illness had evidently left him in a weak condition, and although in the course of his brief speech he showed that he had lost no whit of his old-time ability to influence an audience for good, it was clear that the sea voyage is a necessity. One of his feet, too, is partially paralysed. In a characteristic utterance, the speaker, humbly acknowledging the goodness of God towards him, and expressing appreciation of the prayerful interest of many friends, passed rapidly from personal considerations to a telling advocacy of the Regions Beyond Missionary Union, and asked for an increased measure of public support for the new stern-wheel steamer for the Congo. Dr. Guinness spoke of the many advantages of the vessel, particularly as a floating sanatorium, and anticipated that in this capacity it will be the means of that are precious in the missionary cause. Dr. Guinness also anticipated that, with returning health, he would be able to deepen the increasing interest in missionary undertakings which is being shown in Australia.

In alluding to the new labours which he is adding to his already very heavy responsibilities, Rev. F. B. Meyer said that Mrs. Meyer and he will go into residence at Harley College. Mr. Meyer expressed the hope that he would be able, in addition to undertaking the practical oversight of the work, to render some service to the churches of East London. As an earnest of this, Mr. Meyer said that later in the year he proposes to give a course of weekly Bible lectures to Christian workers, in the College Hall.

The meeting, which was full of spiritual stimulus, concluded with prayer offered by Mr. Marshall Broomhall. In the evening, another large meeting was held. Dr. and Mrs. Guinness were to leave London yesterday (Wednesday) for Marseilles, where they embark on board the P. & O. steamship Indus for Tasmania.

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, May 12. Matthew ii.

THE East gave the first welcome to the King—the brooding, thoughtful East. Whether aroused by Balaam's ancient prophecy or not, it is nevertheless clear that a general expectation of the advent of a King was prevalent in the Eastern world; and this crystallized about the time of our Lord's birth, when a luminous meteor, or star, appeared in the heavens. It is interesting to note that Nature thus led to Christ. If men will but follow truth, they will come out at the centre of all, which is Jesus Christ, from whatever point in the circumference they may start.

Wherever Jesus is born, in a community or in a single heart, there is sure to be hostility. Herod always seeks the young Child's destruction. The dragon always waits to devour the woman's Seed. But the opposition cannot avail. God watches over that which He has begotten. He is responsible for its nurture and safety. Be of good cheer. Sooner or later, there will be inscribed on the sepulchres of the enemies of Christ—They are dead that sought the young Child's life.

Study this instance of God's anticipations of coming evil, and his Divine provisions against it. Shortly the infant Jesus must be carried by his parents into Egypt—a long and expensive journey; money would be needed to defray the cost, and it was forthcoming, as the Magi presented Mary, not only with myrrh and frankincense, but with gold. How often God gives us gold, before He permits us to encounter searching trial and pain. I have so often noticed that some blessed revelation of Himself has preceded fiery trial. "There is no lack to them that fear Him."

MONDAY, May 13. Matthew iii.

For came, the R.V. substitutes cometh (1). John the Baptist is always coming! Repentance must precede Christ. We need the higher law to be proclaimed to show us how far our best is below God's standard, and to prepare us for Jesus Christ. The way of the Lord must be prepared, and his paths made straight.

It is wonderful to notice the response given by the human heart to the preacher of truth. It may seem that religion is dead, that it is buried under a great encumbrance of rites and ceremonies from which it will never be able to extricate itself; but let the truth of God stand at the grave, and call, and the soul of man will arise to come forth. "Then went out to him Jerusalem and all Judæa." Even the Pharisees and Sadducees felt the spell of the Baptist. Was it not a confession that the ritualism of the one, and the negations of the other, were by no means satisfactory, and they, too, yearned for a glimpse of the positive and eternal?

John knew that his ministry and baptism were temporary and negative, destined to prepare the way for the lasting and positive. Repentance must lead to faith; the forerunner, to the King; the greatest born of women, to the One mightier than he. The Lord must come to his Temple, but who should abide the day of his coming, his fan, and his unquenchable fire! He would discover the chaff, even though it were among Pharisees and Sadducees: He would garner the children of the Kingdom, though found among publicans and sinners.

Finally, Jesus cometh, identifying Himself with man in his baptism, confessing sins not his own, anointed for his ministry, and designated as the Son of the Highest. Be not content with the Baptist; prepare a guest-chamber for the Christ.

TUESDAY, May 14. Matthew iv.

Led up of the Spirit to be tempted! This is true of all the sons of God. As they know the best, they are liable to be tempted by the worst. The pendulum that swings this way will swing that. God permits, and may lead us by way of, temptation, because temptation does not necessarily involve sin; and we should never know ourselves, or goodness, or God, unless we passed through this ordeal.

The temptations may be classed as the lust of the flesh, the pride of life, and the lust of the eyes. The Lord was hungry; yet He would not use his power to help Himself, but told the tempter that He should await the Father's provision for his need, or at least the Father's signal that He should help Himself. Next, the devil tempted Him, as so many are tempted still, in the direction of childlike trust, as though to say, "Dost Thou so trust thy Father? Then cast Thyself down;" but the Master forbore to act presumptuously. Finally, the tempter offered the world for one act of worship, as much as to say: "It were a sublime act of devotion to immolate Thyself, if only Thou mightest acquire the empire of the world." He said this, well knowing that it was not his to give, for he has been a liar from the beginning. The Lord did acquire the kingdoms of the world, not by kneeling to Satan, but by going to the Cross.

At this point (between vv. 11 and 12) we must interpolate John ii., iii., iv. Then the Lord commenced that blessed ministry in Galilee, which laid the basis of his popularity amongst its simple folk to the end of his life (Matt. xxi. 11). Here, also, He began to constitute the Apostolic band; and excavated the stones that were to lie afterwards in the foundations of the New Jerusalem. Let us also follow Him, that He may make us fishers of men.

WEDNESDAY, May 15. Matthew v.

This is the King's Proclamation. In this chapter there are two main divisions. First, an enumeration of the virtues which would be canonized in the heavenly Kingdom; and, secondly, an indication of the relation that the new would bear to the old.

First, verses 1-16. The Beatitudes complete an octave. They begin and end with the Kingdom of Heaven (3 and 10). They are not arbitrary, but necessary. The blessedness which is attached to these types of character is not an outward reward allotted by the King, but is a necessary outcome of disposition which is indicated. Sow meekness, mercy, or purity, and you reap the harvest of blessedness. Jesus did not make it so, for it was thus in the nature of things, and had been from all eternity. He magnified the dispositions which had been despised by mankind generally, and showed how certainly they would lead to blessedness. Here is the City of Blessedness, whereof there are eight gates, and any one of these conducts to its heart.

Second, 17-48. The Lord announces Himself as the fulfilment of the Law, not its abrogation; and proceeds to take up five instances, in which his legislation would go beyond the ancient code, giving the positive for the negative, the full-orbed sun for the struggling rays of dawn. It behoves us to ponder very carefully these words of our Lord, and, with them as our example, to proceed to fill up other of the ancient laws; for, undoubtedly, each of them also has its other side and further fulfilment. But even then we must receive the Holy Spirit, to shed the love of God abroad in our hearts, for love is the fulfilling of the Law (Rom. xiii. 10).

THURSDAY, May 16. Matthew vi.

In three directions our Lord set aside the formalities of the time:—in respect to alms (1-4); to prayer (5-15); and to fasting (16-18). In each case He speaks sweetly of the Father, using the personal pronoun thy, and laying stress on Himself as recompensing, as though He could depute that honour to no other. He is always in the secret place. He awaits us there, and desires to reward us openly. The hypocrite lays stress on the openness of the deed, the Lord on the openness of the reward.

In the paragraph on prayer the Lord gives us the Lord's Prayer as a specimen of what prayer should be. It is brief; it is definite. It puts worship in the forefront. It subordinates the personal to the collective. It reminds us that our need for forgiveness is as persistent as that for bread. It is bathed in a childlike trust on a Father's loving care. Let us seek to frame our prayers on so holy and blessed a model.

Then the Lord breaks into a perfect psalm on the loving care and faithfulness of God. It is not wise, He said, to lay up treasures on earth, for many reasons. (1) Because to do so will afflict us with oblique vision. (2) Because it will divide our allegiance to the one Master, Christ. (3) Because it is needless, since God, who has given the greater, will give the less; and as He has lighted the candle of our being, He may be counted on to supply it with all the fuel it needs. Shall He care for birds and lilies, and neglect his children? Are we poor orphans, left desolate in an unkindly world, for whom there is no provision? It is impossible; and if only we will devote ourselves fixedly to his interests, He will not fail to care for ours.

FRIDAY, May 17. Matthew vii.

Another chapter of this inimitable sermon, of which it has been truly said that, "It is not by the words of Jesus that the world is redeemed, noble though they be." The miserable, childish nonsense which confines Christ's work to the preaching of the Sermon on the Mount is finely rebuked by Renan himself. "Had the Redeemer," he says, "died after speaking the Sermon on the Mount, or beside the well of Samaria, He would have been ignored by man. He would have been lost in the crowd of unknown spirits, the greatest of them all. He did not save the world by his preaching the first or the second commandment, but by his dying to remedy and retrieve the sins of the world against them." This is true, but, being saved, it becomes us to study each line in our Master's charge, that we may be the sons of God without rebuke.

How few Christians recognize that Christ has positively forbidden us to judge one another, and to be clear of the beam before we attempt to remove the mote! How seldom it is recognised that the entrance to life is strait and narrow! I saw over the spacious gateway to a coloured church in Chattanooga this text, Strait is the Gate. It seemed to reflect the general interpretation which Christians place on these words of the Master. Salvation throws wide her doors to all who will, asking all such to enter; but though they are wide enough for the biggest sinners, they are too small to admit the smallest cherished indulgence of sin.

Let us ponder the photograph, which the Master of the feast sketches of the scene at the Gate of Paradise, when through the fast-closed door He will speak with those who shall be for ever excluded from the feast. Shall He say of us, "On my side, at least, the friendship has never begun"?

SATURDAY, May 18. Matthew viii.

This is what Jesus can do!

He can touch thy heart, leprous with impurity, and make its stains depart, so that its foulnesses shall become like the flesh of a little child. One touch of his hand, and immediately thy leprosy shall be cleansed.

He can heal the paralysis, which has laid hold on all thy movements, and pins thee down in helplessness. Because He came under the authority of law, He is well able to wield all the authority and power of God. He humbled Himself, and became obedient to the death of the cross: therefore God has highly exalted Him, and out of his mighty resources He is well able to empower the weakest believer.

He can deliver from the fever heat of passion, and make the soul calm, quiet, and pure; so that it can do his bidding without fear, in holiness and righteousness all its days.

He can rebuke the storms that rave through thy tempest-driven soul, that, however great the tempest, it will die down before his words of peace.

He can cast out the demons, which have so long possessed and cursed thy soul, so that the fortress which they have held so long may be rid of its garrison.

All this He will do, and more; but remember the note which recurs throughout this chapter—these blessings can only be received by faith

> Faith, mighty faith, the promise sees,
> And looks to that alone,
> Laughs at impossibilities,
> And cries, "It shall be done."

Rev. G. Campbell Morgan's Farewell.

WITH Mr. Morgan's wide sympathy for evangelistic work, it was fitting that his visit last Lord's Day to the scene of his former ministrations, New Court Chapel, should have been in connection with the London Missionary Society. While a home evangelist with rare gifts of persuasive eloquence, Mr. Morgan's heart is in the larger circle of religious enterprise, which means the "whole round world" for Christ.

The reading of Psa. lxxii. and Rev. xxi. led up to a sermon based upon the three passages—"All the nations of the earth shall be blessed in Him," "Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations," and "A great multitude which no man could number of all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues." After premising that we live and serve within the sphere of the second text, the preacher proceeded to deal with (1) the Divine purpose: all nations are to be blessed in the Christ; (2) the Divine accomplishment: a great multitude, &c., redeemed unto God by the Cross of Jesus; and (3) the Divine method: all nations to be discipled and taught in the ways of the King. We must get back in missionary enterprise to the fact that God loves men through all the wreckage and ruin of the world by sin. Human arithmetic is baffled in its enumeration of the redeemed through the sacrifice of Christ.

A contrast was drawn between Christ as a lonely man on the slopes of Olivet, and the reigning King in glory. All authority had, however, been given to Him. The Cross was his imperial throne. He saw the nations that would be redeemed. Gathered about his throne there would be exemplified in the saved nations unity instead of divisions, oneness instead of faction, loyalty instead of disorder.

What hinders the coming of the Kingdom of righteousness? WE do. The consummation is hindered or helped by the Church. God waits for US—the nations wait for US. The saving of the world demands on OUR part work, prayer, sympathy, and larger gifts.

In the evening the church was again thronged in every part, Mr. Morgan taking as his text John xiv. 15.

Welsh Notes.

THE annual meetings of the North Wales Free Church Federation were held this year at Dolgelly. The report showed an increase of five in the number of councils affiliated to the Federation.

No fewer than six Welsh Congregational ministers celebrate their ministerial jubilee this year. Among the six occur such well-known names as Revs. P. Evans, D.D., of London, and J. Bowen Jones, of Brecon.

The first annual report of the Young People's Christian Union of Wales has just been published. It contains a full account of the Conference held last summer at Llandrindod. The object of the Union is to band together all the various young people's societies which exist in Wales for the furtherance of Christian work.

At the quarterly meetings of the North Wales Calvinistic Methodist Association, the address of the Moderator contained a strong plea for loyalty to the Scriptures. He declared that critical research not only affects questions of the composition of certain books of the Old and New Testaments, but also touches the foundation truths of the Christian religion.

Archdeacon Bruce, in an address to the clergy of the Archdeaconry of Monmouth, declared that the voluntary schools of the Church of England are doomed to extinction. The Anglican Church, he considered, had made a great mistake in regarding her voluntary schools as her first line of defence. To his thinking, they must come to the realization of the momentous importance of a well-organized system of Sunday-schools.

In the current number of Young Wales, Mr. Herbert Roberts, M.P., declares the Welsh Sunday Closing Act to be beneficial and successful in the main. He refuses to admit the claim of Cardiff to exemption, and refutes the argument of those who advocate such exemption on the ground that there are exceptional difficulties in the way of administering the Act in a town like Cardiff. Mr. Roberts' answer to this plea is that what is possible at Glasgow, is possible also at Cardiff.

Lewes Martyrs' Memorial.

WE do well to commemorate the fidelity of our Protestant forefathers—to "tell to the generation following" how our noble ancestors kept the faith, although such devotion cost them their lives. Here and there one finds monuments in memory of men and women whose names are little remembered to-day. It is assuredly time their names were made generally familiar, and that their faith was set forth as an example to all who would be true to God and loyal to Evangelical principles.

On Wednesday last another such monument was exposed to public view. Who has not heard of the Lewes martyrs, seventeen in number, who were burned to death in the reign of Queen Mary? These worthies, four of them women, witnessed a good confession in front of the Star Inn, now the Town Hall, in the Sussex county town. Not far from the tragic spot an obelisk has just been erected, the cost having been raised by public subscription. The names of the good and true men and women have been inscribed thereon, also the singularly apt excerpt from Holy Scripture: "And they overcame, because of the blood of the Lamb, and because of the word of their testimony; and they loved not their life even unto death" (Rev. xii. 11, R.V.). Let our readers look up the story in Foxe's "Book of Martyrs," and read what is said of Dirick Carver and his companions in witness-bearing. The narrative is admirably digested, and brought up to date, in a memorial volume, "TURN OR BURN!" by Rev. Dr. F. J. Hamilton and Mr. W. Stanley Martin. There are excellent illustrations. (1s. and 2s., according to binding. Morgan & Scott.)

The memorial was unveiled with becoming ceremony on Wednesday afternoon. May the monument be an object of instruction to many in these days when Protestant principles and truths are so sadly discounted!

Christian Workers' Conference.—The announcement that a conference would be held at the East London Tabernacle on Saturday afternoon drew together a large number of Christian workers. The occasion proved a time of spiritual refreshing, and an earnest desire for fuller consecration was manifest throughout. The stimulating and helpful words of Revs. Dr. Robertson and Bennett Anderson, and Mr. Charles Cook, were much appreciated, and Madame Annie Ryall rejoiced many hearts by her Gospel messages in song.

American Notes.

IN the annual report of the American Bible Society, Dr. Hykes, its agent in China, says that Han Ching Cheng and Yuen Chang, two officials of the Tsungli Yamen, saved the lives of many missionaries in China last summer by changing the wording of an Imperial edict to "painfully extirpate all foreigners." For this they were sentenced to be cut in two. Out of eighteen colporteurs, not one survived. When warned of the danger to them in continuing their work, they merely said: "We go on a colportage tour. God's will be done." The homes of three of these martyrs were looted and burned, and their families were exterminated. The number of pages of Scripture published in 1900 was 77,646,700, in 37,700 volumes. This is the largest number of pages ever printed in one year by the China agency. No fewer than 16,500 complete Bibles in the Mandarin dialect were received from the printers, and there were 5,000 in the press on December 31. Ten years ago an edition of 2,000 copies was considered enough for several years. These figures give some indication of the growth of the native Church.

A Bill was introduced in the Assembly of this State at Albany last Wednesday incorporating the Federation of American Zionists. The objects of the Federation are to foster the national idea of Israel; to co-operate with other Zionist Societies in their endeavour to obtain for the Jewish nation a legally assured home in Palestine; to unite all Zionist Societies of the United States; to act as the medium of communication between the Zionist Congress, through its central committee, and the Zionist Societies of the United States; to foster the knowledge of Hebrew as a living language; and to publish periodical publications for the furtherance of the cause of Zionism. The principal office of the Federation will be in New York City.

The Young Men's Christian Association has purchased a site for its Twenty-third Street premises, three blocks to the west of their present well-known building, for 225,000dols., and it is said that their new premises are to cost 400,000dols. The new building is to be fireproof, and six or eight storeys high. The equipment will include a gymnasium, fitted up with a swimming tank and all the latest appliances. Dormitories to accommodate from 100 to 200 men are to form a special feature. By an arrangement with the purchasers of the property now occupied by the Y.M.C.A., the building will not be vacated until the new structure is ready for occupation.

"Sam" Hadley, the superintendent of the widely-known Water Street Mission, has been celebrating the nineteenth anniversary of his conversion. The date of that event was April 18, 1882; and every year, on the corresponding day, Mr. Hadley goes to the police station in Harlem (a northern district in New York) and asks the officers in charge to let him go into the cell in which he was locked up on that memorable night, for a season of private prayer. The request is always granted, and in fact the sergeant at the desk always sees that the cell is reserved for his use. In speaking of the matter, Mr. Hadley says that on the night referred to he sat in a saloon in Harlem a homeless, friendless, dying drunkard, having pawned or sold everything for drink. He was staying at Harlem because there were so many indictments against him down town that he was afraid to show his face there. Four years after he met Jerry McAuley he was called to take charge of the Water Street Mission, where he has probably seen more drunkards converted than any other living man. The Mission is open every night in the year.

Religious work will be kept well to the front at the Pan-American Exhibition at Buffalo, a national committee, with the Governor of this State at its head, and including many well-known men, having been formed to co-operate with an executive committee of Buffalo men. A large tent, to be called "Tent Evangelist," is to be erected outside the Exposition grounds, and meetings will be held there every day. Many of the Northfield speakers will be heard there, and among other societies likely to hold conferences there, are the Women's Christian Temperance Union, the King's Daughters, and the Young Women's Christian Association. The local branch of the Y.M.C.A. has already opened a bureau of information for the benefit of strangers, and arrangements have been made to accommodate 350 men daily in the three buildings occupied by the Association. The office of the bureau for accommodation is 19, West Mohawk Street. The Women's Christian Temperance Union can be addressed at 978, West Avenue, with regard to reasonable and good boarding places. The Women's Christian Association will erect a lodge for the special use of women, and rooms there can be obtained from Mrs. George Wadsworth, 10, Niagara Square.

ROGER MARTIN.

The Distress in India.

FURTHER particulars of the position of affairs in India are given by Rev. DENNIS OSBORNE in a letter from Poona, dated April 17. Mr. Osborne says: "The weather is now at the hottest. The number of destitute people in the Presidency has greatly increased, and everywhere signs of acute distress confront one. The work of relief demands increasing attention, and it is with sincere joy and thankfulness that I hail signs of renewed interest on the part of readers of THE CHRISTIAN."

The important questions of the maintenance and education of the great numbers of orphans received by the missionaries during last year's terrible famine are briefly touched upon in a letter from Mr. R. P. WILDER, who, writing from Coonoor on April 17, says:—"People in England do not seem to realize the gravity of the situation out here. 24,000 children are being cared for by the missionaries. For years to come we must look to western lands for the large sum of money needed to fill these mouths, clothe these bodies, educate these minds, and enlighten these souls."

It is earnestly to be hoped that Christian people will realize the gravity of the need which Mr. Wilder emphasizes.

We give a further selection from letters of workers in the famine-smitten districts, appreciative of the food supplies which we were enabled to despatch by the bounty of our readers.

Rev. D. O. FOX, Poona: "The foods are a great help in our work."

Dr. WANLESS, Presbyterian Mission Hospital, Miraj: "We find the foods very useful indeed."

Mr. G. D. OSWELL, Raipur District Committee: "The officers in charge are finding the foods most useful for the sick children."

Miss M. FRANKLIN, Harda, Central Provinces: "The foods have been very useful. In our mission hospital the preparations of milk were especially helpful."

Rev. E. M. GORDON, Mungeh, C.P.: "The malted milk is most welcome. It is just the thing we need, quickly prepared, and most effective. The children like it."

Rev. C. H. ROMER, Ajmere: "Many thanks for second supply of foods for our famine waifs. They are proving a very great boon, and the poor children take the food most readily."

Rev. A. P. LEDINGHAM, Canadian Mission, Indore: "The foods have been used for the very weak people, and have been found very useful. Our very hearty thanks are due to the donors."

Rev. K. A. IWAR, Swedish Mission, Nimpani: "We are most grateful to all who have contributed to bring such welcome help. In this jungle no milk can be had. The poor little babies at once got some."

Mr. ALFRED TAYLOR, Mission House, Sehore: 'We are pleased to hear of another consignment, and feel very thankful. We are finding the biscuits and tinned milk most useful. The cocoa is also very helpful, as also the Quaker Oats."

PANDITA RAMABAI: "I gratefully thank you for remembering the sick and famished children at Mukti. Out of the girls rescued from the present famine, more than 10 per cent. are sick, and so far gone that it is very difficult to keep them alive. Your foods help us wonderfully."

Rev. E. P. FREASE, treasurer, Gujarat District Famine Relief Fund: "I have written before about the very great usefulness of these foods, and wish to emphasize again the fact that their free use means the saving of many hundreds of lives which otherwise could not be saved."

The Race-Course Mission.

MR. O. L. HEATLEY desires to remind friends of the Race-Course Mission that the time for organizing the summer's operations has arrived. Last year 100 workers took part in the evangelistic gatherings at Epsom, Ascot, Goodwood, Doncaster, and other race meetings, and large quantities of Gospels and Scripture portions were distributed among the gamblers and pleasure-seekers.

It is intended to renew the campaign, the first effort being arranged for Epsom, June 4 to 7, inclusive, and Mr. Heatley appeals for volunteer helpers for these or any other of the race meetings referred to. It is hoped that, as was the case last year, the work will be almost entirely of an honorary character, so that the amount needed for working expenses will not amount to more than £140.

Mr. Heatley adds: "Last year was one of spiritual power and blessing. We shall be glad to forward a copy of the annual report on receipt of stamped envelope. Address, St. James' Hall, Kennington Park, S.E."

The Y.M.C.A.

MR. AND MRS. W. M. OATTS, in their world-tour in the interests of Colonial Y.M.C.A. work, have reached Vancouver, en route for Canada, where they will take part in the Jubilee celebration at Montreal on June 8 and 9, going thence to the American Jubilee Convention at Boston June 11-16.

The annual meeting of the Folkestone Association was one of the most encouraging held for some years. A debt, which had long burdened the Committee, had been cleared off. Addresses were given by Rev. F. Sumner, Mr. Martin Henry, and Mr. Ernest Carus-Wilson, travelling secretary.

The fifteenth annual meeting of the Shoreditch Association was held on April 24. Mr. Wm. McCall presided. The secretary's report gave encouraging accounts of the open-air services and evangelistic mission. Many persons, too, had signed the Total Abstinence pledge. Helpful addresses were subsequently given by Messrs. Stanley Smith and Robert Burn.

The Spring Conference of the South Wales District Union was held at Cardiff Y.M.C.A. on May 1. A report containing much of an encouraging and hopeful character was presented by Mr. T. Gwilym James, the new travelling secretary, and Mr. J. H. Putterill, gave an address on "Y.M.C.A. Problems in the Twentieth Century." A public meeting was held under the presidency of Mr. Alderman Trounce, when the speakers included Mr. W. Hind Smith and Mr. R. D. Pringle.

Delegates from upwards of twenty of the Associations in Lancashire assembled for their Spring Conference at Birkenhead on April 27. Subjects of practical interest and usefulness were discussed, Archdeacon Madden, Rev. Wm. Watson, Mr. Joseph Gardner, and others taking part in the proceedings, which were brought to a close by a service for men at St. Luke's Church, with a sermon preached by the Bishop of Liverpool.

At the quarterly meeting of the Sunderland Association the report, read by Mr. Henry Johnson, general secretary, showed that there was marked evidence of revival among the members. This was particularly evinced by the efforts put forth in the evangelistic work. Many of the men reached by the Sunday Gospel meeting for non-churchgoers have become active workers. The Workers' Bible Class and Mission Band has done much valuable aggressive work.

The Lord Mayor of Belfast gave a mayoral reception to the local Association last week. A large assemblage of young men responded to his Lordship's invitation, while the principal ministers of the city were also present. The proceedings throughout were of the most interesting character. It was the first occasion on which the general secretary (Mr. D. A. Black) had met the members and supporters of the Association officially since his return from South Africa, and he met with a hearty reception.

The Associations of the South-East Metropolitan District Union recently met for their spring conference at Croydon. There were two sessions, afternoon and evening, over which Mr. Arnold Pye-Smith presided. Out of eighteen Associations in the district seventeen were represented by 160 delegates, the great majority of whom were quite young men. At the evening session an address was given by Mr. J. H. Putterill on "Association Work in the Twentieth Century," which was followed by an interesting discussion.

At an influential meeting held in the Council Chamber, Birmingham, in aid of the new building scheme of the city Association, the Lord Mayor was the mover and Mr. Alexander M. Chance the seconder of a resolution pledging support to the undertaking. Addresses were also delivered by the Archdeacon of London and Rev. J. H. Jowett. The present premises of the Association in Needless Alley are altogether out of date, and the accommodation is wholly inadequate to the requirements. To build and thoroughly equip the proposed new premises a sum approaching £50,000 is required.

The Henley-on-Thames Association has entered on a new era of work and usefulness in connection with its occupation of suitable and well-adapted premises, which have been placed at its disposal through the generosity of Mr. Martin John Sutton, president of the South Midland District Union of Y.M.C.A.'s. Mr. Sutton, having acquired the lease and furnished the building, has placed the same at the service of the Association at a merely nominal rental. Mr. Noble, the president of the Association, took part in the proceedings, as well as Mr. Hunt, secretary of the district, and Mr. Mills, as representing the National Council.

One's faith is stimulated by the story from Rangoon of the way in which enlarged premises were finally obtained. One desirable home was owned, it transpired, by Roman Catholics; another was occupied by a Mohammedan tenant, who refused to vacate; a third was suddenly withdrawn by the owners for business purposes. These disappointments proved to be his appointments; for the premises now occupied were but then rising brick by brick. God had provided some better thing! The building is in a better locality, is more commodious and convenient in arrangement, while the rent is not higher than would have been paid for smaller house. 260 members are on the roll, and eighty in the student branch, making a total for Rangoon of 340.

Letters to the Editor.

A Book Worth Reading.

DEAR SIR,—When I was in Wales, about eighteen months ago, among other useful books there came into my hands Dr. Saphir's CHRIST AND THE SCRIPTURES. It is only lately that I have been able to read this book through, and I have been so pleased and profited thereby that I cannot help recommending it. It is possible that many readers of THE CHRISTIAN may not be aware of the excellence of this book of the late Dr. Saphir's. It is replete with suggestive thoughts on the relation of the Word of God with the teachings of the Holy Spirit, and the central figure of it all—the Lord Jesus Christ. Beside this, we have given us here, in a concise and convincing form, proofs of the inspiration of Scripture and the vital relation of the Old Testament with the New. I know of no book that contains so much instructive teaching in such a limited compass, on God's Holy Word. I wish the book could be largely read in Sunday schools, divinity colleges, and by men in the Christian ministry. It is a gem-book on the Divine Scriptures.

THOMAS EVANS, Missionary, India.

Christians and Theatres.

DEAR SIR,—The article in a recent issue of THE CHRISTIAN has greatly impressed me. In my own personal experience, until I was twenty, I could go to theatres and attend balls, or any other worldly amusement, although I was brought up in a Christian home, and surrounded with every other Christian influence. But one day my father, when speaking seriously with me, said, "My child, believe me when I say it, few people (comparatively) are converted after twenty-one." That sentence haunted me. Soon afterwards, at a mission held at John Street, Bedford Row, I was brought to decision for Christ, and was baptized by the Hon. Rev. Baptist Noel. I joined the church there, and from that time to this (now fifty years) I have steadfastly set my face against these worldly amusements because I professed to be a follower of Christ, and to find my pleasure in seeking the salvation of others.

Thank God, I had the honour of winning to the Saviour some of those who were dearest to me on earth and are now in glory. What I ask is this: "Can Christians go to these places without crucifying the Son of God afresh, and the putting Him to open shame?" I have often been asked why I do not go to such places. My reply (amongst other reasons) is I would not like to die in such a place; and who of us knows when the call hence will come? Seeing the tendency of the age, I think that this subject should be written, preached, and spoken of far more than is done. We must be more in earnest. "The night cometh when no man can work." "If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things that are above." "Set your affection on things above, not on things on the earth."—Yours sincerely, E. N.

Navvy Mission Society.—The Quarterly Letter for March, 1901, issued by the Navvy Mission Society, contains an interesting biographical sketch of Queen Victoria, and, incidentally, marks the progress of the nation during Her Majesty's long and beneficent reign. The Queen's deep sympathy with her people at all times, her untiring zeal and devotion in seeking to promote their well-being, and her high moral qualities and Christian character, are set forth to stimulate to nobler and better lives those in lowlier positions amongst whom the Letter is circulated—men engaged on public works. The Letter seeks to act also as a medium for communication between workmen of the navvy class and their relatives who fail to get tidings direct. Short reports of mission meetings held where navvies are employed, of temperance and anti-gambling pledges taken—even of marriages which take place in the ranks—go to make up what must prove a most welcome little magazine. The intelligence columns also include particulars of accidents, deaths and cases of sickness, together with a list of works in operation and names and addresses of missionaries employed. That the desire of the friends and supporters of the Navvy Mission, to reach these toilers in our midst with the message of God's salvation, may be realized, must be the prayer of every true patriot and follower of the Master.

Pioneering on the Niger.

ON December 26, 1900, Mr. Hans Vischer, B.A., of Cambridge, and Rev. G. O. Bargery, arrived safely at Lokoja, West Africa, after a long ocean voyage and sail up the Niger to the confluence of its two main branches, the Joliba (or Niger proper) and the Benue (or Binné). The town of Lokoja, with its 20,000 inhabitants living in mud and reed-built houses, is situated at this junction. Below the town is the camp of the Hausa soldiers under English officers, and outside the town at the foot of a hill the Mission house.

"On Friday, December 21, we left Burutu, the centre of the former Niger Company, to go up one of the various arms of the Niger. Burutu lies in a forest-clearing surrounded by water, swamp, and thick bush. It only consists of a few square houses with white zinc roofs, including a mechanic's workshop and a store which displays most things likely to tempt a native's fancy—mirrors and razors in the first instance. On our first day we reached Gani-Gani, a trading place with a German factory. The river is very low at this season, and the forest bordering it right and left truly marvellous in its tropical luxuriance. Gigantic fan-palms, bamboos, lianas of every kind and bloom intertwining them as with strong ropes, and between these mighty trees of great height, with a smooth and light bark like our beeches. We saw quantities of grey parrots, which in the evenings kept up a deafening noise. The river banks continued mere swamps, from which a sickening smell emanated.

"The inhabitants of the Niger delta are among

THE WILDEST OF NEGRO TRIBES.

Their huts are covered with palm leaves, and stand singly or in village-groups on the strips of dry land which intersect the general swamp. Several of these tribes are cannibals, and neither traders nor missionaries have hitherto ventured to approach them. They move about with surprising rapidity in canoes of hollowed out tree-trunks. What we saw of them were chiefly women. The men seemed all on the war-path, their most frequent occupation. At Burutu we had found a kind of stampotti (excited unrest) among the natives, as the neighbouring tribes were on the war-path, and had promised a visit to Burutu.

"Most of the second day we were obliged to moor our small steamer, as a thick fog covered the river—not a vapour fog, but one of masses of infinitesimally fine sand, brought by a wind called harmattan, which blows during December and January, though not quite regularly. It dries up everything, of which one's mouth, throat, and eyes are painfully conscious on awakening in the morning. As we now had passed the swampy regions, the country began to have a different aspect. The banks had grown steep and bold here and there, the land seemed very fertile and cultivated, and the settlements looked more humanlike. They consist of long rows of mud and reed houses, whence at once emerged men, women and children to greet the sight of the boat with a unique kind of howl. In two or three places men and women, painted a brick-red, performed a wild war-dance. At this part we saw the first crocodiles, and in the evenings some hippopotami lifting their snouts out of the water. Everywhere there were swarms of cranes and storks, and all kinds of aquatic birds; one afternoon we steamed right through a swarm of locusts, which moved like a cloud of brown smoke across the river. A thick mist covered a long stretch of shore on one side. In the evening we landed again in great heat;

THIS WAS CHRISTMAS EVE!

"On the day after Christmas we reached Lokoja, our first destination. The Mission House lies in a healthy situation at the foot of a hill just above the town. We have a splendid view of the latter and the two great rivers which here join to form the mighty Niger. Far on the horizon are the outlines of fairly high hills. Except a few trees here and there, every trace of vegetation is burnt out and gone. Rain does not fall before June; the soil is red and stony; the hills at our back very steep and affording a wide, striking view. Many monkeys are to be seen, and beautiful birds, colobus of various kinds, also birds of prey. Snakes there are none, but many hyenas, which prowl about the house at night, and make their weird laughter heard. The climate here seems good so far, of course hot and dry. The thermometer in my room in the daytime is at 28 degrees R."

There, on the borders of Hausaland the two missionaries were arrested for about six or seven weeks. But the further study of the language, and the translation of the New Testament—of which the Gospel of John is already finished—into Hausa, fully occupied their time. There has, however, been a move since then, and a recent letter received, gives its condensed history.

"A telegram from Bishop Tugwell summoned us to meet him and the missionary party at Loko on the Binné river, five days' sail from Lokoja by native canoe, where they had stopped in their forced exit from Hausaland. Here we are right on the borders of it, attempting to make a determined stand. We are building our grass huts and clearing the ground round our dwelling-place. The time of waiting at Lokoja proved rather trying, as we got a series of bad news from the Hausa party at Gierko. Now we have joined each other. The great caravan route to Kano and the interior of the Hausa country starts from here, so the place will offer many opportunities. For the present we hope to do chiefly Bible translating, and to start some school and hospital work, if only the people here and the Government will leave us in peace. The work is not easy, and we want much help, especially praying help of the friends of Christ at home. The harder the fight, the better the victory under the Divine Leader, in whom the eternal promise of victory is given us."

Babes in the Wood.

TO transplant even for a brief season poor and delicate children from overcrowded and ill-conditioned slum homes in the East of London to the green fields and freer life of the forest lying beyond the suburbs, where pure air is as plentiful as it is free, is a task worthy of Christian philanthropy.

Such work Mrs. Helen J. Kerwin is doing, and is described in a little brochure, entitled "Babes in the Wood." This tells the story of last year's work in the Forest Cottage Homes. One hundred and eighty-three young girls have during the twelve months passed through the Home, each spending a fortnight in healthful and Christian surroundings, learning useful lessons to be worked out in their daily lives afterwards, and carrying away higher ideals and aims than their previous experience could furnish. Thirty-two boys were also benefited in the same period.

For thirteen years this useful work has been carried on unostentatiously, but to such an extent that 2,098 little folks, with days of childhood saddened by the misfortune, neglect, or sin of their parents, have had seasons of bright sunshine and days of gladness provided for them.

Take one illustration given: "Nellie is motherless, and although only eleven years old, she is a tower of strength to her father and his motherless children. Without a thought for herself, she shoulders the household cares, keeps the home clean and tidy, looks after the younger children, and does the family washing. The mending and cooking are only minor matters, for food is not abundant, and the wardrobe is decidedly scanty. But it means constant work, and aching back and weary limbs are not to be thought of while so much waits for her willing hands to accomplish. Surely no one ever earned a holiday better or deserved it more. When kindly neighbours promised to look after the family during Nellie's absence, she came to the Forest Home tired out, 'It is so nice to have nothing to do just for a little while,' said Nellie as she lay on the grass, and, though her thoughts often wandered to her father and the two tinies she left behind, yet she fully enjoyed the fresh, sweet air, and the delights of wood and vale. Nellie had never been out of London in her life. She was charmed, and grew well and strong, and treasured up the memory of these delights for father's benefit."

Several cases cited evoke the deepest pity, and serve to show how great is the need for this labour of love for the sake of the little ones, and to enforce the appeal for contributions in support of the work during the approaching summer. Mrs. Kerwin, whose address is Inchcolm, Wallwood Road, Leytonstone, will be glad to supply further information to friends of little children willing to co-operate with her.

Christian Endeavour Topic.

SUNDAY, MAY 12.

Practise Christianity (1 John iii. 14-18).

An extract from a letter received recently may help to elucidate this passage:—"I wanted to know how to love as Jesus loved, and I wanted to love Him, as He wants to be loved. Then there came into my life someone whom I had to love, to lay down my life for. I began to find it so difficult, for she seemed to be 'one of the least.' I think that must mean the least attractive. Jesus knew it was easy to love the attractive; so to help us to love the unlovely, He said, 'Think when you love them that you are loving Me.' Then I had to act love, and such a glad spring welled up in my heart. I found that my nature was thus becoming one with God's nature, and that there had been an igniting. I want now to tell cold hearts how to get ignited. If we wish to be knit to Christ, we must first be knit to one another. If you honour an uncomely brother, you will come to see his comeliness, and as you become newly knit to the whole Body through your love to him, you will find yourself more closely one with the Lord Jesus."

It is a great comfort to find that love is not treated by the Apostle as though it were an emotional or sentimental matter; every reference points to action. The love of God was manifested in the laying down of life. The lover of others is not to shut up his heart of compassion, but to help his brother in need. The injunction of the Apostle is that we should love in our deeds. If we begin with doing kindly and lovingly, we shall end by feeling the same. Often when people have come to me, saying that love had completely died out of their life towards some other person, I have bidden them go back, and act with love, making the other the centre and object of their own activities; the invariable result has been the refreshing of the warm geyser-springs of affection. Do not wait to feel love, but commence at once to show it, because it is right and your duty, and as you step out in lowly faith, you will find that God will cause all grace to abound towards you that you may also abound in this good work.

Love of this nature is self-giving, and it is the gift of the Spirit of God. Nowhere on this wintry soil can this exotic bloom. The heart of man cannot furnish it. There are a few wild growths, but they bear small comparison to its beautiful flower and fruit. Love is of (from) God. It proceeds out of his Nature; and is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Spirit, which is given unto us. "The fruit of the Spirit is love . . ." As we are united with Christ by faith, the love of God, which is in Him, will be brought into our hearts by the Holy Spirit, and we shall love with God's love.

This enables the Apostle to say, "We know that we have passed from death unto life because we love." Love is so absolutely foreign to our original Adam nature, that we know we have been born from above, so soon as we find ourselves willing to put the interests of another before our own, not because we have a natural affection or affinity for him, but for God's sake and because he belongs to God.

We were not asked who we would like for brothers and sisters when we were born into this world; but we came to love them just because they belonged to the same family and came of the same parents. So we shall come to love those who are of the same Divine family as ourselves, and our love to them, if they are children of God, shows we are born from above.

If there is hatred in our hearts to any, let us beware. We must uproot it, or smother it in love. When Mr. Moody found himself growing jealous of another minister he asked him to preach for him, did his best to secure him a full congregation, said all the good he could think of in introducing him, and sat down at the back of the house. He said that the cure was an effectual one. F. B. M.

C.E. NOTES.

A Society amongst Friends has been started in Sydney, New South Wales, by Mr. Edward Cadbury, who is visiting there. It is the first of the kind in that colony.

Thirty-five new societies were registered in the British Union last week. Of these eighteen are in Scotland, including four in Glasgow, and three in Jedburgh. Three belong to the Parish Church of Scotland.

The Floating Society, whose headquarters is at Barry, has a good record of work for its six months of existence. The Society has given away fifty-eight bundles of good literature, distributed a multitude of tracts in many languages, visited 515 ships, while 346 seamen have attended the central place of worship (Barry Congregational Church).

The Christian Endeavour Movement is happily gaining ground in the Church of England. There are eight Church societies in Bristol alone, and these recently held a rally in St. Philip's Schools, the vicar, Rev. J. O. West, presiding. Rev. F. J. Horsefield said that new Church of England societies are being affiliated now almost weekly, and a large quantity of literature explaining the aims and methods of their organization is being distributed.

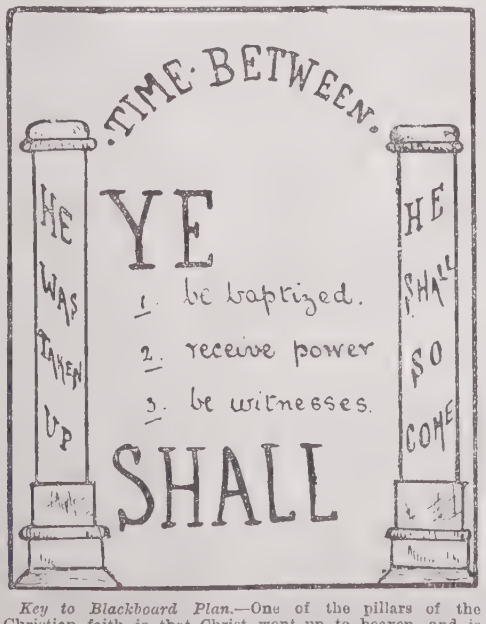
Jesus Ascends Into Heaven (Luke xxiv. 44-53 and Acts i. 1-11).

Golden Text: "While He blessed them, He was parted from them and carried up into heaven" (Luke xxiv. 51).



Key to Blackboard Plan.—One of the pillars of the Christian faith is that Christ went up to heaven, and is there now making intercession for us; another is the hope of the Christian that He is coming again. Meantime, the Christian has his work to do.

Christ Leaving This Earth.

His last words (Acts i. 3; Luke xxiv. 44) were to try and make the disciples understand how all the Scriptures spoke of Him.

Only Christ can open our eyes to understand (Luke xxiv. 31-45).

It was necessary (46) for Christ to suffer, rise again, and ascend into heaven.

He has entered heaven as King. "Lift up your heads, O ye gates, . . . and the King of Glory shall come in."

As Advocate. As our High Priest. As our Elder Brother. In all these names the sinner can draw near to God.

Christ is Coming Again.

How? As He went (11) in a cloud so "Behold He cometh with the clouds."

When? We do not know, not even the angels of God. What will be the signs of his coming? For answer study 1 Tim. iv. 1-3; 2 Tim. iii. 1-5; 2 Pet. iii. 3-14. We are to be looking for Him, for the "glorious appearing." We are to long for it—there is a reward for such (2 Tim. iv. 8). We shall be like Him—We shall be satisfied. The coming will be sudden (Matt. xxiv. 27). Meantime let us obey his command to do this in remembrance of Him, till He come.

The Time Between.

Christ founded his Kingdom on earth, and He left his disciples to carry on the work He began. They were to work in his strength. He would baptize them with the Holy Ghost. He would give them power. He would help them to witness for Him. Little by little the Kingdom would spread till it covered the whole earth.

How did it begin? With eleven men. They witnessed, filled with the Holy Spirit, and three thousand souls believed (Acts ii. 41). Next we read souls were added "daily" (47). Acts iv. 4: Five thousand believed.

Study in Acts "filled with the Holy Ghost," and "witnesses."

See also the lives of Peter, Stephen, Philip, Paul, &c., and notice how entirely altered they were; what they were we may all be. We have to witness in our homes, among our relatives and neighbours, and to do all we can to send the "good news" to other lands.

From Dr. Baedeker.

Hitherto the Lord has helped me. He provides day by day. He opens the door for his messages, and gives strength and fitness to his servant to enter in. At Stockholm the meetings for prayer and Scripture instruction, and the gatherings for Gospel addresses in the Y.M.C.A. and Flora Church were very encouraging, and now also here the assemblies are full, and drinking in the Word, in spite of difficulty by translation.

On Tuesday, May 2, I hope to go to Christiania, where I am expected to remain a week for addresses in the Central Hall and other places.

Orebro, Sweden, April 29. F. W. Baedeker.

Liverpool City Mission.

To those who have followed the history of the Liverpool City Mission, the seventy-second annual report, which deals with the year 1900, will be particularly acceptable. It is a matter for sincere thankfulness to God that so well qualified a staff of workers has been given, and that the means by which they are employed should have been provided. In nearly every quarter of the city the Mission is represented. Besides the ordinary visitation of homes, there are twenty-three halls, with their band of 500 workers, holding various meetings regularly for young and old.

Others are set apart for special service. One continues the visiting of public-houses, and not only succeeds in winning customers from these dens, but becomes a true minister to the employés whose unfortunate duties preclude them from attending the means of grace. Another finds a sphere among cabmen and tram drivers at their stands, in their yards, and in their homes. A third has a none too easy charge in the visitation of common lodging-houses. Here, as in other phases of the Mission's campaign, under the simple, but powerful Word of God, scoffers are awed into silence, hard hearts are softened and melted to repentance. A fourth cares specially for butchers, whose appreciation of the kindly ministrations of the missionary is often shown. The Bible-women are able to carry on rescue work, by gathering fallen ones into Homes and restoring others to friends. The superintendent of the Mission is Mr. Alex. Armstrong, 3, Hackins Hey, Liverpool.

About Books.

"THE LAND OF THE MOORS."

THE fact that Morocco is the nearest Mohammedan country to our own shores must ever give it a peculiar, if at the same time almost melancholy interest to us as a Christian community. It is not easy to realize that while one of the Pillars of Hercules is occupied by the English town of Gibraltar, the narrow strait which divides the two also marks in clear and sharp fashion the point of separation between the progressive West and the mysterious East, with customs which stretch far back into the mists of antiquity. More important than all, the traveller has already reached the line of demarcation between lands bearing, at least outwardly, the Christian name, and those in which the worship of the False Prophet holds sway. Mr. Budgett Meakin has performed a useful service by following up the "The Moorish Empire" with The Land of the Moors (15s. Sonnenschein). We have here the master hand of one who has made practically a life study of his subject, and who is building up a series of books which no one with special interests in the country—religious or commercial, certainly no missionary library—can afford to be without. The earlier volume traced the history of the country along the lines of internal development and external relations, at the same time supplying a valuable bibliography of the subject. Now we have the land itself brought under review, and Mr. Meakin has in the press "The Moors," dealing with the people.

The author heartily endorses, from his own experience, the statement of previous travellers, that the adoption of native habits and costume is practically indispensable to the traveller who wishes to mix with the people with any degree of freedom; and quotes the opinion of Rohlfs, that "no great vocabulary is required, some 400 or 500 words, with practice in their use, that is all." Beginning with Tangier, a full account is given of the open and closed ports, of interior cities, towns, and villages, and of the country districts. As an indication of the accuracy of much of our information about the country, we quote a reference to the capital:—

> It is impossible to do more than guess at the population of Fez. Among the estimates of writers on this subject are twenty, thirty, forty, fifty, eighty-eight, ninety to one hundred, and three hundred and eighty thousand: evidences of the value of "statistics" in Morocco. The numbers are probably under 100,000, even when the Court is here.

Mission stations are all carefully pointed out; but the reader, who may have laid down missionary reports with a feeling that the country was at least in a measure satisfactorily "occupied," will have it all too sadly brought home to him that only the fringe has yet been even touched in this way.

The nearest "closed land" to Europe is the "Kingdom of Sûs," in the south of the Empire.

> It is the determined policy of the Morocco Government to keep Sûs closed, in order to prevent any kind of complications, and until it has put its home quarters in order it cannot be blamed for so doing. With such corrupt machinery, the best of men at the head would find it very difficult to deal with European questions in that distant province, and, tantalizing as it may be to financiers, manufacturers, and traders, prejudicial even to the pent-up people, one cannot honestly commend the opening up of Sûs until the most pressing administrative reforms have been at least set on foot.

But the wheels of the chariot of reform tarry long under Mohammedan rule; and, in fact, Mr. Meakin practically finds in the prospect of the break-up of the Empire the only hope of betterment, his belief being that when that crisis does arrive it will be found that "France is the normal heir to Morocco."

We rise from the perusal of the book, oppressed by a sense of the thoroughness with which the hands of the clock are at least held back, if they cannot be put back, wherever the voice of the muezzin is heard. May the trumpet call of the Gospel sound ever louder until all be awakened from this sleep of death.

Many will welcome the little work All Change, for the variety and usefulness of its contents, which include miniature homilies and essays, poetical selections, &c. (1s. Elliot Stock.)

Lovers of Cornish lore and life will be charmed with the sketch Down by the Western Sea. In its perusal the reader is taken back to the early days of Methodism, and introduced to many worthies of the times (3s. 6d. Champness).

In response to a wish expressed by a friend, Miss Charlotte Murray has written Through Grey to Gold (2s. 6d. Partridge), to enforce the old motto "Doe the next thynge"; and the result is a volume calculated to fill a useful place in many a household, in following up the counsels of older to younger members. It is a story of quiet service to God and man, while the pictures it draws are full of interest to all who take delight in a peaceful home life.

Fruitful or Fruitless: A Book of Quiet Meditations. By the late Canon Hoare. (1s. 6d. Religious Tract Society.) Miss Hoare has edited in this little volume some choice excerpts collected from sermons preached by her father. The main purpose is to assist an apprehension of the great truths of the Gospel, and at the same time to show how this leads to practical fruit in daily life and conduct. The pages are definitely devotional in tone and tendency.

Hansina Hinz: A True Story of the Moravian Missions in Greenland, translated from the German of H. G. Schneider. (1s. Religious Tract Society.) These pages outline the life of a peasant girl from North Germany, who was led after her conversion to consecrate herself to missionary service. She went out to Greenland, where she endured great hardships, and was only spared to labour for three or four years. The book portrays a beautiful Christian experience, and will be appreciated, not only as a record of wholehearted devotion, but as a charming illustration of Moravian simplicity.

All in Christ: Devotional Thoughts from the Writings of H. C. G. Moule, D.D. Selected and arranged by J. H. Burn, B.D. (3s. 6d. Marshall Bros.) The expository and other works of Professor Moule are rich in thoughts that may easily be detached and presented as "Golden Grain." Here we have upwards of four score readings, profoundly spiritual, and experimental in the most helpful sense of that word. The excerpts on prayer and surrender to God's will are such as will minister light and comfort to many. Books of gatherings are numerous, but we know of none that can compare with this for choice and stimulating contents.

In Memoriam: The Coronation Service of Her Majesty Queen Victoria on June 28, 1838. (1s. J. E. Hawkins, 15, Paternoster Row.) This is a deeply interesting publication, presenting all that its title claims, with notes and appendices, collated by G. R. Badenoch, LL.D., who says in the preface: "The simple, sublime, and Scriptural prayers and exhortations of the Coronation Service of our late Gracious Queen ought to impress all sections of the Empire with the unspeakable importance of maintaining and extending the principles of the Christian Faith in Church and State, as established by law, and that, in this respect, there may be no alteration in the Coronation Service of our Gracious Sovereign King Edward VII." A frontispiece represents Queen Victoria as "Kaisar-i-Hind"; and there are illustrations of the coronation crown, and other objects of State significance and symbolical interest. Dr. Badenoch calls upon Protestants to resist to the uttermost any attempt to repeal any portion of the Bill of Rights.

The Hope Trust is now filling a useful place in Scotland by supplying Protestant and temperance lecturers, as well as advancing these two important causes by other means; and the biography of the founder, John Hope, Philanthropist and Reformer (7s. 6d. Elliot, Edinburgh), shows that the Trust was the natural consummation of a life devoted largely to the advancement of these same principles. The author (Rev. David Jamie, one of the trustees) has added a brief account of the effort made by Mr. Hope's relatives to secure the reduction of the will; and the outcome being that the Trust is now established on a firm basis, the picture of the man whose name it bears has an interest more than local. This is no psychological study, nor does the book relate any great personal crises. Rather we have a chronicle of the life of a professional man with strong Christian and philanthropic sympathies, giving comparatively little domestic or even personal detail, but dwelling much on the part he took in every movement for the public weal.

Two prophetic essays are before us. One is entitled The Signs of Spring: A Pause on the Century's Threshold, by Rev. T. H. Passmore, M.A. (1s. Elliot Stock.) It points out many of the features of the present time calculated to make men tremble who never pray; and it distinguishes emphatically between the Parousia and Epiphaneia as two distinct future comings of our Lord. The former a secret rapture of the saints, the other "in all the awful power and avenging majesty of God." The second pamphlet is The Time of the End, by Rev. Robert Graves Walker. (3d. M'Gee, Dublin.) Its one purpose is as emphatically to contest the idea of two future comings, to show that the Parousia of Matt. xxiv. 26, 27, "as the lightning cometh forth from the East, and is seen (R.V.) even unto the West," cannot be secret; that the anti-Christ will persecute before the Lord's saints are caught up to meet Him; that this is the teaching of the Lord and his Apostles, and the early knowledge, assurance, and belief of the Christians nearest to the Apostles. The former is the view generally maintained at present, but in justice to ourselves and in reverence to the words of our Lord, we should read the appeal to Scripture on the other view—which, we fear, very few have done.

Among the Churches.

Rev. John Draper, now chaplain to the Bishop of Mauritius, and formerly rector of Whitechapel, has accepted the vicarage of Bromley, E., offered to him by the Bishop of London.

Rev. G. Campbell Morgan's sermons and addresses attracted large congregations during his recent short visit to Wales. His lecture at Cory Hall, Cardiff, on D. L. Moody, was greatly appreciated.

In the Baptist churches Rev. W. P. Davies has become pastor of Swaffham Church, Norfolk; Rev. J. H. Carter of the church at Bingley, Yorks.; and Rev. John Phillips of Puncheston Church, Pembroke.

The Salvation Army have purchased the mission building in New Cross district, Manchester, known as Elm Street Hall, from the committee of the Manchester Baptist Union, and are about to effect considerable repairs to the fabric.

In the Congregational churches Rev. William J. Farrow has become minister of Hunter's Bar Church, Sheffield, Rev. C. A. Winter of Ansty and Groby Churches, Leicester, and Rev. J. Knox of the newly-formed church at Tranmere, Birkenhead.

As a result of services conducted during the Simultaneous Mission by Rev. Herbert Hoole, of Cleethorpes, sixty-four persons were received into church fellowship on Sunday last at Dulwich Grove Congregational Church, S.E., by the pastor, Rev. Albert Swift.

An interesting triple celebration took place last week at Sowerby Bridge Congregational Church, viz., the attaining of his fiftieth birthday by the pastor (Rev. G. S. Smith); his completing twenty-five years of service in the ministry, and at the same time reaching his silver wedding-day.

Earl Egerton of Tatton has promised an additional donation of £500 towards the Church House new buildings, provided the remainder of the sum necessary for the completion of the second portion of the work can be paid or promised in the current year. The sum required is £10,900.

The annual festival of Sunday schools in connection with the Church of England Sunday School Institute, Serjeants' Inn, Fleet Street, was held on Saturday at the Crystal Palace. Between 10,000 and 12,000 children were present in the care of their teachers or relatives, and about 100 schools were represented.

Rev. Fred H. King, of Bow Road Baptist Church, London, E., has decided to accept an invitation to the Stroud Green Baptist Church, N., and hopes to commence his ministry there on the second Sunday in June. Farewell services will be held the previous Sunday at Bow, which will complete exactly five years' work.

At the recent business session of the Baptist Union, the secretary made an urgent and solemn appeal to the denomination to clear the way during the period from October 1 to December 31 next, so as to concentrate attention on the Century Fund, as it is of the utmost importance that this should be done.

The eighty-second Conference of the Primitive Methodist Connexion will be held in Sheffield this year, commencing on Wednesday, June 12, and continuing its session for about ten days. Already the approach of the Conference is exciting considerable interest, and a cordial welcome will be extended to it by all the churches in the city.

Recent statistics published by the Wesleyan Methodist Church show that its membership is proportionately increasing at a higher rate by 2.2 per cent. than the growth of the population in the British Isles. The number of persons "on trial" for membership is larger than at any time during the past nineteen years. Candidates for the ministry are also more numerous than usual.

At the meeting of the Canning Town Settlement of Women Workers, held recently at the Memorial Hall, E.C., the testimony of Dr. Eleanor Shepheard to medical mission work in hospital and dispensary showed the wide area of good work accomplished. Miss Darnton followed with a description of factory girls and their club, and Miss Stockburn told of the sufferings of invalid and crippled children, and the joy of the workers in being able to relieve so many.

The officers and general committee of the Wesleyan Million-Guinea Twentieth Century Fund have met the various district chairmen and secretaries so that the matter might be brought prominently before the May synods with the view of securing promises to complete the fund by an early date. The total amount promised at the end of April was 878,300 guineas, and £610,637 had been actually remitted to the central office; 121,700 guineas are thus wanted to complete the amount.

Recognition services in connection with the settlement of Rev. F. J. Feltham as Pastor of the Putney Baptist Church, were held on May 2. In the afternoon Rev. J. W. Ewing, of Peckham, preached an appropriate and helpful sermon, and in the evening a public meeting was held under the presidency of Rev. W. Williams, Chairman of the London Baptist Association, at which addresses were delivered by Revs. E. Henderson, W. Townsend, W. J. Harris, and others.

The annual report of the Wesleyan Metropolitan Chapel Building Fund states that eight new chapels have been opened during the year at a cost of £56,000, in addition to the South London Central Hall. Seventeen sites are now ready for immediate occupation, and twenty-two more are recommended for acquisition. The Leysian Central Hall scheme involves an estimated outlay of £105,000, and towards this the committee propose to grant £9,000. In the Wandsworth Road £12,000 is to be spent on new premises, towards which the committee grant £4,400, whilst towards the Deptford mission scheme they propose to grant £6,000, the outlay there being more than £12,000.

Fallen Asleep.

Rev. WILLIAM BUTLER DOHERTY, vicar of St. Matthew's, Kingsdown, Bristol, who died suddenly while addressing a meeting of parishioners. Mr. Doherty was ordained in the diocese of Ripon in 1874, and, after holding curacies at Heckmondwike and Wakefield, was appointed vicar of St. Edmund's, Leeds, in 1876. He remained there until 1879, when he was appointed to Kingsdown. He was sixty-eight years of age.—Rev. JOB LEE, Baptist minister, of Laycock Keighley, Yorkshire, in his seventy-sixth year. Mr. Lee had laboured in the neighbourhood for forty years, and was widely esteemed.—Rev. JOHN MILUM, for some years a most earnest, able Wesleyan missionary on the West Coast of Africa. In spite of severe domestic bereavements and a prolonged and stubborn ailment engendered by the climate, he continued in the work beyond all reasonable expectation. He retired in 1897.—Mr. THOMAS WILLSHAW, for many years one of the best-known and best-loved figures in Manchester Methodism.—Mr. H. S. SUTTON, for many years editor of the Alliance News, the official organ of the United Kingdom Alliance, aged seventy-six.—Rev. Dr. J. T. DRIFFIELD, Emeritus Professor of Mathematics in Princeton University. He took a warm interest in the Presbyterian Church, and was a frequent preacher in its pulpits, and writer in its Press, where his intelligence and candour were conspicuous.—Mrs. MAGEE, the widow of the late Archbishop of York, has passed away somewhat suddenly at the Deanery, Peterborough. Pneumonia supervened on a cold which she contracted in travelling.

Evangelistic.

Mr Henry Varley at Elgin.

FOLLOWING his fruitful work at Aberdeen, Mr. Varley undertook a mission in Elgin. The opening meeting was held on the afternoon of Sunday, April 28, when a lecture to men was attended by 600 or 700 men. In the evening Mr. Varley spoke to upwards of 1,000 persons. During the week Bible readings have been given in the afternoons, evangelistic meetings being held in the evenings. From Elgin Mr. Varley proceeds to Huntly, where he commences a mission to-day (Thursday).

U.F. Church Mission at Inverness.

Mr. J. R. D. McAusland is at present singing at a mission in the United Free High Church, Inverness. The meetings are held each evening, except Saturday, at 8 o'clock, and addresses are delivered by local clergymen. On Sabbath evening the place of meeting was the Music Hall, seated for 1,200, and kindly lent by the Salvation Army, which was crowded to the door, many failing to get admission. Mr. McAusland sang with great fervour, and earnest addresses were delivered by Rev. James Burnet, Pitcaple, and Mr. Archibald Mackintosh.

Euston Theatre.

The service at this new place of public resort in Euston Road, N.W., on Sunday evening last, proved to be a very helpful one. Rev. D. H. Moore preached from Romans v. 8 to a large audience, and Madame Annie Ryall sang several Gospel hymns very sweetly. Many of the audience stood up as a sign that they desired the prayers of God's people, and were helped by the workers. Others, too, who went away, gave evidence that the arrow of conviction had been pressed home by the power of the Spirit.

At Lincoln Fair.

The mission recently held at Lincoln in connection with the April fair was of a fruitful character. Among the evangelists who took part were Messrs. F. Cockrem, Barry Wake, Northcote Willey, and J. Neech. On the Sundays the meetings were held in the open air, and large crowds of people listened with deep attention. Fifty-four meetings were held during the breakfast half-hours in the mess-rooms of the large foundries, upwards of 2,000 men, each morning, hearing the Word of Life. During the week 25,000 tracts were given away, and in most instances were well received. There have been manifest cases of blessing, and from the Bible carriage many Bibles, Testaments, and Gospels were given to the children who gathered round.

Gipsy Smith at Colchester.

During the mission recently held at Colchester by Gipsy Smith, the Corn Exchange, the largest building in the town, was crowded every night, and many were unable to gain admission. On several nights the principal tradesmen closed earlier than usual, and the services commenced half an hour earlier than the advertised time. More than 400 persons passed through the inquiry room. On Tuesday, April 30, a meeting was held in Headgate Chapel, when the body of the building was filled with those who had been benefited by the services, and the galleries with sympathizing friends. Rev. Jabez Parkyn, President of the Council, presided, and counsels to the converts were given by Revs. T. Batty, E. Spinner, W. Moore, and other friends. Personal testimony was given by several of the converts.

Mr. Charrington's Work.

A fruitful Mission has been concluded by Mr. Henry Collins, of the Evangelization Society, and Mr. Frank Weaver in the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End, E. The month's work has been signalized by the fact that not a night has passed but some have entered the inquiry-room, after the ordinary meeting, desirous of further instruction upon the way of salvation. Mr. Collins is a most earnest exponent of the Gospel, and Mr. Weaver's singing greatly added to the success of the effort. One evening a most respectable and gentlemanly-looking man sought out Mr. Weaver, and said his singing had so affected him that he determined to give his heart to the Lord that night. Throughout the month a considerable number of most interesting cases have been recorded. One man, well dressed, strolled into the "Men's Own" one Sunday afternoon; he was much impressed with what he heard, and on the invitation being given to the evening meeting in the Great Hall, he promised to attend. He had run through £30,000, was separated from his wife, had held good positions one after another; in one week recently he had spent £23 in drink. He professed that night to decide for the Lord, and has since been attending the services regularly. The Sunday night meetings have been filled with attentive listeners, and the week nights have been above the average.

Mr. Rowland Edwards in America.

The winter season in this country has in many places been fraught with a rich ingathering of souls. I do not, however, think there has been that general religious awakening for which many had hoped and prayed. The nation, as a whole, still needs to be stirred.

Conventions such as those held by Mr. F. B. Meyer have drawn together large audiences, composed for the most part of church members, who have been greatly helped in their Christian life, but the fact remains that the unchurched masses, as in England, are terribly indifferent to eternal verities. If such conventions could be immediately followed by two or three weeks' thorough evangelistic work in some large building (not ecclesiastical) there would, I think, be good results in the way of soul-saving. Christian people are prepared by the convention for such work, and it seems a pity to let pass the opportunity of endeavouring, on a large scale, to reach the unconverted.

It has been my privilege to preach Christ in Boston, Chicago, Minneapolis, Philadelphia, and other cities and to see a considerable number of persons turn to the Lord. I had six consecutive weeks in the Moody Church, Chicago, where hundreds of people were dealt with in the inquiry rooms. This is a "revival" church; Dr. Torrey is a host in himself, and his preaching is so pungent, so thoroughly evangelistic, that people are converted every Sunday. A large choir, admirably led by Professor Towner, greatly helps, and workers, in the persons of the Institute students, are posted throughout the building to deal with the anxious.

I have not yet had the pleasure of meeting Mr. William Phillips Hall, of New York, and the other well-known leaders in the Twentieth Century National Campaign. They have, during the winter, organized union meetings in several cities, and with good success. Mr. Hall is a first-rate evangelist, and a leading business man in New York. In Philadelphia I have seen a good deal of that stalwart Biblical preacher, Dr. Munhall, who has been in the firing line for thirty years, and is still as vigorous and as fresh as ever.

Now that summer approaches, tent campaigns are being planned in several cities, in which I hope to take part. My standing address in America is "Parkside," Girard Avenue and Fortieth Street, Philadelphia.—Heartily yours, Rowland D. Edwards.

Mr. James Sprunt conducted a series of evangelistic meetings in Belfast during the month of April. On Sundays, Tuesdays, and Fridays, the services were in the Iron Hall, Mountpottinger, and on other occasions at the Missions in Saunders Street and Edith Street. On Sunday, April 28, an address was delivered to men only at the Y.M.C.A. There were good attendances at all the meetings, and some interesting cases of blessing.

Mr. Charles Inglis has conducted a fruitful mission at Cotton Street Chapel, Poplar. The meetings were well attended, and deeply spiritual in tone. The loving unity and prayerful co-operation of the Church prepared the way, and it is felt that deep blessing will result.

On Sunday last Mr. Leonard Weaver gave addresses in the morning and evening in the Opera House, Blackpool, and also spoke in the Baptist Chapel in the afternoon. The night service was in all respects a wonderful season. The theatre was densely thronged, and at the close of an impressive addresss seventy men and women sought the Saviour.

Mr. Bob Johnson has conducted a week's mission at the West-end House Mission Hall, Blackheath Hill. Both at the outdoor and indoor meetings numerous audiences listened with interest and profit to his experiences and Gospel preaching. Several hearers were led to decision for Christ.

Personalia.

Mr. W. R. MOODY's home has been brightened by the advent of a little girl. Mother and child are reported to be doing well.

Rev. DAVID BARON has just left this country on a short mission tour to Galicia and Hungary, from which he hopes to return about June 8.

Mr. IRA D. SANKEY is thrown into grief by the death of his aged mother. Mrs. Sankey, sen., had reached the advanced age of ninety. Many will condole with the well-known evangelist in the great sorrow which has thus befallen him.

Mr. J. H. GREENE, who is widely known in connection with the Children's Special Service Mission, is en route for Australasia, with the intention of devoting himself to mission work chiefly, though not exclusively, among young people and children. He has had previous experience in the field, having, in 1892-93, conducted an eight months' mission in Victoria and other colonies, with marked success.

"The Practical Teacher."—In addition to its many ordinary useful features, THE PRACTICAL TEACHER for May contains a lucid article by Mr. J. H. Yoxall, M.P., on "The Judgment According to Cocker"-ton. "The Commonwealth of Australia" forms the topic for a striking paper, and is accompanied by a large supplementary map for teaching purposes. (6d. monthly. 35 and 36, Paternoster Row.)

Marriage Law in U.S.A.—A residence of ninety days in some of the Western States of America was, until recently, a sufficient qualification to entitle a pleader to enter the court and to obtain a divorce. Many wealthy society folk seeking release from uncongenial marriage ties flocked thither. But the Court of Appeal has put a veto on these iniquitous practices, and declared all such divorces null and void. The period of residence has now been raised to twelve months.

Fishermen at the Shetland Islands.—During the herring fishing season many special efforts are made to reach the migratory population engaged in it. At Baltassound, in the island of Unst (the most northernly of the British Islands), it is estimated that at least 8,000 men and women will arrive during June, and, as during the last two seasons, Rev. W. T. Haydon (Haroldswick, Unst, Shetland) is organizing Gospel services to be held in a large tent granted for the purpose. In both years the work has been owned of God in the conversion of men and women. Besides holding services the Missioner visits any cases of sickness or accident that may occur, and in all possible ways tries to win the people to righteousness and care for their welfare. The tent is opened during the day as a kind of Home, with magazines and wholesome literature provided, and materials for letter writing. Efforts to make the work self-supporting have been unsuccessful, the collections falling short of the working expenses, and the prayer and sympathy of the Lord's people in the matter are earnestly solicited.

The Anti-Infidel Tract Enterprise.—Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh (70, King's Cross Road, W.C.), writes:—"The open-air season has commenced in earnest, and scarce a day passes but numerous appeals are made by Christian workers for free grants of literature for distribution at these gatherings. In former years I have been able readily to respond, but am helpless now, as, by the fire at my printers, the plates of all my books, pamphlets, and leaflets were destroyed; and as they were only partially insured, and their own loss was not covered, I have lost everything. Therefore, unless £250 is forthcoming, the work must cease, as my stock of tracts is exhausted, and I am without the means to re-produce. The country is being flooded with atheistic and impure literature. Should this be the case, the stoppage will be exceedingly regrettable, as, during the past quarter of a century, more than a dozen Christian Evidence papers have been allowed to go to the wall, and if, under present circumstances, the Christian's Armoury has to follow, such a calamity would give the atheistic party cause for triumph."

A Heartrending Case.

A Blind Lady and her Husband, and their two daughters, who are Governesses.

Mrs. C. writes: "The mother of my late Governess, aged 68 (and husband, aged 78), entirely dependent on their two daughters, who are governesses. There is no hope of Mrs. ——— recovering her sight, and she suffers great pain. The daughters are unable to earn sufficient to support themselves and parents. The mother used to earn a little by needlework before she went blind. It is very hard on hem all, as they have seen better days. Excellent references from doctor and clergy."

The Rev. J. PULLEIN THOMPSON, Hon. Sec., the Vicarage, 27, Tite Street, Chelsea, S.W., will gladly acknowledge donations, or may be sent to the Office of THE CHRISTIAN.

A SEA-SIDE HOLIDAY

FOR

Blind and Crippled Girls.

TO THE READERS OF "THE CHRISTIAN."

DEAR FRIENDS,—The touchingly sad condition of large numbers of Blind and Crippled Children in the pestilential slums of the Metropolis can scarcely be realized. These suffering little ones are for the most part confined in miserable attics and cellars, exposed to pain, dirt, cold, hunger, and rags; their young but burdensome lives linger on in these foul dens, year in and year out, with no prospect of relief. It is for these truly needy gutter children that a real Holiday Home is in working order at Clacton-on-Sea, and small parties of about 20 are sent down in rotation all through the fine weather. They are permitted to stay a fortnight, or more, in needy cases. They are lovingly cared for by kind helpers who are in deep sympathy with this form of crushed childlife, and all the joy and delights of sea-side rambles on the beach and in the green fields is afforded these grateful little sufferers.

Ten Shillings only will provide the entire cost of each child during the 14 days' holiday rest. Who will share the privilege of this sweet service for Christ? Quite a little army of applicants are clamouring at our Mission doors, and we desire to send none empty away.

Help should be forwarded to,

Yours in the Master's work among these afflicted children,

JOHN A. GROOM,

8, Sekforde Street, Clerkenwell, E.C.

Notes & Comments

IT is a pleasure to state that the recent series of papers on "Foundation Truths of the Gospel," brought us a large number of appreciative letters from our readers. The times call for a positive statement of the vital doctrines of the faith; and in a short time we hope to begin another similar series of instructive articles. Meantime, in our next issue, we propose to give the first of a number of brief and vivid papers expository of the Epistle of James, by Rev. T. A. Gurney, M.A., LL.B., of Swanage, Dorset.

Uniform with his helpful works on "Discipleship" and "Studies in Malachi," Rev. G. Campbell Morgan has sent forth a striking volume, God's Perfect Will. (1s. 6d. Morgan & Scott.) In a sentence or two, the message of the book is—

> The Will of God is the supreme subject in every life. The Old and New Testaments alike testify to its importance. Within that Will man finds perfection, pleasure, permanence. It is practicable, because of its nature, its revelation, and the fact of its being accompanied with the gift of life, which makes it possible to obey. It is glorious, indeed, for heaven itself lies within the compass of its thought.

Naturally, Mr. Campbell Morgan presses the practical question—How may we know the Will of God for to-day, in all the details of the hours as they come and go? and how may we discover it in any crises that may arise? Given desire and devotion, light may be had from (1) the Word of God, (2) the immediate illumination of the indwelling Spirit, and (3) the combination of circumstances. The book deserves many readers, and will have them.

A series of addresses which Pastor Stockmayer has recently given at Bethshan, Drayton Park, will shortly be published by Messrs. Morgan & Scott, under the title Forbearing Love (The School of Christ).

The fine weather now upon us brings to all, who are in health the keenest sense of enjoyment. To those surrounded by fresh, pure air, the season is one of reinvigoration and upbuilding; and into the hearts of many dwellers in city courts and slums there come longings for what is beyond their reach. The importance of the "Day in the Country," and other similar efforts, cannot be over-estimated; and we would remind our readers that no time should be lost in sending us contributions to be expended in this way. Every week is precious, for the summer is all too short to overtake the great hosts of pale-faced children in London, who, except through philanthropic effort, never enjoy such a boon.

In view of the approaching holiday season, a most timely question for Christian people is raised by a correspondent in a country village. Opportunities for useful service are frequently passed over by those who follow the crowd to popular resorts; but there are many quiet, pleasant villages in which children and adults alike would find bodily restoration as readily as at the seaside, and in which the holding of open-air and other Gospel services would be a bringing of the water of life to those who are thirsty indeed. We commend the thought to the prayerful consideration of our readers. Our correspondent has his own district in view, but there are such villages and parishes in every county in England.

The census returns have just been made public, and owing to the exceptional conditions in which we find ourselves at present, they will be examined with more than ordinary interest. A growing population naturally forces us to study the economic situation of the country; food, employment, and housing come first of all. The question is, Can we go on in the old way with more mouths to fill and market conditions becoming more difficult? The first batch of census returns shows, with few exceptions, increasing growth in town and city life, and a very sparse and barely maintained occupation of the rural districts.

Evidently the notion of home production is dying out in favour of reliance upon foreign produce. Mr. Rider Haggard, in his articles in the Daily Express, tries to make us see the unwisdom of this policy. It will be a pity if we awake to the fact too late. To abandon the soil is to abandon one of God's purposes for men; to crowd into towns is to court a life that must more or less become artificial. Besides this, we must face the unpleasant fact that if war broke out, our food supply would at once be menaced. Shall we be wise enough to try and grow our own food, and so use the land as God meant it to be used?

Religiously, the continued drift of the population from country to town, and from city to suburb, presents a double problem, which the churches of all denominations have so far failed to solve. The one problem is how to maintain an adequate ministry in the villages where it is impossible for individual churches to be self-dependent for lack of adequate numbers. The other is how to provide due accommodation for the multitudes who go into the suburbs, and who leave the city churches nearly empty. Since the drift of population seems to have set permanently in its present directions, these problems will have to be faced with whole-hearted determination if we are to retain our spiritual hold on the country. The secret lies in a true brotherly co-operation, first among the individual churches of each denomination—in which the strong shall be more ready to help the weak—and then among the denominations as a whole. Unity and energy are the great conditions of winning England for Christ.

The friends of Sunday-schools are much relieved by the statement presented at the annual meeting of the Sunday School Union last week. Numerical statistics frequently need careful watching, for figures have a curious way of showing results which do not always represent the inward facts. Mr. Howard Evans startled us in August last by producing certain figures which seemed to show an alarming falling off in school attendance. Since that time a controversy has gone on without interruption. Now Mr. Carey Bonner, the Secretary of the Union, shows that there has been an actual net increase of 123,620 scholars in five years. We are glad to have this assurance, and it will do something to hearten Sunday-school workers. At the same time, Mr. Bonner's words of warning should be carefully noted. This increase is not wholly satisfactory, since it is not commensurate with the growth of the population.

Besides, the mere fact of attendance is not everything; the more serious matter concerns the quality of the teaching given. After a certain age vast numbers of youths and maidens quit the school; but they do not go forward to the Church, and in many cases they betray lamentable ignorance concerning the elements of Christian truth. There is need for clear and definite instruction about the foundation truths of the Faith. These can be simply expounded and made interesting. And why not also have recourse to the good and ancient method of catechising? But for this the teachers must first equip themselves, and it is here that the pastor can help them by systematic instruction.

Mrs. M. Watts Hughes who has devoted many years to the voice-training of young Christians for the Master's service, has written a forcible and instructive booklet, entitled, "The Young Christian Singers of the Churches." Her counsel is both wise and practical, and it is time that attention was drawn to the matter in view of her experience, which is given as follows:—that out of thousands who used to attend the singing classes held at churches, chapels, and mission rooms, she is able to point to no more than five who in later years kept their voices for the service of Christ and the Church.

This is accounted for by the small encouragement, if any, given them by the churches to use their voices definitely for Christ; but the best soloists were in great demand at concerts and entertainments of a social character given by clubs connected with the young life of the Church, when, however, they discovered that not sacred but secular song was in request. Those who control the musical arrangements in the churches, and all who desire to retain young people who are gifted with musical ability in Christian service, will do well to ponder the timely words of wisdom contained in Mrs. Watts Hughes' booklet. (1d. Morgan & Scott.)

The recent discussion in Parliament in regard to the votes of directors may well afford ground for thoughtfulness as to much of our legislation affecting social matters. Mr. John Burns spoke feelingly in respect to the dishousing of the London poor by the great railway companies, directors of which sit in the two Houses; doubtless, to judge from the result of the division on the question, before long the votes of such representatives will be made illegal. The view is, however, an even wider one. If it were possible to exclude from divisions upon Temperance questions not only the vote of the director or owner of distilleries and breweries and public-houses, but also the shareholder in the great brewing and distilling companies, can any one doubt for a moment that the well-being of the nation would be advanced immeasurably? Is it possible for those who are personally interested in the development of the dread drink trade to vote in favour of any measure antagonistic to their own interests?

In the striking and comprehensive picture of the Diocese of Wakefield, presented by Dr. Eden a few days ago in his first visitation, it is easy to see how many obstacles there are to-day in the way of the Gospel. Every year seems to place fresh impediments in the way of spiritual progress. The hurry and rush of modern commercial life, the struggle for bare existence, the feverish longing for counteracting excitement, the temptations spread broadcast by the drink interest—all these have to be reckoned with. Yet the simple Gospel continues to make way, and there are daily "added to the Church such as are being saved."

The Church Times is always speaking in a very offensive manner against "schism." Now it has become guilty of the very offence which it condemns. The Bishop of Hereford, in the most kind and brotherly manner, spoke at the annual meeting of the West London Mission, whose operations have brought so many hundreds of people to Christ. Yet he is branded by our contemporary for blessing "alien, and in some degree hostile, work," and for gravely offending "against Church order in promoting schism," as though the church of that parish made no spiritual provision for the people. Such criticisms as these (and in the Church Times they are quite common) are utterly un-Christian, and antagonistic to all right feeling. It would seem as if the colour of a robe, or the swing of a censer, were of greater importance than the salvation of men's souls. What is all this continued carping criticism, but the spirit of the priest who passed by the wounded man on the other side, deliberately leaving him to the mercy of the Samaritan, or anyone else?

The Pilot contains a remarkable article by one of the most "Catholic" of the High Anglicans, in which some curious and most suggestive admissions are made. We are far from agreeing with much that the writer advances; but there is one point which certainly deserves wide attention. He publicly abandons his old idea that clubs, gymnasiums, &c., for men are the most necessary things in order to get them eventually interested in religion. He tried this for years, carefully avoiding reference to religious subjects lest he should "choke them off." And the result? nil!—with the confession that, after all, the great thing is to first deal with men's consciences. And as to the social side of the work, that is not abandoned; "But," he says:—

> I believe that every single work of charity, or reform, or education, that is done, must not only be done from Christian principles, but the reason why you do it must be made manifest to those for whom you do it. You must tell them that you do it for his sake, to bring them to Him.

The writer of this confession, Mr. Dolling, has done perhaps as much purely social work as any member of the Church of England, and his words are worth noting.

The repressive action of the French Administration in regard to education by the Orders, and the recent expulsion of the Jesuits from certain towns in Spain, has apparently led the General of the Jesuits, himself a Spaniard, to decide upon a change of front in Great Britain. It is now officially stated that in future the members of the Order stationed in England will confine themselves entirely to educational and missionary work; or, in other words, that they will bring all their injurious and unhealthy influence to bear upon the young. Yet Great Britain does not take warning from the results of their influence upon the Continent, or follow the example of those Roman Catholic countries which have found it necessary to curtail the licence hitherto afforded to the Jesuits.

A visitor to Cuba speaks very hopefully of the Protestant movement there. The natives are much attracted by the Free Church forms of religion, and especially by the Congregationalists and Baptists whose services are thronged, and whose form of government they call "the Liberty Religion." The field is spoken of as "white unto harvest." If the American interference in Cuba leads to nothing more than the breaking up of the power of the priests, who have stifled true religion and education in that country for centuries, it will have been an unspeakable boon to that much-tried island.

The persistent refusal of the authorities to allow missionary work of any kind to be instituted at Khartoum, is one of the great anomalies done in the name of the British Government; and we are glad to see that a strong protest is made against this attitude by the C.M.S. authorities in their annual report. The prohibition came curiously from the representatives of a nation which is the acknowledged home and guardian of all religious liberty. Half a century ago the Indian Government pursued a diametrically opposite course, when missionaries were invited to settle and work among the newly-conquered cities of the Punjab, peopled by fanatical Moslems. Meanwhile, it is good to hear that the missionaries who have gone to Khartoum in the hope of being allowed to settle there have not been idle. Not only are they mastering the language, and familiarizing themselves with the life of the people, but they are ministering acceptably to the British troops.

The crusade instituted by a "Minister of the Gospel" in the Rochester and Chatham Standard, for the exposure and abolition of the "Shame of Chatham," is gathering strength and volume as the weeks pass. Among messages received, expressing warm and earnest sympathy with the movement, is one from the King. Rev. F. B. Meyer tells with gratitude of the suppression of 200 evil houses in South London as the result of a combined and determined effort. The belief is expressed by Dr. Monro Gibson that, if the movement can be followed up, we may see in our own day a great reformation in the cities and towns of England. While thankful for the awakening, Mrs. Ormiston Chant reminds the Vigilance Society that the fight is one which calls out in an acute degree the venom and hate of those pecuniarily interested in the degradation of the people. Dr. Barnardo describes from what depths of infamy some of the children have been rescued, and asks, "Who is going to save the women who, perhaps, never had a chance?"

Another step forward must now be taken, and the Christian public are being asked to provide for the expense. The cleansing of such an Augean stable cannot be even attempted without considerable outlay, and we feel sure that our readers who have responded to every cry of need in the past will not turn a deaf ear. Let there be much united prayer that the "Shame of Chatham"—which is, after all, the shame of every city and town in England—may be speedily and completely put away.

Five Years in Ireland.

ONE of the most remarkable books ever issued on the subject of Ireland has recently been published under the title "Five Years in Ireland, 1895-1900" (7s. 6d. Simpkin, Marshall, & Co.). Its value is derived from the fact that its author (Mr. J. F. McCarthy) is a Roman Catholic barrister—an Irishman who has not left the Church of Rome, but who fearlessly exposes the iniquitous domination of the priests, and rightly attributes thereto the sorrows of his native land. A vast amount of misconception exists in England as to the character of the Irish priests and the nature of their influence on the life and prosperity of the country. No such misconception should remain in any mind which will give heed to the facts which Mr. McCarthy lays bare with pitiless fidelity.

Mr. McCarthy's plea is for a reform of the Church of Rome from within, and he is unsparing in his illustrations of the necessity which exists for it. The Roman Catholic laity must be given a share in the government of their Church, and the domination of everything by the hierarchy must cease, if need be by a revolution. But the author probably knows as well as most people how hopelessly incapable of reformation the Church of Rome as it exists to-day has become. Still, there is something heroic in the lifting up of his warning voice. He has nothing but contempt for the pandering of successive English governments to "what they well know is the baneful influence of the Catholic Church in Ireland in temporal affairs."

As to the rapacity of the priests, Mr. McCarthy speaks out with great plainness:—

> Love of money will be the ruin of the Irish priesthood if the present system is suffered to continue . . . The haggling about "paying the priest" at christenings, marriages, deaths, and at every stage of one's life, is one of the most unpleasant, most debasing features of life in Catholic Ireland.

The low estimation in which the people hold their priests in private is suggestively disclosed; nor can this be wondered at when we read such a paragraph as the following:—

> There is no sight so sad, I think, as the burial of an Irish Catholic peasant, whose friends cannot afford a pound to pay for the priest's attendance at the funeral. Many and many a time, in the part of Ireland where I was born, attending such funerals of my father's labourers or their wives, have the tears welled up into my eyes; when, at length, the last shovelful of earth had rattled into the grave, and the last sod had been well and truly banked—and there was no more to do! . . . No word of consolation, no hopeful mention of the resurrection and the life to come—in which they so realistically believe—from lips that would command respect.

Mr. McCarthy exposes the unreality of the demand for a Roman Catholic University. Speaking of the attitude of Lord Cadogan and Mr. A. J. Balfour on the subject, he says:—

> The fact of the matter is, that neither of them really knows where the real roots of the matter lie; and let them, as free-born British politicians—with all respect I unhesitatingly say it—thank their stars and their happy lots in that they do not know it.

The fruits of Romish superstition, as shown in the terrible tragedy of the wife-burning case in co. Tipperary, and the scarcely less terrible tragedy of Lisphelan, are sketched in a portion of the book which is a veritable chamber of horrors, and which it is impossible to peruse without a pitying wonder that such things can be.

Mr. McCarthy's book is one of the first importance. We trust it may tend to open many eyes, and remove many dangerous misconceptions, and to create or increase an interest in all efforts to bring the light of Divine Truth to bear upon the darkness of our Sister Isle. It should be circulated throughout the length and breadth of England.

"The Unselfing of Self."

"Holiness is the unselfing of ourselves."

SELF is a traitor to the best and highest interests of the soul; self is the old nature warring against the new nature in Christ; self is Satan in his most subtle form, and until self is laid on the altar, and Christ takes his place on the throne, man must remain in bondage. The unselfing of self! A gracious revival would be the outcome of such a dethronement; the individual soul would receive a Pentecostal blessing; the Christian community would be raised to a higher level; the world would perceive a new glory in religion; and multitudes would turn from sin to follow the Lord Christ.

But the unselfing of self has not yet been effected; self still reigns unmolested in many hearts—hence, weakness of Christian character, and the inability to enter into the "more abundant" life.

Self intrudes in our Relationship to God. "There is always a spot in the sunshine," says one—"the shadow of ourselves." When, under the quickening influences of the Holy Spirit, man is convinced of sin, and awakened to the fact of his need of a Saviour; when the eternal destiny of a soul hangs in the balance, even then, self insidiously creeps in and does its destroying work. Thus gracious influences are deadened, holy thoughts and noble impulses scattered, the Holy Spirit of God is quenched, and the soul, rejecting the true light, goes forth in its pride and self-confidence, saying, "All of self, and none of Thee." But when self is merged into Christ, when the rags of self-righteousness are torn aside and Christ's own robe of righteousness is donned, when self-sufficiency gives place to the sufficiency of God—then the soul, fired with holy enthusiasm and noble resolve to live no longer under the dominion of self, leaps into a new life of liberty, and the language of self-surrender is:—

> Lord, Thy love at last has conquered,
> Grant me now my soul's desire,
> None of self, and all of Thee.

The daily dying to self is a mark of true discipleship; Christ must take the place of self, ere the joy of salvation and the true blessedness of Christian living can be fully realized.

Self intrudes too in our Service for Christ. When self reigns supreme, service is but dreary drudgery; with the unselfing of self comes the joy of service, and the realization of the inestimable privilege afforded us of serving under the banner of the King of kings.

It is said that Michael Angelo wore over his forehead, fastened in his artist's cap, a lighted candle, which always shone brightly on his work, and kept his shadow from falling on it. No semblance of self must be allowed to detract from the Christ; self must be kept entirely out of sight, that Jesus only may be seen and honoured.

Self-forgetfulness was a striking characteristic in the service of John the Baptist. As the forerunner of Christ, he might have won for himself many high honours, but he ever pointed to the Lamb of God—"There cometh One after me mightier than I;" and when his light seemed to be waning, and his disciples left him to follow Jesus, with beautiful self-abnegation, he said: "He must increase, but I must decrease." "Not I, but Christ," should be the motto of every Christian worker.

When labour is crowned with success, and we rejoice over souls won and lives re-consecrated, self would have us ascribe all praise to our own feeble efforts. But when self is conquered, the language of grateful hearts is, "Not unto us, but unto thy Name be the glory."

Self intrudes in our Relation to our Fellow-man. Unselfishness is the sweetest and most attractive of Christian virtues; it ennobles and strengthens individual character, and is far-reaching in its influence for good and God. Selfishness, on the other hand, is utterly opposed to the teaching and example of Christ; it dwarfs spiritual life, and proves most detrimental to the extension of the Master's Kingdom. In man's dealings with his fellow-man, self invariably strives to gain the mastery, and when self is in the ascendant, charitable thoughts and generous actions are crowded out; thus self seeks to destroy all amicable relationship between man and man. The Divine injunction to love our neighbour as ourselves finds no fulfilment in the self-centred life. Practical Christian living is the only elevating influence; the man who is willing to trample on self, to lay aside his own pet schemes, to forego personal pleasure, if he may but minister to one of Christ's needy ones, is a powerful witness to the truth and beauty of Christianity.

The Word of God and Prayer.

By Rev. J. R. MILLER, D.D.

THE Bible should always have its place in private devotions. Sometimes it is left out. There is an impression that we should pray morning and evening, but not so definite a feeling that we should read the Bible morning and evening. Many persons do not regard Bible reading as being a means of grace equally necessary as prayer. But, in fact, both exercises belong together, and should never be dissociated. Prayer is asking God for things He has promised to give to us, and we should read his Word to learn what these things are—what He has promised.

One of our Lord's most remarkable assurances of answer to prayer is made to depend upon our knowledge of his words, and our assimilation of them in our life, "If ye abide in Me and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will and it shall be done unto you." Not to study and meditate on the words of Christ in connection with our devotions is, therefore, to leave closed the doors of one of the great

TREASURE-HOUSES OF PRAYER.

These words of Christ are the keys with which alone the doors can be opened.

There is another reason why the Bible should be used continually with prayer. Prayer is not all making requests. We would be selfish indeed if we never went to our Father to talk with Him save when we wanted something from Him, when we had some favour or help to supplicate. Think of holding intercourse with your best friend only when you need some help, or desire him to give you something or do something for you. The sweetest and most sacred of friendship's talks together often contain no requests. They are communings of heart with heart, when two sit side by side, and speak of the things that are close to their hearts. It should be the same in the Christian's meeting with God. There may be many trysting times when no burden is brought, when no petitions for help or favour are presented, when its adoration, its gratitude, and waits in quiet silence before the Father for his blessing.

In all these communings the Word of God is essential. It is thus, and thus only, that God speaks to his children. He does not answer our yearnings and longings in any audible voice. We have the Bible, which contains the revelations of his thought and care, and it is here that we are to listen to Him. The best and most profitable exercise of devotion is found in the mingling of Scripture words and the breathings of our heart's desires to God.

A story which illustrates this is told of Bengel. He was known to spend much time in his closet, and some one who was curious to know his devotional method hid himself in Bengel's room one night to observe him. The good man sat long at his table, silently reading in his New Testament. He seemed to linger on each word, and often his face would shine with a new light as he read slowly verse after verse. At length the clock struck midnight, and the old man, clasping his hands over the holy pages he had been reading, simply said: "Dear Lord Jesus, we are on the same old terms." Then he reverently closed the book, and retired to bed. He had not been on his knees at all during the hour, nor had he uttered aloud a single word of request, or used any form of prayer. As he read the words of God he let them speak to him, revealing to his deepest heart their secrets of love and grace. Then he had responded to these revealings in his meditation and in his yearnings and longings. The words of God had been the wires, as it were, on which between the Father and his child holy converse had been kept up for an hour.

There is no doubt that such devotional exercise is most fruitful in blessing and good. One such season is worth months of hurried saying of prayers, which with too many of us passes as our daily private worship. When we speak to God we should let God also speak to us. Thus will our spiritual life be nourished and its strength continually renewed.

"The Second Time."

By Dr. BALGARNIE.

"The word of Jehovah came to Jonah the second time, saying, Arise, go to Nineveh . . . and preach" (Jonah iii. 1).

"THE Second Time." This implies that there had been a first time. Jonah must have paused after writing these first words of a new chapter in his life-history, and gone back in thought to the earlier call at Gath-hepher, and the terrible consequences of its rejection. He must have wondered that Jehovah had not cast him off for ever for his perversity. But he was to have another opportunity of making his calling and election sure. He had not yet committed the unpardonable sin, nor had another been called to take his office. A fresh start in his prophetic life was open to him, and the tide of Divine favour and blessing was once again at the flood. How rarely this happens we all know; but Jonah's life and history, rather than his message, were to be the gospel to the Ninevites.

"The Second Time." The words suggest the Divine Sovereignty. We are slow to realize the sacredness of Divine law. It seldom occurs to us what an appalling thing it is to break even one of the least of God's commandments. We forget that the universe depends, for its continued existence and well-being, on the strictest conformity to law and order. The Church, being a purely spiritual community, could not exist without absolute obedience to the laws of its Divine Head. The welfare and happiness of our own lives are conditioned by obedience to the law of our Creator.

But all the more sacred and inviolable ought those laws to appear to us, to whom their wisdom has been explained, and their necessity made clear, by their Divine Author and Executor, the Son of God Himself. We ought to recognise that the Divine will must be paramount, and we must yield to it prompt and willing obedience. His word comes "the second time" whenever it has been disregarded the first time; and it will continue to come until it has prospered in the thing whereto He has sent it.

> Oh, but the counsel of the Lord
> Doth stand for ever sure,
> And of his heart the purposes
> From age to age endure.

"The Second Time." The words suggest the Divine Clemency. Jonah must have felt what Peter felt when he was commanded to "Feed the Lambs" of Christ, when he was thereby forgiven for his delinquency and restored to his apostleship; he must have felt that God's thoughts were not as man's thoughts; he was pardoned without reproach, and restored without upbraiding. Jonah was not asked where he had been, or what he had been doing, or what he had now to say for himself, but told to arise, and go to Nineveh. "Who is a God like unto Thee?"

"The Second Time" suggests the Divine Love. It was love, not only to Jonah, but to Nineveh with its 60,000 children. God so loves the world. The first message had been miscarried, but in pity and love He sends a second. If there is threat of stern judgment in the message, there is a full gospel in the pardoned messenger. There was forgiveness with God that He might be feared, and love that He might be trusted and obeyed.

The Manse, Bishop Auckland.

Shall There Be a Revival?

By Rev. D. M. McINTYRE, Glasgow.

We give below an extract from a deeply interesting article in the current issue of The Missionary Record of the United Free Church of Scotland, which is one of a series appearing in our contemporary.

A REVIVAL is simply the restoration of the Church to the obedience, the purity, the fervour of Pentecostal days. There has been "no retraction of Pentecost." The gift of the Spirit vouchsafed on that great day is the measure of the grace of Christ to all his people; the pure devotion of the infant Church is the accepted standard for every age. In his later years Henry Ward Beecher used sometimes to say, "I should like to see a Holy Ghost revival before I die." Thousands of Christians everywhere are longing for this, as the hart for the streams, as the watcher for the morning. The assurance is clear and full: "The promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call." The affirmations of the Gospel are always adequate to our need, though we often lack faith to appropriate them. . . . In prayer we are drawn near to God, and are enabled to yield ourselves without reserve to do his will.

The law of the spiritual life is, as Tersteegen says, "All for all." "Give thyself wholly to God, and God will give Himself wholly to thee." It is difficult even to speak of this—it includes so much. Does it not mean the laying aside of earthly ambition, the cleansing of one's heart in a repentance not to be repented of, the resolute in anything that does not bring the Kingdom near? Does it not mean an unfaltering walk with God, union in life with Christ, the opening of one's spirit to the presence and power of the Holy Ghost? Does it not mean, I live—yet not I? I have prayed, and toiled, and borne—yet not I? I have led dying souls to the love of God—not I, but Christ?

Faith worketh by love. If we really expect revival, we shall make deliberate and sustained efforts to bring men to Christ. Parents will watch for the souls of their children, as those who shall give account. Sabbath school teachers will commend the Saviour to their scholars with a new affection. Christian people will become endlessly inventive in the service of the Redeemer. Elders will confess a fresh solicitude for the unsaved in their districts. Ministers will turn aside from other occupations, that they may devote themselves to this, the most fruitful work of all—personal dealing with their people on matters of high soul-concern. And "the Lord's remembrancers" will take no rest, and give Him no rest, until He return and come to Zion.

Apart altogether from special agencies, God often chooses to make his gracious presence known in the ordinary work of the congregation, especially in the REGULAR PREACHING OF THE GOSPEL.

The preaching which God is most usually pleased to bless to the conversion of sinners and the quickening of his children is, I think, marked by these characteristics:—

(1) An assured faith in the Divine authority and verity of the Scriptures. The voice of Jehovah must be audible in every accent of the preacher.

(2) A full and heartfelt presentation of saving truth. "It seems to me," said Luther, "that Jesus died only yesterday." That is how many of our people feel—that between them and Christ's cross there is nothing.

(3) There must be profound earnestness, united with a holy urgency, in the proclamation of the truth. Richard Baxter says: "It must be serious preaching which must make men serious in hearing and obeying it." And Bunyan: "I did labour with great diligence and earnestness to find out such a word as might, if God would bless, lay hold of and awaken the conscience." And Paul: "Now then we are ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech by us: we pray in Christ's stead, Be ye reconciled to God."

A Manchester Mission.

FROM the earliest days of the Manchester and Salford Wesleyan Mission, rescue work has had an important place on its programme. The Central Hall, with its open door, has ever been the refuge of the destitute, friendless, and fallen. Out of sheer necessity, social work had to be begun years ago. A home and labour yard for men were opened in 1891, and two years later a casual ward was added. The work was carried out on a small scale at first, but, the experiment proving a success, the Committee resolved some three years ago to erect larger buildings, which were formally opened on May 7, by Mr. W. J. Crossley. Many of the visitors expressed surprise at the size of the buildings and the completeness of the arrangements.

The Lord Mayor of Manchester, who presided, said that for many years he had been connected with the Prestwich Board of Guardians, which had spent £12,000 for tramp wards, and had cells for forty-five men who were employed in stonebreaking, which did not in any way pay the cost of the undertaking. In this splendid new building hundreds would be taught habits of industry and sobriety, and by the splendid mechanical appliances would be able easily to earn the cost of their keep.

Rev. S. F. Collier briefly explained how, through the Mission agencies, they were in constant touch with those that were down. Over 600 men and women applied for help weekly at the Central Hall. These came to them because of the ever open door, the free meal on Sunday afternoons, the lodging-house services, midnight missions, and an enormous private correspondence. This new Home was only one section of a very large social work, including home and refuge for women, with workroom; servants' home and registry; preventive and training home for girls, with laundry, maternity home, employment and advice bureau, medical and nursing mission, prison gate work, &c.

THE BUILDINGS HAD COST £18,000, of which £8,000 was still needed. In one destitute men were received every day, and given the opportunity of earning food and lodging by labour. The applicants were received at noon, worked the latter half of the day, received supper, bed, and breakfast, and were sent out early to seek work. Failing to find work they could apply again at noon. A second section formed a temporary home, where really deserving men out of the first section could be accommodated for a longer stay. The third section formed a home where a man could be comfortably housed when he had secured a situation, until he was once more established. Mr. Collier explained that the earnings of the men met all current expenses. All that he asked the outside public to do was to pay for the home and the appliances. The men working out their own reformation would do the rest.

Mr. Alderman Rawson said the work was unsectarian, and characterized by common sense and business ability. It would do something to save the rates. Half a dozen institutions of that kind would greatly reduce the police force of the city—from the experienced chairman of the Watch Committee. Mr. E. Tootal Broadhurst expressed admiration of the wideness of the work, and the courage, energy, and business ability of Mr. Collier. Mr. W. J. Crossley said the Central Hall was one of the busiest institutions in Manchester. As a visiting Justice of the Peace he thought this work would greatly help those who had been in prison to make a fresh start. Sir William Bailey declared that the extinction of our gaols and workhouses was the truest way of proving one's patriotism. This work was true Christian socialism—was the beauty of utility and the utility of beauty. Nothing could be better than its reproduction in every city. If it was worth their while to improve the breed of racehorses and cattle, it was worth while to utilize this waste human energy and turn it into useful citizenship. The basis of all progress was good citizenship. Such work was good and it would pay.

Among others who took part in the proceedings were Mr. William Simpson, Mr. Alfred Brookes, Mr. Charles Rowley, J.P., and Dr. Randles. The gifts of the day were £2,000, leaving a deficiency of £6,000.

Boys' Brigade.

THE annual demonstration in connection with the Boys' Brigade, which was held in the Albert Hall last Friday evening, was an occasion of great interest to workers among boys in their early "teens." Speaking from the chair, the Earl of Aberdeen, as Honorary President of the movement, addressed himself to the reassuring of friends who fear that the chief influence of the Brigade is to foster and develop the military spirit among boys. It was not, he declared, a military organization, nor a training school for the army, but an effort built on the sure foundation of a religious basis for the discipline and development of character among boys at a critical period in their lives, and aimed at making them into men who would be a credit to their country.

Emphasis was put on the undenominational character of the Boys' Brigade, and its watchword shown to be the advancement of Christ's Kingdom among boys, by means of the promotion of habits of obedience, reverence, discipline, self-respect, and all that tends towards true Christian manliness. The boys and their officers were highly gratified by an announcement that their Royal patron, the Duke of Cornwall and York, had sent a message of good cheer, comfort, and good wishes. When the boys do enter the army, Lord Aberdeen said the earlier training in the Brigade was likely to make them better soldiers and better men than they would have been without it.

The report showed that over 6,000 officers and boys had been added to the strength, making a total on the roll in the United Kingdom of 906 companies, 3,319 officers, and 41,879 boys.

Abergavenny Y.M.C.A.

THE new building (of which an illustration was given in our issue of July 26, 1900) was opened recently by Mr. R. C. Morgan. Mr. John Cory was prevented by indisposition from being present and taking part in the proceedings, but promised £100. This, with contributions during the day, reduced the remaining liability to £250. Mr. Richard Cory presided at the evening meeting, and subscribed £20. The total cost has been about £1,800, to which the Committee, members and friends have contributed very liberally. This Association has, from its commencement nearly twenty years ago, been of a distinctly evangelistic and spiritual character. The Bible class has been its chief feature. On the first Sunday afternoon in the new building, 150 men were present, and this number is likely steadily to increase.

Late and Sunday Shopping.

THE evidence now being given before the Committee of the House of Lords on this subject exhibits a widespread feeling among traders in favour of a measure to limit the hours of business, especially on Saturday. The view is also as strong as it is general that no legislation would be satisfactory which did not include the closing of trade shops on the Lord's Day.

Unless such provision is made it would be unjust to compel any trader to close, say, two hours earlier on the Saturday, while others less scrupulous would reap the benefit by a further accession of business on Sunday morning. Many who now open their shows have expressed themselves as desirous of closing, but a few who persist in keeping open may compel a whole street to do the same.

Christian people can assist the cause if they will address a communication to the Chairman of the Committee now sitting, Lord Avebury, at the House of Lords, expressing their support of the movement; and abstain from the practice of shopping late at night, or, of course, upon the Lord's Day.

University Intelligence.

[BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS.]

CAMBRIDGE.

DR. PATON visited Cambridge for Sunday, April 28, and stirred up missionary enthusiam by the story of his mission to the New Hebrides. In the course of a most interesting address, Dr. Paton said that although the Bible had been translated into twenty-two languages in that region at the expense of the natives, and although 18,000 cannibals had been brought to Christ, yet there were 60,000 to be reached by the Gospel.

Rev. Mark Guy Pearse has also visited Cambridge this term, and given an address to a large audience on "Business in Religion." He expressed the wish that the churches could be vaccinated with a few business notions. New methods in business were appreciated and adopted by business men, and he thought new ways of getting hold of men and women were wanted.

Last Monday the anniversary meetings of the C.M.S. were held. Rev. C. H. Stileman, of Persia, and Rev. H. W. Weatherhead, of Uganda, were the deputation. At the evening meeting Professor Handley Moule was in the chair, and in alluding to the local contributions he said that while the town and county accounts were satisfactory and encouraging, the same could not be said of the University contributions. There were other objects, no doubt, both philanthropic and religious, which must be taken into account, but he could not help feeling that the University should produce a good deal more.

OXFORD.

OXFORD Wesleyans held their Annual Meeting on Monday, in connection with their Home Mission work. The gathering was both interesting and profitable. Mr. T. H. Kingertee, ex-Mayor, presided, and in a sympathetic speech urged that the Society must be kept going and its vitality increased so that nobody could say they had never heard the name of Christ. Rev. John Gould (Chairman of the East Anglia Mission) was the chief speaker, and traced the genesis of the work, illustrating its power in Methodism. Speaking of John Wesley's mother, he said she was wiser than her son, for when he hesitated to employ local preachers, she sent him to hear Thomas Maxwell preach, the first London preacher. Wesley did so, and his opinions were changed, and to-day they had 18,000 local preachers.

For so small a body, the local branch of the Christian Social Union certainly makes its voice heard in Oxford. We feel that the action which is being taken in the temperance question, in the housing question, in new bye-laws, in the working of the Poor Law, is due in a great measure to the energy of this little body. Surely this is how it should be. Christian men should band themselves together to study moral questions, and in making the great mass around them think, they are introducing the leaven which in time may leaven the whole lump. Rev. H. J. Carlyle, Rector of All Saints, is the energetic chairman.

The hall of New College was crowded to its utmost capacity on Sunday night to hear addresses from the Bishop of Kensington and Lord Hugh Cecil on the work of the Oxford House in Bethnal Green. We may not agree with all its methods, but if it casts out devils, we dare not forbid. The Bishop emphasized the need of the rich entering into the thoughts and feelings of the poor, and urged that mutual knowledge came by living among the people—by sharing their joys and sorrows. It was this that Oxford House invited them to do. Lord Cecil, remarking on the expense, trouble, and hardship spent on travel, and often to no purpose except to "elongate conversation," said it would be better for themselves and for the community if the money and energy were spent in studying problems at our doors. He contended that usefulness and happiness were founded on useful work attempted and performed.

Rev. W. Duggan, speaking at the annual meeting of the Oxford Christian Social Union, pleaded that it had served the Church by bearing a clear and needed witness to the truth that it was the office of all those who believed themselves to be members of the Son of God made Man to minister to the secular as well as to the spiritual necessities of all mankind. Quoting the late Bishop Stubbs, he further urged that it was the duty of the Church to prepare a people for the Lord, and in this work things spiritual and things natural lie very close together.

Ought a Christian to be a Soldier?—This question is proposed and discussed by Mr. Chas. H. Annesley, M.A., in a 4pp. leaflet recently issued. Can a Christian consistently with his discipleship engage in warfare? is, in reality, the question raised, which is much narrower than the title of the pamphlet. Those who are interested in this subject should communicate with the author at Rydal Mount, Torquay.

Scottish Notes.

AN amalgamation of congregations is about to take place at Cockburnspath as the result of the Church Union of last year.

Rev. John Fairley Daly has resigned the pastorate of Renwick United Free Church, Glasgow, on his acceptance of the honorary secretaryship of the Livingstonia Mission.

The National Bible Society of Scotland has printed a second Gospel in Palityan, and intends to present each foreign employé in the present International Exhibition with a New Testament in his own language.

At the Wesleyan Synod, held in Edinburgh last week, it was decided to dissolve the committee which has, till now, taken charge of the West End Mission conducted by Rev. George Jackson, and which is now self-supporting.

The report presented last Tuesday at the annual meeting of the Glasgow United Evangelistic Association showed that the total income for twelve months had been £23,270, and the expenditure £25,978. Among other figures it appeared that the average attendance at the Sabbath afternoon dinner for poor children had risen to 1,994.

Regret is expressed in the report of the Glasgow Highlanders' Open-Air Gospel Mission that it was found inexpedient to proceed with the projected evangelistic campaign among the Highlanders of the city on account of the regrettable state of affairs which still prevails in some of the northern districts of the country. On Sabbath evenings 116 Gaelic services had been held, with 184 mixed English and Gaelic services.

At a meeting last week of the ministers who took part in the recent combined Christian movement, it was reported that the meetings had been successful in bringing representatives of the various denominations in the city to know and trust each other, and to show their unity to the community at large. It was agreed to resume the weekly prayer meetings for ministers in September, to hold special services for members of churches about the time of the autumn communion, and to organize evangelistic work in different parts of the city during the winter.

Irish Notes.

THE Qua Iboe Mission, whose headquarters are in Belfast, and whose sphere of labour is West Africa, has lost by death one of its best workers in the person of Mrs. Heaney, while deceased's husband also is on his way home through a complete break-down in health.

The Presbyterian Synod of Dublin, at its recent meeting, passed a resolution to the effect that in case Trinity College, Dublin, should not be brought within the scope of the inquiry before the Royal Commission on the Irish University question, no representatives of the Irish Presbyterian Church should appear before it.

The Mission to the Adult Deaf and Dumb in the South of Ireland is doing a good work. During the past eight months, the missionary, Mr. F. A. Elliott, B.A., has paid 176 pastoral visits, addressed thirty-three public meetings, and conducted sixty-five religious services and Bible classes.

A net increase of about 200 has been reported in the membership of the Irish Methodish Church for the past year. Considering that the population of the country is decreasing, and that for several years past the Methodist Church, year by year, has reported an increase of members, the gain referred to is regarded as being fairly satisfactory.

The annual meeting of the Jungle Tribes' (India) Mission has just been held in Belfast, Mr. J. Cuthbert, J.P., presiding. The Mission has passed through a trying year, two of its best workers, Messrs. Mawhinney and Mulligan, having been called away. Yet the income of the Society was the highest it ever has been in one year, and the committee are prayerfully looking for the right men to take the places of those who have been cut down.

There are signs that not a few of the more intelligent Roman Catholics in this country are becoming restive under the rule of their priests. A Roman Catholic lady, Miss O'Connor, has written to the papers to say that, although Roman Catholics were not allowed to send their children to the Queen's Colleges, yet these institutions were packed with the nephews and nieces of priests and bishops. Mr. M. J. F. McCarthy, B.L., whose recent book, "Five Years in Ireland," has created a sensation, has also written to the papers to say: "There are Roman Catholics in Ireland—I am one myself—who are not satisfied to see their lay kith and kin migrating year by year in despair, while priests and nuns are multiplying in their stead, nor to see the farmhouses and labourers' cottages of the South and West deserted and in ruins, while the new cathedrals, churches, monasteries, and convents of the religious overspread the land."

Welsh Notes.

THE annual meetings of the Eastern District of the South Wales and Monmouthshire Federation of Free Church Councils took place on Thursday, at Newport, Mon. The report was of an encouraging kind. Some twenty councils are affiliated to the Federation.

Reports to hand from the missionaries of the Welsh Calvinistic Methodist missionaries stationed at Assam, show that the Roman Catholics are manifesting considerable activity in that part of the mission field. Their latest attempt to proselytize the Khasis is by setting up a printing-press.

At least three of the leading Nonconformist denominations in Wales have "Forward Movements" of their own. The latest reports of the Forward Movement of the Welsh Baptists are of a decidedly encouraging character, and, at the last meeting of the committee, were considered highly satisfactory.

The Welsh Congregationalists have just issued the first annual report of their Forward Movement. Some of the counties have contributed well, no less a sum than £3,681 16s. 9d. coming from Glamorganshire alone. A special effort is being made to bring up the contributions to £15,000 by the time of the annual meeting of the Welsh Congregational Union in July.

The annual meetings of the South Wales District of the Primitive Methodist Connexion were held at Hereford on Saturday and Monday, May 4 and 6. The report showed an increase in membership of 172 during the year. Other departments of work were satisfactorily reported on. Rev. S. Bryant, of Brynmawr was elected President of the South Wales District for the ensuing year.

On Monday, May 4, Mrs. Bramwell Booth paid a visit to Cardiff, and addressed a meeting under the presidency of Sir Thomas Morel on behalf of the social work of the Salvation Army. Mrs. Booth declared that the Cardiff institutions of the Army had been more than usually active, especially in connection with prison and police-court work, the midnight suppers, the laundry, and the industrial homes.

Keswick Convention.

JULY 22-27.

IN calling the gatherings at Keswick for this year, Mr. Robert Wilson says:—

"It is with feelings of peculiar solemnity that we invite God's children to this our first Convention of the new century. On twenty-six occasions we have been privileged, without a break, to meet together at Keswick! God willing, our Convention this year will be held on July 22 to 27. In the name of our risen Lord we would call you to meet at this place of blessed associations, not merely to muse on spiritual things, or to get our emotions stimulated, but to wait upon God in the stillness of our souls, and in the light of his presence, so that we may hear his voice. Let us come together that we may know more perfectly his mind, see more clearly the sufficiency of his resources, and commit ourselves more thoroughly into his keeping and control.

"There can be nothing more practical and soul-strengthening than that blessing which it is the purpose of our Convention to set forth. No doubt we are in danger sometimes of losing sight of it. We meet, not merely to encourage one another in the Lord, or to seek to understand more fully the letter of the truth, or to hear of God's work in home and foreign fields. . . . Our Convention at Keswick is emphatically the place of preparation for future service—where the Master takes each yielded instrument into his hand, first to prove, to try and to search them, and then to equip them for the doing of his will."

As usual, Mr. JOHN POSTLETHWAITE, Eskin Place, Keswick, will act as Hon. Secretary, to whom applications for information as to lodgings or hotel accommodation may be sent, stating particulars of what is desired.

For special train arrangements from London and the South of England to Keswick, on Friday, July 19, with return, apply to Mr. J. T. BUDD, Rockville, 23, Pembroke Crescent, Hove, Brighton, enclosing three penny stamps for pamphlet.

As many missionaries desire to attend the Convention, a Special Fund has been opened to assist them in their expenses. Contributions towards this important object will be gratefully received and acknowledged by ALBERT A. HEAD ("Keswick Convention"), Corrie Lodge, Wimbledon, S.W. An early response to this appeal is requested, so as to give time for the needful arrangements. Missionaries to the heathen desiring assistance from this Fund may write (enclosing a stamped envelope with full address) to Mrs. Head, at the address given.

The Czar of Russia, not content with the results of the Hague Conference on Peace, has, it is said, in contemplation the idea of promoting a private conference between the crowned heads of Europe on international affairs. It is to be earnestly hoped that if such a step be taken, better relations between the great nations will ensue to the advancement of peace and prosperity on every hand.

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, May 19. Matthew ix.

THIS also the Master of Life can do. He can forgive sins as easily as He can give health to a paralysed sufferer, and He deals with sin first, because this, in his estimation, is at the root of all the evil and paralysis of the world.

He can call publicans from the seat of toll, as they tax the merchandise on the roads of traffic, and by a word change them into disciples and apostles, eager to introduce the Master to their former companions, though they be publicans and sinners. Yes, and the Master will sit and eat with such, because, though He hates sin, He loves sinners, and wants to call them to the best life here and hereafter.

He can shelter his disciples from criticism so wisely and tersely that their critics are silenced. He can take up such common articles as broken bottle-skins and patched garments, and make them eloquent with undreamed of significance. For He has the heart for finding God everywhere, and everything in God; and from every spot can discover an angel-ladder, up and down which holy thoughts may pass between heaven and earth. What more can He do? He can notice and respond to a touch. He can work a miracle on his way to work a miracle. He can wake a girl of twelve years from her death sleep as easily as her mother might wake her at morning prime. He can work in a moment a cure for a case that has puzzled the physicians for a dozen years. He can go to the utmost limits of expectant faith in giving sight to blindness, light to darkness, speech to dumbness, healing to sickness and disease. And, seeing the multitude, He can still be moved with the compassion of a Shepherd's heart for wandering, weary, scattered sheep. Oh, such a Man is this Son of Man, that He must be more than man, the Second Man, the Lord from Heaven.

MONDAY, May 20. Matthew x.

After the entreaty at the close of the last chapter, Christ set about answering his own prayer. This is the Master's charge to his Apostles, and in a measure to all his servants.

Practical Direction (1-15). They were for the present to confine themselves to Jews, because the ministry of our Lord was the climax of the Jewish probation, and it was desirable that every opportunity should be given for the lost sheep of the house of Israel to repent. They were to be the first medical missionaries in their beneficent healing of disease. They were to be perfectly disinterested in their religious work. They were to bring peace with them into every house they entered.

Warnings as to the Reception they would meet (16-27). The way would not be easy, but lined with jagged flints. On the one hand they would be assailed by governors and kings, and on the other by members of their own homes. From city to city they would be driven, till much of Israel had been covered by their patient labours. It could not be otherwise for them; it cannot be for us. Our Master has been through the same treatment, and if men did not appreciate Him, we surely cannot expect them to understand us. Life, says the Lord, is full of deep, dark lessons, given to us in secret, but these are not for ourselves only. We must utter them whether men will hear or not. Do not be afraid then, when the Lord takes you into his most secret and darksome chamber; He is about to tell you something for the world.

Comforts and Encouragements (28-42). God's Spirit would tell them what to say when standing before judicial tribunals. The Father would notice if a hair fell from their heads to the ground, and would set his loving protection around them in all hours of peril. Their names would at last be confessed. If they lost their lives, they would find them. If they were excommunicated from their own families, they would be welcomed into a wider family, the family of heaven.

TUESDAY, May 21. Matthew xi.

What mysteries there are in the world! This chapter is full of them. Here, for instance, is John the Baptist in prison while Herod is on the throne; and in the confinement and darkness he has lost his heroic faith, and wonders if he may not have been deceived. Again, here is no direct answer to his question, as he may have expected, and as we often wish; but the elements of a solution for all his difficulties are suggested in the miracles wrought by Jesus. Here, also, is the diverse interpretation placed on the same behaviour by earth and heaven, for when we are apt to feel that John the Baptist has fallen from his eminence, the Master describes him as the greatest of woman born. Again, here are the stories of six cities, three of them without the preaching which would have saved them, had they known it, and three lost in spite of that preaching, which had rung through their streets.

Under the pressure of such mysteries, our Lord turned to heaven, and said, "I thank Thee, Father, that Thou hast hid these things" . . .; and again, "Even so (i.e., yes), Father." In the presence of mysteries like these we have noticed, there is but one attitude—faith in the Father. We cannot pierce the darkness, but we can wait, we can trust. This is what Jesus meant by taking his yoke. It was the yoke He bore, on which these words are engraven, "Even so, Father." There is room in a yoke for two. Take thy stand by Christ, and say the words with Him. This is the secret of Rest.

WEDNESDAY, May 22. Matthew xii.

It is well to use a harmony of the Gospels, to understand the Lord's life consecutively; by such a help, it will be discovered that the fifth chapter of the Fourth Gospel must be interpolated between the previous chapter and this.

The hatred of the Pharisees could not be confined to Jerusalem, but followed the Lord back to Galilee. This chapter is filled with the conflict that raged fiercely between Him and them. First, there was the controversy about the rubbing the ears of corn on the Sabbath-day; next, as to the healing of the withered hand; then, our Lord's withdrawal before the rising storm; and, finally, the malicious slander that, if demons were cast out, it must be by some kind of collusion with their prince. Our Lord's noble reply to that accusation, and to another question (38) still further irritated them; and the climax of the chapter comes in the consternation with which his family regard the open quarrel between Jesus and the religious leaders of the time.

But these attacks only bring into clearer prominence the character and teaching of the Master. With what jewels this chapter abounds! He knew Himself to be greater than the Temple, greater than Jonah, greater than Solomon, and Lord of the Sabbath Day; and yet He will not break a bruised reed, nor quench the smoking flax. He does not strive nor cry, because He can afford to wait till his Father gives Him the victory. He is conscious that the Spirit of the living God, who descended on Him in his baptism, is still mightily with Him, enabling Him to cast out demons; but He is willing to take into the circle of his dearest and most intimate any who do the will of his Father in heaven. It should be noticed that the sin of blasphemy against the Holy Spirit is distinctly limited to the saying that Christ was animated by an unclean spirit, and did his wonderful works by collusion with Satan.

THURSDAY, May 23. Matthew xiii.

We believe, as Dean Stanley suggests, that this string of parables was read off from the page of Nature as it lay there before the eye of the Master and his hearers. From his floating pulpit the spectacle of the sloping hills covered with the toils of agriculture, and of the fisherman's nets gathering the spoils of the ocean, was full of suggestions of spiritual truth.

Many have found in these seven parables parallels with the seven letters to the churches, or the seven seals; in other words, they have thought that they covered in pictured prophecy the entire course of the present age. The first parable, describing the evangelization of the primitive age, which was followed by the intrusion of the world in the age of Constantine; the growing power of the Church, the leaven of Roman Catholicism; the Reformation and the Renaissance; and finally the present mixed age.

But we must not miss the plain teaching of these beautiful and graceful metaphors. It is surely given us at least to know and understand the secrets of the kingdom of heaven, for the Spirit reveals even the deep things of God. From the first, we learn to bring a receptive heart to the Divine Truth. From the second, the unwisdom of judging others, and the prime necessity of knowing ourselves. From the third and fourth, the importance of the minutest germs of good, as the mustard seed; or of evil, as the leaven. From the fifth and sixth, the priceless value of religious truth, whether we obtain it by some sudden invention, or after long search. From the seventh, the ultimate judgment which completes the parable of the net, and reminds us that we must be revealed before the judgment seat.

FRIDAY, May 24. Matthew xiv.

Herod the tetrarch was one of the three sons of Herod the Great, and ruled over Galilee and Perea. He had recently most wantonly put John the Baptist to death, after keeping him in prison for a year; but his conscience was haunted by his crime. The murdered prophet seemed to be alive again, and walking the world with even more than his former power, in the person of Jesus of Nazareth.

The story of John's death had so moved our Lord, and was so significant of the perils which threatened Himself, but which He must evade till his time was come, that He left the jurisdiction of Herod for the lonelier tract of country across the lake. But as we learn from the Fourth Gospel (John vi.), the people anticipated Him, and on his disembarkation awaited Him in thousands. Then followed the wondrous miracle, and the walking on the sea.

Each of these was significant of spiritual truth. In the first, He taught us that He feeds the world through his Church, as the generations sit in ordered rows. In the second, He shows that whenever his Church, or any life He loves, is tossed by waves and beaten back by contrary winds, He will be at hand to come through the troubled scene to save. Storm-tossed voyager, the waves thou dreadest do but make a royal pathway for the Master, as He steps from crest to crest; and remember He would never bid thee leave thy boat and come to Him without assuming all responsibility.

SATURDAY, May 25. Matthew xv.

The Pharisees overlaid the original Levitical ordinances by an immense number of minute prescriptions and glosses; to violate any of these was held by them to be grievous sin. But the Lord showed that their whole system was invalid, because obedience to it led children to dishonour their parents.

Then he turned to the people, and indicated the weak point of an excessive ceremonialism, inasmuch as it diverts the soul's attention from the inward to the outward, from cleanliness of thought to that of the physical being. Notice the stress that the Master laid on the regimen of the thoughts. Everything depended on watching well the castle gate of the soul.

The visit to the district of Tyre and Sidon, beyond the northern frontier of Palestine, was evidently in search of rest, but the fragrance of his nature betrayed his presence, and one life at least fed on the crumbs of his table. One crumb from Him will suffice to nourish the soul for a lifetime. Oh, that we may take our right place at his feet, and give Him his right place as Master and Lord, for then we shall ask what we will, and it shall be done unto us.

Notice the prodigality of our Saviour's beneficence! No case baffled Him, none went unhealed away; the hungry crowds were fed. Shall we fear making too heavy claims on such abundant love? Can He not fill us also? F. B. M.

Rev. G. Campbell Morgan.—A public farewell service has been arranged in connection with Rev. G. Campbell Morgan's departure for America. It is to be held at the City Temple on Thursday, June 6, and Dr. Parker is to preside. Further particulars will be found in our "Forthcoming Meetings" column.

Other Lands.

North Africa Mission.

'THIS year, the first for many," writes Miss Day from Cherchell, Algeria, "the pilgrimage to Mecca is being facilitated by the Government, and arrangements made as far as possible for the pilgrims' safe return. Those who can afford to go are much envied and talked about, the gist of the conversation being: 'How nice to secure a good place in Heaven, and at the same time be free to do evil in this world.'"

The interesting letter records discouragements, such as the dropping off of some of the better-class children through opposition, but also gleams of light which make them hopeful as to the future. The old, old story was told to a group of women, when one of them, a visitor, exclaimed: "Ten years ago I heard these sweet words in my home in the mountains. We often talked of the ladies, and wished them to come back." Then, while listening again, she frequently ejaculated; "That's it! that's it!"

One day Miss Reade overheard a discussion between two boys of her class as to how to live a right life—a life pleasing to God. K. argued that it was impossible until God killed the devil, for the more he tried to be good the more the devil tempted him. The teacher explained how Christ is able to succour them that are tempted, having been tempted in all points like as we are, and having resisted, and through death vanquished the devil. "True," added another little boy, an impetuous, troublesome, lovable little fellow; "I've tried Him! The other day I went to fetch the coffee and sugar for my house and dropped the money, and could not find it, though I hunted a long time. I knew I should get a beating, so I said, 'O Lord Jesus,

HELP ME TO FIND THAT PENNY!

I looked again, and there it was on the ground." Many of the parents like the children to repeat at home what they had learned at school.

In an interesting letter from Miss Kate Smith, Djemaa Sahridj, we read: "Much more work is now being done among the girls, and oh, how deeply interesting are these dear children! We have the joy of knowing that at least they are having a 'really good time'—chiefly due to our beautiful Women's Hall; there we can receive them almost daily, and keep all we need for them in the nice box-benches and cupboard that Mr. Rolland has made.

"It would surprise you to see the strange transformation that is being constantly enacted. Besides five classes a week for girls, we have some who come in turns to spend the day; so early in the morning three or four dirty little figures may be seen hurrying to the Hall, the door closes on them, but soon reopens, and out come the little maidens with shining faces, looking so happy and clean in red, white, and blue garments, red bands and nice head-kerchiefs. What does it mean? Only this—we keep sets of the pretty garments you have sent us for our little visitors. They are happy and so are we, for having well washed they can come as close to us as they like, and little Kabyle girls, being very affectionate, but unaccustomed to being loved, like to come very close to us when they know they will receive caresses instead of blows. These dear children give scarcely any trouble. They will sit for hours stitching away at a garment, so as to take mother home a few pence. But they do not always sew, for sometimes we have fine games, and then, too, they make their native food; at least once a week some of them get a good meal. Many of these children are only half fed, so to be 'satisfied' is a great treat. How they love to come to us! Is not this a preparation for coming to Jesus? We believe so, and if you could see and hear them, you would think so too."

A, one of the first converts at Djemaa Sahridj, is to be married this spring. His future little bride, much attached to the missionaries, means to follow A, who is busy preparing a little home close to the Mission station. Mr. Rolland is assisting him with the simple furniture. This will be the first Christian household established at Djemaa.

Go-Ahead Japanese Students.

By Rev. JOHN B. BRANDRAM, C.M.S., Kumomoto.

THE young men of Kumomoto have in time past been on fire for Christ, and now again, I believe, Kumomoto is going to be used of God to stir the smouldering ashes of Christian enthusiasm into a flame which shall spread the Gospel from one end of Japan to the other. In the early days of Christianity in Japan a band of forty young men pledged themselves to live and work for the cause of Christ and the evangelization of Japan. They are known as the "Kumomoto Band," and the historic spot where they met is called the "Flowery Hill." Many of them became famous as evangelists and Christian workers, and through their efforts, under God, much has been done towards the evangelization of Japan.

The fire has never been allowed to die out entirely, and now a second "Kumomoto Band" on the same "Flowery Hill" are

DEDICATING THEMSELVES TO GOD'S SERVICE.

Surely this time there kindled fire, being continually fed by the oil of God's Holy Spirit, shall burn brighter and brighter, until all the sons of Japan shall know of the coming of the King. In the city there are many adversaries, and much to discourage or even quench all love to Christ.

It is the "Second Kumomoto Band," as they like to be called, of whom I wish to write, and for whom I would fain plead. Kumomoto is a centre for students. At the various schools in the city there must be several thousands. One school—the highest grade of any in Kyushu, and belonging to the five immediately below the two Universities—has some 600 students in residence. Among these 600 students are fifteen or sixteen Christians who banded together as a student Young Men's Christian Association, which was affiliated with the student Y.M.C.A. Union of Japan at the time of Mr. Mott's visit in 1896-7, and since then has grown in numbers and influence. Mr. Mott impressed upon the members the importance of securing a home which should be a centre for meetings, and also, if possible, a kind of a building which should bring the Christian students as an association before the rest of the school.

Five of the students had been doing their utmost to realize this ideal by renting a house close to the school at some sacrifice to themselves, and calling it by the name of the Association. It was felt, however, by those on the spot that the present was the time to secure this house and the land on which it stood as a permanent home for the Association, leaving to the future the erection of a more pretentious and suitable building. Those competent to know estimated that the property might be fairly expected to double or treble in value in the course of a year or two.

So strongly did one friend interested in the work feel the need for action, that he advanced a little over £400, trusting that this money lent for Christ's sake will be subscribed by friends. Our friend cannot in justice to his family afford to give away this sum, much as he would like to do so; and only one-fourth of the amount has yet been raised.

The students on leaving this school pass on to the universities. They are the pick of thousands who leave the middle schools, and their influence in the future will be well-nigh incalculable. If we can maintain a strong Christian Association in this centre, we shall be in possession of the key to the position among the Government schools of Southern Japan; and ready to give the right hand of fellowship to all Christian freshmen who enter.

A Persian Evangelist.

READERS who are interested in the work of the Lord in Persia will find an interesting account of the need of that country in What About Persia? (3d. Pickering & Inglis). Mr. Abishalom Sayad traces the relationship of the country to the Bible from the earliest times; and tells the story of the Babist movement which had its beginning at Shiraz, in 1819, under Mirza-Ali-Mohammed, who assumed also the names of Bab-El-Din (the Gate of Faith) and Natek (the Pointer). The noteworthy feature of this revolt from Mohammedanism is that its followers admit at least the New Testament to be the Word of God.

"There is much in the new teaching that is sad, but it has opened the door to the Gospel as nothing else has done. Bible circulation has almost doubled every year. It is computed that in many towns and villages half the population are Babis. This is a clear indication that the people of Persia are in a large measure wearied with Islam, and anxious for a higher, holier, and more spiritual faith. Almost all through the country the Babis are quite friendly to Christians. The rise of this faith is in a large measure due to the spread of the Gospel; the best of their doctrines are borrowed from it, while they openly reverence the Scriptures, and profess to be ready to reject any opinion they may hold when once proved to be contrary to the Bible."

Mr. Sayad was born at Ahda, eighteen miles north-east of Oroomiah, in 1867. His parents were both Christians, and he himself was led to a knowledge of the truth when in his sixteenth year. Before he was nineteen he was recognized as a preacher and teacher, and continued at the work for eleven years. He had many experiences of the keeping power of the Lord in the midst of persecution, but all through these years the grace of God was manifested in the conversion of old and young.

A long-cherished wish for thorough teaching in Biblical knowlege has been attained through attendance at the Missionary Training Home, Drayton Park, N.; and now he asks the prayers and sympathy of God's people as he goes forth to his native land. The desire is (1) to preach the Gospel in its simplicity, (2) to establish schools, (3) to translate Scriptural literature, and (4) to distribute the Scriptures.

India's Deaf and Dumb.

ALREADY the industrial school for deaf and dumb, in connection with the Church of England Zenana Mission at Palamcottah, South India, shows many signs of fulfilling the beneficent purpose for which it was founded. Seventy-two afflicted children have passed through the school, and at present there are fifty-nine on the books. Of the twenty-eight admitted last year, eleven were the children of native Christians, two Roman Catholics, seven from Hindu families, and six were famine orphans. The Government examination proves that the patient and loving teaching has not been in vain. The minds and intellects of the scholars are opening, and they are little behind other school children in their studies. Three or four of the girls of the higher standards are being trained and employed as monitresses.

But while caring for and educating body and mind, the spiritual welfare of these poor children is not overlooked. Daily a Bible lesson is given, and on Sundays a special service is arranged for them. A little Hindu boy, who goes home from Saturday till Sunday, returned early one Sunday morning to service. On being asked if he had eaten before coming, the boy replied he had not. The superintendent said, "I am sorry there is no rice for you here;" and the lad signed in reply: "Never mind, I can eat at noon; I must learn about Jesus."

The Industrial classes have grown considerably during the year. With a few exceptions the girls are able to earn enough to support and clothe themselves. Besides the thirty girls thus supported, about seventy poor Christian and Hindu women come every fortnight and take work home, and most grateful are they for what they earn. This practical way of teaching Christianity has been followed with remarkable results, and many are renouncing heathenism to accept Christ, whose love has prompted so beneficent and timely a ministry.

THE LATE

Rev. William Cooper,

CHINA INLAND MISSION.

THE circumstances under which the call of God comes to any leader have a wide and lasting interest. Among the many missionary heroes who were last year called to count not their lives dear for Christ's sake, few were so well known as Rev. William Cooper, Assistant Deputy-Director of the China Inland Mission. In addition to a wide circle of friends at home, and among missionaries with whom he came into contact at Shanghai as they arrived in or left China, as well as in the course of his journeyings through that country, a large company of praying people had enjoyed fellowship with him in different parts of Europe and America.

The definite summons to missionary service came when he was serving the Lord as secretary to the Young Men's Christian Association at Gourock, Renfrewshire. In a sermon, entitled "The Divine Call for Missionaries" (Isa. vi. 8), C. H. Spurgeon had said, "I should not wonder if a hundred young men rise up in answer to this call, and go forth to heathen lands to spread the Gospel." A printed copy having come into the hands of William Cooper, he was the second who responded to the appeal.

During a period of furlough spent in Scotland about two years ago, Mr. Cooper met with a painful accident and was laid aside for a number of weeks, at a time when there were many friends whom he desired to meet, as well as much to be done in the way of stirring up interest. But the will of the Lord was acquiesced in with praise and thanksgiving, and there is good reason to believe that these days of quiet were not among the least fruitful of a blessed life.

We quote the following from a memorial notice of Mr. Cooper, contributed by Mr. Walter B. Sloan in Martyr Missionaries of the China Inland Mission (5s. Morgan & Scott), in which volume will be found also sketches of the lives, with an account of the sufferings, of the other members of that company who followed their Lord in the way of the cross.

Mr. Cooper reached Shanghai on January 9, 1881, and went immediately to Gan-k'ing, where he made rapid progress in the study of the Chinese language, and in due course took part in regular itinerant work, as well as preaching in the city. At that time, Gan-k'ing was the only station in the province (Gan-hwuy), the other six places being out-stations. In 1884 he was appointed to Wu-ch'ang, in Hu-peh province, where he worked for about a year. With this exception his work, up to his first furlough, which occurred in 1887—he reached England in February of that year—lay in the province of Gan-hwuy. During the furlough referred to, he married, and returned to China with his wife and child in November, 1888. On his return, he was appointed superintendent of Gan-hwuy, and stationed once more at Gan-k'ing. Five and a half years later (July, 1894), he was invited by the Council in Shanghai to assist Mr. Stevenson, our Deputy-Director, in his very important and increasingly difficult work at the China headquarters of the Mission. In May, 1898, he once more came home on furlough, and it was only in the autumn of last year (1899) that he returned to China for the last time.

For those who knew our beloved brother, William Cooper, no words will seem adequate to express the quiet, strong influence of his beautiful life, and we fear it will be difficult to convey to those who did not know him any satisfactory impression of his real worth.

The outward history of his life, as seen from the ordinary standpoint, could not be called eventful or brilliant. To the discerning eye, however, there was something about the circumstances of his career that made it remarkable. The Lord who loved him had granted him to taste in no ordinary degree the fellowship of his sufferings. We are not thinking now of the final end of his earthly course, but rather of constant experiences in which, as he lived, he was permitted to undergo that chastening which, in itself, is never joyous but grievous, but which always yields afterwards the peaceable fruits of righteousness to those who are exercised thereby. During most of his period of service in China, his hearing was permanently impaired, this being the after-effect of a serious attack of typhoid fever from which he suffered at Gan-k'ing. Having also a somewhat delicate chest, it was no uncommon thing for him to be laid up, and unable to enter with full vigour into that work of ministering to others, in which his heart delighted so much.

These are but a few indications of the way in which the Lord wrought with this chosen vessel to make it perfect for the final step of suffering and the glory beyond. Very commonplace experiences some may say; but if there is one lesson more than another that we may learn as we look back upon the life of William Cooper, it is that the sphere of every-day experience is Christ's training-school for bringing forth the highest aspects of Christian character.

Now let us try and gather up the results of all this, as some of us saw them.

"One of the very few blameless lives that I have ever come into contact with"—such was the substance of a letter written to us by a friend, who had abundant opportunity of observation, during a time when the most trying experiences had to be gone through day after day.

We know well that in this fallen world no absolutely faultless life is ever seen; but this we can say, that the above testimony would be confirmed on all hands by those who were Mr. Cooper's co-workers in the fellowship of the Mission. He occupied a unique place amongst us, and many of us can bear witness that we have never heard him speak an unkind word of any one; and that of him no hard words were ever spoken. He could be perfectly firm and decided when such an attitude was called for, but he could say, "No," in such a way as not to give offence to those with whose proposals he was unable to agree.

When he visited the Continent in 1899, he was brought into contact with many people for the first time, but the impression of his visit left its mark in the hearts of all those whom he met. In Canada, last spring, we heard of the gracious influence his presence there in the previous year had exercised, and only the other day we learned how his Christlike character had told in a house in Scotland where he spent some days just before leaving for China. Quiet strength, gentle patience, frank faithfulness, and tender sympathy—these seem to stand out as the leading features in a life for which many of us shall never cease to thank God.

The loss to his wife and children is of a terrible character, and to us as a Mission well-night irreparable.

Had the choice been offered him as to how life should end, we believe nothing would have accorded more thoroughly with his own heart's desire than to be permitted to lay down his life on behalf of the people of China, whom he loved so deeply.

Many a young missionary has lost a trusted counsellor and guide, but the King had need of him for even higher service. For those who long to consult him as in days gone by, there remains the example of a life in which he put into practice much that could only be learned in the secret place of the Most High. There are no premature deaths among the people of God. The work for which William Cooper was raised up has been completed, but the work of God remains, and must go forward.

The Indian Famine.

FRIENDS who had the privilege of meeting Miss Marks (Methodist Episcopal Mission, Ajmere) during a hurried visit paid to London a few days ago, were deeply impressed with the story which she told. Since the famine began she has taken in at least 4,000 widows and orphans, retaining 500 girls under her own care, and passing the others on to various missionary institutions. She spoke in the most grateful terms of the supplies of food, clothing, disinfectants, and drugs, sent out through the liberality of our readers. For many months, 700 people were fed every day from the famine kitchen. Extracts of meat were of special value in cases of extreme exhaustion, and were treasured to the last drop. The tinned milk supplied a want not met in any other way, as all the cattle were dead, and even if they had survived, there was no food for them.

At a time when the weather was very cold, Miss Marks had 1,000 persons on her hands who were suffering keenly from lack of clothing. On the day following one of special need and prayer a bale of cloth arrived, and no time was lost in setting the women to work to make up garments for themselves. In this way more than 3,000 suits of clothing were provided.

Miss Marks has been suffering from sunstroke, and is on her way to her home in San Francisco, where it is hoped a time of furlough will lead to such restoration as will admit of an early return to India. She is seeking support for her 500 orphans, but over and above she has a terrible tale of woe to tell. The famine is by no means over. In one typical letter just received, Mrs. Drynan (of the Scottish Mission, Rajputana) wrote that she saw people every day who were dying of starvation. Death and suffering are on every hand still, and the prayer of the missionaries is that the Christians of this country will not withhold supplication, or stay the succouring hand, until the country is again able to feed its own people.

Friends will learn with regret that Dr. Valentine was taken ill on a railway journey last month. Fortunately the cause was not sunstroke, but exhaustion arising from heat He was in an unconscious state for twenty seven hours, but is now convalescent.

Japanese Christian Institute, Tilbury Docks, Essex.—The unusually large company of men-of-war men referred to a few weeks ago may now be expected to arrive early in June. The book-bags already sent in have been very highly appreciated, and a large number could be profitably used within a few weeks. Address, Miss McLean, as above.

The French Anti-Alcoholic Union, founded five years ago by Dr. Legrain, has to-day no fewer than 435 local societies, with over 40,000 members. It is doing an immense work by the circulation of temperance literature, by striking coloured placards, and many other means. Influenced by the English example, and especially by the fact that in Liverpool since the institution of coffee houses the number of arrests from drunkenness has fallen from 21,694 to 9,005 per annum, temperance cafés are now being opened in various towns in France, and the results have been very satisfactory.

Dr. Harry Guinness.

THE sunny personality and missionary enthusiasm of Dr. Harry Guinness have won the high regard of Christian people, who have rejoiced in the energy and industry with which he has sought the interests of the Kingdom of God. The career of Dr. Guinness is, of course, so intimately bound up with the home and foreign missionary enterprises which have their centre at Harley College, that the story of his life is largely the record of the later years of their development.

Born in 1861, Harry Guinness was nurtured by his honoured parents, Dr. and Mrs. H. Grattan Guinness, in the fear of the Lord. The outcome of their godly care was seen in and in the yearning desire which he manifested for the evangelization of the world, and which found expression, as the days went by, in conducting revival gatherings.
